START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

August 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER: BSO-56-066

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholar-ship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: (IA) IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 66

Volumes 107-108

BSO, Pops, Tanglewood

1963-1964

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 107

BSO
Pops

1962 - 1963

Boston Symphony Orchestra

ERICH LEINSDORF, Music Director

SCHEDULE OF CONCERTS

WINTER SEASON 1962–1963

SEPTEMBER

21–22	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. I)
24	New York	(Gala Concert)
25	Boston	(Tues. I)
28–29	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. II)

OCTOBER

2	Providence	(I)
5–6	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. III)
7	Boston	(Sun. I)
9	Cambridge	(I)
11	Boston	(Rehearsal I)
12–13	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IV)
15	Boston	(Mon. I)
16	Boston	(Tues. II)
19–20	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. V)
22	Northampton
23	New Haven	(I)
24	New York	(Wed. I)
25	Brooklyn	(I)
26	New York	(Fri. I)
30	Boston	(Tues. III)

NOVEMBER

1	Boston	(Rehearsal II)
2–3	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VI)
5	Boston	(Mon. II)
6	Providence	(II)
9–10	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VII)
11	Boston	(Sun. II)
13	Cambridge	(II)
16–17	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VIII)
19	Plymouth
20	Boston	(Tues. IV)
23–24	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IX)
26	Hartford	(I)
27	New London
28	New York	(Wed. II)
29	Brooklyn	(II)
30	New York	(Fri. II)

DECEMBER

3	Boston	(Mon. III)
4	Cambridge	(III)
7–8	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. X)
11	Providence	(III)
14–15	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XI)
16	Boston	(Sun. III)
18	Boston	(Tues. V)
28–29	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XII)

JANUARY

1	Boston	(Tues. VI)
4–5	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIII)
7	Storrs
8	New Haven	(II)
9	New York	(Wed. III)
10	Brooklyn	(III)
11	New York	(Fri. III)

JANUARY (continued)

15	Cambridge	(IV)
17	Boston	(Rehearsal III)
18–19	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIV)
21	Boston	(Mon. IV)
22	Boston	(Tues. VII)
25–26	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XV)
29	Providence	(IV)

FEBRUARY

1–2	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVI)
3	Boston	(Sun. IV)
7	Boston	(Rehearsal IV)
8–9	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVII)
11	Boston	(Mon. V)
12	Boston	(Tues. VIII)
15–16	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVIII)
18	Hartford	(II)
19	Philadelphia
20	New York	(Wed. IV)
21	Brooklyn	(IV)
22	New York	(Fri. IV)
24	Boston	(Sun. V)
26	Cambridge	(V)
28	Boston	(Rehearsal V)

MARCH

1–2	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIX)
3	Boston	(Pension Fund)
7	Boston	(Rehearsal VI)
8–9	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XX)
11	Boston	(Mon. VI)
12	Providence	(V)
15–16	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXI)
17	Baltimore
18	Washington	(I)
19	Washington	(II)
20	New York	(Wed. V)
21	Brooklyn	(V)
22	New York	(Fri. V)
26	Cambridge	(VI)
28	Boston	(Rehearsal VII)
29–30	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXII)

APRIL

2	Boston	(Tues. IX)
4	Boston	(Rehearsal VIII)
5–6	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXIII)
7	Boston	(Sun. VI)
9	Boston	(Tues. X)
11–13	Boston	(Thurs.-Sat. XXIV)

TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR

APRIL

15	Chicago	22	San Francisco
16	Kansas City	23	Portland, Ore.
17	Oklahoma City	24	Seattle
18	Albuquerque	26	Winnipeg
19	San Diego	27	Minneapolis
21	Los Angeles

I N D E X

PRE-SEASON 3

PRESS CONFERENCE 17

BOSTON I 27

BOSTON 2 .....John Browning, Piano..... 31

PROVIDENCE I..... 33

BOSTON 3 34

SUNDAY I, MONDAY I, TUESDAY I 35

BOSTON 4 36

BOSTON 5 38

NORTHAMPTON 40

NEW YORK TOUR I 41

BOSTON 6 .....Richard Burgin, cond..... 46

TUESDAY 3 .....Richard Burgin..... 46

MONDAY 2 .....Richard Burgin..... 48

PROVIDENCE 2 49

BOSTON 7 .....Geza Anda, Piano, Arlene Saunders, Helen Vanni, Inga Swenson..... 50

SUNDAY 2 .....Geza Anda..... 53

BOSTON 8 .....Joseph de Pasquale, viola..... 54

PLYMOUTH 56

TUESDAY 4 ....Joseph de Pasquale..... 58

BOSTON 9 59

NEW YORK TOUR 2 61

MONDAY 3 .....Geza Anda..... 70

BOSTON 10 .....Richard Burgin, Virginia Babikian, Sop..... 71

BOSTON 11 ....Richard Burgin..... 74

SUNDAY 3 .....Richard Burgin..... 76

TUESDAY 5 ....Richard Burgin..... 76

BOSTON 12 ....Gabriel Tacchino, Piano..... 77

TUESDAY 6 ....Gabriel Tacchino..... 79

BOSTON 13 ....Leon Kirchner, Piano..... 80

NEW YORK TOUR 3..Storrs..... 82

BOSTON 14 ....Charles Munch..... 86

BOSTON 15 ....Charles Munch..... 91

MONDAY 4 ....Charles Munch..... 92

TUESDAY 7 ....Charles Munch..... 92

BOSTON 16 ....Charles Munch..... 93

PROVIDENCE ....3 & 4..... 96

SUNDAY 4 98

BOSTON 17 ....Henry Szerying, Violin..... 99

MONDAY 5 ....Henry Szerying..... 102

TUESDAY 8 ....Lorin Hollander, Piano..... 102

BOSTON 18 ....Lorin Hollander..... 103

NEW YORK TOUR 4 106

SUNDAY 5 111

BOSTON 19 ....Samuel Mayes, 'Cello..... 112

PENSION FUND CONCERT ....Artur Rubinstein..... 114

BOSTON 20 ....Prey, Hecht, Carlyle, Harvard & Radcliffe Chorus..... 117

MONDAY 6 ....Joseph Silverstein, Violin..... 119

PROVIDENCE 5 ....Joseph Silverstein..... 119

BALTIMORE 120

WASHINGTON 121

NEW YORK TOUR 5 125

BOSTON 21 127

BOSTON 22 ....Pierre Monteux..... 129

TUESDAY 9 & 10 ....Monteux....Leinsdorf..... 132

SUNDAY 6 ....Joseph Silverstein..... 132

BOSTON 23 ....Joseph Silverstein..... 133

BOSTON 24 135

TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR..... 139

ORGAN CONCERTS 191

LAST SANDERS THEATER CONCERT 193

YOUTH CONCERTS 199

UNVEILING OF WASHINGTON CULTURAL CENTER MODEL 202

LINCOLN CENTER OPENING 204

RACE TRACK DISPUTE 216

B.S.O. MEMBERS' Activities 222

OBITUARIES 230

RECORDS 236

MISCELLANEOUS 253

RADIO & TV 283

BLANK PAGE

Dr. Munch to Retire at End of Next Season; Met Opera's Erich Leinsdorf Will Take Over

(UPI Telephoto)

TALKING OVER THE BOSTON SYMPHONY — Music Director Charles Munch (right) chats with his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, after yesterday's concert. Other pictures on Pages 12, 16.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera.

This news came yesterday afternoon from Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, at a conference in the conductor's room at Symphony Hall following the Boston Symphony concert.

"It is with great sorrow that I have to say that Dr. Munch has decided to retire at the end of the next Boston Symphony season," said Cabot. "He has done so in view of the burdens of rehearsals and concert-giving and of his age. He will be 70 next September."

DR. MUNCH

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
SEP 22 1962

Conductor With Poise

Erich Leinsdorf

Man in the News

AS a student at the Music Academy in Vienna at the age of 18, Erich Leinsdorf once conducted Thomas's opera "Mignon" and Bruckner's Seventh Symphony in the same year. The juxtaposition proved prophetic of the conductor's subsequent career, for he has vascillated between positions with opera companies and symphony orchestras with some regularity. Now that he is assuming the prestigious post of musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the age of 50, he has expressed himself with ironic understatement: "I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled."

Yet it was in the field of opera that Mr. Leinsdorf made his mark, both in his native Austria and in the United States. When he was a mere 20, he hiked from his native Vienna some 150 miles to Salzburg one summer, where his abilities so impressed the late Bruno Walter that he was taken on as the great conductor's assistant in preparing operas for the festival there.

Ansel Adams

The word is "Calma!"

Served with Toscanini

The following three summers in Salzburg, from 1935 to 1937, he performed similar tasks for Toscanini, who in turn recommended him to the Metropolitan Opera. That august institution engaged the musician to spell the ailing Artur Bodanzky in conducting the Wagnerian repertory, and he made his debut in New York eliading "Die Walkure" on Jan. 21, 1938, 14 days before his 26th birthday.

The aplomb and assurance —and talent—that made the young man seek out Walter and unafraid to tackle a Metropolitan assignment stood him in good stead for the next few years. Shortly after his debut, he had to conduct a "Parsifal," on 12 hours' notice, when Bodanzky became ill. The next year, when Bodanzky died, the Metropolitan threw the whole Wagnerian repertory, plus many other operas, in his lap.

Mr. Leinsdorf weathered a good deal of severe criticism for his youth and lack of experience, including public complaints by some of the Metropolitan's leading singers, and he stayed with the company until 1943.

He then took on the Cleveland Orchestra, being at the time the youngest conductor heading a major American symphony. Since he had been naturalized in 1942, he found himself inducted into the United States Army just a few months after he took the Cleveland post, but he was honorably discharged within nine months.

From then on his career shifted from Cleveland to another season at the Metropolitan, to nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic, to a season's directorship of the New York City Opera, and then back to the Metropolitan, where he remained from 1957 to last spring.

In Boston, Mr. Leinsdorf will need all his considerable charm and aplomb, for he is re-establishing a German-Viennese tradition in a city that has become used to the Russian-French tradition among conductors since 1918. And he has about only one personal trait in common with the last two conductors in Boston, the late Serge Koussevitzky, who reigned for 25 years, and Charles Munch, who just completed 13 years with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf is always beautifully dressed and groomed.

In contrast to the regal Koussevitzky, who could hold forth extensively in his richly accented English, and to the shy Munch, who seldom said a word in public, Mr. Leinsdorf is quietly and precisely articulate in speech only faintly tinged with a Viennese accent. A short, bald, compact man, he moves with a comparable economy of motion, and efficiency is reflected in his conducting.

The conductor's outward poise cloaks a tremendous amount of energy. He has a passion for thoroughness, so that he refuses to conduct parts of operas, as his predecessor Bodanzky at the Metropolitan was wont to do. He also is careful, so that he always wears a seat belt when riding in an automobile.

Favors French Clarets

His interests outside of music largely embrace clothes, stamps and wines, all of which he collects. Among wines he places special stress on French clarets.

With the Boston appointment, Mr. Leinsdorf moved his large family to a house in Brookline, Mass. There he is ensconced with his wife, the former Anne Frohnknecht of New York City, whom he married in 1939, and five children: David, 20; Gregor, 18; Joshua, 17; Deborah Hester, 14; and Jenny, 10.

After the final rehearsal for yesterday's opening concert, Mr. Leinsdorf had only one word for his players, a word that is as characteristic of the conductor as any: "Calma!" which may be translated as "Stay calm!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle-Citizen
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,231
AUG 30 1962

ERICH LEINSDORF, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his son David, center, were greeted by the rest of the family at Logan Airport Saturday, upon their return from a summer in Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf, at right, are making their home at 153 Dean Rd., Brookline, with their children, Jennie, left, Hester, center standing, David, and Gregor and Joshua, who were in New York when their father arrived home.

3
30
JAE-SEASON
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Introducing Erich Leinsdorf

The Boston Symphony gains a wealth of talent and training in its new conductor.

Erich Leinsdorf rehearsing the Boston Symphony.

By Irwin Shainman

IN THE AUTUMN of 1948 Erich Leinsdorf, then the conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, stepped on to the stage of Chapin Hall, Williams College, to begin a concert thirty minutes later than the advertised starting time. Obviously annoyed at the unprofessionally late beginning, he turned to the large audience and with a touch of wit for which he is known, said: "I sincerely apologize for having kept you waiting. We were on time, but the Boston and Maine Railroad put a rallentando on our baggage and instruments." He then faced the musicians and led them through a thrilling concert.

Leinsdorf was delayed that day by a railroad, but in the thirteen years between the Williamstown concert and the announcement of his appointment as conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he has seldom been sidetracked. After leaving the Rochester Philharmonic he directed the Cleveland Orchestra, did a stint in the army, guest conducted many of the major orchestras of the world and became one of the most successful recording artists of his time, especially in opera. Besides executive and directorial responsibilities at the New York City Center and the Metropolitan Opera, Mr. Leinsdorf has more full opera recordings to his credit than any other active conductor.

He brings to the Boston Symphony a wealth of training, experience and know-how, plus the respect and loyalty of musicians and public everywhere he has worked. When his appointment to the coveted post was announced last season, an obviously disappointed Metropolitan Opera executive was heard to say, "Naturally I am very happy for him but very sorry for us. We need him much more than they do."

* * *

BORN IN VIENNA fifty years ago, Leinsdorf has been conducting in the "big time" for well over twenty-five years. He was assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at Salzburg, and since that time he has both guest conducted and helped to build many fine orchestras. In his last few seasons at the Metropolitan he infused the men in the pit with a sense of clarity and precision that was not only remarkable but earned him the unanimous approval of the New York music critics: a rare accomplishment. His Metropolitan performance of the Wagner "Ring" cycle will go down as one of the major accomplishments of the Leinsdorf-Rudolf Bing era.

As to his repertoire, Leinsdorf is anything but a specialist in any one field. Equally at home with Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, Strauss or Stravinsky, he is also well known for his interest in new and rarely performed works. For his first season with the Boston Symphony he plans to perform a series of eight or nine contemporary concertos in addition to a special commemorative Stravinsky concert.

In an interview with the Boston press recently, Leinsdorf talked of some of the reasons why he—at the age of fifty and at the height of popularity — would give up world-wide travel, extensive operatic conducting and recording activities to move his wife and five children to the quiet of suburban Brookline. He emphasized that one of the important facts in his mind was being able to come to Boston without having to be a "bricklayer." "I don't have to build," he said, "I find a magnificent orchestra and organization." At the Boston Symphony the important decisions are made on purely musical grounds with very little pressure for the politically expedient to take precedence over the purely artistic. This type of freedom for a conductor is rare indeed.

* *

LEINSDORF DOES NOT plan an absentee administration. In spite of the many demands on him for guest appearances, he will conduct the orchestra in all but seven weeks of its long resident season in addition to all its tours and Tanglewood. He has invited retiring conductor Charles Munch back for a four week period, and Richard Burgin, whose association with the orchestra as concertmaster spans many decades, will direct for three weeks and take on the duties of associate conductor. Leinsdorf, with his customary acuity of intellect and diplomacy, compared these invitations to the operation of the United States Senate. The continuity of operation that makes that body so effective is accomplished by having only one-third of its members up for election at any one time. The same is true in music.

If there were ever a time when Boston and Berkshire music lovers could look to the future with a keen sense of anticipation, this is it. The appointment of Erich Leinsdorf might well prove to be one of the most important events in the long and honorable history of the Boston Symphony.

Mr. Shainman is an associate professor of music at Williams College and director of the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
SEP 3 1962

Maestro Leinsdorf Gets Down To Business

Plays Schubert in Shirtsleeves —Sports Crimson Suspenders

By MARY MEIER

Make no mistake, the new 49-year-old "maestro" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to town.

Arriving here from Europe a week ahead of schedule, Aug. 25, Erich Leinsdorf drove straight from Logan Airport to Symphony Hall, where his contract as musical director was scheduled to start simultaneously with Charles Munch's last concert at Tanglewood the following day.

Open, vital, enthusiastic as a conservatory student at the mere mention of music, the ex-Metropolitan Opera conductor has plunged into his plans for the coming season.

The father of five children was interviewed in his rambling white Brookline home which his wife, Anna, had purchased from obstetrician Dr. Archie Abrams.

He was in a room that was added as a new wing to the house. It contains an elaborate high fidelity component system.

Records, tapes and musical scores are stored in six 10-foot-high cabinets which look like pillars, until Leinsdorf, with glee, swings open the doors saying, "Everything's hidden!"

The man himself, whose 5-foot-5 figure Bostonians will see step up to the podium Sept. 21 for the season's first concert, is slender.

Dressed in slacks of banker's gray and a black silk jacket, the unexpected brilliance of Leinsdorf's personality shines out when he suddenly sits down at the piano in shirtsleeves and shows off his crimson suspenders.

LEINSDORF Page Fifty-seven

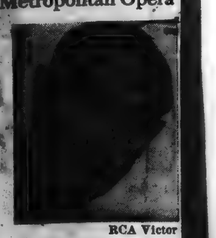
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,213,901
SEP 19 1962

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY, one of the nation's oldest orchestras, acquires a new music director this week—Erich Leinsdorf. The 49-year-old former conductor of the Rochester (N. Y.) Philharmonic and of the Metropolitan Opera says he will continue the Boston Symphony's tradition of spotlighting new works by American and foreign composers, in addition to playing the classics. Coincidentally, as Vienna-born Leinsdorf was replacing French-born Charles Munch in Boston, French-born Jean Martinon was replacing Vienna-trained Fritz Reiner as conductor of the Chicago Symphony. Both Munch and Reiner are retiring after many distinguished years of U. S. music-making.



RCA Victor
Leinsdorf

The Boston Globe—Monday, September 3, 1962 57

Most Synonymous to Leinsdorf recording of Debussy's "Images" for Orchestra" conducted by Munch.

He has praised the Boston Symphony for never compromising on music.

Work, Play Almost Synonymous to Leinsdorf

LEINSDORF Continued from the First Page

the chamber which his wife and friend, James Amster, a New York decorator, had designed in his absence. "But when the carpet arrives from Spain, it will be just right."

Leinsdorf relaxes with his family by playing "hugh ping pong tournaments" in the basement of their home every evening after supper. "I'm not so good," he says with a shrug. "Hester can beat me."

All members of the family also join him in walking around the neighborhood, searching for new views of the Boston skyline.

Leinsdorf says of his children, "You will be hard put to find a musician among them." Everyone of the children has his own record player and each in turn has had a teenage phase "which is all jazz," Leinsdorf complains.

"One nice thing though," he adds. "Without any prompting I may hear Beethoven's Emperor Concerto in the house and I suddenly must answer a lot of questions."

What recorded music does he listen to for relaxation? The new director pointed to the many works he has recorded with the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the past few years.

To work out exact timing, apprehesive how the other a

Plays Ping Pong

"Everyone gives his best performance when he has familiar faces on his right and his left so the teamwork doesn't change."

To work out exact timing, apprehesive how the other a

CONDUCTOR LEINSDORF TIMES AN ORCHESTRAL SCORE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,913
SEP 2 8 1962

Erich Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf Faces Boston Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Boston

A story has been making the rounds these days, perhaps apocryphal, that Erich Leinsdorf's son came to him last season and said that some of his school friends had asked him to tell them which orchestra was the greatest in the United States.

"Tell them that you don't know now," Mr. Leinsdorf is said to have advised him, "but that next year it will be the Boston Symphony."

A droll answer, doubtless given with a twinkling eye.

Yet to most Bostonians it would never occur to question whether the Boston Symphony were or were not the best American orchestra, or indeed the best orchestra in the whole world (though some Boston music critics may hold more tempered opinions). Now that Mr. Leinsdorf has taken over the podium from Charles Munch as the orchestra's director, Bostonians are not in the least concerned about his making the Boston Symphony the greatest in the United States. They are concerned, however, over his ability to keep it that way. This is the same concern they felt when Munch took over the leadership from Koussevitzky.

These unsettled emotions have in no way interfered with receipts at the box office. The clamor for seats at Symphony Hall goes on as furiously this season as it has in the past, with curiosity adding an ingredient of spice to the season just opened. Will the new man step more easily into Munch's shoes, as Munch once stepped, not so easily, into Koussevitsky's? Will he change the sound of Munch's orchestra, as Munch once changed Koussevitzky's? Will the programs be different? Or better? Or worse?

No final evaluation can be made, of course, on the basis of the Boston Symphony's opening concert of its 82d season on Friday afternoon. It is not what a man can deliver in one concert, or even in three or four. It is what he consistently delivers over an entire season, or thirteen, or twenty-five.

Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert had many virtues and few if any peccadilloes worth naming. But it was short on heart. There was not an instant when the orchestra was not under the full control of his keen musical intellect. He knew what he wanted; he knew how to get it; and he got it with gestures both dynamic and graceful.

But where was the wonder, the thrill, the radiance, the glory? Where were the sunbursts, the starshine, the aspirations, or even a simple sigh? We ask not for sentimentality, but for sentiment in its highest sense. Since Mr. Leinsdorf has given us this deeper sense of musical sentiment when he appeared with the orchestra as a guest conductor, we may naturally assume that its absence at this concert was owing to the special problems that must surely confront any artist assuming the direction of a great orchestra for the first time.

Mr. Leinsdorf's first program is a fine start in the direction of his stated policy—to give his listeners an over-all picture, in three or four years, of the classical, romantic, and modern orchestral literature. He hopes that nothing will be neglected. He intends to balance the repertoire, providing a good coverage of the various musical styles.

He opened with the Boston concert première of Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace," the music expanding in the composer's typical rhapsodic way and moving through shifting tonalities, at times acerb, to a stately close.

Mr. Leinsdorf then went on to give us Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony in its first performance by the Boston Symphony, though it has been played in Boston earlier this year by the Philadelphia Orchestra, which commissioned it. The work is beautifully composed (it seems quite impossible for Mr. Piston to write badly) a fitting addition to the oeuvre of our leading American symphonist.

Opening with melodies that range in a broad, swinging counterpoint, the initial Con moto movement tenses and relaxes in a series of American moods. Master of orchestral effects, Mr. Piston varies his timbres, balances his masses against economies, and turns out scores of winsome, yet solid musical content. The final two movements — Adagio pastorale and Allegro festevole—are exactly what they are described to be.

By this time in Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert it was evident that the instrumental sound had already changed. Gone was the tingling brilliance of Munch's French orchestra. In its place was the more orotund Viennese sound, a smoother blending of the choirs. Mr. Leinsdorf has also restored the risers that Munch had eliminated, thus displaying the orchestra in a different aural concept. When he gave us Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," it was obvious that the French sound in Boston is yielding to the Austrian.

Mr. Leinsdorf's reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, with which he closed, restored the Germanic tempos that Munch had been used to whipping to a frenzy. Perhaps Mr. Leinsdorf gave us the truer Beethoven, but some of us, rightly or wrongly, may have missed the fire, the passion, the nobility that we have become used to.

PALM BEACH, FLA.
NEWS
D. 3,905 S. 4,007
APR 28 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY DIRECTOR, Erich Leinsdorf, pictured at the Sea Breeze-Holiday Inn where he is vacationing with his wife and two daughters, Deborah and Jenifer. Mr. Leinsdorf will return to Boston this week to begin rehearsals for the symphony opening September 21. He will conduct the N.Y. Philharmonic Orchestra September 24.

INSTRUMENTALIST
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,900
MAY 1962

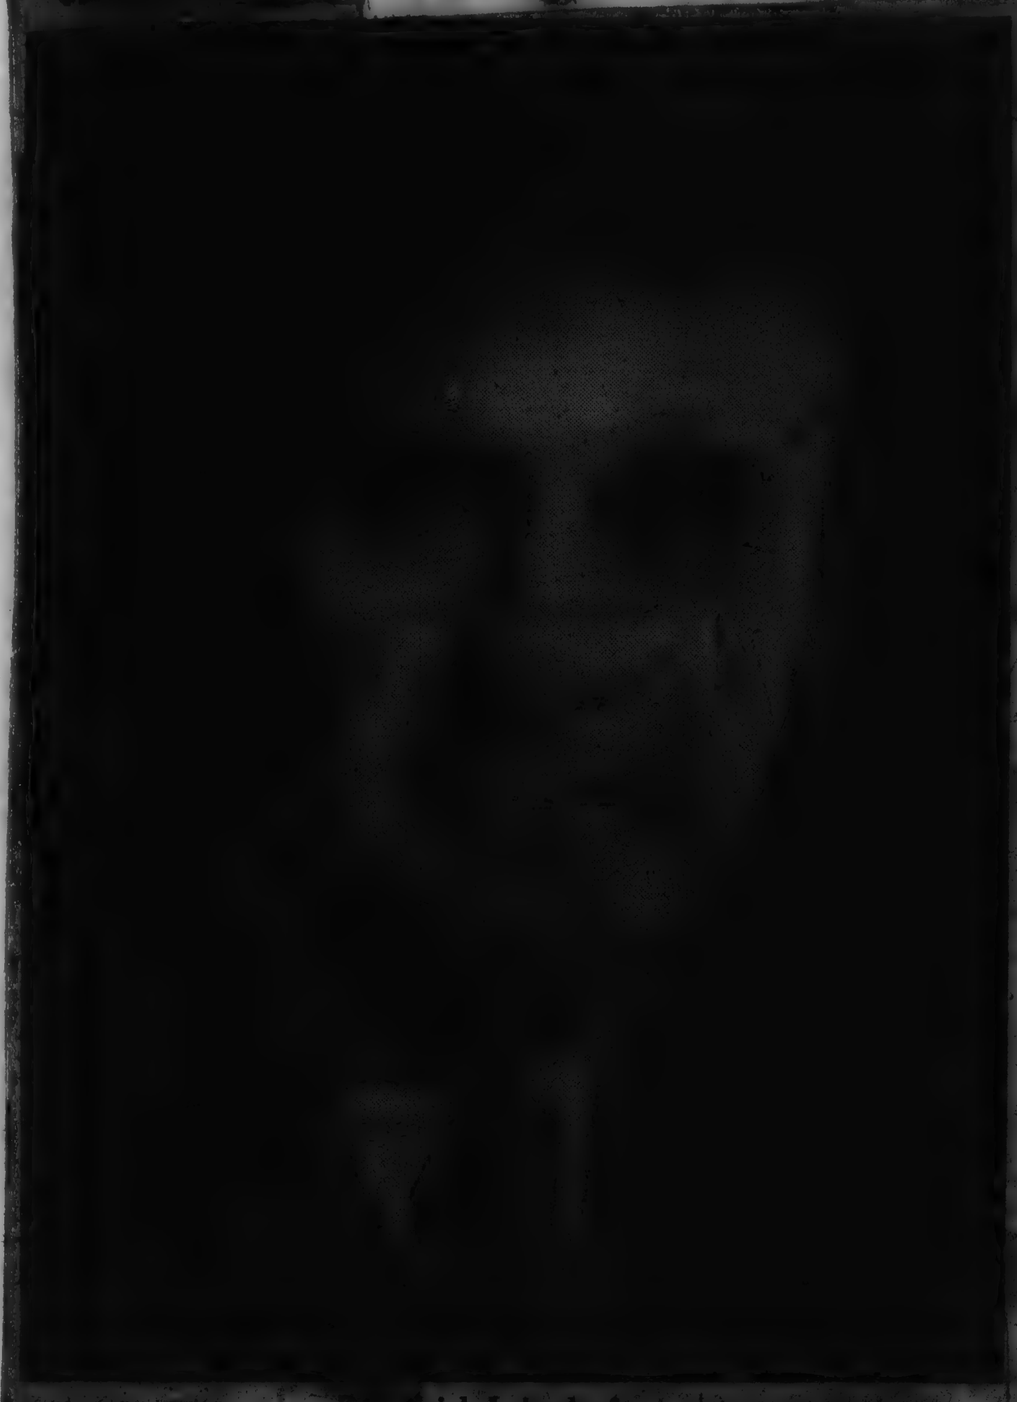
Erich Leinsdorf Heads Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will become permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next fall. In the summer of 1963 he will assume his related duties as director of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center at Tanglewood, Massachusetts.

Leinsdorf was born and educated in Vienna. He became an assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival when he was only 22 years old. Three years later the Metropolitan Opera called him to this country to help conduct the Wagner repertoire. His American career has included directorships of the Cleveland Orchestra, the Rochester Philharmonic, and the New York City Opera, before his return to the Met in 1957.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 203, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON
Circ. 194,
SEP 8



Erich Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf Faces Boston Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Boston

A story has been making the rounds these days, perhaps apocryphal, that Erich Leinsdorf's son came to him last season and said that some of his school friends had asked him to tell them which orchestra was the greatest in the United States.

"Tell them that you don't know now," Mr. Leinsdorf is said to have advised him, "but that next year it will be the Boston Symphony."

A quick answer, doubtless given with a twinkling eye.

Yet to most Bostonians it would never occur to question whether the Boston Symphony were or were not the best American orchestra, or indeed the best orchestra in the whole world (though some Boston music critics may hold more tempered opinions). Now that Mr. Leinsdorf has taken over the podium from Charles Munch as the orchestra's director, Bostonians are not in the least concerned about his making the Boston Symphony the greatest in the United States. They are concerned, however, over his ability to keep it that way. This is the same concern they felt when Munch took over the leadership from Koussevitzky.

These unsettled emotions have in no way interfered with receipts at the box office. The clamor for seats at Symphony Hall goes on as furiously this season as it has in the past, with curiosity adding an ingredient of spice to the season just opened. Will the new man step more easily into Munch's shoes, as Munch once stepped, not so easily, into Koussevitsky's? Will he change the sound of Munch's orchestra, as Munch once changed Koussevitzky's? Will the programs be different? Or better? Or worse?

No final evaluation can be made, of course, on the basis of the Boston Symphony's opening concert of its 82d season on Friday afternoon. It is not what a man can deliver in one concert, or even in three or four. It is what he consistently delivers over an entire season, or thirteen, or twenty-five.

Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert had many virtues, and few if any shortcomings worth naming. There was no question about heart. There was no question about intellect when the orchestra was not under the full control of this keen musical intellect. He knew what he wanted; he knew how to get it; and he got it with gestures both dynamic and graceful.

But where was the romance, the thrill, the radiance, the glory? Where were the surge, the sostenuto, the sforzando, the aspirations, or even a simple lyricism? We ask not for sentimentality, but for sentiment in its highest sense. Since Mr. Leinsdorf has given us this deeper sense of musical sentiment when he appeared with the orchestra as a guest conductor, we may naturally assume that its absence at this concert was owing to the special problems that must surely confront any artist assuming the direction of a great orchestra for the first time.

Mr. Leinsdorf's first program is a fine start in the direction of his stated policy—to give his listeners an over-all picture, in three or four years, of the classical, romantic, and modern orchestral literature. He hopes that nothing will be neglected. He intends to balance the repertoire, providing a good coverage of the various musical styles.

He opened with the Boston concert première of Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace," the music expanding in the composer's typical rhapsodic way and moving through shifting tonalities, at times acerb, to a stately close.

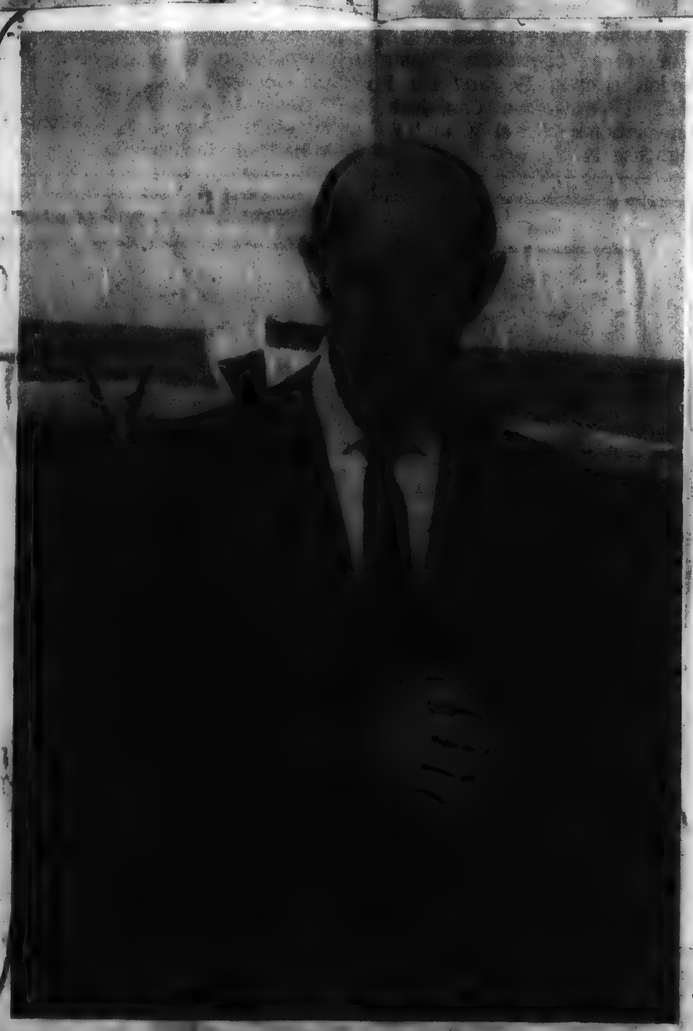
Mr. Leinsdorf then went on to give us Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony in its first performance by the Boston Symphony, though it has been played in Boston earlier this year by the Philadelphia Orchestra, which commissioned it. The work is beautifully composed (it seems quite impossible for Mr. Piston to write badly) a fitting addition to the oeuvre of our leading American symphonist.

Opening with melodies that range in a broad, swinging counterpoint, the initial Con moto movement tenses and relaxes in a series of American moods. Master of orchestral effects, Mr. Piston varies his timbres, balances his masses against economies, and turns out scores of winsome, yet solid musical content. The final two movements — Adagio pastorale and Allegro festevole—are exactly what they are described to be.

By this time in Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert it was evident that the instrumental sound had already changed. Gone was the tingling brilliance of Munch's French orchestra. In its place was the more orotund Viennese sound, a smoother blending of the choirs. Mr. Leinsdorf has also restored the risers that Munch had eliminated, thus displaying the orchestra in a different aural concept. When he gave us Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," it was obvious that the French sound in Boston is yielding to the Austrian.

Mr. Leinsdorf's reading of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, with which he closed, restored the Germanic tempos that Munch had been used to whipping to a frenzy. Perhaps Mr. Leinsdorf gave us the truer Beethoven, but some of us, rightly or wrongly, may have missed the fire, the passion, the nobility that we have become used to.

PALM BEACH, FLA.
NEWS
D. 3,805 S. 4,007
APR 28 1962



BOSTON SYMPHONY DIRECTOR, Erich Leinsdorf, pictured at the Sea Breeze-Holiday Inn where he is vacationing with his wife and two daughters, Deborah and Jenifer. Mr. Leinsdorf will return to Boston this week to begin rehearsals for the symphony opening September 21. He will conduct the N.Y. Philharmonic Orchestra September 24.

INSTRUMENTALIST
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,900
MAY 1962

Erich Leinsdorf Heads Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will become permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next fall. In the summer of 1963 he will assume his related duties as director of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center at Tanglewood, Massachusetts.

Leinsdorf was born and educated in Vienna. He became an assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival when he was only 22 years old. Three years later the Metropolitan Opera called him to this country to help conduct the Wagner repertoire. His American career has included directorships of the Cleveland Orchestra, the Rochester Philharmonic, and the New York City Opera, before his return to the Met in 1957.

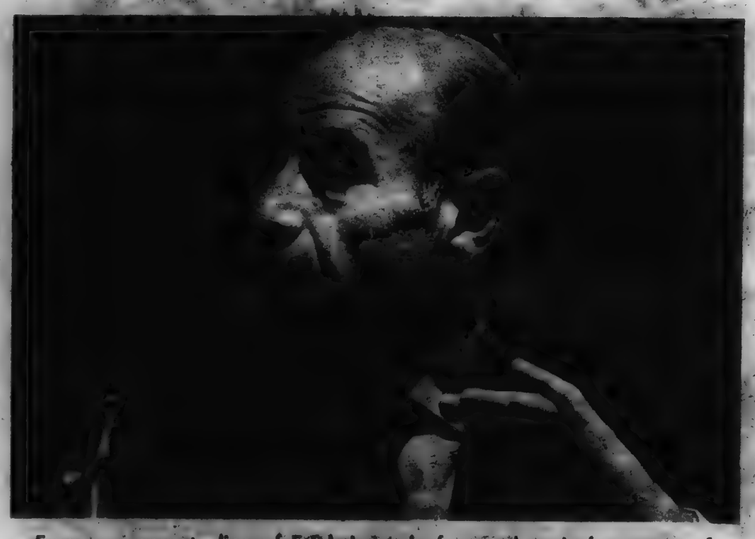
Traveler Scope . . . Where The News Comes Alive In Pictures

Meet New Mr. Music!

(Traveler Staff Photos by John Landers Jr.)

MAESTRO Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor, demonstrates his views and ... s at press conference today. He'll take over as music director of the ... n Symphony Orchestra just before Labor Day. Appropriately enough, he'll ... neighbor of Arthur Fiedler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops. Story ... 5.

Photos by Luigi Pellettieri and Boris and Milton



Four camera studies of Erich Leinsdorf reveal varied aspects of his face and eyes. From a glimpse of him in rapt thought, to shots of him accentuating conversation with graceful gesture, these provide a notion of the intense and thoughtful person soon to head the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New Symphony Conductor— Erich Leinsdorf

By Cyrus Durgin

When on Friday afternoon, Sept. 21, Erich Leinsdorf faces the Boston Symphony for the first time as music director, a new era will have begun for the Orchestra.

Retirement of Charles Munch and accession of Leinsdorf does not represent merely a change in artistic leadership, all-important as that surely is. It symbolizes a total difference in musical thinking and personal attributes.

Leinsdorf, though Vienna-born Feb. 4, 1912, is the first conductor in Boston Symphony history with anything like an American background. All his predecessors were European, to whom European ways of life and music-making were native, and to whom English was at the least an alien tongue.

Though Leinsdorf's musical training was Viennese, and he was indoctrinated in a Central European ideal of orchestral sound and manner of performance, from the age of 25 he has lived and worked in the United States. That has made all the difference.

For the mature half of his life, thus far, Leinsdorf personally and professionally has developed in an American milieu. He has come to speak English like an American; he seems personally to have taken on the color and to have assumed the tempo of American life. He has become a citizen and married an American girl. Their children are Americans.

This may be an overlay upon a gentleman who is also very much a cosmopolitan, but it is an overlay of vital importance in Leinsdorf's approach to his new post, and in his appeal to the American public. (One does not say merely 'Boston public' because the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by its broadcasts and its tours, serves the country as a whole.

Since Leinsdorf became assistant conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in 1937, he comes to Boston as no stranger. His operatic performances have been admired here, and we have had a taste of the symphonic Leinsdorf, thanks to the invitation which Dr. Munch extended in 1961, to be guest conductor at Symphony Hall.

Leinsdorf's experience in this country has been broad. When in 1943 he resigned from the post of chief conductor of German opera at the Metropolitan, which he had occupied since 1939 after the death of Artur Bodanzky, Leinsdorf went to the Cleveland Orchestra. This appointment was interrupted by service in the United States Army.

Out of uniform, Leinsdorf became music director of the Rochester Philharmonic in Rochester, N.Y., and remained there nine years. The New York City Opera summoned him to be its general manager in 1956, and in the years following he returned to the Metropolitan as both conductor and music consultant. His appointment as music director of the Boston Symphony was announced Apr. 22, 1961.

Many of the world's great men have been short and slight. Among them Arturo Toscanini, who more than 30 years ago perceived the extraordinary talent of Leinsdorf, and made him a protege. From 1934 to 1938 the young man assisted Toscanini and Bruno Walter at the Salzburg, Austria, Festival.

Leinsdorf also is short and slight, though with a large head and with hands that in their muscularity sometimes give you the impression they are enormous. He is balding, his face is long and deeply lined, his dark eyes possess a quality which can only be called penetrating.

About Leinsdorf there is an extraordinary dignity and, as befits one of his profession and eminence, a profound sense of command. His manner is elegant and charming, his speech friendly, his humor lively and, again, American. But his dignity, to the casual acquaintance, is the strongest attribute. To me he suggests a steely hardness of artistic purpose beneath the soft integument of manner.

We shall learn much about him in the next six months—even more in the time to come after that. There will be changes in the sound and the ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the nature of its programs and the manner of performance, in the very appearance of the group, to some extent, for the new music director has explained his intention of seating his players upon platforms upon the Symphony Hall stage.

Likely there will be changes, too, in the nature of the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood. That, I feel personally, will be all to the artistic good. While the Festivals appear to have thriven at the box office, a certain gray monotony of "the standard repertory" has long settled over the programs in the Music Shed. What Leinsdorf will do about that remains to be heard, but my guess is that the Berkshires—including the Music Center—are due for alterations.

Come what may, we can be assured that the next several years of the Boston Symphony will be of notable interest and perhaps excitement. I think a very fresh breeze is going to waft through Symphony Hall.

More Photos on Page 10

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 9 1962

Leinsdorf From Page 5

Three Boston Symphony conductors—Erich Leinsdorf, who assumes the post at age 50; Pierre Monteux, now 87, who was conductor 1920-24, and Charles Munch, 71 this month, who has retired after 13 years.

Photo by Whitestone

Planning ile the sun. Leinsdorf, relaxed at Tanglewood, acquaints librarian Victor Alpert, center, and music administrator Leonard Burkat with his artistic ideas for next season.

Photo by Boris and Milton

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,900
MAY 11 1962

NEW CONDUCTOR AT SYMPHONY

In taking over his new duties as conductor of the Boston Orchestra, as a worthy successor to Dr. Charles Munch, who retired, Erich Leinsdorf paid high praise to the musical policies of the world famous organization. The new conductor will continue the affiliations of the Boston Symphony with the choral groups Harvard-Radcliffe and Chorus Pro Music. During the next season he will conduct 17 concerts here, and all the tours.

The final good-by by Dr. Munch will come after the eight weeks of the Berkshire Musical Festival (Tanglewood) beginning July 4. Prior to that time he will conduct a series of concerts in France and Switzerland, beginning with a Debussy program in Paris honoring the centennial of the composer's birth.

Dr. Munch had the second longest uninterrupted term as conductor of the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky had the longest.

Tuesday night, May 1st, Maestro Arthur Fiedler opened the 77th season of the admirable and ever popular Boston Pops with 2 sweeping and eloquent renditions of the Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg in Wagner's Tannhauser. The well chosen program included many delightful semiclassic numbers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
MAY 18 1962

Quotes

My philosophy—I suppose I'll be branded a first-class socialist—is that it's much cheaper to subsidize railroad transportation than to build highways. A lot of people use their cars because they have to. If you provided free rail transportation, you'd save money. It's much cheaper to support the railroads than to build highways and to tear the city apart in the process. Everyone yells about that $80 million the city loses on the subways every year — but that's the best buy New York gets for its money.—Harry A. Barnes, New York City's traffic commissioner.

I am particularly happy that I am coming in here [to Boston] not as a bricklayer. I don't have to build. I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization. This again enables one to make music without having to go to collect cement and bricks and composition shingles. —Erich Leinsdorf, conductor-elect, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 25 1962

Erich Leinsdorf,
New BSO Conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
AUG 26 1962

Leinsdorf, New Symphony Director, Back From Tour

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in Boston yesterday after a seven-week tour of work and holiday in Europe.

Leinsdorf was accompanied by his son, David, 20, who served as his secretary on the trip.

His wife and their two daughters, Debby, 13, and Jennifer, 10, were on hand at the airport to greet the Austrian-born conductor.

Before going to Europe, Leinsdorf bought the Brookline home where they will live and his wife and two girls have spent the Summer arranging it for his return.

Two other children, Gregor, 18, a student at the University of Chicago, and Joshua, 16, are currently working at Summer jobs.

Leinsdorf will conduct his first concert as music director of the B.S.O., Friday, Sept. 21. Charles Munch will officially retire after 13 years with the Symphony today, when he concludes his last concert at Tanglewood.

Debby and Jennifer had good news for their father yesterday.

While he was away, they had completed a card catalogue of his extensive music library. It had been placed in his office at Symphony Hall.

After passing through customs, there was no question about where the family group would go next. They went to his office.

NEW HOME BASE—Boston Symphony's new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, arrives from Europe with son, David, 20.

Boston Globe Magazine
SEPTEMBER 9, 1962

TV WEEK
THIS WEEK'S RADIO and TV PROGRAMS AND FEATURES PAGES

New Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Story on Pages 8 and 10

Boston's Most Complete TV Program Listings Pullout Section

Boston Globe Magazine
SEPTEMBER 9, 1962

TV WEEK

New Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Story on Pages 8 and 10

Boston's Most Complete TV Program Listings Pullout Section

HERALD ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

HIGHLIGHTS INSIDE THIS MORNING

How Green Are Grass Roots?

Section I

Should Wives Be Spanked?

See Ann Landers

Hayden Peerson:

Facts Leave Slight Trace

Section I

ON THE COVER

ERICH LEINSDORF, who succeeds Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Fall. Color photo by Fabian Bachrach.

HERALD

HIGHLIGHTS INSIDE THIS MORNING

How Green Are Grass Roots?

Section I

Should We've Be Spanked?

Facts Leave Slight Trace

ON THE COVER

ERICH LEINSDORF, who succeeds Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Fall. Color photo by Fabian Bachrach.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 256,564

SEP 1962

Erich Leinsdorf (opposite), currently in his first year with the Boston Symphony and its summer Tanglewood festival, combines superb discipline, masterly technique and adventurous programing with a personal sense of humor.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 256,564

SEP 1962

Erich Leinsdorf (opposite), currently in his first year with the Boston Symphony and its summer Tanglewood festival, combines superb discipline, masterly technique and adventurous programing with a personal sense of humor.

12

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
AUG 26 1962

NEW SYMPHONY DIRECTOR

Leinsdorf Arrives, Full of Plans

(Herald Staff Photo by George Hoyt)

LEINSDORF ENSEMBLE—Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston Symphony, poses smiling at the airport with his family after returning from summer in Europe. From left, Leinsdorf, Hester, Jennie, Mrs. Leinsdorf and David, who accompanied his father to Rome, Switzerland and London.

By W. J. McCARTHY

Members of the Boston Symphony are hereby advised their new conductor is a man who appears to have more than a baton at his fingertips.

Erich Leinsdorf flew into Boston from London yesterday to a fond reunion with the ladies of his family, and while his heart was busy with that his head was full of the orchestra.

Plans for Season

Talking with reporters only moments after clearing customs at the BOAC terminal, Leinsdorf discussed with obvious anticipation his plans for the coming season.

"The orchestra will finish at Tanglewood (with Dr. Charles Munch, the retiring music director, conducting) this weekend," said Leinsdrof, "and then they have a well-earned vacation of

(Continued on Page Two)

...etting back to the coming season, Leinsdorf, who comes here after five years with the Metropolitan Opera as music consultant and director, said he plans to conduct "just short of 100 concerts, or practically 25 of the 32 weeks."

Guest conductors?

"We will have Dr. Munch for four weks, Mr. Burgin (Richard Burgin, associate conductor) fo three weeks, although I can't giv you the day-by-day schedule. B everything is in good shape."

And so is Maestro Leinsdorf

if the plans of his effervescent family continue to bubble along.

BROOKLINE HOME

The Leinsdorfs are seven in all, the boys being David, 20, Gregor, 18, and Joshua, 17, and they will be living at 153 Dean road in Brookline, "not more than 20 minutes from Symphony Hall."

Waiting for the BOAC jet, Mrs. Leinsdorf explained:

"My husband is tired of traffic—we lived in Larchmont while in New York—and he wanted a place near his work. So I got a compass and figured a 2-minute radius, and there was Dean road."

Although she was most recently a research assistant in psychiatry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Mrs. Leinsdorf's talents as a mathematician were confirmed by her husband.

"I made it on a test run, in light traffic, in under 10 minutes, once," he said.

ALSO WAITING

Waiting to greet Leinsdorf and David, who accompanied his father on the seven-week stay in Europe, were Orchestra Trustees John T. Noonan and Edward A. Taft.

For both, Leinsdorf had the simple greeting, "How nice of you to come," but for Noonan, who lives at 162 Dean road, he added with a smile, "my dear neighbor."

While in Rome, the Vienna-born Leinsdorf, now 50, conducted a special orchestra in a recording of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA, and in London did two hour-long television concerts for the BBC.

In between, he had time for a vacation at Sills in Switzerland.

FAMILY REUNION

Between now and Sept. 17, he will have time for a reunion with his family, with the younger boys, Gregor and Joshua, expected in a week or so from their summer jobs in New York.

David then will be leaving for his junior year at Columbia, Gregor for his second year at the University of Chicago. Joshua is enrolled at Brookline high school, the girls in the public schools of the town.

Leinsdorf himself said he would be "picking up odds and ends," but left no doubt the odds and ends are in a concert hall not more that 20 minutes from 153 Dean road in Brookline.

...phony Reins

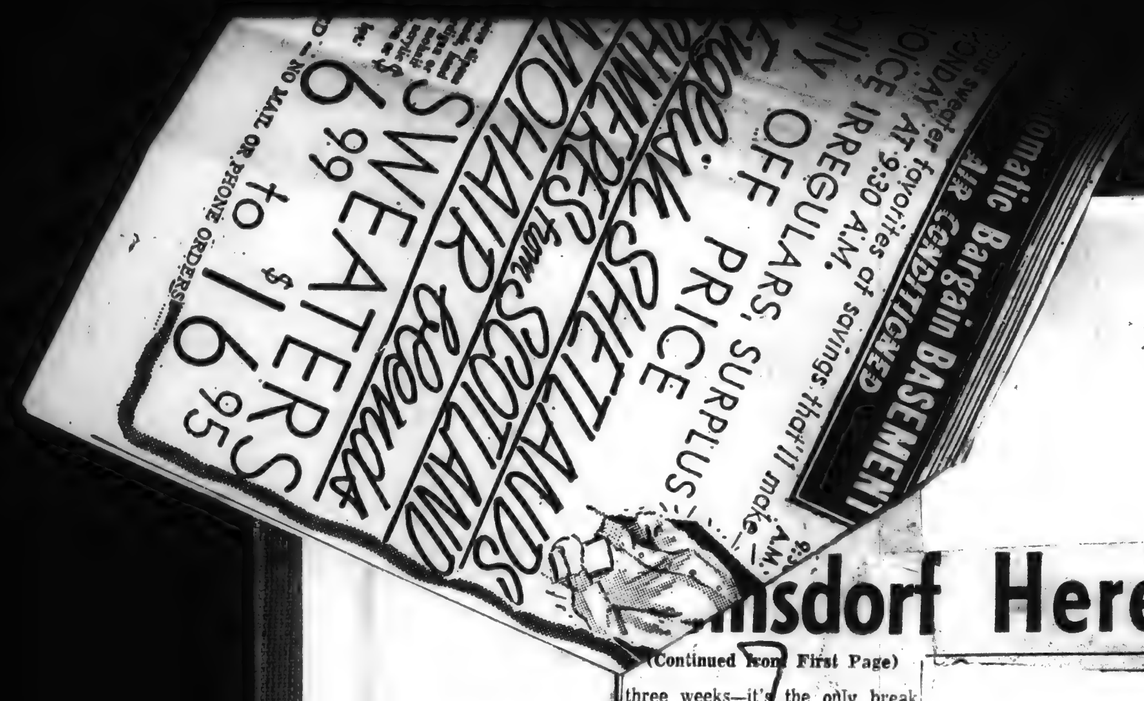
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

New Boston Symphony Conductor Arrives Home

(United Press International Telephoto)

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reunited with his wife Anne and children, Jennifer, 10, (seated), Hester, 13, and David, 20, at Logan International Airport Saturday after arriving from Europe. He succeeded Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Orchestra, who retired Sunday after 13 years with the orchestra.



Leinsdorf Here to Assume Symphony Reins

(Continued from First Page)

three weeks—it's the only break they have, you know—so our first rehearsal will be Monday, Sept. 17."

Leinsdorf broke off for a moment to show his wife, Anna, and their daughters, Hester, 13, and Jennifer, 10, the prized souvenir of this seven-week visit to Europe—a four-foot steamer trunk, neatly compartmented on one side, but open full-length on the other.

"I bought it second-hand in London," explained Leinsdorf, who has a reputation in the music worl as a meticulous dresser, "for the tours."

LESS IRONING

Mrs. Leinsdorf broke in laughing to explain that now his tails could hang full-length while traveling, "and they won't have to be ironed for every concert."

Getting back to the coming season, Leinsdorf, who comes here after five years with the Metropolitan Opera as music consultant and director, said he plans to conduct "just short of 100 concerts, or practically 25 of the 32 weeks."

Guest conductors?

"We will have Dr. Munch for four weks, Mr. Burgin (Richard Burgin, associate conductor) fo three weeks, although I can't giv you the day-by-day schedule. Bu everything is in good shape."

And so is Maestro Leinsdorf if the plans of his effervescent family continue to bubble along.

BROOKLINE HOME

The Leinsdorfs are seven in all, the boys being David, 20, Gregor, 18, and Joshua, 17, and they will be living at 153 Dean road in Brookline, "not more than 20 minutes from Symphony Hall."

Waiting for the BOAC jet, Mrs. Leinsdorf explained:

"My husband is tired of traffic—we lived in Larchmont while in New York—and he wanted a place near his work. So I got a compass and figured a 2-minute radius, and there was Dean road."

Although she was most recently a research assistant in psychiatry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Mrs. Leinsdorf's talents as a mathematician were confirmed by her husband.

"I made it on a test run, in light traffic, in under 10 minutes, once," he said.

ALSO WAITING

Waiting to greet Leinsdorf and David, who accompanied his father on the seven-week stay in Europe, were Orchestra Trustees John T. Noonan and Edward A. Taft.

For both, Leinsdorf had the simple greeting, "How nice of you to come," but for Noonan, who lives at 163 Dean road, he added with a smile, "my dear neighbor."

While in Rome, the Vienna-born Leinsdorf, now 50, conducted a special orchestra in a recording of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA, and in London did two hour-long television concerts for the BBC.

In between, he had time for a vacation at Sills in Switzerland.

FAMILY REUNION

Between now and Sept. 17, he will have time for a reunion with his family, with the younger boys, Gregor and Joshua, expected in a week or so from their summer jobs in New York.

David then will be leaving for his junior year at Columbia, Gregor for his second year at the University of Chicago. Joshua is enrolled at Brookline high school, the girls in the public schools of the town.

Leinsdorf himself said he would be "picking up odds and ends," but left no doubt the odds and en s are in a concert hall not more that 20 minutes from 153 Dean roda in Brookline.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
AUG 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 27 1962

New Boston Symphony Conductor Arrives Home

(United Press International Telephoto)

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is reunited with his wife Anne and children, Jennifer, 10, (seated), Hester, 13, and David, 20, at Logan International Airport Saturday after arriving from Europe. He succeeded Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Orchestra, who retired Sunday after 13 years with the orchestra.

TORN PAGE

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
September 25, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
Sunday, September 23, 1962

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 50,000
SEP 29 1962

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
SEP 23 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
SEP 25 1962

JERSEY JOURNAL
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
OCT - 6 1962

JERSEY CITY, N.J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
D. 94,003 SAT. 81,979
OCT 6 1962

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 611,842 S. 1,004,122
OCT 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD
Circ. 83,057
SEP 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
SEP 30 1962
4-62

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Tour U. S. Cities, '62-'63

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra will present over 220 concerts during the 1962-1963 season. These include programs in 24 cities across the United States in addition to Boston, where the Orchestra's season opened on September 21. The current season is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-second and Erich Leinsdorf's first as Music Director.

The season will span 50 weeks including the winter season in Boston, the Boston Pops, Esplanade Concerts, and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. In its own auditorium (Symphony Hall) the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present five series: 24 Friday matinee programs (September 21-April 11) will be repeated on Saturday evenings (September 22-April 13) plus six Sunday afternoons (October 7-April 7), six Monday evenings (October 15-March 11), and ten Tuesday evenings (September 25-April 9). There will also be special events to be announced and a series of eight Open Rehearsals on Thursdays (October 11-April 4) intended primarily for students in the Boston area.

In nearby Cambridge the Orchestra will present its Eighty-first consecutive year of concerts in Sanders Theatre at Harvard University, while its season in Providence, Rhode Island, will be the Orchestra's Eightieth consecutive year there. The concerts in Cambridge are held on six Tuesday evenings (October 9-March 26) and in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium on five Tuesday evenings (Oct. 2-March 12).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make several short tours along the east coast during the season, including five Friday evenings (October 26-March 22) in the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center. The Orchestra will also visit the Brooklyn Academy of Music on five Thursday evenings (October 25-March. 21). The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play twice in Woolsey Hall in New Haven (October 23 and January 8), on two occasions in Hartford at the Bushnell Memorial Auditorium (November 26 and February 18), and twice in Washington, D.C. at Constitution Hall (March 18 and 19). One ap-

Continued on Page Four

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
SEP 27 1962

Schedule

Boston Symphony

Continued from Page One

pearance will be made in each of the following cities: Northampton, Massachusetts (October 22, John M. Greene Hall); Plymouth, Massachusetts (November 19, Memorial Building), New London, Connecticut (November 27, Palmer Auditorium); Storrs, Connecticut (January 7, Albert N. Jorgenson Auditorium); Philadelphia (February 19, Academy of Music); Baltimore (March 17, Lyric Theatre).

At the conclusion of the Boston season on April 13 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will embark on a two week transcontinental tour presenting concerts in eleven cities in the United States and Canada. The tour will open in Chicago (April 15, Orchestra Hall) and include Kansas City, Missouri (Apr. 16, Music Hall), Oklahoma City (Apr. 17, Municipal Auditorium), Albuquerque (Apr 18, Civic Auditorium), San Diego (Apr. 19, Russ Auditorium), Los Angeles (Apr. 21, Shrine Auditorium), San Francisco (Apr. 22, War Memorial Opera House), Portland (Apr. 23, Public Auditorium), Seattle (Apr. 24, Center Opera House), Winnipeg (Apr. 26, Winnipeg Auditorium), and Minneapolis (Apr. 27, Northrop Memorial Auditorium).

After the final concert of the transcontinental tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Boston for the opening of the Boston Pops season on April 30 under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The nine weeks of the Pops season will be followed by three weeks of free open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade in Boston beginning on July 1. At the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. the eight weeks of the Berkshire Festival will begin on July 5. Concurrently with the Berkshire Festival the Symphony Orchestra operates the Berkshire Music Center, its summer school of music. The Opening Exercises of the Music Center with Erich Leinsdorf as Director will be held on June 30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAY 9 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAY 9 1962

Philip R. Allen Will Is Filed

Public Institutions Are Left $340,000

A total of $340,000 in public bequests was given in the will of Philip R. Allen of Walpole, manufacturer and philanthropist who died at 89 on May 2. He was the father of Philip K. Allen, chairman of the Republican State Committee.

The will was filed yesterday with Anna E. Herach, Norfolk register of deeds. No bond was filed with it, and the total amount of the estate was not made known.

Allen left $25,000 each to the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Children's Hospital, Massachusetts General Hospital, New England Center Hospital, Phillips Academy at Andover, the Boston Society of Natural History, Yale University, Norwood Hospital and the Emergency Medical Fund of Walpole.

Gifts of $20,000 each were made to the United Church of Walpole and the Kings' Daughters' and Sons' Home for the Aged, Wrentham.

Bequests of $10,000 each were left to the Salvation Army and the American School for Classical Studies in Greece. $10,000 gifts were left to the American Cancer Society and the Massachusetts Chapter, Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation.

His widow, Anne K., was left his real estate and $100,000 outright. The rest of the estate was left in trust, half of its income to go to Mrs. Allen for life.

Upon her death the trust is dissolved and the principal goes equally to his son and his daughter, Anne Conklin of Farmington, Conn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAY 9 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
SEP 13 1962

Symphony Near Full Subscription

Although all tickets for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are fully subscribed for the Orchestra's eighty-second season (and the first under the directorship of Erich Leinsdorf), limited numbers of subscriptions are available at this time for the following series in Symphony Hall:

Six Sunday afternoon concerts at three o'clock: October 7. February 3, February 24, April November 11, December 16, 7. Prices for the series: $12, $16, $20, $24.

Six Monday evening concerts at 8:30 p.m.: October 15, November 5, December 3, January 21, February 11, March 11. Prices for the series: $12, $16, $20, $24.

Please call: Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558
MAY 1962

THE REGION

36-Page Boston Spread

Boston is given one of its most elaborate magazine salutes in years in a special 36-page section devoted to various aspects of civic accomplishment in the April issue of Town and Country.

The section profiles the city's education, music, electronics industry, business, banking and fashion. It features a seven-page article by Lucius Beebe on "Boston: Metropolis with Manners" and has a picture of Dr. Paul Dudley White, eminent cardiologist, on the cover. There is a two-page, two-color map of the Freedom Trail.

Of electronics, T&C says, "Few people link conservative New England with the age of space and rockets, but the plain facts are that without New England products and know-how, no guided missile and no manned space vehicle would ever leave the ground or would ever find its target."

In a story on the city's institutions of higher learning, the magazine says "Brains are Boston's biggest business." The Boston Symphony is hailed as the "aristocrat of orchestras."

The list of persons selected for "who's who" treatment includes Ephron Catlin, Jr., Roger P. Sonnabend, Ernest Henderson and the Rev. Michael P. Walsh, SJ.

TORN PAGE

13

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, September 25, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
Sunday, September 23, 1962

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 50,000
SEP 29 1962

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,696 S. 851,270
SEP 23 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
SEP 25 1962

JERSEY JOURNAL
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
OCT - 6 1962

JERSEY CITY, N.J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
D. 94,003 SAT. 81,979
OCT 6 1962

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 811,942 S. 1,004,122
OCT 21 1962

...ston Symphony Orchestra To Tour U.S. Cities, '62-'63

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra will present over 220 concerts during the 1962-1963 season. These include programs in 24 cities across the United States in addition to Boston, where the Orchestra's season opened on September 21. The current season is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-second and Erich Leinsdorf's first as Music Director.

The season will span 50 weeks including the winter season in Boston, the Boston Pops, Esplanade Concerts, and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. In its own auditorium (Symphony Hall) the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present five series: 24 Friday matinee programs (September 21-April 11) will be repeated on Saturday evenings (September 22-April 13) plus six Sunday afternoons (October 7-April 7), six Monday evenings (October 15-March 11), and ten Tuesday evenings (September 25-April 9). There will also be special events to be announced and a series of eight Open Rehearsals on Thursdays (October 11-April 4) intended primarily for students in the Boston area.

In nearby Cambridge the Orchestra will present its Eighty-first consecutive year of concerts in Sanders Theatre at Harvard University, while its season in Providence, Rhode Island, will be the Orchestra's Eightieth consecutive year there. The concerts in Cambridge are held on six Tuesday evenings (October 9-March 26) and in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium on five Tuesday evenings (Oct. 2-March 12).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make several short tours along the east coast during the season, including five Friday evenings (October 26-March 22) in the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center. The Orchestra will also visit the Brooklyn Academy of Music on five Thursday evenings (October 25-March 21). The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play twice in Woolsey Hall in New Haven (October 28 and January 8), on two occasions in Hartford at the Bushnell Memorial Auditorium (November 26 and February 18), and twice in Washington, D.C. at Constitution Hall (March 18 and 19). One ap-

Continued on Page Four

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
SEP 27 1962

Schedule

Boston ...mphony

Continued from Page One

pearance will be made in each of the following cities: Northampton, Massachusetts (October 22, John M. Greene Hall); Plymouth, Massachusetts (November 13, Memorial Building); New London, Connecticut (November 27, Palmer Auditorium); Storrs, Connecticut (January 7, Albert N. Jorgensen Auditorium); Philadelphia (February 19, Academy of Music); Baltimore (March 17, Lyric Theatre).

At the conclusion of the Boston season on April 13 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will embark on a new, week transcontinental tour, presenting concerts in eleven cities in the United States and Canada. The tour will open in Chicago (April 15, Orchestra Hall) and include Kansas City, Missouri (Apr. 16, Music Hall), Oklahoma City (Apr. 17, Municipal Auditorium), Albuquerque (Apr. 18, Civic Auditorium), San Diego (Apr. 19, Russ Auditorium), Los Angeles (Apr. 21, Shrine Auditorium), San Francisco (Apr. 22, War Memorial Opera House), Portland (Apr. 23, Public Auditorium), Seattle (Apr. 24, Center Opera House), Winnipeg (Apr. 26, Winnipeg Auditorium), and Minneapolis (Apr. 27, Northrop Memorial Auditorium).

After the final concert of the transcontinental tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Boston for the opening of the Boston Pops season on April 30 under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The nine weeks of the Pops season will be followed by three weeks of free open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade in Boston beginning on July 1. At the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, the eight weeks of the Berkshire Festival will begin on July 5. Concurrently with the Berkshire Festival the Symphony Orchestra operates the Berkshire Music Center, its summer school of music. The Opening Exercises of the Music Center with Erich Leinsdorf as Director will be held on June 30.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 14 1962

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
SEP 13 1962

Symphony Near Full Subscription

Although all tickets for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are fully subscribed for the Orchestra's eighty-second season (and the first under the directorship of Erich Leinsdorf), limited numbers of subscriptions are available at this time for the following series in Symphony Hall:

Six Sunday afternoon concerts at three o'clock: October 7, February 3, February 24, April 7, November 11, December 16. Prices for the series: $12, $16, $20, $24.

Six Monday evening concerts at 8:30 p.m.: October 15, November 5, December 3, January 21, February 11, March 11. Prices for the series: $12, $16, $20, $24.

Please call: Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAY 9 1962

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAY 9 1962

Philip R. Allen ... Is Filed

Public Institutions Are Left $340,000

A total of $340,000 in public bequests was given in the will of Philip R. Allen of Walpole, manufacturer and philanthropist who died at 89 on May 2. He was the father of Philip R. Allen, chairman of the Republican State Committee.

The will was filed yesterday with Anna E. Horan, Norfolk register of deeds. No bond was filed with it, and the total amount of the estate was not made known.

Allen left $25,000 each to the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Children's Hospital, Massachusetts General Hospital, New England Center Hospital, Phillips Academy at Andover, the Boston Society of Natural History, Yale University, Norwood Hospital and the Emergency Medical Fund of Walpole.

Gifts of $20,000 each were made to the United Church of Walpole and the Kings' Daughters' and Sons' Home for the Aged, Wrentham.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAY 9 1962

New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558
MAY 1962

THE REGION

36-Page Boston Spread

Boston is given one of its most elaborate magazine salutes in years in a special 36-page section devoted to various aspects of civic accomplishment in the April issue of Town and Country.

The section profiles the city's education, music, electronics industry, business, banking and fashion. It features a seven-page article by Lucius Beebe on "Boston: Metropolis with Manners" and has a picture of Dr. Paul Dudley White, eminent cardiologist, on the cover. There is a two-page, two-color map of the Freedom Trail.

Of electronics, T&C says, "Few people link conservative New England with the age of space and rockets, but the plain facts are that without New England products and know-how, no guided missile and no manned space vehicle would ever leave the ground or would ever find its target."

In a story on the city's institutions of higher learning, the magazine says "Brains are Boston's biggest business." The Boston Symphony is hailed as the "aristocrat of orchestras."

The list of persons selected for "who's who" treatment includes Ephron Catlin, Jr., Roger P. Sonnabend, Ernest Henderson and the Rev. Michael P. Walsh, SJ.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
SEP 30 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 8 1962

Boston Symphony Sets Opening Program-

Leinsdorf Chooses Beethoven

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's 82d season at Symphony Hall Sept. 21 (Friday) at 2:15 and Sept. 22 (Saturday) at 8:30. The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Strauss.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the orchestra because the Beethoven Symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard, and with this orchestra."

The new music director arrived at his residence in Brookline on Aug. 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madama Butterfly" for RCA Victor, and conducted two one-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the orchestra will hold it first rehearsal in Symphony Hall on September 17. At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as Concertmaster succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Associate Conductor.

The opening program will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening series on September 25 at 8:30. On September 24 the Boston Symphony will present the second concert in Lincoln Center's new Philharmonic Hall.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,578
AUG 12 1962

It Is All Up To Leinsdorf

BY MILES KASTENDIECK

WHEN ERICH LEINSDORF assumes the directorship of the Boston Symphony this Fall, changes in program policy will doubtless occur. The concert series of any orchestra naturally reflect the musical thinking and temperament of its conductor.

To what extent Mr. Leinsdorf will bring a new accent to the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center remains sheer speculation at the present time.

WHEN it comes to working out Berkshire Festival programs for next year, however, perhaps he will consider seriously the proposition of unifying the Festival.

Probably it will be necesary to divide it into two parts, as it is now, since the full orchestra assembles three weeks after the opening. Thus there could be a central theme for the first three weeks and another for the remaining five.

With due respect to the tradition of Bach and Mozart for the opening weeks and also the fact that these concerts draw larger and larger audiences, the time has come to expand the repertory.

Certainly Haydn and Handel, to say nothing of a number of other 19-century composers, could help vary the programs. So much music is available that these concerts could acquire fresh interest designed on a broader base.

Of course it is quite conceivable that all three weeks might be devoted to Mozart on some occasion. To concentrate on one composer at the moment would forego an opportunity for diversification.

This concentration on one composer nevertheless prompts all kinds of suggestions for the big series.

With the outstanding success of William Steinberg's performance of Bruckner's Eighth Symphony last weekend, Mr. Leinsdorf might dare to inaugurate a Bruckner series.

●

THIS COULD be skillfully arranged and reflect much credit on his boldness. Even a Richard Strauss season might be worth contemplating.

Another theme could be nationalism with each weekend devoted to music of a different country. Somewhere in the near future a place should emerge for accent on American composers.

The time has come when going to Tanglewood should have as definite a meaning as going to Bethlehem.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
MAY 2 1962

Erich Leinsdorf's Plans For Bostonians: Modern

BOSTON.

Performances of eight or nine concertos by contemporary composers will be one of the features of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first season under its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf. He succeeds Charles Munch at the end of August. A violin concerto by Benjamin Lees and a piano concerto by Samuel Barber will have their first public hearings.

Other modern concertos announced by Mr. Leinsdorf in a press conference yesterday in Symphony Hall are Darius Milhaud's Violin Concerto; Serge Prokofiev's Cello Concerto; Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2; a piano concerto by Leon Kirchner, Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy for piano and orchestra and a concerto for woodwinds by Alvin Etler.

Mr. Munch will conduct for four weeks next season and Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony's assistant conductor, for three.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
MAY 18 1962

Leinsdorf Honored by Academy

Erich Lainsdorf has been elected a fello wof the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. The honor was voted at the 182nd annual meeting of the Academy here.

The incoming music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of three musicians so recognized, the other two beins soprano Leontyne Price and composer Leon Kirchner of the Harvard music faculty.

The Academy of Arts and Sciences, chartered by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts during the Revolutionary War, includes in its membership some 1800 national and international leaders in the sciences and arts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
MAY 1 8 1962

Leinsdorf Tells Plans For Boston Symphony

ERICH Leinsdorf, who will conduct the Boston Symphony in two concerts at the Bushnell Memorial next season, Nov. 26 and Feb. 18, as part of the Bushnell Symphony Series, plans few and only minor changes in taking over direction of the orchestra from Charles Munch, he said at a recent press conference.

TO PRESERVE a sense of continuity he plans several weeks of concerts directed by Mr. Munch and by Mr. Burgin who will continue as assistant conductor. Arthur Fiedler also will continue as conductor of the Boston Pops. Mr. Leindorf said he found "the group here—with Mr. Burgin, Mr. Fiedler — the best one can hope to find."

Over three or four years he hopes to give the public a comprehensive view repertoire with a good series of contemporary concertos. He hopes also to maintain affiliations with the Harvard-Radcliffe, Pro Musica and Conservatory vocal groups, and will continue the policy of selecting soloists for particular works, not selecting works after soloists have been engaged. He intends to seat the orchestra on risers which will make a slight change in seating.

AS FOR TANGLEWOOD, "it is one of the greatest enterprises, and I want to continue its building up."

For this Summer he has committed himself to open the Philadelphia Summer concerts on the birthday of Stravinsky and do two other programs there; to attend the American Federation of Musicians' String Conference in Michigan, and to record an opera in Rome.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 114,005
MAY 3 1962

DIRECTOR

Erich Leinsdorf, new director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said Boston would be the site next season of a world premiere of a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees, Smith College professor, and a piano concerto by Samuel Barber.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
SEP 9 1962

Pro Musica Rehearsal Monday

The Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director, will start weekly rehearsals for its 13th season tomorrow evening at 7:30 in the Old South Church, 645 Boylston St. All persons interested in auditioning for membership are cordially invited to participate.

The Chorus Pro Musica's first public appearance will be in a Boston Symphony Orchestra program, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, on Oct. 12 and 13 in Symphony Hall and on Oct. 26 in Lincoln Center, New York city.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059
AUG 1962

1962 . Erich Leinsdorf who succeeds Charles Munch as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Music Director in September, was elected a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences at the 182nd Annual Meeting of the Academy in Boston . . . Jorge Mester has been appointed music director of the Philharmonic Society of St. Louis. He is a faculty member of the Juilliard School of Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 33,250
MAY 24 1962

Dartmouth Names 16 to Committee For New Hopkins Center for Arts

HANOVER, N.H. (AP- — Dartmouth College Wednesday announced the naming of 16 men distinguished in the music world to the Music Advisory Committee of the new $7.5 million Hopkins Center for the arts.

Committee chairman is Goddard Lieberson, president of Columbia Records.

Members include Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic; E. Power Biggs, organist; Dave Brubeck, jazz pianist and composer; Elliot Carter, composer; Aaron Copland, composer; Glenn Gould, pianist; Charles E. Griffith, retired music publisher; Richard P. Leach, assistant director at New York's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts.

Also, Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Nathaniel Merrill, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Eugene Ormandy, conductor of The Philadelphia Orchestra; William Schuman, director of the Lincoln Center; Igor Stravinsky, composer; Arthur Virgin, arts patron; and Paul Weston, musical director and orchestra leader.

The committee will guide the Hopkins Center staff in establishing musical programs, invitations to performers and lecturers and the commissioning of new works.

The center, scheduled to open in the fall, will be devoted to music, drama, art and related cultural and educational activities.

Music

Music and Dance in Parker Lecture Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Hugh F. Downey, executive secretary of the Moses Greeley Parker lectures has announced that there will be one musical and one dance program in the 1962-63 series.

The initial event will be presented on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9, in the Lowell Memorial Auditorium and will feature the famed Columbus Boys choir. This group that has graced the American scene for many years has gained a position of top distinction both here and abroad. The dance program is listed for Sunday afternoon, March 31, 1963, and scheduled to appear is Goya and Matteo. This is also a distinguished type of program and brings to audiences an interpretative type of dancing that is both unique and worthy of a leading position in the field. Both of these events will start at 3 p.m. and the general public will be admited free. The general series will open Oct. 21, with a lecture on "From the Andes to the Amazon" by John Goddard.

Erich Leinsdorf

The first program in the fall series of organ recitals scheduled to be held in the Methuen Memorial Music hall will be presented Monday evening at 8:30 o'clock and will feature Anton Heiller of Vienna. A musician of international distinction, Mr. Heiller's last appearance in this country was in July when he was the invited artist at the American Guild of Organists' convention in Los Angeles. He is professor of organ at the Academy of Music in Vienna.

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony orchestra's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's 82nd season at Symphony hall, Sept. 21 (Friday), and his program will include Beethoven's "Eroica" Piston's Symphony No. 7, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

MAESTRO LEINSDORF has enjoyed a long and distinguished career. He received his education at the University of Vienna and the State Academy of Music which is also located in Vienna. In 1934 through 1938 he served as assistant to both Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter at the Salzburg Festival in Austria. He came to America for the first time as a conductor in 1937. He held the position of assistant conductor at the Metropolitan Opera house until 1939, and then became chief conductor of the German wing of the company. His work in the field of Wagner was such that possibly at no time in the history of the German wing at the Met has a conductor and his fellow artists created such a tremendous response to the "Ring," "Tristan und Isolde" and the remaining writings of the German master.

His guest appearances with leading symphony orchestras and opera companies have been almost astronomical in number. He is a member of many musical organizations and committees among which is the advisory group on the arts of National Cultural center in Washington, D. C. He is a member of the visiting committee of Harvard board of overseers to the music department and the music advisory section of the Dartmouth college council on the Creative Arts. A Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Mr. Leinsdorf was recently named honorary co-chairman of the Friends of Albert Schweitzer.

Local concert goers are again reminded that the annual Community Concert membership drive will be under way later this month. The program committee's announcement of two top events to start the season off, a third to come, another brilliant event, and the fine list that the surrounding cities have to offer, should make the 1962-63 series in this area the finest in many years.

Leinsdorf Takes Over

Symphony's 82nd Season Sept. 21

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's eighty-second season at Symphony Hall Sept. 21, (Friday) at 2:15 and Sat. 22 (Saturda)p at 8:30.

The yprogram will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 and Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the orchestra because the Beethoven Symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard and with this orchestra."

The new music director arrived at his residence in Brookline on Aug. 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA Victor and conducted two one-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the orchestra will hold its first rehearsal in Symhpony Hall on Sept. 17. At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as concertmaster succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor.

The opening rpogram will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening series on Set. 25 at 8:30. On Seppt. 24 the Boston Symphony will present a concert in New York at Lincoln's Center's new Philharmonic Hall.

FILMS ★ ★ ★ Drama ★ ★ ★ MUSIC

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 9 1962

Leinsdorf's Opening Program

Erich Leinsdorf will make his first appearances as the new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p.m., Sept. 21, and Saturday evening at 8:30, Sept. 22.

The program will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, chosen by Leinsdorf because it is "a statement of my convictions"; Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony, which has not before been played by the Boston Symphony, in recognition of the composer's "association with Boston, with Harvard and with this Orchestra," and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Richard Strauss.

This program will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening concerts, Sept. 25, at Symphony Hall. The Orchestra will convene for its first rehearsal Sept. 17, on which occasion Joseph Silverstein will assume the position of concertmaster.

On Sept. 24, the Boston Symphony will present the second concert of the dedicatory week of the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center, New York City.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
SEP 11 1962

Symphony Season Nears

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's 82nd season at Symphony Hall Sept. 21 (Friday) at 2:15 p. m. and Sept. 22 (Saturday) at 8:30.

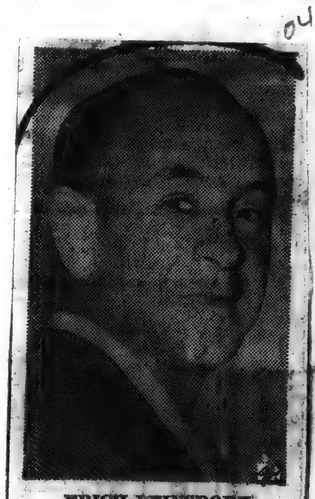
The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 and Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the orchestra because the Beethoven Symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard and with this orchestra."

The new music director arrived at his residence in Brookline Aug. 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA Victor and conducted two-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the orchestra will hold its first rehearsal in Symphony Hall on Sept. 17. At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as concert master succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, September 18, 1962



ERICH LEINSDORF
To Conduct Orchestra

Opening Set By Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, successor to Dr. Charles Munch, will conduct the first concert of the [illegible] season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Boston.

* * *

THE CONCERT will be presented on FM radio station WAMC Friday, beginning at 2:10 p.m. The Boston Symphony concerts will be heard throughout the symphony season on WAMC.

Leinsdorf has announced that the "Overture to War and Peace" by Prokofiev will receive its first concert performance in the United States at the Friday afternoon event. Also to be heard will be the first performance by the Boston Symphony of Walter Piston's "Symphony number 7;" "Till Eulenspiegel" by Strauss, and Beethoven's "Symphony number 3 'Eroica.'"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
SEP 21 1962

At Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf conducts his first concerts as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon, tomorrow evening and Tuesday evening.

The program for the three concerts will be: Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, in its first performance by the Boston Symphony, and Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
SEP 7 1962

Leinsdorf Sets Opening BSO Program

BOSTON—Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's 82nd season at Symphony Hall Sept. 21 at 2:15 and Sept. 22 at 8:30. The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Strauss. Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the orchestra because the Beethoven symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard, and with this orchestra."

Recorded Opera

The new music director arrived at his residence in Brookline on Aug. 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA Victor and conducted two one-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the orchestra will hold its first rehearsal in Symphony Hall on Sept. 17. At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as concertmaster succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor.

The opening program will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening series on Sept. 25 at 8:30. On Sept. 24 the Boston Symphony will present the second concert in Lincoln Center's new Philharmonic Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
SEP 9 1962

Leinsdorf Takes Over

Symphony's 82nd Season Sept. 21

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director, will conduct the opening concerts of the orchestra's eighty-second season at Symphony Hall Sept. 21, (Friday) at 2:15 and Sept. 22 (Saturda)p at 8:30.

The yprogram will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 and Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the orchestra because the Beethoven Symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard and with this orchestra."

The new music director arrived at his residence in Brookline on Aug. 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA Victor and conducted two one-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the orchestra will hold its first rehearsal in Symhpony Hall on Sept. 17. At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as concertmaster succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor.

The opening rpogram will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening series on Set. 25 at 8:30. On Seppt. 24 the Boston Symphony will present a concert in New York at Lincoln's Center's new Philharmonic Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 11 1962

Leinsdorf Lists Program For First Symphony Concert

Calling it "a statement of my convictions,' 'Erich Leinsdorf announced that he would conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony in his first appearance as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sept. 21.

Also on the program, to be given at Symphony Hall at 2:15 p.m. Sept. 21 and at 8:30 p.m. Sept. 22, will be a selection never before played by the Symphony, Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony, and Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

The Orchestra will hold its first rehearsal Sept. 17, with Joseph Silverstein taking the post of concertmaster, and on Sept. 24 will give the second concert in the new Philharmonic Hall of New York City's Lincoln Center.

Globe 9/18/62

Leinsdorf's 1st Day on Job: 2 Rehearsals, News Session

By CYRUS DURGIN

Two full-length rehearsals and an hour-long press conference marked the first day of Erich Leinsdorf as the new music director of the Boston Symphony.

The spare and slight man evidently is a powerhouse of energy.

"I have had a most delightful day" was the way he phrased it.

"First we greeted the four new members of the orchestra, then stood a moment thinking of Mr. Leibovici" (Samuel Joseph Leibovici, first violinist, who died two weeks ago today), "then worked on Prokofieff's Overture to 'War and Peace', Piston's Seventh Symphony and 'Till Eulenspiegel.'

"In the afternoon we worked on the Beethoven 'Eroica' Symphony, then went back to Piston."

The Boston Symphony will present a somewhat altered appearance to the audience at the season's first concert Friday afternoon.

"We have re-seated 'inch-wise' a few of the musicians, all for the sake of the ensemble," Leinsdorf said. "All but 16 players—the first two stands of first and second violins, violas and cellos—will be seated upon risers 22 inches high.

"Slight risers like these, I believe, make an effect acoustically favorable to the ensemble. In recent years the trend has been to nearly flat stage, but I think that has been a practical consideration mainly in the case of orchestras who travel, and find it hard to obtain risers when on tour.

"When we record, we are going to try the same relative seating on stage, rather than use the audience part of the auditorium. It is better for the musicians, in my opinion, to be seated for recording as they are for concerts.

"While for recording we may have to move out a little upon an added apron stage, the players will be still in the same position relative to those who sit near them. We are trying some test tapes Thursday morning just to get the total effect of stereophonic sound that way."

Boston's new conductor is obviously a man strong on organizing as well as a distinguished performer of music.

He is giving deep thought to the organization of programs "so that for the next three or four years the public will have 'a fair spectrum of musical styles and composers of the classic, romantic and modern orchestral repertory'.

"The first six programs, for example, will cover these fields in this way: Beethoven's 'Eroica,' Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, a Bach Sinfonia, Brahms' Haydn Variations; Schumann's Fourth Symphony and the Second of Sibelius; Mahler's First Symphony; a sequence of preludes and interludes from Debussy's opera 'Pelleas and Melisande' which I have put together.

"The moderns will include Piston's Seventh Symphony, the new Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber, Charles Ives' Second Symphony, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, the Symphony of Psalms by Stravinsky, the 10th Symphony of Shostakovitch; Prokofieff's 'War and Peace' Overture and Aaron Copland's new 'Preamble.'

"I have a little notion of my own in putting the 'War and Peace' Overture on the first program, just a notion, mind you—we are not in quite the same position as Russian society was in Tolstoy's novel, but I like to think that the music will symbolize for us all that though there is war elsewhere, we find complete peace in the music within Symphony Hall."

Leinsdorf re-emphasized his principle of engaging soloists for the sake of a particular composition.

The work come. first. He does not intend to hire a soloist and let the soloist choose what he wants to play. "That aspect of the soloist problem has got a little out of hand in other places."

The programs to a certain extent will bring to the shorter series of concerts the works heard Fridays and Saturdays. The opening program, for example, will be heard complete at all the shorter series except that in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. There, for technical reasons, some change must be made.

Next Summer's Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have not yet had detailed consideration. "There hasn't been time for that," Leinsdorf said, "but my hope, just my hope, is to arrange many performances of new chamber music at the Music Center, which is equipped to present all manner of new works for combinations between the string quartet and the large orchestra.

"For the Festival concerts in the Music Shed I have in mind some cyclical things. I don't like cycles in a regular concert season, but a Festival is just the time and place for them. Prokofieff would be my composer for a cycle in 1963, and Mozart in the small orchestra series."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
MAY 3 1962

Boston Symphony to Play Music by Smith Instructor

BOSTON (UPI)—The new musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said Tuesday he would continue tradition while featuring contemporary works on concert programs.

Leinsdorf said he would not program cycles of music devoted to one composer or school of music, and that his first season would include nine contemporary concerts.

He said Boston would be the site of a world premier of a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees of the Smith College faculty and an as yet unfinished piano concerto by Samuel Barber.

PRESS CONFERENCE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

MAY 13 1962

The Lively Arts —

Leinsdorf Lines Up

By T. H. Parker

A fortnight ago Erich Leinsdorf, who is to succeed Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held his first press conference. In it he said much that was interesting and important. Since the script is now to hand, I should like to give a rather lengthy verbatim quote:

"Before I, in fact, do join the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I am still in a position to tell you something about this organization. It may not be known because sometimes you need the outsider or visitor or some person who's new to tell you about what you have in your own city.

"I've been asked many question in my travels — when I am in Europe, how are the orchestras in the United States, for example, who makes the programs, is it true that some lady on the committee tells you what to play — these things, the little rumors which are abroad.

"And I want to tell you first a story which happened after I was guest-conducting the Boston Symphony the season before this last one. When I had finished my concerts and had left I wrote a little note to Mr. Perry (the manager of the orchestra), in which I said something like this — that my particular gratitude was for not having been asked to make any compromises with musical beliefs.

"Now this is something which is every rare in the world, this is simply wonderful. In this organization music has the upper hand, there is no pressure to make decisions for non-musical reasons. When something is necessary for musical reasons the ways and means are found to provide them. . . .

"Now I assure you, from having seen musical organizations abroad and in this country, this is rare. As I don't know all musical organizations I cannot in fairness say it is unique, but I have a suspicion it is unique. I would certainly say it is very rare. I am going to do my best to keep it that way.

"This organization shall always hold music uppermost. You can glory in it. It is one of the greatest things I have made a point of this particularly when I was asked abroad, because in Europe there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States, particularly where the center of decision lies and where musical policy is made. Often the general hostility to the United States takes place in little digs. I have found it very useful sometimes to allay certain suspicions best by specific examples and the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people when they heard about them."

Mr. Leinsdorf went on to say that as far as musical programs go, he has no hard and fast rules or systems, or even policies. Rather, he feels that music should convey a "glorious emotional experience to people." He intends to give the public what he terms a comprehensive view of the total repertoire over the next four or five years.

It is plain however that Mr. Leinsdorf will not reverse the long-standing penchant of his predecessors for new music. In the upcoming season alone he wants to do eight or nine contemporary concertos. Among them will be Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto; Stravinsky's Violin Concerto; Milhaud's Viola Concerto; the 'Cello Concerto by Prokofiev; and piano concertos including Bartok, Leon Kirchner, Dello Jolo and a new work being written by Samuel Barber. Alvin Etler will provide the Boston Symphony with a Concerto for Woodwinds and Orchestra.

And in view of the composer's 80th year, there will be plenty of other Stravinsky.

★

The predilection of the late, great Serge Koussevitzky for contemporary music is too well known to need repeating. And Mr. Munch's final program last week with the Boston orchestra in Symphony Hall, was typical of his 13 years' programing. It offered Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon" and the Ninth Symphony by Beethoven. During his tenure he had given 97 first Boston performances of works, 58 United States premieres and 39 world premieres.

Not all of these were contemporary, of course, and there is no guarantee whatsoever that because a work is contemporary, it has built-in goodness above the familiar repertoire. On the other hand, old friends are not best when they keep us from making new ones. Music should have the mesmerism once attributed to a popular confection whose slogan was "the more you eat, the more you want." Why put yourself on a restricted diet and turn into a musical lightweight?

LAST WEEK also brought the first encounter between Boston's new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, and the press, and, as you might expect, he had some interesting things to say.

"I've been asked many questions when I am in Europe— how the orchestras are in the United States, and who makes the programs. Is it true (they want to know) that some lady on the committee tells you what to play?

"In this (Boston) organization music has the upper hand, and there is no pressure to make decisions for nonmusical reasons." Leinsdorf recalled that even as a guest he had "particular gratitude . . . for not having been asked to make compromises with musical beliefs. . . . This is something which is very rare in the world. This is simply wonderful. . . . I am going to do my very best to keep it this way.

"As far as my musical programs go, I have no hard and fast rules or systems or even policies. I think music should convey a glorious emotional experience to people. I would like over a period of three, or four, or five years, to give the public a comprehensive view of the total repertoire.

"Here again I salute the Boston organization because the system here has been, and I shall continue it, to engage soloists for works rather than select works after the soloists have been engaged. The work is the determining factor. If you want to play it, then you find the best available soloist for it. . . . This is the important thing, because in many orchestras the soloists have become almost the rulers."

AS A GUIDE to program making, Leinsdorf remarked that he is going over the orchestra's recent seasons with care so that works which have been played a great deal can be set aside for a time and significant omissions from the repertoire corrected without much delay.

"I want to put the orchestra on risers. Because of (this) there will be a little re-seating. . . . I hope that the seating will not have to be changed once we have settled it. I believe that seating should remain. . . . The orchestra's ensemble is the very best when the players can hear themselves. Seating, of course, is always a compromise, because you really should have the orchestra seated differently for each score.

ERICH LEINSDORF

"The ideal way is to have an orchestra for Beethoven and Debussy in two different seatings because the score demands a different lineup, but the disadvantage which this puts on the musicians is, I think, greater than the advantage. Therefore we must find always one seating which is best for the hall and best for the musicians and keep to that."

These are good words for a new music director to say — to be able to say. I hope that when Jean Martinon arrives in Chicago we will be able to hear at least some of them from him.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,094

MAY 2 1962

New Symphony Director Outlines Year's Program

By JOHN A. HAHN
United Press International

BOSTON (UPI)—The new director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has outlined a year-long concert program which will feature contemporary works, but will continue traditional ones.

Eric Leinsdorf, the 50-year-old Vienna born conductor, unveiled his plans Tuesday during his first news conference since being named a year ago to succeed retiring Charles Munch.

He said he will lead the symphony at home and on tour next season except for seven weeks to be split between Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin.

Leinsdorf said he, his wife and five children would live in suburban Brookline, a 10-minute ride from Symphony Hall. The Leinsdorfs will be neighbors of Arthur Fiedler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops concerts.

Leinsdorf announced the Boston Symphony would make a two-week post-season transcontinental flying tour next May, including stops on season week's tour of Midwest the West Coast and in Canada. One week of this tour, he said, would replace the former mid-cities.

He said he would not program cycles of music devoted to one composer or school of music and that his first season would include nine contemporary concertos.

Boston would be the site of the world premiere of a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees of the Smith College faculty and an as yet unfinished piano concerto by Samuel Barber, he noted.

Leinsdorf said no major personnel changes or seating arrangements of the orchestra were contemplated. In answer to a question as to whether he planned to return to opera conducting after a short time in Boston, he said he wanted "nothing more than to conduct symphony," adding that his nostalgia for opera was "well controlled."

Leinsdorf formerly was permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic. He will make his public debut as musical director here Sept. 21.

Munch will formally retire at the close of the 1963 Berkshire Music Festival in August. Munch concluded his regular season last Saturday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Circ. 6,411

MAY 2 1962

THE NEW CONDUCTOR of the Boston Symphony outlined the orchestra's year-long concert program yesterday. Included will be a two-week, post-season transcontinental flying tour next May to the West Coast and Canada. NEW NOTE: Conductor Eric Leinsdorf will not program cycles of music devoted to one composer or school of music, will include nine contemporary concerts in the first season.

Erich Leinsdorf Creates Promise Of Golden Age

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BOSTON SYMPHONY DIRECTOR CHARMER AT INTRODUCTION

★ ★ ★

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Although the propriety of bringing him forward at this time may be questioned, Erich Leinsdorf created a decidedly favorable impression in his first press interview here, two days after Charles Munch's farewell concert.

Mr. Leinsdorf made it plain that, aside from stage risers, he anticipates no immediate radical innovation in the handling of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He paid high tribute to the management's music-first policy, the aesthetic dedication that raises the BSO to an eminent position among world orchestras. His plans for the summer (Philadelphia, Lansing, Mich., Rome) were disclosed, and something about the program plans for next year (there will be many contemporary concertos).

It was, in short, a typical press interview—but of a kind lacking at Symphony Hall during the last decade, with Charles Munch's shyness and language-barrier supplying an insupportable burden for that great maestro.

What impressed one participant at any rate, was Mr. Leinsdorf's candid and clear responses, his obvious readiness to cooperate with any part of the musical community capable of contributing to the welfare of the BSO.

Unwise Decision

In fact, the conductor even indicated a willingness to discuss his ideas individually with anyone present. He was fluent, witty and stimulating. Mr. Leinsdorf can obviously charm the birds out of the trees; yet the depth and scope of his answers also showed the fundamental and true musician.

These are merely hasty and immediate reactions, of course—but if Mr. Leinsdorf's music-making matches his personal presence, then we are in for a golden age of the BSO indeed.

One wishes, however, that the brass of Symphony Hall had not selected this moment to unveil Mr. Leinsdorf, whether he was available or no. Dr. Munch is still the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will be throughout the summer.

To bring Mr. Leinsdorf into the limelight now suggests undue desire for change: nothing was said that couldn't wait until the fall. This was too typical of the gee-whiz, indelicate high pressure commercialism that spoils so much of the affluent society; and one demands from Symphony Hall in all aspects some inkling of Bostonian fitness.

Berkshire Plans

Meanwhile plans for the Berkshire Festival proceed merrily. At the moment, the orchestral plans include many of the successes of the past season.

For those who might want to save these for reference, we append the list. You will notice that Dr. Charles Munch conducts the bulk of the concerts, though we also commend to your attention the pairing of the Bruckner and Beethoven Eighth under Mr. Steinberg, which proved one of the outstanding Boston Symphony concerts of recent vintage.

JULY 6: MUNCH—BACH Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Suites Nos. 2 (Dwyer) and 4; Cantata No. 51 (Beardslee); Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major (Vronsky and Babin).

JULY 7: MUNCH—BACH Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6 and 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin); Suite No. 3; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss).

JULY 8: MUNCH—BACH Ricercare from The Musical Offering; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss); Concerto for Oboe and Violin (Gomberg, Silverstein); Cantata, "Trauer-Ode" (Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

JULY 13: MUNCH—MOZART Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361; Piano Concerto, K. 503 (Frank); Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

JULY 14: MUNCH—MOZART Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante (Posselt de Pasquale); A Musical Joke; Symphony No. 39.

JULY 15: MUNCH—MOZART Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Concerto for Two Pianos, E-flat (Vronsky and Babin); Les Petits riens, Ballet Suite; Symphony No. 40.

JULY 20: MUNCH—MOZART Masonic Funeral Music; Symphony No. 31; Violin Concerto, K. 219 (Silverstein); Sinfonia Concertante (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt).

JULY 21: MUNCH—MOZART Symphony No. 36, "Linz"; Piano Concerto, K. 482 (Crochet); Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter."

JULY 22: MUNCH—MAZART Symphony No. 35, "Haffner"; Requiem (Curtin, Kopleff, Stern, Morgan, Tanglewood Choir).

JULY 27: MUNCH—DEBUSSY Printemps; PISTON Symphony No. 6; BRAHMS Symphony No. 4.

JULY 28: MUNCH — HANDEL HARTY Water Music; HAIEFF Symphony No. 3; BEETHOVEN Piano Concerto No. 3 (Janis).

JULY 29: MONTEUX — BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 7; PURCELL Dido's Lament (Gray-Masse); WEBER "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster" (Gray-Masse); STRAUSS: Ein Heldenleben.

AUG. 3: MUNCH—DEBUSSEY Three Noctures (Festival Chorus), HONEGGER Symphony No. 5; SAINT-SAENS Cello Concerto (Mayes); RAVEL La Valse.

AUG. 4: STEINBERG — BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 8; BRUCKNER Symphony No. 8.

AUG. 5: MUNCH—BRAHMS Hayden Variation; MARTINU Fantaisies symphoniques; BEETHOVEN Piano concerto No. 5, Emperor (Serkin).

AUG. 10: ORMANDY — BEETHOVEN Egmont Overture; BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 3, Eroica; BARTOK Concerto for Orchestra.

AUG. 11: MONTEUX—WAGNER Meistersinger Overture; ELGAR Enigma Variations; BRAHMS Piano Concerto No. 2 (Fleisher).

AUG. 12: MUNCH—RAMEAU Dardanus Suite; FINE Symphony (1962); TCHAIKOVSKY Symphony No. 6, Pathetique.

AUG. 17: MUNCH—KIRCHNER Sinfonia (conducted by the composer); BERLIOZ Harold in Italy (de Pasquale); MENDELSSOHN Symphony No. 5, Reformation.

AUG. 18: ORMANDY—PROKOFIEV Classical Symphony; PROKOFIEV Symphony No. 6; TCHAIKOVSKY Piano Concerto No. 1 (Istomin).

AUG. 19: MUNCH—SCHUBERT Symphony No. 5; FOSS Time Cycle (Addison; conducted by the composer); BRAHMS Piano Concerto No. 1 (Graffman).

AUG. 24: MONTEUX—WEBER Euryanthe Overature; HINDEMITH Matis der Maler; BRAHMS Symphony No. 1.

AUG. 25: MUNCH—BERLIOZ Symphonie fantastique; DEBUSSY La Mer; RAVEL Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2.

AUG. 26: MUNCH—COPLAND Quiet City; BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 9 (Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Sheldon, Festival Chorus).

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAY 16 1962

Leinsdorf Builds Boston Symph Sked With 'Total Repertory' Plan

Boston, May 15.

Emphasizing his goal as "total repertoire," Eric Leinsdorf held his first press conference here as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has succeeded Charles Munch as director and was introduced to the gathering as being the designer of a "new era" for the orchestra.

He related that the group will have a 32-week winter season in 1962-63, as opposed to the symphony's usual 31-week schedule. This year's program will include a two-week transcontinental tour and five one-week eastern trips. The eastern treks will be in October, November, January, February and March, he revealed, and the crosscountry and Canada journey will come at the end of the season, with no mid-western trip as there had been in the past.

The new musical director will conduct 17 weeks at home and all of the touring engagements. Munch will guest-conduct four weeks and Burgin will do the same for three weeks, Leinsdorf stated. The Boston Pops, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, is currently playing at home, having recently concluded a tour of its own.

His "total repertoire" policy will include eight or nine contemporary concertos, the director revealed. He listed as works to be performed this season the premiere of Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto, Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, Milhaud's Viola Concerto and Prokofiev's Cello Concerto. Piano concertos by Barber, Bartok, Leon Kirchner, Dello Joio and Alvin Etler were also named. He stressed an emphasis for the balance of 1962 on Stravinsky, in honor of the composer's birthday and said that, in addition to the concerto, he will conduct the Symphony of Psalms and Burgin will, in all probability, do an all-Stravinsky program.

Leinsdorf added that he also has a number of scores new to Boston under examination for performance during the season. He said that it is "fairly well determined" that the Symphony's first program will include the Eroica and Piston's Seventh Symphony, a contemporary work which has not been played by the orchestra.

In other areas, Leinsdorf stated that he will continue the Symphony's policy of engaging "soloists for works rather than select the works after the soloists have been engaged." He related that there will be some "small change in seating — nothing radical" to accommodate his plan to put the orchestra on risers. As far as the orchestra itself, the director stated that "at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than retirements, contemplated."

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 215,198 S. 243,108

JUN 19 1962

BOSTON: The Boston Symphony's new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, now being introduced as the designer of t "new era" for the orchestra, emphasized his goal as "total repertoire" at his first press conference in Boston recently. His policy next season will include eight or nine contemporary concertos, he revealed.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, May 27, 1962

Erich Leinsdorf New Boston Symphony Head

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The musical intelligentsia of the Western hemisphere will shortly be facing east to the Mecca of Tanglewood in the Berkshires for the 28th annual outdoor series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group opens its season, July 4, marking the final series of concerts under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, its artistic mentor since 1951.

Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Vienna - born Erich Leinsdorf, former associate in opera and symphonic performances with Toscanini and Bruno Walter. Earlier in the month, the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, moderated by Thomas D. Perry Jr., the orchestra's manager, held a press party for Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall, Boston, in which the new permanent conductor was questioned as to the future of the Bostonians in general and Tanglewood, in particular. A digest of Mr. Leinsdorf's series of questions and answers follows:

"This organization shall always hold music uppermost. You can glory in it. It is one of the greatest things. I have made a point of this particularly when I was asked abroad, because in Europe there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States, particularly where the center of decision lies and where musical policy is made. Often the general hostility to the United States takes place in little digs; I found it very useful sometimes to allay certain suspicions best by specific examples and the policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people when they heard about them.

QUESTION: It's a little bit beyond, looking farther ahead, but for your first Tanglewood season, in 1963, have you any plans about the Berkshire Music Center?

LEINSDORF: I have a lot of plans and ideas, I am concerned with this very much. I have thought as much about Tanglewood and the educational aspects of it as I have thought about the Boston Symphony season. I really think about it all the time because it is one of the greatest enterprises and I want to continue its building up, it has been spectacularly successful.

QUESTION: Do you anticipate any great changes in the personnel of the Orchestra?

LEINSDORF: No, at the moment, none. We have some retirements and these retirements of course mean some replacements, but at this moment there are no changes in personnel, other than these retirements, contemplated.

Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor who will be the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeding Dr. Charles Munch who is retiring following the 1962 Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood.

QUESTION: I didn't read the story myself, but I have heard that you were quoted as saying you didn't intend to stay a great length of time with the Symphony because you were more concerned with opera.

LEINSDORF: I want to know where you read that, because it is certainly entirely to the contrary of what I feel. There comes a moment — look, I think every conductor who has had European training wants to do opera and symphony, because this is the way we were trained. I remember when I was 18 at the Academy in Vienna, I conducted in one year 'Mignon' by Ambroise Thomas and the '7th Symphony' of Bruckner. Now, a greater contrast cannot be found. At the moment I can only say that I think that I want nothing more than to conduct the Symphony. I have had a good fill of opera, I have known its shortcomings, and its lovely sensations. I have enjoyed my stay with it. I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled.

If there is nothing further, I would like to thank you for being so patient with me and please, for these individual conversations, I think Harry S. Beall, press and publicity director, will be the person who would be delighted to have conversations on special problems which you might be interested in exploring. I will be in Boston probably starting just before Labor Day when I take up my residence."

Prior to June 18, ticket orders should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. After that date, orders should be addressed to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass-Telephone Lenox 600.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

MAY 6 1962

ERICH LEINSDORF, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, disclosed that he put the orchestra on stage risers and shifted the wind instruments for the sake of balance. The 50-year-old conductor said he does not contemplate any radical alterations for the moment.

He pointed out that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the few organizations in which "there is no compromising one's musical beliefs" and he plans to sustain that tradition.

★ ★ ★

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUN 24 1962

Second Thoughts On Music

Leinsdorf Is Expected To Put New Life in BSO

Will Succeed Charles Munch Following Approaching Berkshire Music Festival Season

By WILLARD M. CLARK

I have heard a great deal of music during my visits to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood during the past quarter of a century. My first experience in the Berkshires was listening to a small group of players from the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Henry Hadley. They presented a series of concerts on the grounds of the Hanna Farm. Unfortunately, the combination of composer-conductor Hadley, his soprano wife, and liberal doses of his own compositions resulted in a short tenure. Not long after his retirement — the Berkshire Music Festival came into being with the Boston symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky making the music.

Electric Excitement

The result is history. There was an electric excitement in every thing he did and the orchestra was at its peak, which meant that it had few peers in the world. This happy state of affairs continued until Koussevitsky's untimely death.

He was replaced by conductor Charles Munch who had been named director of the Boston Symphony. Mr. Munch was easy on the orchestra, but they did what he said they would do, namely "make beautiful music together."

Now Mr. Munch retires at the end of the current season and a man entirely different from Munch will step into his place for the 1962-63 season. I have the feeling that under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra will once again regain the brilliance that it has lost in the past 20 years. There will also be, I believe, a radical change in the choice of programs. Over the years we have been listening to works played too often. I expect Leinsdorf will bring a large variety into the repertoire and a discipline which has not been evident during the Munch regime.

I doubt if I shall hear Leinsdorf in my official capacity, but even that seems attractive after many years of critical listening.

Tried and True

The majority of the music Munch will play for us this summer comes from his tried and true repertoire so well known to the festival audience. I have the feeling that the orchestra will do its best to make this season a banner one. There will be beautiful music superbly played, of that I feel certain.

On the local scene, the summer doldrums are beginning. A week ago I attended a vocal recital given by the youthful pupils of Mrs. Carolyn Dexter Locke in the Springfield Conservatory of Music. The pupils were very young, but all sang with enthusiasm. It was pleasant to hear a recital free of operatic arias and lieder.

These young people sang songs which were within their intellectual grasp and vocal ability. They enunciated the English language clearly, phrased beautifully, and put over their songs with enormous joie de vivre. What more could one ask?

It is pleasant to realize that young people have available to them the kind of instruction Mrs. Locke offers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
MAY 1 1962

New BSO Conductor Plans Emphasis on Music Center

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

BOSTON—The opportunities at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood and its potentials are as important and as exciting as his programs with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf said at his first press conference at Symphony Hall this morning.

Mr. Leinsdorff has been named to succeed Dr. Charles Munch as musical director of the BSO after the close of the Tanglewood season this summer. He has been the conductor of the Metropolitan Opera in New York City.

Mr. Leinsdorf said he is as much concerned with the educational aspects of the Music Center as any other feature of his new job with the Boston Symphony. He plans to hold meetings during the winter with members of the center's faculty to discuss plans for the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood.

Munch Invited

He revealed that he has invited Dr. Munch to return as a guest conductor with the BSO for four weeks next season and that the retiring conductor has accepted. He also announced that Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, who also is retiring at the close of the Berkshire Festival season, will also return for three weeks next season as an associate conductor.

Mr. Leinsdorf contemplates no changes in the orchestra's personnel, but he informed the press this morning he hopes to have step rises built for the orchestra on the stage.

"One of the joys of this orchestra," said Mr. Leinsdorf, "is that I have not had any pressure put on me for programs."

The musical policy of the Boston Symphony, he added, is "almost unique and certainly very rare."

He expects to keep the seating arrangement of the orchestra as it has been under Dr. Munch's direction.

Discusses Programs

Mr. Leinsdorf said that while he was appearing as a guest conductor in Chicago last month, he had three conferences with the Fromm Foundation on programs to be carried out at the Berkshire Music Center this summer.

He has some commitments with summer programs in the United States this summer and then plans to go to Rome to record opera. He will return to Brookline in August to take up residence there.

Mr. Leinsdorf was introduced this morning by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
MAY 2 1962

LEINSDORF LAUDS BOSTON SYMPHONY

New Musical Director Plans to Carry On Its Traditions

By JOHN H. FENTON
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 1 — Erich Leinsdorf plans to carry on the traditions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra "in the continuity of the United States Senate."

In his first formal press conference today Mr. Leinsdorf said that the continuity would be expressed in one instance next season through seven weeks of concerts under the direction of two retiring musical officials of the organization.

Charles Munch, music director for thirteen years and Richard Burgin, concert master for forty-two years, made their farewell Boston appearances last week-end. Mr. Munch will return for four weeks next season and Mr. Burgin for three.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who is 50 years old, assumes the duties of music director in September. He came to the Boston orchestra after three seasons as musical consultant to the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York.

In a typical flash of good humor Mr. Leinsdorf said in answer to a question about his long-range plans that "at this time my nostalgia for opera is well controlled." He said that in the foreseeable future his concern would be with symphonies.

Of his new assignment Mr. Leinsdorf said:

"I am particularly happy that I do not have to come here as a bricklayer. I don't have to build. I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization. I don't have to collect bricks, cement and composition shingles."

Plans No Major Changes

The new music director plans only minor changes in the seating of the orchestra. He will use risers or steps to bring some of the woodwind instruments closer together. There are to be no personal changes except those dictated by retirements.

The Vienna-born musician said that he had been given clear understanding that music would continue to have "the upper hand" in decisions involving the Boston Symphony. That situation was rare in symphony orchestras, said Mr. Leinsdorf and he added that he even had "a suspicion that it is unique."

As an example, he said, when the question of seating latecomers "after the first movement of the little Mozart number 29" came up for discussion he ruled against it on the ground that the work was short and that an interruption would be distracting.

That ended the matter and "the musical necessity had its way," he said.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra personally through seventeen weeks in Boston and on six tours. He already has selected Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Walter Piston's Seventh for the opening concert here. A third work will be selected later.

It will be Mr. Leinsdorf's policy to schedule "eight or nine" contemporary concertos, although not with any idea of creating a cycle of them. There will be no hard and fast rules, he said.

As for soloists, said Mr. Leinsdorf, "we will find works first and then engage soloists to perform them rather than engage artists and then pick work for them to do."

Mr. Leinsdorf paid tribute to Arthur Fiedler who was to open his thirty-third season as conductor of the Boston Pops concerts tonight. The Boston Pops had often been imitated "but never successfully," said Mr. Leinsdorf. He expressed hope that Mr. Fiedler would "be with us for many years to come."

Mr. Leinsdorf disclosed that Mr. Fiedler, who attended the press conference, had found him a home in suburban Brookline, "not more than ten minutes' drive from Symphony Hall."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
SEP 20 1962

New Conductor Leinsdorf Seeks Balance In Boston Symphony Orchestra Programs

BOSTON—"I hope to present a good over-all picture of the classical, romantic and modern literature," said Erich Leinsdorf after his first day of rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra here this week.

The conductor who recently replaced Charles Munch called his first rehearsal with the orchestra a "happy, happy, day."

Contemporary Works

Balance will be Leinsdorf's aim, as illustrated by the programs of the first quarter of the coming symphony season. During the first six weeks he is scheduling three contemporary major American scores, Piston's Seventh, the world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto, with John Browning as soloist, and the Charles Ives Second Symphony.

"Then," he said, "we shall hear three works by composers outside America—Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra; the Starvinsky Symphony of Psalms (both associated with Boston), and the Shostakovich Tenth.

"From the turn-of-the-century late romantics I have selected Mahler's First, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, Debussy Preludes and interludes and Sibelius' Second; from the romantics, Schumann's Fourth, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Hayden; from the classical repertoire, the Beethoven Third and Mozart 41; and among the short works, a Bach Sinfonia and Copland's Preamble. As you can see, there are great gaps, but one hopes to fill in."

Leindorf, chipper, relaxed and lively despite a grueling day of rehearsal, declared that he plans no radical departures from the current seating pattern at the moment. Today, his first recording session with RCA will determine whether or not he will follow the methods employed by Dr. Munch in recent years, Dr. Koussevitsky before that, his own, or a combination of all three.

He has placed the orchestra on risers, 22 inches at the rear, save for the first violins, 'cellos and violas. This year, he said, he anticipates no concert performances of any opera, but if the right one comes along ("an opera that for one reason or another, might not be staged, though worthy of mounting") why not?

At this time, said the Viennese-born conductor, he is working closely with Samuel Barber, who just finished his concerto last week; each of the various symphony series is important to him; and he would like to emphasize again how delighted he was with the first rehearsal. "The title of Prokofieff's Overture to War and Peace," which opens the season, may suggest Tolstoi," he said. "I like its solemn and majestic outline.

"War outside, perhaps," ended Erich Leinsdorf, "but I would like it also to convey when one enters, that inside the doors of Symphony Hall, there prevails peace."

Mozart, Prokofieff Cycles Are Weighed For Tanglewood

There will be no cycles at Symphony Hall this season; but Mr. Leinsdorf's tentative hopes for the Berkshire Festival "still in the nebulous stage" include a Mozart cycle stretching over several seasons, a Prokofieff re-examination to mark that composer's first decade since his death, and a closer relationship between the many Tanglewood departments. Richard Burgin, who is now available for the task, could pass judgment on young string players aspiring to Tanglewood, acting as a kind of scout. "There is no more experienced string player in the world, than Mr. Burgin," said Leinsdorf.

Also in the Berkshires, Leinsdorf hopes to introduce new works of intermediate dimensions by contemporaries. He is worried about the shortage of string players in the country, and points to Joseph Silverstein, the new concertmaster ("he was No. 34 in 1955, and look where he is today") as proof that careers can be achieved within the orchestra and its strings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUN 20 1962

Dartmouth Advisers

Sixteen men distinguished in the world of music have been named to the Music Advisory Committee of the Hopkins Center at Dartmouth College.

The committee is headed by Goddard Lieberson, president of Columbia Records, and includes:

Leonard Bernstein, musical director and conductor of the New York Philharmonic; E. Power Biggs, organist; Dave Brubeck, jazz pianist and composer; Elliot Carter, composer; Aaron Copland, composer; Glenn Gould, pianist; Charles E. Griffith, Dartmouth Class of '15, retired music publisher; Richard P. Leach, Dartmouth Class of '32, assistant director in charge of operating New York's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts; Erich Leinsdorf, who will be conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Nathaniel Merrill, Dartmouth Class of '48, stage director of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; Eugene Ormandy, musical director and conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; William Schuman, director of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts; Igor Stravinsky, composer; Arthur Virgin, Dartmouth Class of 1900, arts patron; and Paul Weston, Dartmouth Class of '33, musical director and orchestra leader.

The committee is expected to provide guidance to the Hopkins Center's staff on establishing of musical programs, invitations to performers and lecturers, and the commissioning of new works.

The $7,500,000 center, which is scheduled to be opened this fall, will be devoted to music, drama, art, and related cultural and educational activities. It was named for Dartmouth's President - Emeritus Ernest Martin Hopkins.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 29,197
NOV 2 8 1962

Erich Leinsdorf

Recollections of 'Capricious Singers' Make Leinsdorf Happy in Present Job

By LORETTA LEONE, Day Staff Writer

Conducting in opera is "a great deal of fun," but "the symphony orchestra enables the conductor to make music without compromise."

Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night mused on his transition from conductor at the Metropolitan Opera Company to the Boston group before his first performance in Connecticut College's concert series.

He said enthusiastically that he is enjoying his work with the symphony orchestra "much better" than as conductor at the Met.

'Capricious Singers'

"There is no musical compromise which is brought about, in opera, from capricious singers," he said.

Opera singers today can be quite independent, Leinsdorf indicated, due to what he referred to as a "new pattern" which has developed.

"Perhaps two crews of singers serve ten opera houses," he said. They travel to opera houses from Chicago to Milan, Italy. "They are quite indispensable," he said.

Of course, Leinsdorf noted, opera singers probably think conductors are capricious.

"It's just a natural result of age-old contrasts in artistic life," he said.

The 50-year old man, who began his career in music as a pianist about 30 years ago in his native Vienna, said the program of a symphony orchestra offers much more to the conductor because of its diversity.

"There are many changes of reportory and many, many rehearsals," Leinsdorf said. "For the conductor, the rehearsal is a pre-condition of a good performance."

Musicians are able and willing to rehearse. And they want to, he said. About the Boston Symphony members their new leader said—

"I admire them greatly — First, their mentality, and also their entire attitude toward the organization."

The unit, he said, is notable for its lack of strife. This is not so in many of the orchestras, he added.

"Everything is open books with the Boston orchestra. I think an important reason is that the people who run the orchestra want fine music first, not to wield unlimited power."

Erich Leinsdorf is a man small in stature and in build. He is bald in monk-like fashion and his roughhewn face is marked by dark eyes and deep side character lines.

Please Turn to Page 2

...nsdorf Is Happy in Present Job

Continued from Page 1

He speaks in moderate tones and when his fine hands gesture, they do so moderately.

He is a friendly man with a broad smile. He almost looks like anybody you might see on the street, but he isn't.

His versatile career in music has spanned Europe and the United States, where he has conducted in opera, at the famous summer music festivals and for symphony orchestras, including being permanent conductor for the Rochester Symphony.

When he is not thinking about music or conducting it, Leinsdorf spends his time reading.

"I don't read nearly as much as I would like to," he said.

Choosy About Jazz

He enjoys listening to the Jerry Mulligan type of jazz, but not the Louis Armstrong brand.

"I don't like loud horns for a long period. After a while, they begin to sound like a screech."

He enjoys occasional swimming and hiking, but says he does not partake enough to call it a sport.

He confines his calisthenics to his conducting. His motions are not extravagant. The drop of a finger, a clenched fist or the quick unfolding and folding of compressed fingers will evoke a note or a tempo from his musicians.

Leinsdorf was guest conductor for the Boston Symphony two years ago. Since assuming its leadership, he has added one instrument, a bass.

Will the orchestra have a new sound under his direction?

"The tradition of the orchestra is great . . . it has an illustrious past . . . I hope it will lead to an illustrious future," Mr. Leinsdorf said.

"Let the public decide."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
SEP 20 1962

POLICIES HINT. BY LEINSDORF

New Director of Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave an inkling of his future policies at his first rehearsal with the musicians this week.

For "Overall Picture"

He said that over the next several years he hopes to present a "good over-all picture of the classical, romantic and modern literature." He hopes to achieve a certain balance in his presentations between the scores of American and non-American composers.

Leinsdorf, chipper, relaxed and lively despite a grueling day of rehearsal, declared that he plans no radical departures from the current seating pattern at the moment. On Thursday, his first recording session with RCA will determine whether he will follow the methods employed by Dr. Munch in recent years. Dr. Koussevitzky before that, his own, or a combination of all three.

He has placed the orchestra on risers, 22 inches at the rear, save for the first violins, 'cellos and violas. This year, he said, he anticipates no concert performances of any opera, but if the right one comes along ("an opera that for one reason or another, might not be staged, though worthy of mounting") why not?

Festival Hopes

There will be no cycles at Symphony this season; but his tentative hopes for the Berkshire Festival "still in the nebulous stage" include a Mozart cycle stretching over several seasons, a Prokofieff re-examination to mark that composer's first decade since his death, and a closer relationship between the many Tanglewood departments. Richard Burgin, who is now available for the task, could pass judgment on young string players aspiring to Tanglewood, acting as a kind of scout. "There is no more experienced string player in the world, than Mr. Burgin," said Leinsdorf.

Also in the Berkshires, Leinsdorf hopes to introduce new works of intermediate dimensions by contemporaries. He is worried about the shortage of string players in this country and points to Joseph Silverstein the new concertmaster ("he was No. 34 in 1955, and look what he is today") as proof that reers can be achieved with orchestra and its strings

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAY 2 1962

New Symphony Conducter Forecasts Glowing Season

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Patriot Ledger Staff Reporter

A glowing season, spiced with a few changes, were forecast yesterday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the orchestra's new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

No Big Change

Mr. Leinsdorf, in town smoothing out details of next year's season, announced some of his plans at a press conference at Symphony Hall.

"I'm happy I won't have to be a builder. We will make music without my having to lay any brick," Mr. Leinsdorf said as he looked toward his first season with the orchestra.

There will be no revolutionary changes, the 50-year-old, Vienna-born conductor said. The only personnel changes will be those prompted by the retirement of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, and of one or two other members of the orchestra.

He means to make some seating changes to get the sound he wants. This will include mounting the orchestra on risers, seating the horns in pairs at the side of the orchestra and moving trumpets and trombones to the opposite side.

Munch Skills Stay

The traditions and skills built during the 13 years of Charles Munch's tenure will not be discarded. Mr. Burgin will stay on as associate conductor and Dr. Munch will return in the spring to do four weeks of the orchestra's season.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct all the other concerts including the tours which this year will include a two-week transcontinental tour at the end of the season.

So close will be his alliance with the orchestra that Mr. Leinsdorf has signed a commitment to conduct no other orchestra but the Boston Symphony for two years. This committment apparently does not distress Leinsdorf who has built a glowing career in the Metropolitan Opera during the last six seasons.

"My nostalgia for opera is well under control," he quipped in denying reports that he meant to conduct in Boston only a few years before moving on to another orchestra.

His plans are long range. He did not list many specific compositions, but his goal for his first three or four years is to present "a total repertoire," a grand perspective of the music available for the symphony orchestra.

Range Shown

This total repertoire presentation will open next fall with Beethoven's "Eroica," a Leinsdorf favorite and "A Statement of My Convictions." The range of his plans are shown in scheduling Piston's Seventh Symphony on the same program—a work new to Boston.

His programs will include a deep bow to Stravinsky, now celebrating his 80th birthday. Richard Burgin will conduct an all-Stravinsky program in the spring and Mr. Leinsdorf will do the "Symphony of Psalms."

Keeping in the tradition of Dr. Munch, the new conductor will continue to offer a range of new music.

His plans call for eight or nine contemporary concertos during the 1962-63 season. These will include violin concertos of Benjamin Lees a premiere and Stravinsky; the viola concerto of Milhaud; the "Symphony Concerto" for cello by Prokoffief, and piano concertos by Leon Kirchner, Bartok, Norman Dello Joio and Samuel Barber. Barber is now writing the work for this fall's premiere.

Other new works will include a concerto for winds and orchestra by Alvin Etler. Symphony members will be the soloists in this work.

'The Upper Hand'

His concerto soloists? They will be chosen to play the work selected. Mr. Leinsdorf criticized the orchestra that hires the soloist and then tailors its programs to fit the man.

"Music has the upper hand," he stressed. "I will try to keep it that way."

He praised the orchestra's administration for its willingness to give him a free hand to make

ERICH LEINSDORF
At Symphony Hall

his decisions based on purely musical grounds. Last year, when he conducted a Mozart symphony with the orchestra, he rejected the custom of allowing a pause after the first movement to permit latecomers to find their seats. "Musical necessity had its way," he said firmly.

Mr. Leinsdorf will take the baton for his first rehearsals in September. In the meantime he has to plan his season and the 1963 season in Tanglewood.

He will open the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer season, will attend sessions for young string players at University of Michigan, and will record an opera in Rome.

His family will be settling in their newly acquired home at 153 Dean Road, Brookline. His family includes three sons, Daniel, 20, Gregor, 18, and Joshua, 16, and Deborah Hester, 13, and Jennifer, 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
SEP 1 8 1962

Boston Traveler, Tuesday, Sept. 18, 1962

'A Happy, Happy Day' With Symphony

Leinsdorf Seeks Orchestra Balance

Erich Leinsdorf finished "a happy, happy day" with his new orchestra yesterday by announcing his future music program policies as the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Over three or four years," said Mr. Leinsdorf, who had just finished his first day of rehearsals with the orchestra, "I hope to present a good over-all picture of the classical, romantic and modern literature."

Balance will be Mr. Leinsdorf's aim, as illustrated by the programs of the first quarter of the coming Symphony season. During the first six weeks I am scheduling three contemporary major American scores, Piston's Seventh, the world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto, with John Browning as soloist, and the Charles Ives Second Symphony.

"Then we shall hear three works by composers outside America—Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra; the Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms (both associated with Boston), and the Shostakovitch Tenth.

"From the turn-of-the-century late romantics I have selected Mahler's First, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, Debussy Preludes and Interludes and Sibelius' Second; from the romantics, Schumann's Fourth, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; from the classical repertoire, the Beethoven Third and Mozart 41; and among the shorter works, a Bach Sinfonia and Copland's Preamble. As you can see, there are great gaps, but one hopes to fill in."

Mr. Leinsdorf, chipper, relaxed and lively despite a grueling day of rehearsal, declared that he plans no radical departures from the current seating pattern at the moment. On Thursday, his first recording session with RCA will determine whether or not he will follow the methods employed by Dr. Munch in recent years, Dr. Koussevitzky before that, his own, or a combination of all three.

He has placed the orchestra on risers, 22 inches at the rear, save for the first violins, 'cellos and violas. This year, he said, he anticipates no concert performances of any opera, but if the right one comes along ("an opera that for one reason or another, might not be staged, though worthy of mounting") why not?

There will be no cycles at Symphony this season; but his tentative hopes for the Berkshire Festival "still in the nebulous stage" include a Mozart cycle stretching over several seasons, a Prokofieff re-examination to mark that composer's first decade since his death, and a closer relationship between the many Tanglewood departments. Richard Burgin, who is now available for the task, could pass judgment on young string players aspiring to Tanglewood, acting as a kind of scout. "There is no more experienced string player in the world, than Mr. Burgin," said Mr. Leinsdorf.

Also in the Berkshires, Mr. Leinsdorf hopes to introduce new works of intermediate dimensions by contemporaries. He is worried about the shortage of string players in this country, and points to Joseph Silverstein, the new concertmaster ("he was Number 34 in 1955, and look where he is today") as proof that careers can be achieved within the orchestra and its strings.

At this time, said the Viennese born conductor, he is working closely with Samuel Barber, who just finished his concerto last week; each of the various Symphony series is important to him; and he would like to emphasize again how delighted he was with the first rehearsal. "The title of Prokofieff's Overture to 'War and Peace,' which opens the season, may suggest Tolstoi," he said. "I like its solemn and majestic outline.

"War outside, perhaps," ended Erich Leinsdorf, "but I would like it also to convey when one enters, that inside the doors of Symphony Hall, there prevails Peace."

Boston Traveler, Tuesday, May 1, 1962 D 5

A Magnificent Group, Says Symphony's New Conductor

Leinsdorf Plans Smooth Orchestra Transition

By ALTA MALONEY

Erich Leinsdorf, who will move to Boston just before Labor Day to take over as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plans no break with the past.

"On the contrary," he said at his first local pres conference this noon at Symphony Hall, "we are making a policy of overlapping, interlocking and embracing."

WOULD PUT THEM ON RIVERS

The only change the Vienna-born conductor anticipated is a physical one. "I want to put the orchestra on rivers, which has certain complexities and will require some small change in the seating.

"As far as musical program goes, I have no hard and fast rules or systems, or even policy. I think music should convey a glorious, emotional experience to people.

"I hope over a period of four or five years the public would have a view of a total repertoire."

Traveler Scope
---Has A Portrait In Pictures—Page 39

He said he will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony on the first program of his first season—"I want to open with a sort of statement of my convictions."

Leinsdorf expressed a "thrill" over the fact Richard Burgin, retired concert master, will continue as associate conductor.

This, and seven weeks of guest conducting by Charles Munch, recently retired conductor, and Burgin during the 1962-63 season, demonstrates his desire for "Continuity."

No personnel changes are anticipated by the new conductor. "At this moment there are no changes other than the retirements which were already contemplated."

As for his removing himself from opera and settling down at Symphony Hall and Tanglewood, he said, "I have had a good fill of opera and the lovely sensations of it.

"At this moment I can only say that I want nothing more than to conduct symphony. I would say that my nostalgia for opera is well controlled."

He had high praise for the Boston orchestra: "I'm particularly happy that I am not coming in here as a bricklayer. I don't have to build.

"I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization — this again enables one to make music.

"As a guest conductor here, my gratitude particularly was for not being asked to compromise my musical beliefs. There is no pressure to make decisions for non-musical reasons.

NOT TOO MUCH AWARENESS

"You can glory in it. Abroad, there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States. The general hostility to the United States is expressed in little digs.

"The policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people there."

A man of wit and charm, of mobile hands, and expression Leinsdorf added a homey touch to his interview in discussing his living plans here.

He will be a neighbor of Arthur Fiedler, whose continued direction of the Boston Pops brought an expression of pleasure from him. He, his wife and five children, aged 10 to 20, will live at 153 Dean Rd., Brokline.

He added, amused, that he felt his acceptance of the post of conductor of Boston Symphony actually had hinged on the more liberal teen-age driving laws in Massachusetts.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Wednesday, May 2, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
MAY 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
MAY 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
MAY 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
MAY 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Circ. 6,309
MAY 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,530
MAY 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
SEP 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
MAY 3 1962

Symphony Will Premiere Work Of Smith Prof.

BOSTON (UPI)—The new director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has outlined a year-long concert program which will feature contemporary works, but will continue traditional ones.

Eric Leinsdorf, the 50-year-old Vienna born conductor, unveiled his plans Tuesday during his first news conference since being named a year ago to succeed retiring Charles Munch.

He said he will lead the symphony at home and on tour next season except for seven weeks to be split between Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin.

Leinsdorf announced the Boston Symphony would make a two-week post-season transcontinental flying tour next May, including stops on the West Coast and in Canada. One week of this tour, he said, would replace the former mid-season week's tour of Midwest cities.

He said he would not program cycles of music devoted to one composer or school of music and that his first season would include nine contemporary concertos.

Boston would be the site of the world premiere of a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees of the Smith College faculty and an as yet unfinished piano concerto by Samuel Barber, he noted.

Leinsdorf said no major personnel changes or seating arrangements of the orchestra were contemplated. In answer to a question as to whether he planned to return to opera conducting after a short time in Boston, he said he wanted "nothing more than to conduct symphony," adding that his nostalgia for opera was "well controlled."

Leinsdorf formerly was permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic. He will make his public debut as musical director here Sept. 21.

Munch will formally retire at the close of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival in August. Munch concluded his regular season last Saturday night.

ERICH LEINSDORF, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opens its 82nd season at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 18 1962

Mr. Leinsdorf Meets The Press

Erich Leinsdorf, the trim and muscular musical director of the Boston Symphony, strode into a Symphony Hall parlor yesterday for his first press conference since succeeding Charles Munch as the symphony's musical director. If he was winded after eight hours of rehearsal, it was his secret.

He faced newsmen across a round table, seated on a low chair. With precise answers, a dash of humor here and there, a mellow insight and the type of unconscious integrity that builds respect, he had the semi-circle of reporters charmed in no time flat.

When prodded to reveal the full range of programs he contemplates for the season, Mr. Leinsdorf borrowed, "The woman's privilege of changing her mind." "This avoids disappointments," he explained, if plans go awry. But he was full of news of what was in store in the symphony's first six concerts.

"My intention," he said, "is to give a good, overall picture of the classical, romantic and modern orchestral literature over three or four years, a balanced repertory."

The first installments in this presentation of a "fair spectrum of musical styles" will have Piston, Ives, Barber, Bartok, Stravinsky and Shostakovich representing the moderns; Mahler, Debussy and Richard Strauss, the turn of the century; Schumann, Sibelius and Brahms, the romantics, and Beethoven and Mozart, the classical composers.

"You can't do this with a slide rule," Mr. Leinsdorf cautioned. "There are holes which will be filled in later." He called his first drills for Friday's opening concert "happy rehearsals."

ERICH LEINSDORF (CENTER) AT PRESS CONFERENCE

Can a musical director bring an even amount of interest to such varied musical materials? Isn't he committed to interpret musical forms that do not involve him?

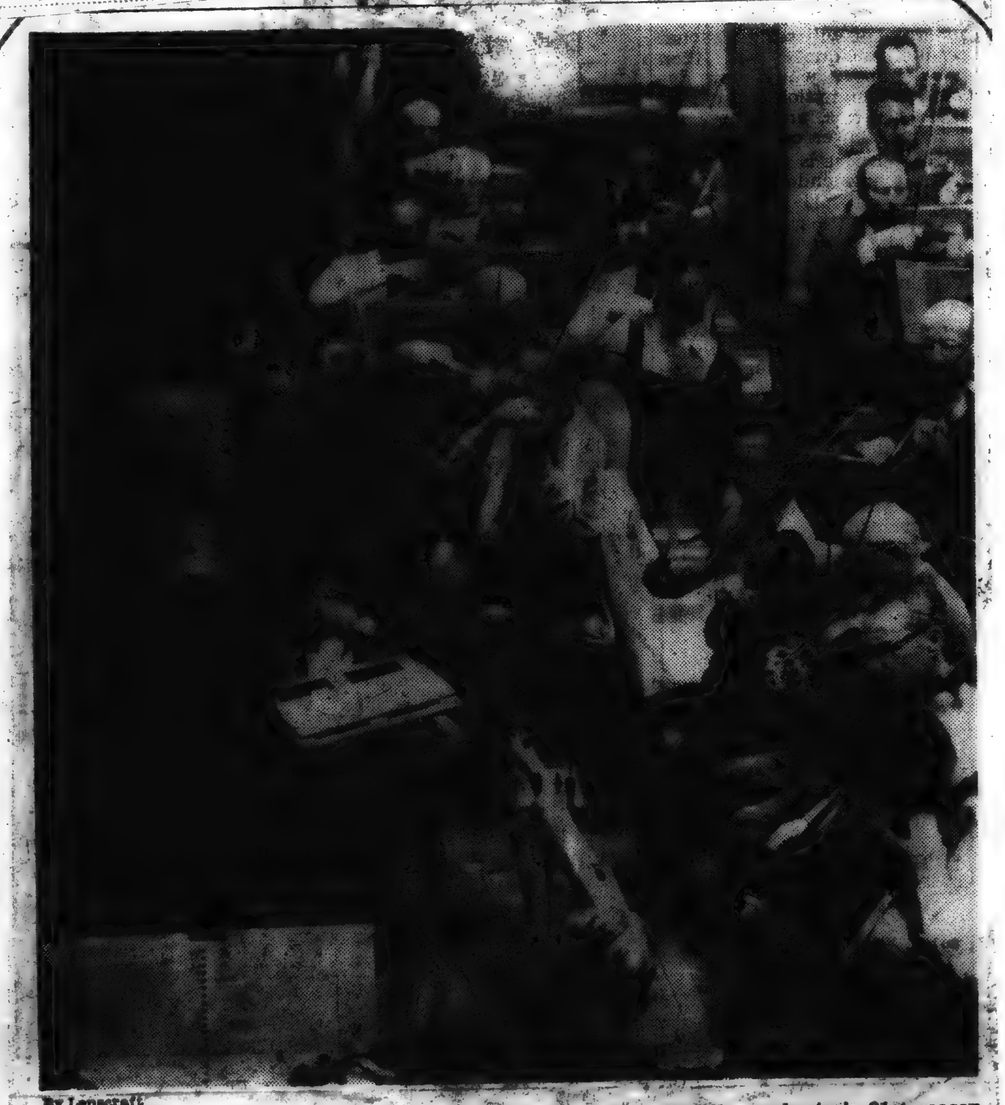
"That is why we have guest conductors and associate conductors," Mr. Leinsdorf explained this occupational hazard of conducting. "I must identify closely with the music I conduct. But there are two schools of thought on that," he added.

Mr. Leinsdorf promised that soloists would be engaged to meet the requirements of the material programmed, not on the basis of their particular repertoire or popularity.

Asked to look beyond winter in Boston, Mr. Leinsdorf said he "hoped" and "dreamed" of better [illegible] departments at the summer music center the orchestra maintains at Tanglewood. He anticipates more new works that don't necessarily belong in the orchestral category. Beyond this, he said he would like the Berkshire festival to undertake cycles of one or more seasons duration to focus on the music of specific composers. He mentioned Prokofiev and Mozart cycles particularly.

Mr. Leinsdorf voiced some concern over the shortage of string players. "It's a national problem," he said. "Some people think it's because we live in an age of nonconformity. Certain instruments, like the woodwinds, are individualists. The strings are members of a choir. I don't know, I just throw this idea on the floor."—B.B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 21 1962



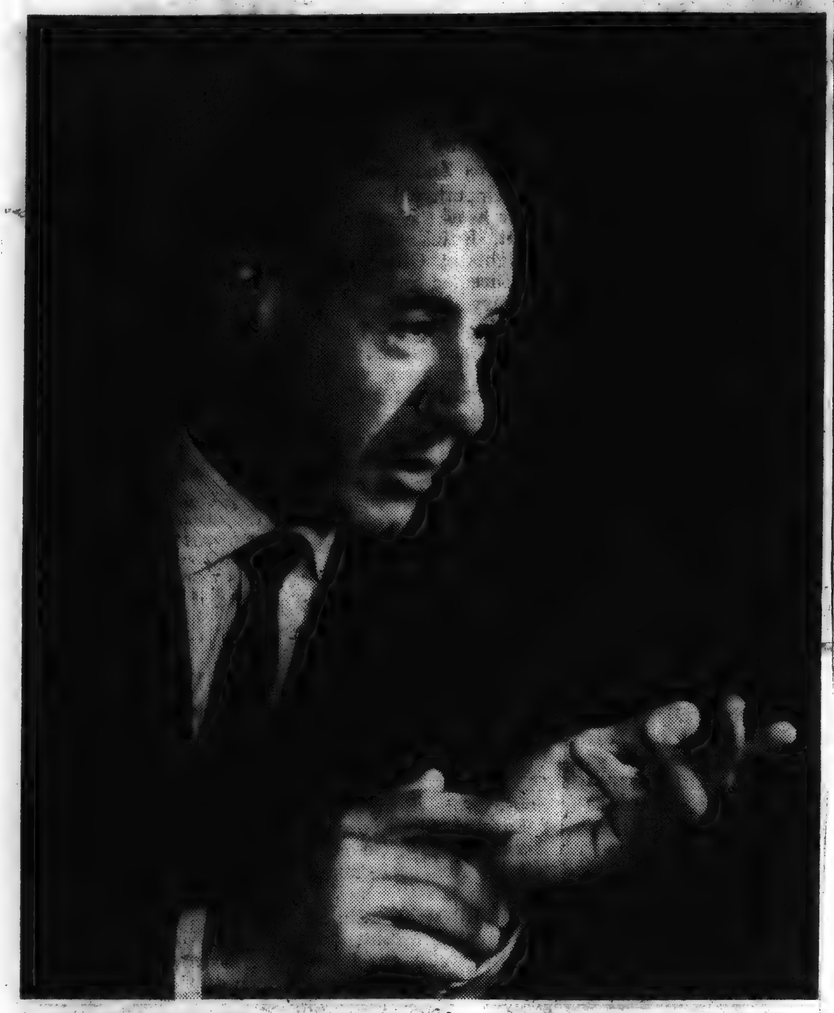
By Lenscraft

Erich Leinsdorf, seen here at his first rehearsal as the Boston Symphony's new conductor, opens the orchestra's 81st season this weekend at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 16 1962

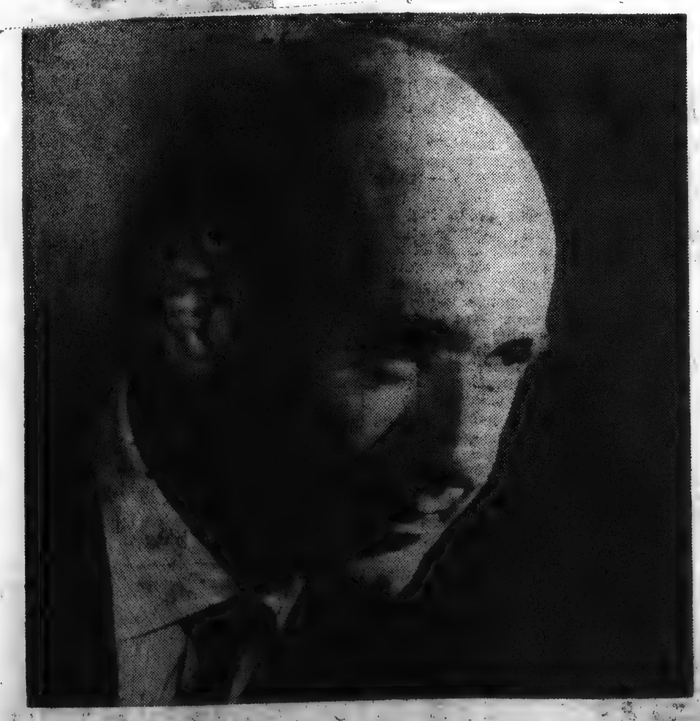
Symphony Season Friday

Leinsdorf Opens His First Boston



ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct his first concerts as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. His program: Overture to "War and Peace" (first concert performances in the U.S.A.), Prokofieff; Symphony No. 7 (first time in Boston), Walter Piston; "Till Eulenspiegel," Strauss; "Eroica" Symphony, Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 18 1962



ERICH LEINSDORF will raise the baton for the first time as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program will include selections by Beethoven, Piston and Richard Strauss.

Boston Symphony In Philharmonic Hall Dedication

The Boston Symphony Or chestra and its new music di rector, Erich Leinsdorf, will participate in the dedication the week of Sept. 23, of the new Philharmonic Hall at Lin coln Center in New York city.

The Bostonians will give the second concert in the auditorium, Monday evening, Sept. 24. Their program will consist largely of numbers to be performed here this week—Prokofieff's Overture to "War and Peace," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, plus the first performance anywhere of the Samuel Barber Piano Concerto.

The latter was commissioned by G. Schirmer, Inc., and will have John Browning as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
SEP 18 1962

Leinsdorf's 1st Day on Job: 2 Rehearsals, News Session

By CYRUS DURGIN

Two full-length rehearsals and an hour-long press conference marked the first day of Erich Leinsdorf as the new music director of the Boston Symphony.

The spare and slight man evidently is a powerhouse of energy.

"I have had a most delightful day" was the way he phrased it.

"First we greeted the four new members of the orchestra, then stood a moment thinking of Mr. Leibovici" (Samuel Joseph Leibovici, first violinist, who died two weeks ago today), "then worked on Prokofieff's Overture to 'War and Peace', Piston's Seventh Symphony and 'Till Eulenspiegel.'

"In the afternoon we worked on the Beethoven 'Eroica' Symphony, then went back to Piston."

The Boston Symphony will present a somewhat altered appearance to the audience at the season's first concert Friday afternoon.

"We have re-seated 'inch-wise' a few of the musicians, all for the sake of the ensemble," Leinsdorf said. "All but 16 players—the first two stands of first and second violins, violas and cellos—will be seated upon risers 22 inches high.

"Slight risers like these, I believe, make an effect acoustically favorable to the ensemble. In recent years the trend has been to nearly flat stage, but I think that has been a practical consideration mainly in the case of orchestras who travel, and find it hard to obtain risers when on tour.

"When we record, we are going to try the same relative seating on stage, rather than use the audience part of the auditorium. It is better for the musicians, in my opinion, to be seated for recording as they are for concerts.

"While for recording we may have to move out a little upon an added apron stage, the players will be still in the same position relative to those who sit near them. We are trying some test tapes Thursday morning just to get the total effect of stereophonic sound that way."

Boston's new conductor is obviously a man strong on organizing as well as a distinguished performer of music.

He is giving deep thought to the organization of programs "so that for the next three or four years the public will have a fair spectrum of musical styles and composers of the classic, romantic and modern orchestral repertory'.

"The first six programs, for example, will cover these fields in this way: Beethoven's 'Eroica,' Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, a Bach Sinfonia, Brahms' Haydn Variations; Schumann's Fourth Symphony and the Second of Sibelius; Mahler's First Symphony; a sequence of preludes and interludes from Debussy's opera 'Pelleas and Melisande' which I have put together.

"The moderns will include Piston's Seventh Symphony, the new Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber, Charles Ives' Second Symphony, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, the Symphony of Psalms by Stravinsky, the 10th Symphony of Shostakovitch; Prokofieff's 'War and Peace' Overture and Aaron Copland's new 'Preamble.'

"I have a little notion of my own in putting the 'War and Peace' Overture on the first program, just a notion, mind you—we are not in quite the same position as Russian society was in Tolstoy's novel, but I like to think that the music will symbolize for us all that though there is war elsewhere, we find complete peace in the music within Symphony Hall."

Leinsdorf re-emphasized his principle of engaging soloists for the sake of a particular composition.

The work comes first. He does not intend to hire a soloist and let the soloist choose what he wants to play. "That aspect of the soloist problem has got a little out of hand in other places."

The programs to a certain extent will bring to the shorter series of concerts the works heard Fridays and Saturdays. The opening program, for example, will be heard complete at all the shorter series except that in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. There, for technical reasons, some change must be made.

Next Summer's Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have not yet had detailed consideration. "There hasn't been time for that," Leinsdorf said, "but my hope, just my hope, is to arrange many performances of new chamber music at the Music Center, which is equipped to present all manner of new works for combinations between the string quartet and the large orchestra.

"For the Festival concerts in the Music Shed I have in mind some cyclical things. I don't like cycles in a regular concert season, but a Festival is just the time and place for them. Prokofieff would be my composer for a cycle in 1963, and Mozart in the small orchestra series.

Women's section

AMUSEMENTS and the ARTS

Providence Sunday Journal

September 30, 1962

Meet New Boston

Meet New Boston Conductor

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

ERICH LEINSDORF reported for work at a new location on the morning of September 21. Outside the stage entrance of Symphony Hall he paused to wave gaily to some of his colleagues of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who were also arriving for the first rehearsal of the season.

Later that same afternoon, he sat down to face a press conference in one of the reception rooms of Symphony Hall. There was no suggestion of the double rehearsal which had just closed. Leinsdorf was as fresh and meticulously groomed as if this were his first appearance of the day.

The last strains of the Strauss score had scarcely died away when we found ourselves being introduced around the room. He sat at the far side of the big round table, put his hands on the edge of it, leaned forward and asked, "What can I do for you?"

The questions began. What about plans for the orchestra, program patterns, new works and soloists?

The new Music Director is a master at the art of conversation. Yes, the first six programs are planned. They are identical and Providence is equal to Boston and Cambridge in importance. The Friday-Saturday series in Boston begins the eighty-second season, while Cambridge opens its eighty-first. Tuesday night's concert at Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence begins the eightieth season.

Equal in importance? You could hear the question travel with a smile along the row of Boston Symphony Orchestra officials seated at the side of the room. Leinsdorf then said, "Boston is important more often."

Leinsdorf said there will be, over a period of three or four years, "a well balanced view of orchestral literature, classical, romantic and modern." Consideration for his audience is one of the impressive points we gained from the afternoon. "If someone says, 'I haven't heard this or that,' it doesn't mean that it will be neglected."

It was hard to believe that the new conductor is not an American businessman. His appearance gave evidence of fine taste in the choice of material for his suits and tie. Conservative elegance would best describe his appearance. He is short. His dark hair has receded considerably from what was apparently a high forehead. His eyes have a direct, penetrating gaze and his smile is a very friendly one.

Vienna-born in 1912, he was educated at Vienna University and at the State Academy of Music there. In his undergraduate days he conducted Bruckner's Seventh Symphony and the Thomas opera, Mignon in the same year. Throughout his illustrious career, he has been able to turn with equal success from symphony to opera. At a press conference in Boston this spring he said, "At this moment, my nostalgia for opera is well controlled."

Ready in a moment

Leinsdorf was only twenty when he was appointed assistant to Bruno Walter at the summer Salzburg Festival. He continued in this capacity for four years, working also under Toscanini. From this experience came a recommendation to the Metropolitan Opera and Leinsdorf was engaged to assist Artur Bodansky in the field of Wagner opera. His New York debut was made in January of 1938 when he conducted a performance of Wagner's Die Walkure. He was twenty-six years old two weeks later.

Being ready at a moment's notice proved to be an asset. When Bodansky became ill, Leinsdorf conducted Parsifal with only twelve hours notice. At Bodansky's death, Leinsdorf assumed direction of the German operas at the Metropolitan and stayed there until 1943.

He was the youngest conductor of a major orchestra in this country when he took the Cleveland Orchestra in 1943. The United States Army called him to service soon after this. (He had become naturalized in 1942.) After nine months of service he was honorably discharged and went back for another season at the Metropolitan, on to nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic, one season with the New York City Opera and back once more to the Metropolitan where he stayed until last spring.

The Leinsdorf family is now living in Brookline, near the family of Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops. The one requirement the conductor made of his wife, the former Anne Frohnecht of New York, was that the house she found must not be more than ten minutes away from Symphony Hall.

The Leinsdorfs were married in 1939 and have five children: David, 20, Gregor, 18, Joshua, 17, Deborah Hester, 14 and Jennifer, 10.

He has already accepted membership in a few civic committees and is on the Advisory Committee of the Arts for the National Cultural Center in Washington, D.C. He spoke of having attended the unveiling of the plans for the buildings recently, at a meeting in Newport. His comment was: "They want a cultural center in Washington but they have no money."

About the day's work, he said, "We have had two happy rehearsals. The players were very comfortable. I have had a most delightful day with the orchestra. New members were introduced. (There are four replacements this year, one violin, one cello and two double-basses.) Then the orchestra stood in silent tribute to the memory of Samuel Liebovici, a member of the orchestra for many years. He passed away recently.

"We worked on the Prokofiev score, then on the Piston, and on Eulenspiegel. Then we went to lunch. At two, we went to work again and played the second and third movements of the Eroica. Then Piston again and just now, the Eulenspiegel."

Perhaps the Strauss score had contributed to the occasional twinkle in the conductor's eye. At one point, in discussing the concerts he mentioned the B-2 program. "That's not vitamins, you understand, it's the second pair of concerts in Boston."

During the first six concerts the balance between composers will be neatly managed. The list includes three major contemporary American works: Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony; Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, which will have its world premiere in Boston with pianist John Browning as soloist; and Charles Ives' Second Symphony.

There will be three non-American contemporary works: Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra; Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms and the Twelfth Symphony by Shostakovich. Also included are Beethoven's Third and Schubert's Fourth Symphonies; the Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Debussy's Introduction to Pelleas; Mahler's First Symphony and the Strauss Till Eulenspiegel.

Dearth of strings

Questions were asked about the placement of players for recording sessions. Trial tapes, not intended for issue, have already been made "for RCA's information and ours." Mr. Leinsdorf likes to have his players seated for recording sessions as nearly as possible in the way they play at concerts. He wants his musicians happy. He made the assertion that "Symphony Hall does not need any help" in the matter of acoustics.

Asked about the possibility of presenting opera in concert form, he said, "No, not for this year. I do not see why not, later, if hearing a certain score is inaccessible any other way." He admitted that it would be a difficult demand for the singers, with rehearsals and two concerts in direct succession.

Erich Leinsdorf is sincerely appreciative of the assistance of associate conductor Richard Burgin. He feels that in the area of the Berkshire Center, his aid will be invaluable.

Interesting plans for next summer are in the making, especially for composers of chamber ensemble music. He feels that the Berkshire Music Center is in a "unique position" in this field.

The International String Congress, sponsored by the American Federation of Musicians, met in Lansing, Mich., last summer and Mr. Leinsdorf went out to see its progress. He is very much disturbed by the "dearth of string players in this country. This string problem is a national one. It worries everybody."

The mention of a new concertmaster for the orchestra brought a note of pride to the conductor's voice. He said that Joseph Silverstein, who has taken the post of concertmaster, joined the orchestra in 1955 as Number 34 in the violin section. He is now Number One. His career should be an inspiration to young players.

The new Piston score is "as close to me as a work can be. The same with the Barber score which has just been finished. I have played the full score with Mr. Browning at two pianos from a sketch of the score. We had no difficulty with it." Asked about atonal compositions, Leinsdorf said, "Manner and style of writing are only a means to an end. There are plenty of bad works in C major."

Then again we heard, "I always let a work have my best effort. The more difficult a work, the better performance it needs. When you hear a bad performance of Brahms, it is not the fault of Brahms."

And later, "If you don't believe in a work, you don't take the trouble to work out the fine points with the composer. You don't take the trouble to suggest. I always like, if possible, to have the composer present at all rehearsals."

The new conductor likes to start his concerts promptly and when he was a guest conductor in Boston, two years ago, latecomers had to wait in the corridors of Symphony Hall because Leinsdorf felt that the Mozart Symphony was too short to permit a break between movements. It would have destroyed the continuity. Providence concert-goers take warning! Boston Symphony programs at the Veterans Auditorium will begin promptly at 8:15.

The program for Tuesday's concert:

Prokofiev ..... Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91
(First concert performance in Providence)
Piston ..... Symphony No. 7
I. Slow molto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole
Strauss .. Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner—in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

Beethoven ..... Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

I asked about audience reaction to a concert. Leinsdorf said, "To a conductor, indifference is the worst crime. They may throw cannonballs or even cucumbers. I would not like it. Booing!"

Here there was a true continental shrug of the shoulders which spoke volumes. "Booing only means that they are taking a stand in the matter."

WITH ERICH LEINSDORF are Jennifer, Deborah Hester, his wife Anne, and David. Missing from the picture are Gregor and Joshua.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
SEP 18 1962

'A Happy, Happy Day'

Leinsdorf Seeks Balance

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf finished "a happy, happy day" with his new orchestra yesterday by announcing his future music program policies as the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Over three or four years," said Mr. Leinsdorf, who had just finished his first day of rehearsals with the orchestra, "I hope to present a good over-all picture of the classical, romantic and modern literature."

First Quarter

Balance will be Mr. Leinsdorf's aim, as illustrated by the programs of the first quarter of the coming Symphony season. During the first six weeks I am scheduling three contemporary major American scores, Piston's Seventh, the world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto, with John Browning as soloist, and the Charles Ives Second Symphony.

"Then we shall hear three works by composers outside America—Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra; the Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms (both associated with Boston), and the Shostakovitch Tenth.

"From the turn-of-the-century late romantics I have selected Mahler's First, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, Debussy Preludes and Interludes and Sibelius' Second; from the romantics, Schumann's Fourth, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; from the classical repertoire, the Beethoven Third and Mozart 41; and among the shorter works, a Bach Sinfonia and Copland's Preamble. As you can see, there are great gaps, but one hopes to fill in."

Grueling

Mr. Leinsdorf, chipper, relaxed and lively despite a grueling day of rehearsal, declared that he plans no radical departures from the current seating pattern at the moment. On Thursday, his first recording session with RCA will determine whether or not he will follow the methods employed by Dr. Munch in recent years, Dr. Koussevitzky before that, his own, or a combination of all three.

FIRST REHEARSAL—Erich Leinsdorf, the new Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands outside the stage door prior to his initial rehearsal yesterday.

He has placed the orchestra on risers, 22 inches at the rear, save for the first violins, 'cellos and violas. This year, he said, he anticipates no concert performances of any opera, but if the right one comes along ("an opera that for one reason or another, might not be staged, though worthy of mounting") why not?

There will be no cycles at Symphony this season; but his tentative hopes for the Berkshire Festival "still in the nebulous stage" include a Mozart cycle stretching over several seasons, a Prokofieff re-examination to mark that composer's first decade since his death, and a closer relationship between the many Tanglewood departments. Richard Burgin, who is now available for the task, could pass judgment on young string players aspiring to Tanglewood, acting as a kind of scout. "There is no more experienced string player in the world, than Mr. Burgin," said Mr. Leinsdorf.

New Works

Also in the Berkshires, Mr. Leinsdorf hopes to introduce new works of intermediate dimensions by contemporaries. He is worried about the shortage of string players in this country, and points to Joseph Silverstein, the new concertmaster ("he was Number 34 in 1955, and look where he is today") as proof that careers can be achieved within the orchestra and its strings.

At this time, said the Viennese born conductor, he is working closely with Samuel Barber, who just finished his concerto last week; each of the various Symphony series is important to him; and he would like to emphasize again how delighted he was with the first rehearsal. "The title of Prokofieff's Overture to 'War and Peace,' which opens the season, may suggest Tolstoi,' he said. "I like its solemn and majestic outline.

"War outside, perhaps," ended Erich Leinsdorf, "but I would like it also to convey when one enters, that inside the doors of Symphony Hall, there prevails Peace."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
SEP 22 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610
SEP 22 1962

ORCHESTRA OPENS SEASON

BOSTON, (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 82nd season under the direction of a new conductor last night. Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Charles Munch, was warmly received by the audience and local critics.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
SEP 15 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890
SEP 15 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
SEP 17 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
SEP 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610
SEP 15 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
SEP 13 1962

Leinsdorf Conducts

Boston Symphony's 82nd Season Opens Sept. 21st

Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Music Director, will conduct the opening concerts of the Orchestra's eighty-second season at Symphony Hall September 21 (Friday) at 2:15—September 22 (Saturday) at 8:30. The program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, and Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss. Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen this as his first program with the Orchestra, because the Beethoven Symphony is "a statement of my convictions" and the Piston Symphony No. 7, not previously performed by the Boston Symphony, is in recognition of Mr. Piston's "association with Boston, with Harvard, and with this Orchestra."

The new Music Director arrived at his residence in Brookline (Mass.) on August 25 following several weeks in Europe. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a recording in Italy of "Madame Butterfly" for RCA Victor and conducted two one-hour television concerts for the BBC.

Following three weeks' vacation after the Tanglewood season, the Orchestra will hold its first rehearsal in Symphony Hall on September 17.

At this rehearsal Joseph Silverstein will assume his new position as Concertmaster succeeding Richard Burgin, who continues as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Associate Conductor.

The opening program will be repeated at the first of the Tuesday evening series on Sept. 25, when the Boston Symphony will present the second concert in Lincoln Center's new Philharmonic Hall.

The complete programs:

Friday, Sept. 21, 2:15; Saturday, Sept. 22, 8:30; Tuesday, Sept. 25, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 in E flat Major, Op. 55, "Eroica"; Piston, Symphony No. 7; Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel.

SHOWTHROUGH

FIRST WEEK.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91
(First concert performance in Boston)

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 7
I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole
(First performance at these concerts)

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner – in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 88,877
SEP 29 1962

The Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf's debut as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an omen of good things to come. The program was nicely balanced: two contemporary works, an orchestral showpiece from the turn of the century and one of music's "top fifty" classics. Of the modern works, Prokofiev's "War and Peace" overture is notable chiefly as one of the rare compositions in which the volatile Russian manages to keep a straight face all the way through. Piston's Symphony No. 7 is beautifully crafted, as we expect from that composer, hewn down to essentials with no irrelevant gestures. The handling of the strings is masterful but even more impressive is the very carefully calculated use of wind and percussion colors. It was warmly received by the audience and repeated hearings should win it lasting popularity.

The "Till Eulenspiegel" performance was properly witty and very well colored, a bit more brisk than Munch's usual treatment in some passages (agreeably so) and slightly different in a few nuances, but basically the same excellent "Till" that this orchestra has played before.

Leinsdorf's "Eroica" is solid and well calculated, making a particularly fine impression in the final variations but beautifully moulded throughout. I would like to hear the repeat observed in the first movement exposition, but this is a small point and one that could be made against a hundred other conductors. The scherzo could have been more "vivace," as Beethoven instructs in the score, but Leinsdorf's tempo was very close to the composer's metronome marking so the compaint must be referred (as it has been so often before) all the way back to Beethoven's possibly faulty metronome.

The "new sound" of the orchestra has already received much favorable comment and will have even more when final small adjustments have been made. The transformation of the orchestra from a "French" to a "German" ensemble (both of these being very loose terms) is well under way and promises to be a distinct improvement. What we are developing, actually, is an extremely versatile instrument and one that will undoubtedly be even more receptive to new ideas than in the past.

Joseph McLellan

LEINSDORF IN DEBUT

Boston Symphony Entering New Era

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, second oldest in the U.S., opened its 82d season by introducing its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, to the traditional Friday afternoon audience of Beacon Hill Brahmins and Back Bay bluebloods.

Leinsdorf, 11th conductor in a succession which has included Nikisch, Muck, Monteux, Koussevitsky and Munch, made it clear from the first that a new and positive authority was in charge of the orchestra and that the artistry and intellect of the new music director would be implanted on all the group would do.

THE PROGRAM alone gave evidence of this. It opened with the short, atmospheric prelude to the opera "War and Peace" by Prokofiev —a composer for whom Leinsdorf has special regard, and, it must be added, special insight. There were two symphonies, the Pulitzer Prize-winning Seventh Symphony of Walter Piston, and the Third (or "Eroica") Symphony of Beethoven. Between them came Richard Strauss's rondo "Till Eulenspiegael's Merry "Pranks," a work Chicago Symphony audiences heard from Leinsdorf last season.

IN A PRESS conference, Leinsdorf remarked that he regarded the prelude to "War and Peace" as symbolic, contrasting the turmoil of the world with the serenity possible inside a home of the arts, such as Symphony Hall.

The work itself is more effective as an operatic preface than a concert piece. It sets a mood appropriate to the opening of a drama on a scale such as that of the Tolstoi novel, but thematically far too little happens to make it comparable to, say, the "Meistersinger" prelude of Wagner.

It was, however a fine work to introduce the Piston symphony, a powerful score which was given its world premiere last season by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The three movements, Con moto, Adagio pastorale and Allegro festevoale, are uniformly strong in structure and rich in musical ideas.

MY IMPRESSION last year was that Leinsdorf's way with "Till Eulenspiegel" was unsurpassed among today's conductors, and this Boston performance upheld that judgment. Here, and in the "Eroica," it was evident that Leinsdorf was delighted with the excellence of his new orchestra and, perhaps, just a little carried away by its ability to produce the most refined and ravishing sounds.

By intermission many of the audience were commenting on the change in the ensemble, the appearance of the warm, glowing sonorities which characterize an orchestra under Leinsdorf's direction.

EVEN IN quick tempos, Leinsdorf wanted no clipped phrase endings, no distorted rhythmic values. Each note was to be cleanly articulated, to have a little "white space" around it on all sides. The result, in general, was to strengthen the impact of the musical statement, but the golden mean was not always achieved, and in the first two movements of the "Eroica" there were moments when the line sagged for seemingly no better reason than to prolong a particularly lovely tone.

Yet it was a splendid "Eroica" and as notable an opening program as any conductor could desire. The Boston Symphony is obviously entering into a new era, and one which promises to bring many great days.

SHOWTHROUGH

FIRST WEEK

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Overture to "War and Peace"
(Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91
(First concert performance in Boston)

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 7
I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole
(First performance at these concerts)

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewspaperAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 66,877
SEP 29 1962

The Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf's debut as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an omen of good things to come. The program was nicely balanced: two contemporary works, an orchestral showpiece from the turn of the century, and one of music's "top fifty" classics. Of the modern works, Prokofiev's "War and Peace" overture is notable chiefly as one of the rare compositions in which the volatile Russian manages to keep a straight face all the way through. Piston's Symphony No. 7 is beautifully crafted, as we expect from that composer, hewn down to essentials with no irrelevant gestures. The handling of the strings is masterful but even more impressive is the very carefully calculated use of wind and percussion colors. It was warmly received by the audience and repeated hearings should win it lasting popularity.

The "Till Eulenspiegel" performance was properly witty and very well colored, a bit more brisk than Munch's usual treatment in some passages (agreeably so) and slightly different in a few nuances, but basically the same excellent "Till" that this orchestra has played before.

Leinsdorf's "Eroica" is [illegible] and well calculated, making a particularly fine impression in the final variations but beautifully moulded throughout. I would like to hear the repeat observed in the first movement exposition, but this is a small point and one that could be made against a hundred other conductors. The scherzo could have been more "vivace," as Beethoven instructs in the score, but Leinsdorf's tempo was very close to the composer's metronome marking so the compaint must be referred (as it has been so often before) all the way back to Beethoven's possibly faulty metronome.

The "new sound" of the orchestra has already received much favorable comment and will have even more when final small adjustments have been made. The transformation of the orchestra from a "French" to a "German" ensemble (both of these being very lebe terms) is well under way and promises to be a distinct improvement. What we are developing, actually, is an extremely versatile instrument and one that will undoubtedly be even more receptive to new ideas than in the past.

Joseph McLellan

4 "Two" CHICAGO SUN-TIMES, Mon., Sept. 24, 1962

LEINSDORF IN DEBUT

Boston Symphony Entering New Era

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, second oldest in the U.S., opened its 82d season by introducing its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, to the traditional Friday afternoon audience of Beacon Hill Brahmins and Back Bay bluebloods.

Leinsdorf, 11th conductor in a succession which has included Nikisch, Muck, Monteux, Koussevitsky and Munch, made it clear from the first that a new and positive authority was in charge of the orchestra and that the artistry and intellect of the new music director would be implanted in all the group would do.

THE PROGRAM alone gave evidence of this. It opened with the short, atmospheric prelude to the opera "War and Peace" by Prokofiev — a composer for whom Leinsdorf has special regard, and, it must be added, special insight. There were two symphonies, the Pulitzer Prize-winning Seventh Symphony of Walter Piston, and the Third (or "Eroica") Symphony of Beethoven. Between them came Richard Strauss's rondo "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," a work Chicago Symphony audiences heard from Leinsdorf last season.

IN A PRESS conference, Leinsdorf remarked that he regarded the prelude to "War and Peace" as symbolic, contrasting the turmoil of the world with the serenity possible inside a home of the arts, such as Symphony Hall.

The work itself is more effective as an operatic prefase than a concert piece. It sets a mood appropriate to the opening of a drama on a scale such as that of the Tolstoi novel, but thematically far too little happens to make it comparable to, say, the "Meistersinger" prelude of Wagner.

It was, however, a fine work to introduce the Piston symphony, a powerful score which was given its world premiere last season by the Chicago Orchestra.

The three movements, Con moto, Adagio pastorale and Allegro festevole, are uniformly strong in structure and rich in musical ideas.

MY IMPRESSION last year was that Leinsdorf's way with "Till Eulenspiegel" was unsurpassed among today's conductors, and this Boston performance upheld that judgment. Here, and in the "Eroica," it was evident that Leinsdorf was delighted with the excellence of his new orchestra and, perhaps, just a little carried away by its ability to produce the most refined and ravishing sounds.

By intermission many of the audience were commenting on the change in the ensemble, the appearance of the warm, glowing sonorities which characterize an orchestra under Leinsdorf's direction.

EVEN IN quick tempos, Leinsdorf wanted no clipped phrase endings, no distorted rhythmic values. Each note was to be cleanly articulated, to have a little "white space" around it on all sides. The result, in general, was to strengthen the impact of the musical statement, but the golden mean was not always achieved, and in the first two movements of the "Eroica" there were moments when the line sagged, for seemingly no better reason than to prolong a particularly lovely tone.

Yet it was a splendid "Eroica" and as notable an opening program as any conductor could desire. The Boston Symphony is obviously entering into a new era, and one which promises to bring many great days.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
SEP 22 1962

Society: Symphony Tradition Lingers In a World of Change

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

There was a new back on the conductor's stand in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, but other than that there were few changes in Boston's most sacrosanct tradition as the 82d season of these world-famous concerts opened punctually, properly and with prestige.

The big, privileged audience surged in complacently, leaving a Mass. av. lobby—full of wistful watchers, and gave a brief standing ovation by way of greeting new conductor Erich Leinsdorf. Composer Walter Piston's Symphony brought such a round of applause that both Mrs. Piston and Leinsdorf urged Mr. Piston out of his chair and through the back hall to the stage, while the white gloves continued to patter in salute.

In the first balcony, the favorite "wives row" of the B.S.O. conductors, Mrs. Leinsdorf exchanged formal greetings with some of her new Brookline neighbors, and watching from the audience side of the stage after more than 40 years at a front desk of the orchestra was Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, and musician Harry Dickson, Arthur Fiedler and his family, G. Wallace Woodworth, E. Power Biggs, Mabel Daniels and many another reminisced of Koussevitzky, Munch, and other "greats" in Boston's Symphony annals.

Glossy new stage sections that make the players more visible, and new red carpeting on the long aisles, were among the few changes, otherwise the scene might well have been the Fall opening 1900, when the barely-finished hall was crowded with Cabots and Lowells and Sears and Codmans, casting nostalgic looks at the sole survivor of the beloved old Boston Music Hall—the iron stairway railing in the front hall.

President of the Symphony trustees Henry Cabot, Mrs. Cabot and their daughter were among the prompt Symphony families, and also coming across Huntington av. from the pre-symphony luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn were Mrs. Anthony Kutten, who helped organize this series last season, Mr. Kutten, the William Morris Hunts, Mme. Jean Savelli, wife of Boston's consul general from France, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, in from Manchester for luncheon and the concert, Mrs. Clement Titcomb, Symphony's first—and only—woman trustee, Mrs. James H. Perkins, also over from the Midtown luncheon, as were attractive Paris-born Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Teiner, Mrs. Richard Ehrlich and Mrs. Robert Boas.

Just as prompt in arriving at the Mass. av. entrance were limosines from the Ritz Carlton where lunch-before-symphony dates back 35 years to the first use of the beautiful white and blue dining room overlooking the Public Garden. Boston's Ruby Newman played classic airs for that handsome occasion, and little changed, he played yesterday while Symphony-goers chose lunch from a crested silver-edged menu featuring filets de sole Deauville and other delicacies of the Paris Ritz that are favorites with the Duke and Duchess of Windsor.

Maxim Karolik and the Russell Codmans, back from Newport and the Cup races, shared a flower-decked table, and Mrs. Alvan Fuller, soignee as her two beautous daughters, had a window table of guests that included new bride Elizabeth Church Begien and Mrs. Robert Henderson (Mary Fuller). Joining them before leaving for Symphony was Mrs. Alfred Donovan's mother-in-law, Mrs. Alfred F. Donovan.

The Hervey Kents and luncheon guests were at another flower-decked table, next to their Hampton Falls neighbor, Mrs. Hal Ryerson, also just back from Newport and the Cup races. Both Mrs. Kent and Mrs. Ryerson could have stepped into a fashion show in their elegant tailored dresses and glamorous hats.

The Kents' beautiful daughter Gloria (Mrs. Jerry Holton Jones) who led the Versailles Debutante Ball cotillion with the Duc de Brissac, modelled one of the world's costliest chinchilla capes as she and blonde Mrs. Hans Estin showed some of the most decorative furs imaginable. Arthur Landers, long head of the Music Dept. at Phillips Exeter, was with the Kents and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Pearl, of Exeter.

Mrs. James Phelan had her usual table before Symphony's opening, and her Ritz guests included her daughter, Mrs. Edward Gallagher.

Mrs. Sidney Rabb and Mrs. Nehemiah Whitman were others at the Ritz, as were Nathaniel Saltonstall and Mrs. Sears Gardiner, Mrs. James Duchscherer and Mrs. Thomas Gorman, guests of Mrs. Paul Bernat, Mrs. Joel Harrell and Mrs. Adriel Bird at a window table, Mrs. Peter Welch and Mrs. William Osborne Jr. at the Ritz, where the S.R.O. lunchers also included Mrs. William Endicott, Mrs. Dwight Evans, with Mrs. B. Morss Marshall, Mrs. Stephen Casey and a tall, young son, Mrs. Byron Tosi and her post-deb daughter Pam, about to leave for Italy and a Winter of studies and parties for attractive Pam, the Harold Hodgkinsons, and scores more.

At Symphony, the vast audience enjoying the "Eroica" and the tradition included Mrs. Edward Wyner and Mrs. Garson Kanin (Ruth Gordon) of New York and Hollywood, coming over in the Ritz limousines, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, the Robert Montgomerys, the Baroness de Rothschild, Mrs. Moses Williams and Alex Williams, trustees Theodore Ferris and Judge Raymond Wilkins, young, lovely Joanna Fiedler hunting for her famous father, Henry Laughlin, blonde Mrs. David Wilder, managing crutches in spite of the crowd, Mrs. Richard Thompson, Mrs. Walter Cabot, Mrs. Henry Cabot Jr., Mrs. Charles Cabot, Mrs. Virginia Cabot with a decorative fur hat, Mrs. Henderson Inches.

Also Mrs. Richard Norman, Mrs. Richard Overholt, Mrs. Paul Clark and Mrs. Homer Sweet, Mrs. James Torbert, Mrs. George Lyon, Mrs. Henry Bramhall, Mrs. Louis Hough, Mrs. Cesare Lombroso, back from a trip to Spain in time for this seasonal opening, which has lost little of its lustre in all the years since the late Mrs. Jack Gardner's Symphony hats were so fabulous that seats above her favorite first-balcony ones brought the highest prices in the house at the old Symphony auctions.

(Globe Photo by Paul Connell)

WALKING TO SYMPHONY—A favorite Boston exercise for three generations. At yesterday's opening of the 82d season are, left to right, Mrs. Walter Cabot, Mrs. Henry Bramhall and Mrs. Charles Cabot.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
SEP 22 1962

Leinsdorf on the Podium

New Symphony Leader in Masterful Debut

By KEVIN KELLY

Erich Leinsdorf took command of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon like a general marshalling his forces.

As successor to Dr. Charles Munch, he began the 82d season in Symphony Hall with a display of musical authority that was straight-to-the-point, superbly contained, and, for some, no less than spell-binding.

Had he spun around on the podium and ordered the audience to salute, I've no doubt every soul in the gallery would have flapped from his seat and answered the command, but not those seated on the floor.

The overall response was polite, restrained and a trifle remote. Nonetheless, Leinsdorf scaled the heroic side of his first Friday afternoon as music director of the Boston Symphony without a moment's falter.

SYMPHONY
Page Five

SYM
Continue ge

Like the Eroica making "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, which closed the program, Leinsdorf begins a new era for the orchestra. He comes to his job highly trained, deeply committed, and with ideas of his own.

In a well-considered effort to increase the splay as well as the texture of the orchestra's sound, he has placed his musicians on 22-inch risers and slightly rearranged the seating plan.

The first two stands of the first and second violins, violas and cellos are the only sections not thus elevated.

On first hearing, the acoustical effect is noticeably improved. The orchestra's sound (always spacious yet tightly molded) now seems more fully detailed, almost topographic. The clarity is sharp, the dimensions seemingly unlimited. It is as though casual musical nuance had been made determinedly tactile, to see the players and more easily identify orchestral voices within the ensemble.

Perhaps in unspoken testimony to his career as a conductor of opera, Leinsdorf began the program with the first concert performance in Boston of Prokofiev's Overture to the opera "War and Peace," a mammoth musical undertaking based on Tolstoi's mammoth novel. Sketched in the lush melodic line of Tchaikovsky, alternating nationalism and high drama, the Overture was a vivid curtain-raiser. It was played with clear sweep, considerable brilliance, a steady sense of dynamics and no exaggeration.

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, which followed, was commissioned by the Philadelphia Orchestra and was played here in March of 1961 by the Philadelphia. Yesterday's performance was the first by the Boston Symphony. Recipient of the Pulitzer Prize, it turns out to be an agreeable piece of music, neatly patterned in three short movements, effectively orchestrated, generally easy on the ear but a trifle laconic on the mind. It is constantly lively, and the second movement has a limpid cantilena, principally scored for solo oboe. It ends with a sprightly Allegro festevole.

The symphony's sole drawback, it seems to me, is the elusive nature of what it is trying to say. While it riles no ill-feeling in the listener, as modern works go, it tends to leave a placid, sightly blurred impression, like a pleasurable but inarticulate acquaintance whose name slips your mind the moment you depart his presence.

Leinsdorf handled it with polish and precision. The tempos were evenly taken; the tone was full and persuasive; and each detail was carefully and deliberately turned. In particular, the strings glittered with high musical lustre. At the conclusion of the symphony, Leinsdorf led the composer to the podium and together they shared in the applause.

The merry pranks of Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were brilliantly pranked. Sensitive where need be, vigorous when called for, the concept gave the score full life. The orchestra played richly and well.

Beethoven's "Eroica" was chosen for the program by Leinsdorf as an embodiment of his own artistic statement. From the first deep slash of the E-Flat chords of the opening Allegro, to the mournful grandeur of the Marche funebre through the kinetic frenzy of the Scherzo and the final exultant paean by full orchestra, it was tremendously performed. With scrupulous attention to detail and clarity of balance, Leinsdorf gave a reading in which every phrase could be clearly heard. Here was Beethoven artfully revealed with taste, individuality and power by a new Boston Symphony conductor the community will come to admire without reservation. With the heroic sweep of a born general, Leinsdorf has made an auspicious debut.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, conducted by its new music director Erich Leinsdorf, opened the 82d season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall with the following program: Overture to "War and Peace" (opera after Leo Tolstoi) Op. 91, Prokofiev (first concert performance here); Symphony No. (first performance by the Boston Symphony), Piston; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Op. 28, Strauss; and Symphony No. 3 in E-flat Major, "Eroica," Op. 55, Beethoven.

Film Times

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPT. 22, 1962

The Symphony

Leinsdorf Scores Massive Success

By ROBERT TAYLOR

When the musical annals of the future look back on yesterday at Symphony Hall the date should be set in italics, for in his first concert with The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the opening of the 82nd season, Erich Leinsdorf, the new leader, scored a massive personal and artistic success.

Changed Sound

We have in Mr. Leinsdorf a total musician whose inaugural carried forward the grand tradition of Boston Symphony conductors in the grand manner. He showed us yesterday his Olympian lineage. Yet he is young enough, too, so that the unmistakable assertion of talent indicates a mighty potential. His career and art may achieve fullness here: the zenith of a dazzling gift.

And he showed us, as well, an almost completely new orchestra. The sound of The Boston Symphony is different; ripe, sonorous and mellow. Earlier this week Mr.

(Continued from First Page)

Leinsdorf announced that, save for a few stands of first and second violins, he was placing the ensemble on 22-inch risers. Aside from the risers, he said, he anticipated minor tonal adjustments.

He has, in fact, re-aligned the entire orchestra. The percussion now stretches across the middle rear of the apron; the winds have been shifted stage left; the double basses at far stage left; the violins extending on the right and the harps upstage right. What it amounts to is a fresh acoustical perspective, heavier and brighter than the ensemble of Dr. Munch's tenure.

The timbre recalls the sound of the Koussevitzky period, though perhaps not as concentrated. Not all the changes work; one must remember that we are in the process of transition between an orchestra of the French style and an orchestra expressing Mr. Leinsdorf's philosophy, presumably less Gallic.

The harps in Mr. Piston's symphony lacked definition and the woodwinds seem less crisp—one must give to get the ultimate.

Results Magical

But that the changes will cohere into the individual Leinsdorf statement, there is not the slightest doubt. Already his touch is felt, and the results are magical. The resplendence of the strings and horns of the full orchestra must be recaptured in cascades of glowing text, alas, impossible they are beyond words.

I am virtually unreserved about the performance. Mr. Joseph Silverstein, the new concertmaster, is a musician of the first order; his solo work in Till revealed a rare distinction; the discipline and authority of his role will be much in evidence.

Four more players have joined the orchestra: Max Gilles Winder, the former assistant concertmaster of the Houston Symphony, coming to the violin section after the recent death of Joseph Leibovici; Peter Quarles Schenkman, 'cello, from the Richmond, Va., Symphony; Bela Wurtzler from the Detroit Symphony and Joseph Hearne from the Orchestra of America, among the double basses. The response of the players represented a standard.

I was further impressed by Mr. Leinsdorf's capacity for establishing his own concepts in a way that recalled Copland's remark about Dr. Koussevitzky: "He had simply translated to our country his basic confidence in the creative powers of our world." While we heard a Prokofieff overture of heroic and solemn dimensions; a sprightly and animated Till Eulenspiegel and, principally, an Eroica distinguished by the clarity and fine control of its line, for me the Piston Seventh was a moving and memorable assertion of those powers.

No Pretenses

It has no pretenses. The idiom, virtually orthodox, and the mood of contemplative spaciousness does not forcibly prod the listener with innovation. It is a score related in spirit to Beethoven's 'Pastorale,' the product of a humane and profound musical imagination.

The range of our contemporary literature holds few works of so elevated and sustained a character. The felicities, from the lovely oboe cantilena to the absorbing rhythmic and coloristic ideas, are wholly enchanting.

Mr. Piston wrote his Seventh for the Philadelphia Orchestra, who played it here in 1961 (not 1962 as stated in a program misprint); yesterday the vibrancy of Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation made it sound created for Boston: Mr. Piston, in the audience, appeared onstage. This was part of the ritual connected with the opening concert, and the rising homage at the start.

The identification of Mr. Leinsdorf with the music, however, augured his admirable Beethoven, and its carefully-wrought finale. He had simply translated, from one period to another, his basic confidence.

Next week the new Music Director has scheduled the Boston premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, which the Orchestra will present in a world premiere Monday night at New York's new Lincoln Center. Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and the Sibelius Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43, will also be heard.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the first program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Overture to 'War and Peace' (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91 ..... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 7 ..... Poston
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, Op. 28 ..... Strauss Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica", Op. 55 ..... Beethoven

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
SEP 22 1962

Music: Boston Symphony

Leinsdorf on Podium as New Season Opens

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 21—Everybody agreed this afternoon that Erich Leinsdorf was given a thunderous reception at the end of his first concert as the new conductor of the Boston Symphony.

To a visitor it sounded like a cordial, rather than a thunderous, outburst; but he was assured that the Friday afternoon audience of the Boston Symphony—an audience most similar to that attending the New York Philharmonic's Friday afternoon concerts — was traditionally sedate, and that it almost never called a conductor back more than once. Mr. Leinsdorf had to take three bows.

There were some immediately noticeable changes in the seating arrangements that Mr. Leinsdorf has made in his orchestra. He has put the men on risers, the last row almost two feet high. Violins are to his left, cellos in front, violas to the right and the double basses strung single-file along the extreme right and the back. The percussion is back in dead center.

●

Another change was in the concertmaster's chair. Gone was Richard Burgin after these many years. In his place sat the young-looking Joseph Silverstein, the newly appointed first-desk man. In programming Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" as the number just before intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf was in effect showing off his choice, for there is a good deal of solo violin work in the score, and Mr. Silverstein disposed of it with technical finish and accurate intonation.

Two new and two old pieces of music made up the program. The old, in addition to the Strauss, was Beethoven's "Eroica," which ended the afternoon. The new were Prokofieff's "War and Peace" Overture, a not very interesting work and Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony, which was receiving its first Boston Symphony performance. The work had been introduced to New York last March by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Mr. Piston, an old friend to the audience, was on hand to take a bow.

This is the beginning of the 82d season of the Boston Symphony. If Mr. Leinsdorf follows the pattern of his immediate predecessors, he can be expected to remain here for a long time. In all, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had only 11 conductors since it was founded in 1881. Charles Munch commanded the orchestra from 1949 until the end of the Berkshire Festival season last month. Serge Koussevitzky held sway from 1924 to 1949, a good 25 years. Before Koussevitzky there was Pierre Monteux, from 1919 to 1924.

It is, of course, much too early to state in which direction Mr. Leinsdorf will carry the Boston Symphony. He will be a conductor with a completely different approach from Munch and Koussevitzky. He is one of the efficient 20th-century breed, with something almost of Herbert von Karajan in his makeup. He conducts without a baton, he does little dancing and he is strictly business. His approach is less German than cosmopolitan, which means that his interpretations are solidly constructed, that they tend toward objectivity. At all times Mr. Leinsdorf knows exactly what he is doing, and he does it with a minimum of fuss.

●

Under his direction the Boston Symphony played this afternoon with a harder, leaner, sound than it has done; and few of the color effects that have been associated with it in the past. It was strong, clear music-making. The orchestra responded beautifully. One of the musicians, gossiping before the concert, said that at rehearsal the players and conductor had got along so beautifully that a love affair developed and at the end there was burst after burst of applause. Mr. Leinsdorf, a realist, held up his hand.

"Thank you," he said. "Let's see if you feel this way 10 years from now."

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conducter. At Symphony Hall, Boston.

Overture to War and Peace.....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 7.....Piston
Till Eulenspiegel.....Strauss
Symphony No. 3 in E flat (Eroica).....Beethoven

Conductor With Poise

Erich Leinsdorf

Man in the News

AS a student at the Music Academy in Vienna at the age of 18, Erich Leinsdorf once conducted Thomas's opera "Mignon" and Bruckner's Seventh Symphony in the same year. The juxtaposition proved prophetic of the conductor's subsequent career, for he has vascillated between positions with opera companies and symphony orchestras with some regularity. Now that he is assuming the prestigious post of musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the age of 50, he has expressed himself with ironic understatement: "I would say that at this moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled."

Ansel Adams

The word is "Calma!"

Yet it was in the field of opera that Mr. Leinsdorf made his mark, both in his native Austria and in the United States. When he was a mere 20, he hiked from his nativeVienna some 150 miles to Salzburg one summer, where his abilities so impressed the late Bruno Walter that he was taken on as the great conductor's assistant in preparing operas for the festival there.

Sewed with Toscanini

The following three summers in Salzburg, from 1935 to 1937, he performed similar tasks for Toscanini, who in turn recommended him to the Metropolitan Opera. That august institution engaged the musician to spell the ailing Artur Bodanzky in conducting the Wagnerian repertory, and he made his debut in New York leading "Die Walkure" on Jan. 21, 1938, 14 days before his 26th birthday.

The aplomb and assurance —and talent—that made the young man seek out Walter and unafraid to tackle a Metropolotan assignment, stood him in good stead for the next few years. Shortly after his debut, he had to conduct a "Parsifal," on 12 hours' notice, when Bodanzky became ill. The next year, when Bodansky died, the Metropolitan threw the whole Wagnerian repertory, plus many other operas, in his lap.

Mr. Leinsdorf weathered a good deal of severe criticism for his youth and lack of experience, including public complaints by some of the Metropolitan's leading singers, and he stayed with the company until 1948.

He then took on the Cleveland Orchestra, being at the time the youngest conductor heading a major American symphony. Since he had been naturalized in 1942, he found himself inducted into the United States Army just a few months after he took the Cleveland post, but he was honorably discharged within nine months.

From then on his career shifted from Cleveland to another season at the Metropolitan, to nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic, to a season's directorship of the New York City Opera, and then back to the Metropolitan, where he remained from 1957 to last spring.

In Boston, Mr. Leinsdorf will need all his considerable charm and aplomb, for he is reestablishing a German-Viennese tradition in a city that has become used to the Russian-French tradition among conductors since 1918. And he has about only one personal trait in common with the last two conductors in Boston, the late Serge Koussevitzky, who reigned for 25 years, and Charles Munch, who just completed 13 years with the orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf is always beautifully dressed and groomed.

In contrast to the regal Koussevitzky, who could hold forth extensively in his richly accented English, and to the shy Munch, who seldom said a word in public, Mr. Leinsdorf is quietly and precisely articulate in speech only faintly tinged with a Viennese accent. A short, bald, compact man, he moves with a comparable economy of motion, and efficiency is reflected in his conducting.

The conductor's outward poise cloaks a tremendous amount of energy. He has a passion for thoroughness, so that he refuses to concut parts of operas, as his predecessor Bodanzky at the Metalso is careful, so that he alropolitan was wont to do. He ways wears a seat belt when riding in an automobile.

Favors French Clarets

His interests outside of music largely embrace clothes, stamps and wines, all of which he collects. Among wines he places special stress on French clarets.

With the Boston appointment, Mr. Leinsdorf moved his large family to a house in Brookline, Mass. There he is ensconced with his wife, the former Anne Frohnknecht of New York City, whom he married in 1939, and five children: David, 20; Gregor, 18; Joshua, 17; Deborah Hester, 14; and Jenny, 10.

After the final rehearsal for yesterday's opening concert, Mr. Leinsdorf had only one word for his players, a word that is as characteristic of the conductor as any "Calma!" which may be translated as "Stay calm!"

(Globe Photo by Charles Dixon)

Globe 9/22/63

A Hush Fills the Hall, and a New Era Begins

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

SEP 27 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

MR. LEINSDORF'S DEBUT

The installation of a new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a rare, even awesome, event. Last week end's proceedings, therefore, had a very special aura surrounding them indeed.

The purely journalistic aspects of the occasion have been widely reported and hardly require extended further comment here. The Orchestra is on risers. The percussions have been moved to the center and the brass considerably to the right. Mr. Leinsdorf conducts both without score or baton, is economical in his motions, and maintains the elegance of the sartorial tradition associated with his two predecessors. To his left sat for the first time the new concert master, Joseph Silverstein. The audience response was highly enthusiastic.

So much for reportage. What about the substance? The program was fairly shrewdly chosen. The first half consisted of the first local performances respectively of Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace" and Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony. The second half, of Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Beethoven's "Eroica". In short, a new work of a composer with whom Mr. Leinsdorf has a demonstrated affinity, the Boston premiere of the latest work of this community's favorite musical son and two familiar pieces from the great Viennese tradition in which he could especially demonstrate his wares.

There were, though, some drawbacks to this, and these stemmed from the two opening works. The Overture, which stems from Prokofiev's late period, is a rather characterless lightweight. It simply hasn't enough to say to warrant its employment to open a season, let alone inaugurate an era. The Piston was vintage Piston — i.e., suave, bland, beautifully constructed, conservatively modern and basically undistinguishable from the earlier Piston symphonies which are played here so faithfully. One wonders whether the audience would really have known the difference had, say, the Sixth been substituted in its stead.

But with the rendering of the Strauss tone poem and Beethoven's indestructible masterpiece, it was possible to examine Mr. Leinsdorf's mettle. It is formidable. The Orchestra is manifestly responsive: the strings have become incredibly alive, the brasses stayed in check and the woodwinds played in perfect tune, which shows that these things after all can be accomplished here. The individual performances excelled, as witness the horns in the Strauss and in the Scherzo of the Symphony. The Orchestra's sound was clear, the balance superb and the attacks crisp.

Mr. Leinsdorf gave the distinct impression of knowing and getting precisely what he wanted. There was none of that wild excitement that has characterized, and often plagued, the Orchestra's performances for the past generation. It appears that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is destined to play at top capacity and in a musicianly fashion — a consummation devoutly to be wished.

If there was something lacking, it was a certain lack of emotional expansiveness. Just what this quality is or how it is imparted is something of a mystique. Its absence can often as easily be attributed to the listener as to the performer. To this listener, nevertheless, the feeling of great warmth was not present at this opening concert.

Programming can determine the stature of a conductor virtually as much as his interpretations. Mr. Leinsdorf has loaded each of the first several concerts with well-established classics. Whether this is an exigency of limited rehearsal time, or whether he feels that he can produce a definitive performance of them is an interesting question. In any event, this week's program includes Brahms' Haydn Variations, the first Boston performance of Barber's Piano Concerto, with John Browning as soloist, and Sibelius's Symphony No. 2.

SHOWTHROUGH

SECOND WEEK.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

BARBER ..... Piano Concerto

I. Allegro appassionato
II. Canzona
III. Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

I. Allegretto
II. Tempo andante ma rubato
III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

SOLOIST
JOHN BROWNING
Mr. BROWNING plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 a. Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 23 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 a. Richmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
SEP 28 1962

At Symphony

The first Boston performances of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, with John Browning as solist, take place at this afternoon's and tomorrow evening's Boston Symphony concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct Brahms' Haydn Variations and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 29 1962

Barber Concerto in Boston Première

Sibelius Shares the Success

By Harold Rogers

Sibelius—swathed in glory—has returned to Symphony Hall. For the past 13 years he has been all but missing, having been played more by visiting orchestras than by the Boston Symphony itself. But this weekend Erich Leinsdorf has brought Sibelius back to the city that has contributed the most to his American popularity, and at the concert yesterday afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf gave us a luminescent reading of the Second Symphony.

True, Mr. Leinsdorf did not turn purple in the face at the introduction of the sweeping theme of the finale, as Koussevitzky always did. Neither the expression nor the color of Mr. Leinsdorf's face goes through any great change while he is conducting.

* * *

But the expression and color of the orchestra—as we heard it yesterday—came closer to the Koussevitzky tradition than anything we heard in Boston during Charles Munch's regime. The tone has a glowing patina, rather than a high gloss. Whereas Mr. Munch had set the choirs apart from one another, urging them to speak individually in brilliant terms, Mr. Leinsdorf has drawn them together again, seeking a more organic expression, a blend and balance that folds the whole into a community of sound.

This was what Koussevitzky had done. And Mr. Leinsdorf, in but two weeks of concerts as the Boston Symphony's new director, has wrought an extraordinary change in the orchestra's sound and precision. No odious comparisons are here involved. There are those who reveled in the sound of Munch's orchestra. There are those who will revel in Leinsdorf's. It is quite possible to revel in both.

There is also a strong indication that the orchestra is being firmly disciplined. In the Sibelius finale, for instance—when that songful and soulful theme arises in a series of dramatic repetitions, as if from the suffering heart of the Finnish people—the woodwinds run up and down their busy scales like a swarm of bumblebees, their wings beating in unison.

And the crowning sunburst, when the minor turns to major, was as thrilling in its way as any previous reading within memory. It is too soon for us to discern the complete musical personality of Mr. Leinsdorf; perhaps it is too soon to say that he is basically a romantic and does his best work with a romantic score.

Yet it is true that he has done his best work during the past two weeks in the Sibelius Second and in Samuel Barber's neo-romantic Piano Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf and John Browning gave the Barber its world première last Monday night at Lincoln Center in New York, after which its tremendous success was reported in these columns. Mr. Browning then came on to Boston for its local première this weekend. Mr. Barber has been on hand for both premières and has taken his share of the ecstatic applause with Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Browning.

* * *

The Boston performance was even more satisfying than the one in New York, perhaps because we have no apprehensions about the acoustics in Symphony Hall, or perhaps because the participants are now more of a team. Mr. Barber has turned out a remarkably fine concerto, both sensitive and brilliant — one that should find a universal welcome. There being nothing strange in its idiom—about the oddest things to be mentioned are the scurry of minor seconds in a finale that skips along in five-eight time—listeners need not adjust their ears from diatonic patterns to something less accessible.

But the music has not a hackneyed note; it is refreshingly original in its rhapsodic, soaring passages of the first movement, the piano colors laid on in broad strokes; it is rich-textured and trenchantly introspective in the middle movement (especially in Mr. Browning's interpretation); it is filled with explosive fun in the skittering finale.

The composer, pianist, and conductor stepped forward, again, and again, to receive their bravos.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
OCT 4 1962

With the B. S. O.

Browning Performs Barber Concerto

By ALLAN SLY

The new look, the new sound and feel of Symphony Hall will soon have effaced comparisons with the recent past, so soon do we adjust ourselves these days. The audience seems more on its toes and definitely well-disposed. The B.S.O., as always, plays with responsibility to itself, which includes its manner of lending itself to a conductor without surrendering its own identity. It seems to be at its ease even while sounding tighter and tidier than formerly. Mr. Leinsdorf's rapport with everyone around him is reassuring. We can look forward to the pleasures of this voyage.

The Brahms Haydn Variations were breathed while we were still within sight of land. Nothing very new about them — in fact they sounded rather close-hauled. Then the valiant young John Browning undertook the new Samuel Barber piano concerto with Mr. Leinsdorf as pilot and a fine adventure it turned out to be. This is a work of maturity, a real concerto with the sole part in contention with the orchestra rather than integrated with it; strong angular thematic material, virile structural development, sturdy declamation, dramatic urgency, vivid orchestral accouterments. The canzona and the intriguing finale have been widely commented on by others, as has the originality and contemporaneity of this work — even while its conservative idiom pulls the listener back into the communicative mood of yesterday.

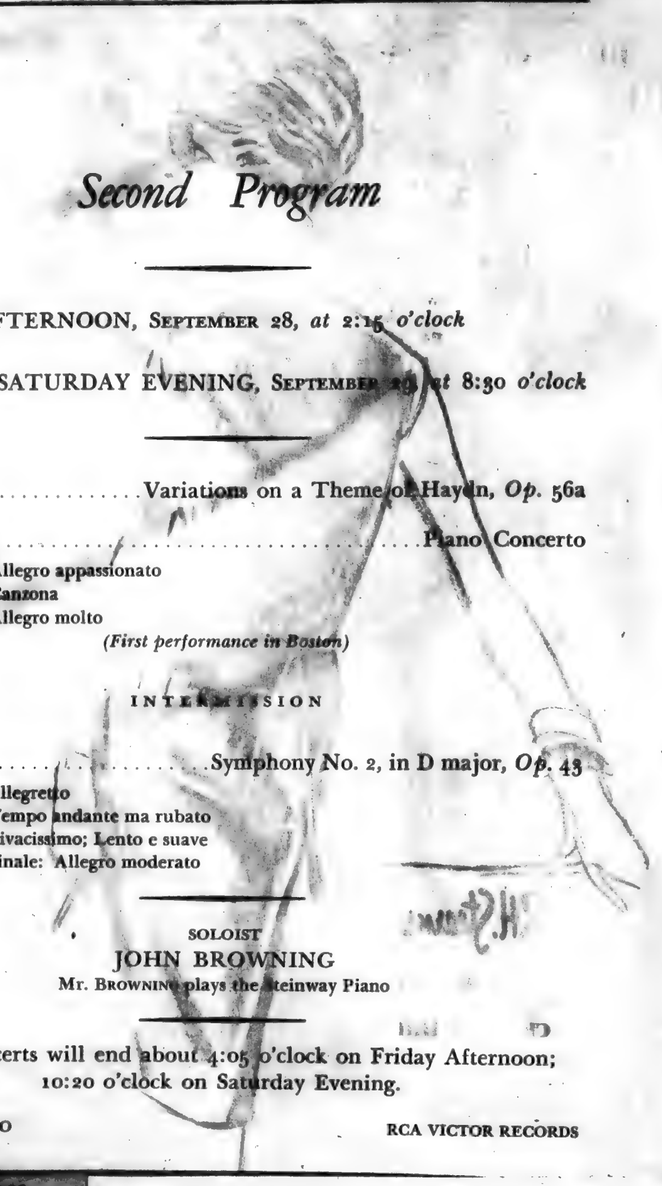
The composer was on hand, having practically joined the team for several performances: the stage pantomine providing a sort of fringe benefit before the intermission.

Sibelius seems likely to achieve rehabilitation at Symphony Hall. The Second Symphony sounded very much at home and very worthwhile. The romantic virus is at work among us still, but reorganized and reinforced with German thoroughness and conviction. Let the faint-hearted tremble, let the effete stand aside. Such forthright, thunderous assurance of delivery sweeps all before it, but agreeably, with love. If we must relive our yesterdays this is a handsome way to do it. The cruise directors must be feeling pleased at this stage of the voyage — on course, steady as she goes.

SHOWTHROUGH

SECOND WEEK.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE



Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS . . . . . Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

BARBER . . . . . Piano Concerto

I. Allegro appassionato
II. Canzona
III. Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

I. Allegretto
II. Tempo andante ma rubato
III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

SOLOIST
JOHN BROWNING
Mr. BROWNING plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 23 1962

At Symphony

The first Boston performances of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, with John Browning as soloist, take place at this afternoon's and tomorrow evening's Boston Symphony concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct Brahms' Haydn Variations and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 29 1962

Barber Concerto in Boston Première

Sibelius Shares the Success

By Harold Rogers

Sibelius—swathed in glory—has returned to Symphony Hall. For the past 13 years he has been all but missing, having been played more by visiting orchestras than by the Boston Symphony itself. But this weekend Erich Leinsdorf has brought Sibelius back to the city that has contributed the most to his American popularity, and at the concert yesterday afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf gave us a luminescent reading of the Second Symphony.

True, Mr. Leinsdorf did not turn purple in the face at the introduction of the sweeping theme of the finale, as Koussevitzky always did. Neither the expression nor the color of Mr. Leinsdorf's face goes through any great change while he is conducting.

But the expression and color of the orchestra—as we heard it yesterday—came closer to the Koussevitzky tradition than anything we heard in Boston during Charles Munch's regime. The tone has a glowing patina, rather than a high gloss. Whereas Mr. Munch had set the choirs apart from one another, urging them to speak individually in brilliant terms, Mr. Leinsdorf has drawn them together again, seeking a more organic expression. . . . blend and balance . . . the whole into a community of sound.

This was what Koussevitzky had done. And Mr. Leinsdorf, in but two weeks of concerts as the Boston Symphony's new director, has wrought an extraordinary change in the orchestra's sound and precision. No odious comparisons are here involved. There are those who revelled in the sound of Munch's orchestra. There are those who will revel in Leinsdorf's. It is quite possible to revel in both.

There is also a strong indication that the orchestra is being firmly disciplined. In the Sibelius finale, for instance—when that songful and soulful theme arises in a series of dramatic repetitions, as if from the suffering heart of the Finnish people—the woodwinds run up and down their busy scales like a swarm of bumblebees, their wings beating in unison.

And the crowning sunburst, when the minor turns to major, was as thrilling in its way as any previous reading within memory. It is too soon for us to discern the complete musical personality of Mr. Leinsdorf; perhaps it is too soon to say that he is basically a romantic and does his best work with a romantic score.

Yet it is true that he has done his best work during the past two weeks in the Sibelius Second and in Samuel Barber's neo-romantic Piano Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf and John Browning gave the Barber its world première last Monday night at Lincoln Center in New York, after which its tremendous success was reported in these columns. Mr. Browning then came on to Boston for its local première this weekend. Mr. Barber has been on hand for both premières and has taken his share of the ecstatic applause with Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Browning.

* * *

The Boston performance was even more satisfying than the one in New York, perhaps because we have no apprehensions about the acoustics in Symphony Hall, or perhaps because the participants are now more of a team. Mr. Barber has turned out a remarkably fine concerto, both sensitive and brilliant — one that should find a universal welcome. There being nothing strange in its idiom—about the oddest things to be mentioned are the scurry of minor seconds in a finale that skips along in five-eight time—listeners need not adjust their ears from diatonic patterns to something less accessible.

But the music has not a hackneyed note; it is refreshingly original in its rhapsodic, soaring passages of the first movement, the piano colors laid on in broad strokes; it is rich-textured and trenchantly introspective in the middle movement (especially in Mr. Browning's interpretation); it is filled with explosive fun in the skittering finale.

The composer, pianist, and conductor stepped forward, again, again, to receive their bravos.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
OCT 4 1962

With the B. S. O.

Browning Performs Barber Concerto

By ALLAN SLY

The new look, the new sound and feel of Symphony Hall will soon have effaced comparisons with the recent past, so soon do we adjust ourselves these days. The audience seems more on its toes and definitely well-disposed. The B.S.O., as always, plays with responsibility to itself, which includes its manner of lending itself to a conductor without surrendering its own identity. It seems to be at its ease even while sounding tighter and tidier than formerly. Mr. Leinsdorf's rapport with everyone around him is reassuring. We can look forward to the pleasures of this voyage.

The Brahms Haydn Variations were breathed while we were still within sight of land. Nothing very new about them — in fact they sounded rather close-hauled. Then the valiant young John Browning undertook the new Samuel Barber piano concerto with Mr. Leinsdorf as pilot and a fine adventure it turned out to be. This is a work of maturity, a real concerto with the sole part in contention with the orchestra rather than integrated with it; strong angular thematic material, virile structural development, sturdy declamation, dramatic urgency, vivid orchestral accouterments. The canzona and the intriguing finale have been widely commented on by others, as has the originality and contemporaneity of this work — even while its conservative idiom pulls the listener back into the communicative mood of yesterday.

The composer was on hand, having practically joined the team for several performances: the stage pantomime providing a sort of fringe benefit before the intermission.

Sibelius seems likely to achieve rehabilitation at Symphony Hall. The Second Symphony sounded very much at home and very worthwhile. The romantic virus is at work among us still, but reorganized and reinforced with German thoroughness and conviction. Let the faint-hearted tremble, let the effete stand aside. Such forthright, thunderous assurance of delivery sweeps all before it, but agreeably, with love. If we must relive our yesterdays this is a handsome way to do it. The cruise directors must be feeling pleased at this stage of the voyage — on course, steady as she goes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
SEP 29 1962

Barber Concerto Dazzling In Boston Symphony Debut

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the second concert of the 82d season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program: Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a, Brahms; Piano Concerto, Samuel Barber (first performance in Boston), with John Browning as soloist; and the Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43, Sibelius.

By KEVIN KELLY

Having established command over the Boston Symphony last week, Erich Leinsdorf gave further proof yesterday of his unswerving musical authority in his second concert at Symphony Hall. From first stroke to last it was a memorable program, distinguished in its selection of music, near-perfect in execution. Without slighting either the Brahms or the Sibelius, which flanked the program, it was the Samuel Barber Piano Concerto which pitched the afternoon to excitement.

Barber's Concerto is a stunner, and, if it's not too early to say so, a contemporary masterpiece. Premiered Monday evening at Lincoln Center by the Boston Symphony, with John Browning as soloist, the Concerto's dynamic grace made itself heard through the ambivalent acoustic clouds of the new Philharmonic Hall. It won the admiration of both critics and audience. Yesterday, in its first Boston performance, with nothing to muffle its grace, the Concerto further enhanced its reputation. Browning was vigorously applauded for his performance, which incidentally was his local debut with the orchestra, and Barber came on stage to share ovation.

The Concerto is scored in three movements—Allegro appassionato, Canzona, Allegro molto — and explores an ingenious use of the piano's technical resources. While it is unquestionably modern in tone and concept, in the virtuosic style of Prokofieff, it is neither harsh nor jangled out of tune.

It follows a sane musical tradition, by which I mean it offers melody, harmony and rhythm (each recognizable as such) within a tight succession of deft musical ideas. Its lyricism is very sophisticated, elegant, never merely facile, and the prevailing mood is romantic.

Briefly stated, the Concerto has an eloquent melodic line, a gentle and beautifully sustained slow movement (with the flute as principal soloist), and a final quick-building to a fortissimo climax. It is clear piece of work, free of affection, and simply wonderful to hear.

Browning played with spellbinding force. He flashed over the fiendishly difficult passages as though they were merely intricate but easy pages from a primer.

At 29 his technique seems nearly flawless, his dexterity unlimited. Nothing in the score gave him undue concern; he seemed in total agreement with the Concerto's demands as well as its content. The gentle songlike second movement was handled with delicacy and imagination. Elsewhere he projected the tense power and clarity Barber intended. The orchestra played the subsidiary sections with extraordinary resonance and color.

Leinsdorf opened the program with the Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, spaciously, sonorously and impeccable in execution. The tempos were precise, well reasoned, and the orchestra's new, cleaner sound was especially noticeable in the tutti climaxes.

The program for next week will include Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Debussy's "Peleas et Melisande" excerpts, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Most of the small arms cartridges sold in Cameroon are of American manufacture.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244
SEP 25 1962

Boston Cheers First Recital Of Barber Work

By MILES A. SMITH

NEW YORK (AP)—Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long-awaited first piano concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance. Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago." Browning still was rehearsing shortly before Monday night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word splendid to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. He also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparet Monday night.

Beethoven's symphony No. 3 the "Eroica," was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
SEP 29 1962

The Symphony

Barber Concerto Again Triumphs

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Hearing Samuel Barber's new Piano Concerto for the second time in a week, does not diminish its stature. The score will endure long beyond the span of this generation.

It received a stupendous tribute last Monday when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf offered the world premiere, John Browning soloist, as part of the inaugural week of Philharmonic Hall.

Then it galvanized an audience of blase New Yorkers, conditioned to accept innovation as something of a standard—galvanized them by a modern concerto deriving from the late romantic tradition. Yesterday with the same forces, the composer again present, the first Boston performance of the work won a prolonged and cordial response, too.

It Is Musical

Seldom can a contemporary composition make such immediate contact. But Mr. Barber's Concerto succeeds, not because the style is new or old or represents the continuity of creative expression, which this does, of course, and splendidly. It triumphs, I think, because it is musical.

The stylistic garment matters less than the quality of the imaginative content beneath. Mr. Barber's work contains no standard key relationships; the first and last movements may be compared to Prokofiev Second Piano Concerto and the Seventh Sonata, though the three movements merely allude to other masters (to Rachmaninoff and Brahms as well) for a starting point. The historic origins are interesting, but far less so than the confident sensibility evident throughout.

Mr. Harbor is engaged in writing music; a statement revolutionary enough to throw the fabricators, the technical tinkers and professional rampart-straddlers of modern composition into a mild panic. There is a lovely melodic contour to his writing. The fastidiously-constructed concerto provides the soloist a bravura role. The emotional range, which opens on declamatory brilliance, subsides into a pensive melodic dialogue between flute and piano, and finishes with an impassioned toccata cast in five-eight time, has power and breadth.

Again Superb

The performance of the 29-year-old Mr. Browning was again superb. He played the opening and closing movements, and their wiry, formidable phrases, in an intense romantic fashion, a whirlwind of virtuoso eloquence. The interpretation sounded better here than at Philharmonic Hall, particularly the middle movement in which the delicate clarity of Mr. Browning's colorful inner voices emerged.

There was a little over-pedalling during the finale, when the five-eight pace forces the soloist to the limit, but I cannot imagine another performer capturing the mixture of rhapsodic and dramatic elements so completely. John Browning is one of the two or three distinguished American pianists of the new wave.

As if Mr. Leinsdorf had established a level with the Barber, he rapidly proceeded to rival it in the purely orchestral portions of the program. The Brahms Variations showed an exquisite shaping of dynamic light and shade; it was an excellent reading, elegant, clean and precise.

Tone Poem

The Sibelius Second, however, was in a special class. It will undoubtedly become a Leinsdorf specialty. His conception of the score as a tone poem realizes the atmospheric Finnish aspects instead of the classical line to which others have accustomed us in recent years. Mr. Leinsdorf's is the richest and most spacious I recall.

The tempos are almost Wagnerian in their scope. And Mr. Leinsdorf lets the stormy passions of the climaxes spring gradually from the mellowness, slow-accumulating tensions and heavy stress on tonal color. There is scrupulous detail, but the account accents with drama rather than punctilious form. One finds the broad rubato of the second movement attaining a kind of stolid northern stubborness, and the crescendo is tremendous.

In short, a Sibelius Second that conveys the sublimity of the poem it is meant to be, not the tidy, chiseled proportions of the classical idiom. This was a Sibelius challenging comparison with Koussevitzky. The new regime has taken hold magnificently.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has programmed Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony No. 41, in C, instrumental excerpts from Debussy's "Pelleas and Melisande," and Bartok' Concerto for Orchestra.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eric Leinsdorf conducting, presented the second program of the 82nd season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. John Browning, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a ..... Brahms
Piano Concerto ..... Barber
Symphony No. 2, in D maior, Op. 43 ..... Sibelius

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
SEP 30 1962
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
SEP 30 1962

3 Concerts By Boston Symphony This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts in Symphony Hall this week. In addition to the regular Friday-Saturday concerts, the Orchestra will open its annual Sunday afternoon series Oct. 7 at 3 p.m. Tuesday evening (Oct. 2, 8:15) the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 80th season in Providence.

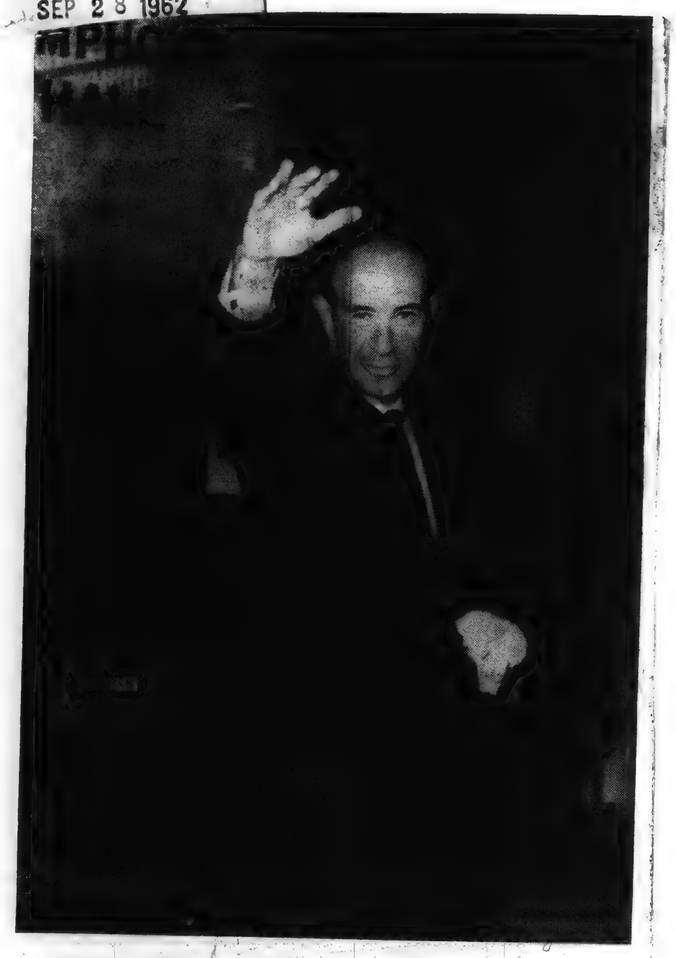
On Friday afternoon (2:15) and Saturday evening (8:30), Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter," by Mozart; excerpts from "Pelleas et Melisande, Drama lyrique," Debussy; and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Leinsdorf's program for Sunday (Oct. 7, 3:00) will include Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace," Op. 91; Piston's Symphony No. 7, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Strauss, and the Smphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

33

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,084
SEP 28 1962



ERICH LEINSDORF, the new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the orchestra in its opening concert in Providence next Tuesday evening in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. The program will be the same as offered at opening concerts in Boston last week, and will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3. Mr. Leinsdorf, who succeeds Dr. Charles Munch, came to the Boston Symphony from the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. The Providence performance begins at 8:15 p.m. This is the 81st season in Rhode Island.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
OCT 5 1962

We have musical riches, too

New York may have its new Lincoln Center, its Philharmonic and its Leonard Bernstein as befits the cultural center of the nation, but Providence need not sigh in vain for musical riches.

In our Veterans Memorial Auditorium Tuesday evening, we had the Boston Symphony in the first of a four-concert series under its new musical director, Erich Leinsdorf. It was an evening of musical excitement and satisfaction that could scarcely be surpassed at any place or any price—even the $100-a-seat price paid by the opening night audience at the Lincoln Center.

Rehearsing the Boston Symphony

In Mr. Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony has found a conductor who is more than equal to the highest standards we long have been accustomed to expect from this superb New England musical organization. We welcome him to our city and look forward to many more rewarding musical experiences with the orchestra under his leadership.

No note on last Tuesday's performance would be complete without mentioning the tremendous impact of Walter Piston's new Symphony No. 7 as interpreted by Mr. Leinsdorf and rendered by the orchestra, especially the flute passage featuring Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Suffice it to say that Mr. Piston's latest achievement is enough to make a traditionalist think twice about modern music and the place of contemporary American composers among the musical giants.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,193
OCT 3 1962

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Director Acclaimed By R. I. Audience

Erich Leinsdorf, the new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given a warm and sincerely friendly welcome by a capacity audience in his opening-night-in-Providence performance last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

He was given an outburst of applause on his entrance before the first number, and, although the work was brief (Prokofiev's "Overture To War and Peace") it was representative of the demands he was to make throughout the evening. When it was finished he received a thunderous and prolonged ovation.

✦✦✦

MR. LEINSDORF conducts without score or baton, and the readability and eloquence of his signals, due, no doubt, to his many years of directing, coaxing, commanding and correcting opera singers at the Metropolitan, brought out the artistry of each group in the orchestra.

The program had a heroic theme, beginning with the Prokofiev that expressed love of country and patriotic fervor, and concluding with Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 in E-Flat Major (Eroica)" and seasoned with the hilarity of Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

✦✦✦

IT WAS IN THE modern work, Piston's "Symphony No. 7" that the orchestra showed its superior technical ability but only the second movement of the work displayed its musical superiority. The first and the closing third movement were masterpieces of sound effects; the first with incomprehensible interpolations of cymbal crashes and bass drum thunder. It was disqueting, disturbing and dissonant with its unintelligible utterances. And that, combined with Mr. Leinsdorf's gestures, contortions and pantomimes of flapping, angled arms, crouched knees, clutching hands and semaphore windmilling made it distracting. I don't know what Piston was trying to say but, if Leinsdorf was interpreting it correctly, I'd say it was "Ode To the Praying Mantis."

✦✦✦

THE SECOND MOVEMENT, adagio pastorale, was so gentle, so comforting, and so beautifully tuneful, with such a wealth of rich woodwind expression, that I wonder if Piston didn't write this tone poem first. I wish he had left it that way. But, it seems that with the incongruity of the preceding movement and the following one, that he added these hideous combinations of sound to make it lengthy enough to be called a symphony. It seems to me that a symphony should be symphonious, and not stretched out with thunderous drums, roaring basses, whining strings and screaming brasses, with little cutisms of tiny knocks on the wood block of the percussion section.

C.H.L.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
OCT 3 1962

Music Last Night

Erich Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony Here

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf made his first official visit to Providence last evening as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Music lovers turned out in force to hear the first program of the season at Veterans Memorial Auditorium, and the occasion was a memorable one. The orchestra played magnificently, and the response to the musicianly direction of Mr. Leinsdorf was a revelation of his keen insight into the style and form of both the contemporary and romantic schools.

We heard Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace," Piston's Symphony No. 7, Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks by Strauss and Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, the "Eroica." This was rich fare, indeed.

The high point of the program was the performance of the Piston Symphony. Complex writing was interpreted with the utmost clarity, and the contrasts achieved in the three movements made a fascinating adventure in listening.

The opening movement, a maze of rhythmic patterns, had the strong sense of motion which the composer requested. Fragile themes for solo reeds were set off perfectly and the color contrasts were exciting. The pianissimo effects were unbelievably delicate. The Adagio pastorale was structurally the easiest to follow at first hearing and its themes, going from choir to choir, built up to an emphatic climax in the brass, but not for very long. The ending was a breath-taking pianissimo. It was here that the consummate musicianship of composer, players and conductor combined to reveal true beauty, a quality which always shines through, whether the score be as new as this one, first played last February, or as old as a century or two. Walter Piston has not written anything more interesting than this symphony in a long time. His rhythmic effects for the percussion section in the last movement were fascinating as well as difficult. And there was a theme for the brass which was definitely singable. The audience responded with instant enthusiasm.

The Prokofiev score made a dignified opening for the program. Mr. Leinsdorf's delineation of this material was effective. Not very far into the overture, the inevitable Prokofiev themes played in unison appeared. There was also the inevitable dissonance, neatly arranged and brilliantly displayed.

The Strauss composition was a close second to the Piston for excellence of performance. When the roguish Till was on his good behavior, his mischief was beautifully concealed. When he was demonstrating all the pranks which have made him so famous, there was no end to the humor displayed. Erich Leinsdorf's Till is a lovable rascal, and you can't help feeling sorry for his tragic fate.

After intermission, the audience settled down to hear the Beethoven Third, and once again clarity of exposition and beauty of tone made the masterpiece a fresh listening experience. The Marche Funebre was most impressive and the Finale, very rewarding.

Erich Leinsdorf has made an excellent start in Providence. The community of music lovers made him welcome last evening and we shall look forward to many more rewarding concerts under his direction. He shared the applause generously with his musicians and Joseph Silverstein, the new concert master, accepted it for the orchestra with becoming modesty.

SHOWTHROUGH

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
OCT 6 1962

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

DEBUSSY ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande, Drame lyrique," Instrumental excerpts

Act I: Prelude; Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act II: Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3); Close
Act III: Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act IV: Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act V: Prelude and Close

INTERMISSION

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Orchestra

I. Andante non troppo; allegro vivace
II. Giuoco delle coppie: Allegro scherzando
III. Elegy: Andante non troppo
IV. Intermezzo interrotto: Allegretto
V. Finale: Presto

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
OCT 6 1962

The Symphony

Magical 'Jupiter' Clear and Crisp

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Mr. Leinsdorf has offered another resplendent program—a magical performance of the "Jupiter," an able reading of the debatable instrumental excerpts from "Pelleas," and a powerful conception of Bartok's colossal Concerto for Orchestra. The Boston Symphony and its new conductor were again in admirable estate yesterday.

The program displayed striking coherence, relating representative works from three periods. The "Pelleas" Suite isn't representative enough, I think, and comes from the most integrated fusion of text and tone in opera: but no matter. What counts at this pair of concerts is purely instrumental masterworks at each end.

Even Mr. Leinsdorf's renown as a Mozart specialist didn't quite prepare for the clarity and crispness of the "Jupiter." It strikes a harmonious balance between historical fidelity and the contemporary resources Mozart would have undoubtedly employed in modern performance. (His delight in the Mannheim ensemble is indication enough.)

Supreme Test

While the original scoring calls for flute, two oboes, two bassoons, and so on, the doublings of the Mozart orchestra here established a felicity that both salutes the period yet preserves a modern sonority. And the conducting, one of the supreme tests of the civilized artist, combines dignity and sweetness, ardor and refinement. It is a captivating treatment.

Unlike less experienced Mozart conductors, Mr. Leinsdorf doesn't take his allegros at a Rossini pace; they don't sound rushed. His approach to Mozart is closely akin to that of Beecham. He offers an illusion of bravura movement, and the gallant style through unhurried phrasings that allow one to comprehend the subtleties of the inner voices while the design rapidly unfolds.

The work, in short, discloses spirit, but does not emphasize martial vigor. Hence, when the pages of the andante cantabile are reached, as outright an exclamation of tragic dilemma as Mozart ever uttered, one is prepared for the alternations of mood; while the minuet and fugato finale assume a steadily mounting firmness rising toward grandeur. Mr. Leinsdorf does it by absolute control of proportion. The clean and sparkling tone, the dynamic contrasts are articulated through the kind of limpid art that conceals art.

Polar Extreme

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, so closely associated with the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitsky, whose commissioning of the score represented one of the creative gestures of a noble career, is at a polar extreme, and Mr. Leinsdorf endowed it with a dazzling intensity. The instrumental clusters of the great opus ultima bristle with a darkling energy, an homage to life as the shadows gather.

Mr. Leinsdorf's approach is bold, yet it is necessary to create the misterioso atmosphere of the "night music' of the third movement, too; and again this is a question of precision.

When Thomas Schippers did the score here in 1961, the qualities of his conception were not unlike those one hears on the splendid Bernstein recording: an astringent, rhythmic youthfulness. Mr. Leinsdorf tends to more mellow and romantic ideas; one hears in the Concerto the Strauss to whom Bartok paid tribute in his youth. But while this maturity floods the music, it retains the strong balance of its outline, the eloquence of a mighty shape.

The audience greeted the performance with cheers, and Mr. Leinsdorf shared the applause with the horns, the winds and the choirs who contributed so much to the coloristic texture.

Definite Change

The "Pelleas" indicates how denitely the Boston has changed, for the delicacy of the French cadence is also permeated by weightier contrasts. One assumes the conductor assembled the excerpts, an engaging plan since they occur during operatic intervals when nearly everyone chatters. I liked the performance, which had a scrupulous and urbane design; but it is virtually impossible to disentangle the opera's music and words for full concert hall effectiveness.

Next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will feature the Chorus Pro Musica under Alfred Nash Patterson in Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes"; Mahler's First Symphony, in D major and Bach's

Boston Symphony Concert: Mozart, Debussy, Bartok

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the third program of the 82d season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program: Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K.551, Mozart; "Pelleas et Melisande, Drame lyrique," instrumental excerpts, Debussy; and Concerto for Orchestra, Bartok.

By KEVIN KELLY

If Erich Leinsdorf keeps the standard of excellence he has now extended to the third program of the Boston Symphony's 82d season at Symphony Hall, as though excellence were a rule rather than a random exception, music critics will have to parrot their own weekly praise.

Leinsdorf has already earned enough adjectival wealth to retire for life, or to place him—early but immortal—at the right hand of Toscanini. Quite simply, he is a magnificent conductor and the members of the orchestra have responded to his leadership with vigorous dedication.

Yesterday's program was perhaps less of a challenge than the two preceding it, but on its own terms, despite a few moments of waver and the ennui of Debussy, it was effectively maintained.

The "Jupiter" Symphony of Mozart began the afternoon in a mood of artful classic grace. The first movement, however, I found slowly marked, hesitating in its martial step, slack in gracile emotion, and somewhat reserved in gaiety.

In the glittering shape of the remainder of the symphony, it reminded me of a single dull prism on an otherwise exquisitely wrought chandelier. The brilliance really didn't shine until the Andante cantabile when the performance became pellucid in its variant shade of light and dark.

The lively minuet, which develops with rather surprising significance, was neatly played and the full fugal writing of the finale was expressively revealed. The orchestral sound was clear and bright, the overall performance sensitive and forceful.

In the excerpts from Debussy's lyric drama "Pelleas et Melisande," from the torpid myth of Maeterlinck, the musicians attained perfect balance among the varied elements of the score. Leinsdorf's interpretation does not sacrifice drama for mere delicacy but merges the two into a credible symphonic atmosphere. The score is elaborately interwoven, a tapestry of themes but, despite evocative loveliness and Wagnerian poetics it is a repetitive bore, every note a nuance, every sigh a climax. The performance was highly expert, intensely articulated, and, given Debussy, almost convincing.

The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, on the other hand, was an absolute spellbinder, a genuine, full-scale musical experience which closed the program in a storm of bravos. Bartok has explained that the work is called a concerto, not a symphony, because it treats single instruments or groups of instruments in a soloistic manner (the brass in the fugato passages of the opening movement, for example, or the strings in the final movement).

The mood of the piece, excepting the sprightly Allegro scherzando, moves with a slow but fascinating persuasion from despair to "life-assertion." The multiple themes, the collision of ideas, and the impressive sincerity of the musical concept, which touches the mind and the heart, make it a brilliant statement. The performance was exemplary. Leinsdorf has the uncommon ability to make old music sound like new, new music as though it has never been heard before.

The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

The Friday-Saturday concerts next week will include Bach's Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee vom Himmel fallt (Sinfonia and Chorale), in its first performance at these concerts; Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus; Mahler's Symphony in D major, No. 1. The Chorus, pro Musica will sing the Bach and Stravinsky.

(Cyrus Durgin, drama and music critic of The Globe, is recovering from a slight heart attack. He will return to his desk within a few weeks.)

SHOWTHROUGH

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

DEBUSSY ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande, Drame lyrique," Instrumental excerpts

Act I: Prelude; Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act II: Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3); Close
Act III: Interlude (Scenes 1 - 2); Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act IV: Interlude (Scenes 2 - 3)
Act V: Prelude and Close

INTERMISSION

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Orchestra

I. Andante non troppo; allegro vivace
II. Giuoco delle coppie: Allegro scherzando
III. Elegy: Andante non troppo
IV. Intermezzo interrotto: Allegretto
V. Finale: Presto

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
OCT 6 1962

[127]

The Symphony

Magical 'Jupiter' Clear and Crisp

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Mr. Leinsdorf has offered another resplendent program—a magical performance of the "Jupiter," an able reading of the debatable instrumental excerpts from "Pelleas," and a powerful conception of Bartok's colossal Concerto for Orchestra. The Boston Symphony and its new conductor were again in admirable estate yesterday.

The program displayed striking coherence, relating representative works from three periods. The "Pelleas" Suite isn't representative enough, I think, and comes from the most integrated fusion of text and tone in opera: but no matter. What counts at this pair of concerts is purely instrumental masterworks at each end.

Even Mr. Leinsdorf's renown as a Mozart specialist didn't quite prepare for the clarity and crispness of the "Jupiter." It strikes a harmonious balance between historical fidelity and the contemporary resources Mozart would have undoubtedly employed in modern performance. (His delight in the Mannheim ensemble is indication enough.)

Supreme Test

While the original scoring calls for flute, two oboes, two bassoons, and so on, the doublings of the Mozart orchestra here established a felicity that both satisfies the period yet preserves a modern sonority. And the conducting, one of the supreme tests of the civilized artist, combines dignity and sweetness, ardor and refinement. It is a captivating treatment.

conductors, Mr. Leinsdorf doesn't take his allegros at a Rossini pace; they don't sound rushed. His approach to Mozart is closely akin to that of Beecham. He offers an illusion of bravura movement, and the gallant style through unhurried phrasings that allow one to comprehend the subtleties of the inner voices while the design rapidly unfolds.

The work, in short, discloses spirit, but does not emphasize martial vigor. Hence, when the pages of the andante cantabile are reached, as outright an exclamation of tragic dilemma as Mozart ever uttered, one is prepared for the alternations of mood; while the minuet and fugato finale assume a steadily mounting firmness rising toward grandeur. Mr. Leinsdorf does it by absolute control of proportion. The clean and sparkling tone, the dynamic contrasts are articulated through the kind of limpid art that conceals art.

Polar Extreme

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, so closely associated with the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitsky, whose commissioning of the score represented one of the creative gestures of a period, is at a polar extreme, and Mr. Leinsdorf endowed it with a dazzling intensity. The instrumental clusters of the great opus ultima bristle with a darkling energy, an homage to life as the shadows gather.

Mr. Leinsdorf's approach is bold, yet it is necessary to create the misterioso atmosphere of the "night music" of the third movement, too; and again this is a question of precision.

When Thomas Schippers did the score here in 1961, the qualities of his conception were not unlike those one hears on the splendid Bernstein recording: an astringent, rhythmic youthfulness. Mr. Leinsdorf tends to more mellow and romantic ideas; one hears in the Concerto the fondness to whom Bartok paid tribute in his youth. But while this maturity floods the music, it retains the strong balance of its outline, the eloquence of a mighty shape.

The audience greeted the performance with cheers, and Mr. Leinsdorf shared the applause with the horns, the winds and the choirs who contributed so much to the coloristic texture.

Definite Change

The "Pelleas" indicates how decidedly the Boston has changed, for the delicacy of the French cadences is also permeated by weightier contrasts. One assumes the conductor assembled the excerpts, an engaging plan since they occur during operatic intervals when nearly everyone chatters. I liked the performance, which hadn't scrupulous and unflagging dexterity but it is virtually impossible to disentangle the concrete music and words for full concert hall effectiveness.

Next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will feature the Chorus Pro Musica under Alfred Nash Patterson in Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes"; Mahler's First Symphony, in D major and Bach's

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
OCT 6 1962

Boston Symphony Concert: Mozart, Debussy, Bartok

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the third program of the 82d season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program: Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551, Mozart; "Pelleas et Melisande," Drame lyrique, instrumental excerpts, Debussy; and Concerto for Orchestra, Bartok.

By KEVIN KELLY

If Erich Leinsdorf keeps the standard of excellence he has now extended to the third program of the Boston Symphony's 82d season at Symphony Hall, as though excellence were a rule rather than a random exception, music critics will have to parrot their own weekly praise.

Leinsdorf has already earned enough adjectival wealth to retire for life, or to place him—early but immortal—at the right hand of Toscanini. Quite simply, he is a magnificent conductor and the members of the orchestra have responded to his leadership with vigorous dedication.

Yesterday's program was perhaps less of a challenge than the two preceding, but on its own terms, despite a few moments of waver and the ennui of Debussy, it was effectively maintained.

The "Jupiter" Symphony of Mozart began the afternoon in a mood of artful classic grace. The first movement, however, found slowly marked, hesitating in its martial step, slack in facile emotion, and somewhat reserved in gaiety.

In the glittering shape of the remainder of the symphony, it reminded me of a single dull prism on an otherwise exquisitely wrought chandelier. The brilliance really didn't shine until the Andante cantabile when the performance became pellucid in its variant shade of light and dark.

The lively minuet, which develops with rather surprising significance, was neatly played, and the full fugal writing of the finale was expressively revealed. The orchestral sound was clear and bright, the overall performance sensitive and forceful.

In the excerpts from Debussy's lyric drama "Pelleas et Melisande," from the torpid myth of Maeterlinck, the musicians attained perfect balance among the varied elements of the score. Leinsdorf's interpretation does not sacrifice drama for mere delicacy but merges the two into a credible symphonic atmosphere. The score is elaborately interwoven, a tapestry of themes but, despite evocative loveliness and Wagnerian poetics it is a repetitive bore, every note a nuance, every sigh a climax. The performance was highly expert, intensely articulated, and, given Debussy, almost convincing.

The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, on the other hand, was an absolute spellbinder, a genuine, full-scale musical experience which closed the program in a storm of bravos. Bartok has explained that the work is called a concerto, not a symphony, because it treats single instruments or groups of instruments in a soloistic manner (the brass in the fugato passages of the opening movement, for example, or the strings in the final movement).

The mood of the piece, excepting the sprightly Allegro scherzando, moves with a slow but fascinating persuasion from despair to "life-assertion." The multiple themes, the collision of ideas, and the impressive sincerity of the musical concept, which touches the mind and the heart, make it a brilliant statement. The performance was exemplary. Leinsdorf has the uncommon ability to make old music sound like new, new music as though it has never been heard before.

The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

The Friday-Saturday concerts next week will include Bach's Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee vom Himmel fallt (Sinfonia and Chorale), in its first performance at these concerts; Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus; Mahler's Symphony in D major, No. I. The Chorus pro Musica will sing the Bach and Stravinsky.

(Cyrus Durgin, drama and music critic of The Globe, is recovering from a slight heart attack. He will return to his desk within a few weeks.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

OCT 6 1962

Leinsdorf, Mozart, and Rhythmic Relativity

Pre-Munchian vs. Post-Munchian Tempi

By Harold Rogers

It perhaps comes with some surprise that Mozart, like Schubert, turned out a symphony "of heavenly length"—or so one might believe upon hearing Erich Leinsdorf's traversal of the "Jupiter" yesterday afternoon. One doesn't think of Mozart in terms of prolixity—the "Jupiter," in fact, has not an unnecessary note—yet it was long, uncommonly long, long enough to stir a question or two.

Have the Boston Symphony's listeners, by means of Charles Munch's tightened rhythms, been educated over a period of 13 years to a pace that is unrealistic, to tempi undreamed of by Mozart or by other composers in earlier days? Is Mr. Leinsdorf now returning us to a pace more in accord with the markings on the score, thus setting up contrasts that make normal time values seem abnormally lengthened? Of is Mr. Leinsdorf simply taking the music too slow?

Only metronome tests can give us the answer, and even then we should have to consider the variables and imponderables bound up in a psychological sense of relativity. Pre-Munchian Mozart probably seemed not half so slow as post-Munchian Mozart, and we must be careful not to lay the blame, at least at this early date, on Mr. Leinsdorf's podium.

* * *

But slow as it was—or slow as it seemed—the "Jupiter" was not unpleasantly prolonged. Good Mozart, well played, is a joy at any length; and it was well played: nothing dazzling, nothing to set you shouting, yet carefully thought over, sane, balanced, with moments in the Minuetto and in the Finale that rose to something that might be called a pitch of excitement.

The orchestra now sounds more suave than ever; and if Mr. Leinsdorf is not careful, the orchestra will become as suave as the Philadelphia. The Philadelphians can sweep you off to a dreamland of silken tone—all veneer and no viscera — while the Bostonians have had fire within as well as without.

* * *

Yet we have been able to observe enough of Mr. Leinsdorf's musical mentality during these past three weeks to see that he seeks the inner glow as well as the outer sheen. There is nothing wrong with a suave tone so long as it doesn't become merely suave and nothing more, and a suave tone is clearly called for in the instrumental excerpts from Debussy's opera, "Pelléas et Mélisande."

Here Mr. Leinsdorf shaped the shimmering moods with a loving touch; the music again evoked the never land of Maeterlinck's imagining, peopled with legendary beings whose longing for light seems forever shrouded in darkness. The conductor underlined the longing, the sweetness, the heartache, the heartease.

And as for brilliance, Symphony Hall was flooded with radiant sound when Mr. Leinsdorf came to Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra. No subtle turn was overlooked; each touch of poesy was heightened, each nuance given its full value.

When we came to the Intermezzo interrotto Mr. Leinsdorf made the most of the fun: the trumpets tittered, carried away by the jollity of the can-can; and the final Presto pressed on magnificently to a resounding conclusion.

SHOWTHROUGH

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 7, at 3:00 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 7

I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 7

I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

First Program

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

STRAVINSKY ..... "Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus

I. Psalm XXVIII (Verses 13 and 14)
II. Psalm XXXIX (Verses 2, 3 and 4)
III. Psalm CL (Entire)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 15 1962

With Pro Musica Monday

Boston Symphony Offers 4 Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present four concerts in Symphony Hall this week. Concerts will be given on Monday and Tuesday evenings, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

The first concert of the season in the annual Monday evening series will be tomorrow. For this program Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has chosen Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms"; and the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven.

In the performance of the "Symphony of Psalms" the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be joined by the Chorus pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, director.

On Tuesday evening the orchestra's program will be Bach's Sinfonia from the Cantata No. 18, the Haydn Variations by Brahms, Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto with John Browning as soloist, and the Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in performances of Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D major, and the Symphony No. 10 by Shostakovitch at the concerts on Friday and Saturday.

The Schumann work is that last symphony to be written by that composer, and for these performances Mr. Leinsdorf will use an orchestration by Gustav Mahler. The work by Dmitri Shostakovitch will be performed by the Boston Sympohny for the first time at these concerts. It received its premiere performance in Leningrad on Dec. 17, 1953.

Other concerts this week listed in Places to Go, Things to See, Pages 6-7, TV Tabloid Section.

SHOWTHROUGH

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 7, at 3:00 o'clock

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91

PISTON . . . . . Symphony No. 7

I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole

STRAUSS . . . . . *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Overture to "War and Peace" (Opera after Leo Tolstoi), Op. 91

PISTON . . . . . Symphony No. 7

I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole

STRAUSS . . . . . *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

First Program

MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS . . . . . Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

STRAVINSKY . . . . . "Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus

I. Psalm XXVIII (Verses 13 and 14)
II. Psalm XXXIX (Verses 2, 3 and 4)
III. Psalm CL (Entire)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 13 1962

With Pro Musica Monday

Boston Symphony Offers 4 Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present four concerts in Symphony Hall this week. Concerts will be given on Monday and Tuesday evenings, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

The first concert of the season in the annual Monday evening series will be tomorrow. For this program Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has chosen Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms"; and the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven.

In the performance of the Symphony of Psalms the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be joined by the Chorus pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, director.

On Tuesday evening the orchestra's program will be Bach's Sinfonia from the Cantata No. 18, the Haydn Variations by Brahms, Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto with John Browning as soloist, and the Concerto for Orchestra by Bartók.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in performances of Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D major, and the Symphony No. 10 by Shostakovitch at the concerts on Friday and Saturday.

The Schumann work is first last symphony, to be written by the composer, and for these performances Mr. Leinsdorf will use an orchestration by Gustav Mahler. The work by Dmitri Shostakovitch will be performed by the Boston Symphony for the first time at these concerts. It received its premiere performance in Leningrad on Dec. 27, 1937.

Other concerts this week listed in Places to Go, Things to See, Pages 6-7, TV Tabloid Section.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 4 V

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 12, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH . . . . . Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee vom Himmel fällt (Sinfonia and Chorale)

(First performance at these concerts)

STRAVINSKY . . . . . "Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus

I. Psalm XXVIII (Verses 13 and 14)
II. Psalm XXXIX (Verses 2, 3 and 4)
III. Psalm CL (Entire)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER . . . . . Symphony in D major, No. 1

I. Langsam. Schleppend wie ein Naturlaut
II. Kräftig bewegt, doch nicht zu schnell
III. Feierlich und gemessen, ohne zu schleppen
IV. Stürmisch bewegt

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
OCT 11 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: MOZART, DEBUSSY, BARTOK

After Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert as permanent conductor of the orchestra, I would have given him a very satisfactory B+. Two concerts later I am prepared to raise the grade to A. In terms of beauty of sound, clarity of line, delicacy of balance, refinement of detail and liveliness of spirit, one could have asked for little more.

The offerings of the program again were solid and conservative, but they made it possible for Mr. Leinsdorf to continue the demonstration of his command over a broad scope of styles. This clearly appears to be the programmatic pattern, at least for a substantial proportion of this opening season.

The first work last week-end was Mozart's Jupiter Symphony. As Schumann's famous dictum puts it, this is one of those marvelous creations about which there is nothing more to be said. Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation was exquisitely classical — measured, unhurried, dry, without suggestion of sentimentality. He even played the repeats, which caused the work to run about three-quarters of an hour, about the length of the "Eroica". Opinions vary about these things, of course, and there were some, I know, who found such an approach tedious or remote or both. To most, though, the performance must only have been an unusually rich experience.

The first half concluded with five instrumental excerpts from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande". As is fairly well known, among the other unique aspects of the Debussy-Maeterlinck masterpiece is the fact that the twelve scenes that comprise the five acts of the opera are connected by orchestral interludes which are played while the curtain is closed. The usual thing to do at a performance of the opera is to complain that because of the chatter of the audience the interludes cannot be heard. When Pierre Monteux performed some of them here several years ago, somebody remarked that it was like being served exquisite sauce without the meat. The observation seemed sound at that time and seems equally sound today. For somehow the haunting, evanescent quality of "Pelleas et Melisande" is apprehended only within its entire context. This is not, however, in any way to gainsay the caliber of the rendition, which could easily take its place in the great French tradition here.

The final work was Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. In a very real sense this piece is the orchestra's own, for it was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation nearly twenty years ago in memory of Natalie Koussevitsky. The Concerto, it is fair to say, during that time has established itself as one of the very great modern orchestral classics. The fast range of its moods, the gorgeousness of its orchestral hues and the fascinating varieties of texture provide a stunning vehicle for the conductor who is up to it, and who has the forces to cope with its demands. Here, for the first time, Mr. Leinsdorf could place on display his capacity for sheer virtuosity. That capacity turned out to be immense and the men responded magnificently. The cheers, which were unusually prolonged, were well merited all around.

This week-end brings the season's first choral works. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's Cantata No. 18 and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms. The assisting forces will be the chorus Pro Musica. The other scheduled work is the First Symphony of Mahler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 12 1962

SMART SET By ROSE WALSH

Psalms Symphony Concert Highlight

Dedicated to "the glory of God" and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Dec. 19, 1930, Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" will be the highlight on the program of this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert at Symphony Hall.

It was commissioned by Serge Koussevitsky for the 50th anniversary of the B.S.O. and its initial performance here was six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

Today and at tomorrow evening's concert, the orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting, will be joined by the Chorus Pro Musica, conducted by Alfred Nash Patterson. A reception for the Chorus, its founder and conductor will be held at the Midtown Motor Inn before the Pre - Symphony Luncheon.

One of the outstanding choral groups in the country, the Boston Chorus Pro-Musica is a unique volunteer group of about 120 singers who give freely of their time and energies to put on stirring performances.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
OCT 11 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
OCT 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
OCT 6 1962

Boston Symphony Will Play Bach, Stravinsky, Mahler

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Erich Leinsdorf, will be joined by the Chorus pro Musica, in Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" at the concerts on Friday (2:15) and Saturday (8:30). The "Symphony of Psalms" was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. Dedicated to "the Glory of God," it was first performed by the orchestra Dec. 19, 1930, six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

This program will begin with the first performance by the Boston Symphony of the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18. It will also include Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D minor, "Titan."

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the orchestra will present the first concert in the annual Sunday series. This program will include Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace"; the Symphony No. 7 by Piston; Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel"; and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

The orchestra's 81st season in Cambridge will open Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theater. Leinsdorf will conduct Piston's Symphony No. 7, Mozart's Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter"; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun"; and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
OCT 5 1962

Orchestra, Chorus Prepare Stravinsky 'Symphony Of Psalms'

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 12 and 13 for a performance of Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

Commissioned by Serge Koussivitsky for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, the work was performed there Dec. 19, 1930, six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

The program, to be given at 2:15 o'clock on Oct. 12 and at 3:30 p.m. on Oct. 13, will begin with the orchestra's first performance of the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18. The orchestra will then give Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1, the "Titan."

The orchestra will hold its first open rehearsal this season Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m.

There will be eight rehearsals in this season's series, presented especially for students in the Boston area. Tickets for unreserved seats, at a subscription price of twelve dollars, are available at the box office.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 4

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 12, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH.....Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee vom Himmel fällt (Sinfonia and Chorale)

(First performance at these concerts)

STRAVINSKY....."Symphonie de Psaumes," for Orchestra with Chorus

I. Psalm XXVIII (Verses 13 and 14)
II. Psalm XXXIX (Verses 2, 3 and 4)
III. Psalm CL (Entire)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER.....Symphony in D major, No. 1

I. Langsam. Schleppend wie ein Naturlaut
II. Kräftig bewegt, doch nicht zu schnell
III. Feierlich und gemessen, ohne zu schleppen
IV. Stürmisch bewegt

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
OCT 11 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: MOZART, DEBUSSY, BARTOK

After Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert as permanent conductor of the orchestra, I would have given him a very satisfactory B+. Two concerts later I am prepared to raise the grade to A. In terms of beauty of sound, clarity of line, delicacy of balance, refinement of detail and liveliness of spirit, one could have asked for little more.

The offerings of the program again were solid and conservative, but they made it possible for Mr. Leinsdorf to continue the demonstration of his command over a broad scope of styles. This clearly appears to be the programmatic pattern, at least for a substantial proportion of this opening season.

The first work last week-end was Mozart's Jupiter Symphony. As Schumann's famous dictum puts it, this is one of those marvelous creations about which there is nothing more to be said. Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation was exquisitely classical — measured, unhurried, dry, without suggestion of sentimentality. He even played the repeats, which caused the work to run about three-quarters of an hour, about the length of the "Eroica". Opinions vary about these things, of course, and there were some, I know, who found such an approach tedious or remote or both. To most, though, the performance must only have been an unusually rich experience.

The first half concluded with five instrumental excerpts from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande". As is fairly well known, among the other unique aspects of the Debussy-Maeterlinck masterpiece is the fact that the twelve scenes that comprise the five acts of the opera are connected by orchestral interludes which are played while the curtain is closed. The usual thing to do at a performance of the opera is to complain that because of the chatter of the audience the interludes cannot be heard. When Pierre Monteux performed some of them here several years ago, somebody remarked that it was like being served exquisite sauce without the meat. The observation seemed sound at that time and seems equally sound today. For somehow the haunting, evanescent quality of "Pelleas et Melisande" is apprehended only within its entire context. This is not, however, in any way to gainsay the caliber of the rendition, which could easily take its place in the great French tradition here.

The final work was Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. In a very real sense this piece is the orchestra's own, for it was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation nearly twenty years ago in memory of Natalie Koussevitsky. The Concerto, it is fair to say, during that time has established itself as one of the very great modern orchestral classics. The fast range of its moods, the gorgeousness of its orchestral hues and the fascinating varieties of texture provide a stunning vehicle for the conductor who is up to it, and who has the forces to cope with its demands. Here, for the first time, Mr. Leinsdorf could place on display his capacity for sheer virtuosity. That capacity turned out to be immense and the men responded magnificently. The cheers, which were unusually prolonged, were well merited all around.

This week-end brings the season's first choral works. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's Cantata No. 18 and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms. The assisting forces will be the chorus Pro Musica. The other scheduled work is the First Symphony of Mahler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 1[illegible] 1962

SMART SET By ROSE WALSH

Psalms Symphony Concert Highlight

Dedicated to "the glory of God" and first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Dec. 19, 1930, Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" will be the highlight on the program of this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert at Symphony Hall.

It was commissioned by Serge Koussevitsky for the 50th anniversary of the B.S.O. and its initial performance here was six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

Today and at tomorrow evening's concert, the orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting, will be joined by the Chorus Pro Musica, conducted by Alfred Nash Patterson. A reception for the Chorus, its founder and conductor will be held at the Midtown Motor Inn before the Pro - Symphony Luncheon.

One of the outstanding choral groups in the country, the Boston Chorus Pro-Musica is a unique volunteer group of about 120 singers who give freely of their time and energies to put on stirring perfor[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
OCT 11 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
OCT 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
OCT 6 1962

Boston Symphony Will Play Bach, Stravinsky, Mahler

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Erich Leinsdorf, will be joined by the Chorus pro Musica, in Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" at the concerts on Friday (2:15) and Saturday (8:30). The "Symphony of Psalms" was commissioned by Serge Koussevitsky for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. Dedicated to "the Glory of God," it was first performed by the orchestra Dec. 19, 1930, six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

This program will begin with the first performance by the Boston Symphony of the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18. It will also include Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D minor "Titan."

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the orchestra will present the first concert in the annual Sunday series. This program will include Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace"; the Symphony No. 7 by Piston; Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel"; and the Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven.

The orchestra's 81st season in Cambridge will open Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theater. Leinsdorf will conduct Piston's Symphony No. 7, Mozart's Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter"; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun"; and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
OCT 5 1962

Orchestra, Chorus Prepare Stravinsky 'Symphony Of Psalms'

The Chorus Pro Musica will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 12 and 13 for a performance of Igor Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

Commissioned by Serge Koussivitsky for the orchestra's 50th anniversary, the work was performed there Dec. 19, 1930, six days after the world premiere in Brussels.

The program, to be given at 2:15 o'clock on Oct. 12 and at 8:30 p.m. on Oct. 13, will begin with the orchestra's first performance of the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18. The orchestra will then give Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1, the "Titan."

The orchestra will hold its first open rehearsal this season Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m.

There will be eight rehearsals in the season's series, presented especially for students in the Boston area. Tickets for unreserved seats, at a subscription price of twelve dollars, are available at the box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

OCT 1962

Chorus Pro Musica Joins in Bach, Stravinsky

By Harold Rogers

Within a brief four weeks Erich Leinsdorf has made the Boston Symphony Orchestra his own. There is no question—judging by his superlative performance of the Mahler First yesterday afternoon—that he has won over his musicians; and there is also no question — this, perhaps, is even more important—that he has won over his listeners. No longer does an atmosphere prevail of "let's wait and see." The waiting is over. We have seen.

The Boston Symphony has become an orchestra of marvelous transparency, tightly reined, its manifold forces held in a measured balance quite different from anything many of us recall having heard before. Restraint is the keyword, yet it is not a restraint to be linked with a reactionary approach. There is no lassitude. It is a restraint against which active emotions are constantly forcing themselves to the surface. Mr. Leinsdorf knows—and how well he knows—the power that is gained through restraint. Now a mezzo-forte is enough to make the blood leap, a triple-forte enough to lift one from his seat.

* * *

His handling of the Mahler Symphony No. 1 calls for a panegyric; yet there are no words — and there never are —that can do justice to great music, greatly played. There were those rich textures of gossamer lightness, against which the melodies and countermelodies entwine their lyrical way. There was the redolence of Viennese nostalgia, with the suspense of a sigh, the gaiety of a waltzing turn, the softness of candlelight.

And the mock funeral march —what a marvel of mystery as it came to light through Mr. Leinsdorf's sculpting hands! How sweetly sang out those wonderful tunes that also turn up in "Des Knaben Wunderhorn"!

* * *

Perhaps the final movement is less interesting as a whole than the three preceding, yet the wonder again comes to light as the themes are plucked from earlier magical moments and restated. When Mr. Leinsdorf built the finale into an incandescent climax, the audience burst forth with its own radiant performance—cheers, applause, and a rising ovation.

There is no doubt about it: Bostonians have taken their new conductor to their hearts.

* * *

Mr. Leinsdorf opened with Bach's Cantata No. 18, consisting of a sinfonia and chorale, and followed it with Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes."

For these two works Mr. Leinsdorf had the assistance of Boston's virtuosic choral group, the Chorus pro Musica, which he placed in an unusual grouping to the left of the stage.

Here again one could not help being impressed by the restraint of the interpretation. There was an extraordinary clarity that can be managed only by control of intelligence and a carefully listening ear. Mr. Leinsdorf conducts with the kind of focused listening that draws his audience into an active musical and emotional experience.

The Stravinsky score was thereby elucidated in an aura of sheer loveliness, the choral tone buoyant and bright. Alfred Nash Patterson, the Chorus pro Musica's conductor, was duly applauded for his share in the preparation of the Bach and Stravinsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

OCT 13

Mahler's First Receives Ovation at Symphony Hall

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave 4th program of the 82nd season Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The concert included Bach's Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee von Himmel fallt" (Sinfonia and Chorale) (First performance at these concerts); Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," for Orchestra & Chorus, with Chorus pro Musica (Alfred Nash Paterson, director) assisting in both works; and the Symphony in D major, No. 1, by Mahler.

By KEVIN KELLY

The frost is out of Symphony Hall.

At the conclusion of Mahler's First Symphony Friday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were greeted by a standing ovation, a prolonged thunder of approval that swept everything before it. For once it did not rumble only from the enthusiastic quarter of the gallery, but rose as a unified shout from the entire Hall.

It was the kind of welcome expected for Mr. Leinsdorf's debut four weeks ago when it was equally justified. Anyway, the point is that it came, and it was an eloquent moment of testimony.

The Mahler First, which takes about 45 minutes in performance, is slowly developed, richly textured, skillfully orchestrated, and unabashedly emotional—in other words typically Mahleresque. Its symphonic line follows the heritage of Beethoven with the additional resource of Wagner. The structure is loose and the freedom allows an alternation of the simple and the complex.

There are moments in the symphony that seem arbitrary, unnecessarily extended, and over-elaborated, but even these have a certain grandeur. And the whole, particularly the final peroration, is a stunning collection of all the parts.

Bruno Walter has called the Symphony "Mahler's 'Werther' . . . the mood of his soul, engendered by memory and present feeling." As a creative expression of a personal experience it moves from clear and vibrant lyricism to a "Funeral March in the Manner of Callot" and the final staggering climax upon climax.

In this section, in particular, the full force of the Boston Symphony, point by point, was held in strong control by Leinsdorf. The dynamic range was enormous and covered with deceptive ease. All the fascinating contrasts between wispish sound and massive sonorities was persuasively detailed. Most certainly a magnificent performance.

The afternoon opened with the first performance at these concerts of the Sinfonia and Chorale to Bach's Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee von Himmel fallt," with the Chorale sung by the Chorus pro Musica. The Chaconne introduction of the Sinfonia was beautifully played, with the sounds of the flutes clear and lovely, the violas vibrant and warm. The choral work was sturdy with good tone and considerable vitality.

The cold, religious austerity of Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," which followed, was effectively delivered. Stravinsky's text is from the Vulgate, with three psalms selected for each movement. The first is a prayer for help, the second a proclamation of salvation, and third a song of praise and Thanksgiving to the Lord. In matters of tone, nuance and balance the chorus was excellent. They sing with an innate dignity that is immensely impressive.

The balance Leinsdorf achieved between Chorus and orchestra was exact.

Next week's program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the Shostakovich 10th.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

OCT 13 1962

The Symphony

Leinsdorf Gives Bach Dedicated Performance

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Call no conductor sensitive in the highest degree to musical impressions until you have heard him in Mozart and Bach.

If one may paraphrase Shaw, esterday's Symphony concert emonstrated the maxim. Folwing Mr. Leinsdorf's inspired Jupiter" last week, the Bach antata 18, presented for the first me at these concerts, received uch a dedicated performance om the Chorus Pro Musica, the onductor and the orchestra, that e rest of the program sound- relatively coarse-grained.

There was an exceedingly precise interpretation of Stravinsky's austere Symphony of Psalms, and a brilliant conception of Mahler's First Symphony. The former, however, a cerebral re-statement of the religious spirit in Bach's Cantata, coming immediately afterward, makes an effect of pallid vocalizing.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the fourth program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The Chorus Pro Musica was prepared under the direction of Alfred Nash Patterson. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Cantata No. 18,
"Gleich wie der Regen und Schnee vom Himmel fallt" . . . . . J. S. Bach
"Symphonie de Psaumes" . . . . Stravinsky Symphony in D major, No. 1 . . . . . Mahler core Spotty

Mr. Leinsdorf does a superb Mahler First, which is all that ne can ask; he received cheers ustly bestowed. But the score tself does not stand the test of ime. It is spotty, ranging from he sublimity of the huntsman's uneral march to the ridiculous inal crescendo that transpires with enough bombast and diabolic riangle tingling to turn the '1812,' by comparison, into a whisper of restraint.

Make no mistake, though, Erich Leinsdorf understands every bar, the accurate execution of every note. The modelling of this absorbing concert held continual intelligence and clarity. In the Cantata 18, so seldom encountered (an example of the glories of Bach our major orchestras leave too often unheard) conscientious style attained a profound and energetic spiritual strength.

Tonal Balance

Partly this stemmed from the conductor's handling of his forces; his tempos which establish grandeur yet eschew slow pomposity. The chorus forms a pie-shaped wedge at stage right, the tip pointing toward the intersection of Huntington Avenue. The arrangement looks visually cramped, but, magnificently justified by tonal balance, allows the listener to hear the choral texture emphatically.

The singers do not have to project over an orchestra. Their resonance has the quality of the choir loft without cathedral echo. The intonation of the vocalists, the delicate pianissimos, achieve vibrant grace and integrated sound. The performance of the Chorus Pro Musica, to my mind the peerless chorale of New England, showed expressive splendor once more. While I should not diminish the contribution of those student choruses whose ties with Symphony are hallowed by tradition and a need for public performance, I submit that singing Bach properly demands the services of musicians accustomed to close-knit ensemble over a period of years.

Major Work

The Symphony of Psalms, commissioned for the Orchestra's 50th year, may be considered one of Stravinsky's major works. Here it was cancelled by context. The composer avoids seductive tone, to be sure, but what he can't avoid, I think, his own sophistication, permeates the music. The nobility present is very much of this earth. The vivid performances of my experience come from talents less concerned with a scrupulous and spare outline—like Mr. Leinsdorf's yesterday—than with producing luscious choral patterns.

In short, one is extremely aware of the characteristic Stravinsky-ian melodic-rhythmic designs shifting from one beat of the measure to the other. Which for me is scarcely the attitude of meditation. The Chorus again sang with wondrous subtlety, and at the conclusion Alfred Nash Patterson, the director, shared applause with Mr. Leinsdorf.

The results of careful preparation, eveness, unbroken flow, distinguished Mahler's Symphony in yesterday's performance. The shadings of excellence in the instrumental tone, enhanced the score. Mr. Leinsdorf gave us a tone poem par excellence. If only we did not have to take it so seriously—but the genius of Mahler in the funeral march, the muted cymbals, the gypsy frenzy, the ironic mockery, forces one to accept the entire symphony on the same plane.

Thus it becomes a derivative piece marked by sustained passages of intense originality. Exciting and good fun, steeped in coloristic brilliance, gipsy with melodrama, the music makes its way, and then astounds by the inspiration of the ideas in one movement, falling away to conventional loudness and depletion at the close.

A great work; if only we did not have to take it so seriously . . .

Next weekend Mr. Leinsdorf presents the local premiere of Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93; and Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120.

BOSTON 5

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 20, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93

I. Moderato
II. Allegro
III. Allegretto
IV. Andante; Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
OCT 20 1962

Leinsdorf Triumphs With Shostakovitch

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fifth program in the Friday–Saturday series. The program consisted of the Fourth Symphony, in D minor, by Schumann, and the Symphony No. 10, in E minor (first time in these series) by Shostakovitch.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Erich Leinsdorf triumphed with the Symphony No. 10 by Dmitri Shostakovitch in its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. One had not expected that a work from would sound warmer, more vivid in color or intense of passion than a romantic score from the mid-19th Century, like the D minor by Schumann.

Yet this was precisely the situation yesterday, and the dominant reason seemed to be not the essential character of either work but the nature of Ieinsdorf's conducting. Shostaflovitch seemed to stimulate his imagination and release his energies. Schumann, contrariwise, had the effect of constraining Leinsdorf within a mood of quasi-classical austerity and laggard tempi.

Tempo cannot be identical with all conductors in the same work, though it should be approximate. There is a small margin for personal inclination, altogether legitimate, and this margin found Leinsdorf at the slower end. Lebhaft (animated) with him was really lebhaft only in the latter portion of Schumann's finale; the same tempo marking in the first and third movements meant something much slower.

Nor was the conductor susceptible to the emotional ardors of Schumann, though he was most careful to make all as clear as possible, and consistent in style. That he used in part a thinning-out-of-doubled-notes revision made by Gustav Mahler, was of academic interest. The difference between Schuman as Bostonians are accustomed to hear him, was not in the actual sound but in the intellectualized reading.

But the long, involved Shostakovitch No. 10, with its huge orchestra, difficult and virtuosic orchestration, aroused Leinsdorf's powers, and the result was a truly brilliant tapestry of colors and rhythms, accents and sweeping lines. And all, mind you, with a fabulous clarity of balance between the instrumental sections.

Shostakovitch has been quoted low on the symphonic market for some years, at least in this country. The Seventh and Eighth Symphonies were massive, even bloated, and full of war-induced febrilities; the Ninth was expert but lightweight.

To my mind, the Tenth restores Shostakovitch to the eminence established by his Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. The avant garde boys may sneer at its tonal harmonic style, and maintain that Shostakovitch manifests dissonances not much ahead of, let us say, "Le Sacre du Printemps" or "The Scythian Suite." All the same, No. 10 sounds well, it is good listening and a substantial symphonic structure. We shall do well to hear it again.

This writer, hearing the Boston Symphony for the first time since Leinsdorf became its artistic head, discovered what great changes have been wrought in just a few weeks. The ensemble is more precise, the quality of solo work more integrated with the orchestral whole, the sections better blended in a general tone quality which may be described as "international".

The Boston Symphony string tone is still in flux, however, for I suspect that those sections have yet to be transformed into the consistent depth and dark richness which showed only at times yesterday. The addition of a ninth doublebass, together with the conductor's interest in bass quality, have made a much stronger foundation.

The next several months will be of extraordinary interest, as Leinsdorf unfolds the varied aspects of his batonless technic and his interpretive approach to a broad repertory.

Thi coming week the Orchestra will make its first trip of the season to New York and other cities. Richard Burgin will conduct Nov. 2 and 3. His program: Preamble for a Solmiere), Copland; Charles Ives: Symphony No. 2; Boris Blacher: Variations on a Theme by Paganini; Strauss: "Death and Transfiguration."

C5 Monitor Oct 20, 1962

f Shostakovitch at Symph

Leinsdorf Conducts the Tenth Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Perhaps two long Shostakovitch symphonies within 24 hours are a bit more than even the hardiest music lover would care to digest, yet that is what some of us were compelled to do between 8:30 Thursday night and 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. The diet was not unpalatable nor even unpleasant; it was just a lot of heavy eating with little or no dessert.

No less an orchestra than the Leningrad Philharmonic gave us the Shostakovitch Eighth while paying Boston its first visit on Thursday night, and the Boston Symphony is bringing us the Tenth this weekend. One sometimes wonders by what means, diplomatic or otherwise, such interesting junctures occur in the programing of two major orchestras. Yet whether by happenstance or intention, some of us now know a lot more about Shostakovitch in his more recent creative years.

* * *

If the Eighth Symphony of 1943 was a protracted searching of the composer's anguished soul, the Tenth Symphony of a decade later reveals, one gratefully discovers, an improved state of affairs. Not that there were no alarums in Erich Leinsdorf's reading of the Tenth yesterday; there were several explosions to heighten the tension and rouse the heart for battle.

But the prevailing mood of the Tenth is quite different from that of the Eighth. Both, of course, are intensely personal statements by this greatest of living Soviet composers, yet the Tenth finds him considerably more optimistic, at times even reveling in something that could be called joy.

His opening Moderato establishes a lyrical longing, a mood of wondering, seeking, never finding, that is broken by a climax of shrieking havoc, after which the introspection again takes over.

The Allegro abruptly plunges into one of those militaristic action scenes for which Shostakovitch is famous. Here he establishes a good trot, replete with drum rolls, cymbal crashes, trumpet fanfares. Even Mr. Leinsdorf assumed an equestrian posture.

* * *

For the Allegretto the composer gives us a slightly grotesque little waltz, restrained, economical, with lovely horn calls; yet this, too, evolves into something strong, stirring, and strident.

The final Andante opens with a pastoral melody by the oboe; then, as the tempo turns into an Allegro, the music skitters along trippingly, joyously, even with a measure of humor.

Perhaps the Boston Symphony did not bring off the Tenth with the same precision displayed by the Leningrad in the Eighth; yet the Russians have long lived with this music, while the Bostonians were playing it for the first time.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened with an unusually clear traversal of the Schumann Fourth, the clearest within memory. In part he used Gustav Mahler's arrangement, which doubtless did something to eliminate its usual muddy character; but it would seem that the clarity was due mainly to Mr. Leinsdorf's method of handling the orchestra, of displaying certain elements in the light while placing others in the shade.

Music Club Meeting

BOSTON 5

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 20, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93

I. Moderato
II. Allegro
III. Allegretto
IV. Andante; Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 4 • Richmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
OCT 20 1962

Leinsdorf Triumphs With Shostakovitch

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fifth program in the Friday–Saturday series. The program consisted of the Fourth Symphony, in D minor, by Schumann, and the Symphony No. 10, in E minor (first time in these series) by Shostakovitch.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Erich Leinsdorf triumphed with the Symphony No. 10 by Dmitri Shostakovitch in its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. One had not expected that a work from would sound warmer, more vivid in color or intense of passion than a romantic score from the mid-19th Century, like the D minor by Schumann.

Yet this was precisely the situation yesterday, and the dominant reason seemed to be not the essential character of either work but the nature of Leinsdorf's conducting. Shostakovitch seemed to stimulate his imagination and release his energies. Schumann, contrariwise, had the effect of constraining Leinsdorf within a mood of quasi-classical austerity and laggard tempi.

Tempo cannot be identical with all conductors in the same work, though it should be approximate. There is a small margin for personal inclination, altogether legitimate, and this margin found Leinsdorf at the slower end. Lebhaft (animated) with him was really lebhaft only in the latter portion of Schumann's finale; the same tempo marking in the first and third movements meant something much slower.

Nor was the conductor susceptible to the emotional ardors of Schumann, though he was most careful to make all as clear as possible, and consistent in style. That he used in part a thinning-out-of-doubled-notes revision made by Gustav Mahler, was of academic interest. The difference between Schuman a Bostonians are accustomed t hear him, was not in the actua sound but in the intellectu alized reading.

But the long, involved Shostakovitch No. 10, with its huge orchestra, difficult and virtuosic orchestration, aroused Leinsdorf's powers, and the result was a truly brilliant tapestry of colors and rhythms, accents and sweeping lines. And all, mind you, with a fabulous clarity of balance between the instrumental sections.

Shostakovitch has been quoted low on the symphonic market for some years, at least in this country. The Seventh and Eighth Symphonies were massive, even bloated, and full of war-induced febrilities; the Ninth was expert but lightweight.

To my mind, the Tenth restores Shostakovitch to the eminence established by his Fifth and Sixth Symphonies. The avant garde boys may sneer at its tonal harmonic style, and maintain that Shostakovitch manifests dissonances not much ahead of, let us say, "Le Sacre du Printemps" or "The Scythian Suite." All the same, No. 10 sounds well, it is good listening and a substantial symphonic structure. We shall do well to hear it again.

This writer, hearing the Boston Symphony for the first time since Leinsdorf became its artistic head, discovered what great changes have been wrought in just a few weeks. The ensemble is more precise, the quality of solo work more integrated with the orchestral whole, the sections better blended in a general tone quality which may be described as "international".

The Boston Symphony string tone is still in flux, however, for I suspect that those sections have yet to be transformed into the consistent depth and dark richness which showed only at times yesterday. The addition of a ninth doublebass, together with the conductor's interest in bass quality, have made a much stronger foundation.

The next several months will be of extraordinary interest as Leinsdorf unfolds the varied aspects of his batonless technic and his interpretive approach to a broad repertory.

Thi coming week the Orchestra will make its first trip of the season to New York and other cities. Richard Burgin will conduct Novi 2 and 3. His program: Preamble for a Solmiere) Copland; Charles Ives: Symphony No. 2; Boris Blacher: Variations on a Theme by Paganini; Strauss: "Death and Transfiguration."

Shostakovitch at Sympho

Leinsdorf Conducts the Tenth Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Perhaps two long Shostakovitch symphonies within 24 hours are a bit more than even the hardiest music lover would care to digest, yet that is what some of us were compelled to do between 8:30 Thursday night and 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. The diet was not unpalatable nor even unpleasant; it was just a lot of heavy eating with little or no dessert.

No less an orchestra than the Leningrad Philharmonic gave us the Shostakovitch Eighth while paying Boston its first visit on Thursday night, and the Boston Symphony is bringing us the Tenth this weekend. One sometimes wonders by what means, diplomatic or otherwise, such interesting junctures occur in the programing of two major orchestras. Yet whether by happenstance or intention, some of us now know a lot more about Shostakovitch in his more recent creative years.

If the Eighth Symphony of 1943 was a protracted searching of the composer's anguished soul, the Tenth Symphony of a decade later reveals, one gratefully discovers, an improved state of affairs. Not that there were no alarums in Erich Leinsdorf's reading of the Tenth yesterday; there were several explosions to heighten the tension and rouse the heart for battle.

But the prevailing mood of the Tenth is quite different from that of the Eighth. Both, of course, are intensely personal statements by this greatest of living Soviet composers, yet the Tenth finds him considerably more optimistic, at times even reveling in something that could be called joy.

His opening Moderato establishes a lyrical longing, a mood of wondering, seeking, never finding, that is broken by a climax of shrieking havoc, after which the introspection again takes over.

The Allegro abruptly plunges into one of those militaristic action scenes for which Shostakovitch is famous. Here he establishes a good trot, replete with drum rolls, cymbal crashes, trumpet fanfares. Even Mr. Leinsdorf assumed an equestrian posture.

For the Allegretto the composer gives us a slightly grotesque little waltz, restrained, economical, with lovely horn calls; yet this, too, evolves into something strong, stirring, and strident.

The final Andante opens with a pastoral melody by the oboe; then, as the tempo turns into an Allegro, the music skitters along trippingly, joyously, even with a measure of humor.

Perhaps the Boston Symphony did not bring off the Tenth with the same precision displayed by the Leningrad in the Eighth, yet the Russians have long lived with this music, while the Bostonians were playing it for the first time.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened with an unusually clear traversal of the Schumann Fourth, the clearest within memory. In part he used Gustav Mahler's arrangement, which doubtless did something to eliminate its usual muddy character; but it would seem that the clarity was due mainly to Mr. Leinsdorf's method of handling the orchestra, of displaying certain elements in the light while placing others in the shade.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
OCT 1962

With the BSO

Leinsdorf Getting Better Sound

By ALLAN SLY

There is no longer any doubt about it—the Boston Symphony sounds better. Particularly the upper strings are much tidier and more incandescent and at one point last weekend gave Mr. Leinsdorf the most extended decrescendo I have ever heard or expect to hear. There was also a sotto voce passage that defied description. The woodwind ensemble is cleaner, the brass better proportioned. But all of these adjustments have occurred as Mr. Leinsdorf has aimed at the heart of the work in hand. There is no hint of the showcase; one's attention is drawn to the essence of a composition, so much so, in fact, that this listener finds the conductor's individuality still eclipsed rather than revealed.

The admirable Virgil Thomson once wrote on what he called musical caesarism, of which there has always been plenty in New York. Mr. Leinsdorf's tight rein is not to be equated with such a quality. The BSO's new sound is still one of aspiration; so much so that a few mishaps among the chorus of horns can be taken in stride as though one's aim exceed's one's grasp.

The Schumann Symphony No. 4 (really the second in order of composition) sent us scurrying through Mr. Burk's program notes less we lose the advantages of knowing which version of the symphony was being played. It seems Brahms, Weingartner, Mahler and others have been in the act, and Schumann himself had second thoughts. Those BSO subscribers who like to regard a work of art in the round, as it were, had an unusually interesting time sorting out their impressions of a resoundingly beautiful work, conceived while the world was still young and performed as though it still were. An unexpected fringe benefit that accrued was that by laying Schumann's four movements end to end (as he wished) latecomers were excluded until the conclusion. We were thus spared the usual parade between movements—with its inevitable excitation of guilty truculence and sardonic complacency throughout the house. One's heart bleeds for the latecomer but one's artistic conscience is drawn more to the matter at hand, which after all is unhindered, uninterrupted, unhandicapped attention to an evancement experience. For the most part the audience seems to see it this way. It is more attentive than formerly.

The Shostakovitch tenth is another expansive piece of self-revelation. It is as though the composer were reporting a lengthy episode of his emotional life as he confronts his world—a world, no doubt, even less malleable to his desires, less accommodating, than our world is to us. In fact the Soviet creative artist's deportment, vis-a-vis his communicable environment, stems from factors only dimly guessed at by us. This all adds interest, if also some bafflement, as a Shostakovitch work unrolls itself. Is it indeed us he is addressing in the first place? Is the signal getting through to us or do we lack certain emotional clues?

Possibly, while this music carries enormous entertainment validity, its true character and artistic purpose are revealed only to those who steep themselves in its performance. Mr. Leinsdorf and the BSO appear to have assimilated its musical essence. Their lucid and well-paced delivery of it gives us the maximum chance of understanding it. But I am not convinced that we do, ultimately. Perhaps we have partly lost the knack of being simple in our musical pleasures; certainly it is unusual nowadays for a composer to turn his fecund inventiveness to the task of expressing romantically a long personal drama. But Shostakovich does so, with consummate assurance, and last weekend's performance must be saluted as a resoundingly effective one.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
OCT 20 1962

The Symphony

An Enchanting Schumann, An Intense Shostakovitch

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Double S: Schumann and Shostakovitch—yesterday's Symphony offered an enchanting performance of the former, an intense interpretation of the latter's blocky, bombastic, over-weighted and undeniably interesting Tenth Symphony.

If the laurels belonged to Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony, they were equally distributed among the romantic pantheon of Schumann's Fourth. We have not heard such fluent and cohesive Schumann playing in Symphony Hall for many seasons. Once again Erich Leinsdorf proved masterly in the standard repertoire.

Tonal Opulence

The Shostakovitch was another matter, though not because of the reading, which displayed steadily mounting drive and excitement. Compared to Eugene Mravinsky's treatment, available on records, Mr. Leinsdorf's ideas are more dramatic. The bold outline of his Shostakovitch Tenth parallels Dimitropoulos with, it seems to me, an added tonal opulence.

But the Symphony does not sustain itself. The opening movement is diffuse, the second owes much to Prokofieff and to the early Shostakovitch whom one may speak of, confidently, as a different personality from the artistic camp follower of a recent decade.

The third movement, featuring the French and English horns over a thrumming pizzicato accompaniment that suddenly explodes into ensemble savagery, is urgently profound, and the work ends in a brilliantly controlled contrast of rapid strings, a haunting bassoon solo and a triple fortissimo.

Admirable Grasp

This ambitious statement exists on the epic scale, recalling, also, Shostakovitch's devotion to Beethoven as the onlie true begetter of the revolutionary spirit. One encounters superb workmanship throughout; the orchestration declares the composer's admirable grasp of the instrumental capacities. Aside from technical pros and cons, however, the symphony strikes me as exceedingly old-fashioned in its style.

The only prior live performance of my experience (The Conservatory Orchestra, 1960) left an identical reaction. At that time I noted the following comment in this space, a comment this rehearing does not affect:

"The Tenth bears scant relationship to contemporary musical expression. The ponderous harmonies contain vivid moments, and the score achieves spasmodic grandeur. The idiom is broad and fustian with a kind of Victorian eloquence. Time and again one discovers felicities: clarinet against the periodic pulse of strings, fiery Khatchaturian minor modes, sweeping proclamations of brass. Ultimately, though, the relentless heroism becomes a tiring stance. The Tenth is a finely-wrought chunk of Social Realism."

In short, this music is the equivalent of the Soviet ideal as expressed, say, in gigantic Millet-influenced paintings dealing with the visual glories of the collective farm and factory, or in beetling statues of Lenin in a frock coat. Such statement may, indeed, involve elements of technical insight. They are so divorced, nevertheless, from my relation to contemporary life that for all their skill they appear fraudulent.

Inspired Version

Particularly so, when pitted against an inspired version of Schumann's Fourth, which speaks the authentic romantic accent of its age. Schumann's ineptitude as an orchestrator is well-known. It could not be detected in Mr. Leinsdorf's clear, graceful, flowing account.

Many normally obscure lines materialized in his limpid phrasing. The thematic material, which elsewhere too often comes forward as though the conductor were treating the separate compartments of Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, maintained a subtle unity. His interpretation understates.

Mr. Leinsdorf does not need to emphasize the supple melodic contour. He has the supreme gift in the Schumann genre: tact. Here the songful and the tender, the pale but exquisite colorations, possess an unforced dynamic proportion. Here is a definition for that often abused, dim epithet, beauty.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour. Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts of Nov. 2 and 3: Copland's "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion," Ives's Symphony No. 2; Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26, and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," Op. 24.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the fifth program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120 — Schumann
Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93 — Shostakovitch

NORTHAMPTON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
OCT 19 1962

Boston Symphony Plays At Smith On Monday

Telephone reservations may still be made for tickets remaining in the Smith College concert course and chamber music course.

The first concert in the former course will be given Monday at 8.15 p. m. in John M. Greene Hall, Northampton, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its new director, Erich Leinsdorf. Reservations may be picked up on the day of the concert at the John M. Greene box office between 9 and 12, 2 and 5, and immediately preceding the concert from 7 to 8.15.

The symphony of the evening is the new Seventh Symphony by Walter Piston, which won the 1962 Pulitzer Prize. On Monday at 5 in Sage Hall, Room 5, Professor Emeritus Arthur Ware Locke of Smith College will discuss this symphony. The public is invited to attend.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
OCT 17 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT MONDAY

NORTHAMPTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Eric Leinsdorf will open the concert course at Smith College with a performance in John M. Green Hall Monday, the 22d at 8.15.

The program will consist of the Piston Seventh Symphony (first Northampton performance), the Bartok Concerto for orchestra, the Brahms Haydn Variations and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 13,067
OCT 23 1962

New Symphony Conductor Hailed In Concert Here

No better tribute could have been paid to the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, appearing at John M. Greene Hall last evening, than the hushed silence occurring at the finish of every number. Even the thunderous applause from a captivated audience at the close of the program was not as significant of its complete approval for Mr. Leinsdorf's new, and so far, eminently successful association with the incomparable Boston Symphony.

It seemed that each individual, unusually attentive, was aware of the keynote of the evening, listening, in its fullest sense. Not only was this engendered by their critical interest in the orchestra's newest director, but by that director himself. One couldn't watch Mr. Leinsdorf without being drawn into the magic circle of aural sensitivity he creates with each composer's work, unfolding new dimensions in familiar writings.

Conducting without a baton, Mr. Leinsdorf's directions were vivid and evocative, his head moving significantly, independent of his hands, anticipating every entrance and nuance, sometimes the leading emphasis was on the main theme, and at others one felt the fine drawing and spelling out of sub themes, accompaniment and tonal coloring.

The program started with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, with second desk players taking the wind parts, ably, though a bit uncertainly in spots, each variation concisely finished. Debussy's lovely Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," inspired by Stephen Mallarme's pastoral poem of the same name, was performed with breath-taking quality by the orchestra and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's matchless flute.

Commissioned by the Philadelphia Orchestra, awarded a Pulitzer Prize in music, in 1962, Walter Piston's unusually orchestrated Seventh Symphony brought the program's first half to a resounding close. Another instance of breath-taking beauty was the second movement, an adagio pastorale.

In grand contrast to the Piston was the final work, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, articulate, exciting and impressive following the composer's words, "The general mood of the work represents, apart from the jesting second movement, a gradual transition from the sterness of the first movement and the lugubrious death song of the third, to the life assertion of the last."

Sharing the stupendous applause with the wind and brass choirs, and finally the whole orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf, without the traditional bows, gave himself to the audience with modest and warm pleasure. He has said that one of the important facts in his mind, bringing him to Boston was that he didn't have to be a "bricklayer." "I don't have to build," he said.

MideBB.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
OCT 23 1962

Hub Orchestra in 'Hamp Scores Under Leinsdorf

By R. C. HAMMERICH

NORTHAMPTON—One of the questions holding the interest of music lovers this season is what does the Boston Symphony Orchestra sound like with its new director, Erich Leinsdorf, at the tiller?

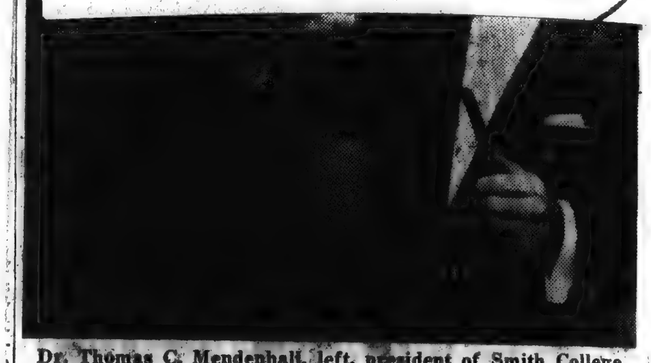
Called Magnificent

Well, in John M. Greene Hall Monday night for the first concert in the Smith College Series it sounded magnificent.

Leinsdorf has a businesslike, no-nonsense manner. Without music and without a baton Monday night he drew a clean precision from the musicians which allowed the middle voices, the subordinate tones and melodies, to be heard clearly.

This year, its 82d, the orchestra shows a few personnel changes. There is a new violin player, a new cello and two new bass players. Also, Joseph Silverstein has moved up to become concertmaster replacing Richard Burgin, who retains his post as associate conductor. Burgin recently was appointed

See HUB ORCHESTRA Page Seven



Dr. Thomas C. Mendenhall, left, president of Smith College, greets Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, before Monday night's concert in John M. Greene Hall, Northampton, inaugurating the annual Smith Concert Series. It was Leinsdorf's first appearance in Western Massachusetts since he took over the orchestra from the retiring Dr. Charles Munch.

Hub Orchestra

Continued From Page 1

conductor of the Boston University Orchestra, also.

Aside from Leinsdorf's first appearance in Western Massachusetts with the orchestra, the concert offered another first in this area, a performance of Walter Piston's "Seventh Symphony."

Wins Pulitzer Prize

This symphony was commissioned by the Philadelphia Orchestra, has won the 1962 Pulitzer Prize and was first performed in Philadelphia Feb. 10. Monday night it received its sixth performance by the Boston Orchestra.

It is an impressive work of dense orchestration, inner subtleties and only slight hints of old conventionality.

There are no strong contrasts such as appear in the Bartok concerto which came after intermission.

Aside from modern dissonance, with which it abounds, one of its more striking attributes is a rhythmic imbalance which has its own regular pattern, an offbeat which is off in the same way repeatedly.

Urbane, Polished

Among many notable passages is a quiet one late in the third movement. It is not of structural importance, but it makes entertaining use of a cymbal, a wood block, a tambourine and a Chinese gong. Monday night it was delicate and delightful.

Piston's music is urbane and polished. He likes sophisticated fugues and syncopation.

The program opened with Brahm's "Variations On a Theme of Haydn," played elegantly and meticulously.

There are signs that the name of this piece will be changed to "Variations On the St. Anthony Chorale," because recent discoveries by musicologists indicate that the theme doesn't come from Haydn but from one of his pupils, probably Ignaz Playel.

Wonderful Music

Either way, Brahms made it wonderful music.

Debussy's prelude to Mallarme's poem, "Afternoon of a Faun," which followed the Brahms, was his first important work, and it established his reputation in the music world.

The faun is a mythological goat. He wakes up in the woods and tries to remember whether the three lovely nymphs who visited him were real or a dream. But it is a nice, warm afternoon, so he goes back to sleep.

Debussy's music recreates the atmosphere of the glen with fluid, rhapsodic, quiet sounds that seem to have no definiteness, on rhythm. They are celestial, and, at the end, they just dissolve in silence.

Bartok's "concerto for orchestra," which followed intermission, was commissioned for the Boston Symphony by Serge Koussevitsky for $1000 when Bartok was destitute and ill with leukemia in a New York hospital.

The commission gave him enough courage to get out of bed and go to work, but in 1943 it was his last completed work. He died two years later.

It is full of violent and primitive harmony and irregular rhythms, complex chords in clusters such as might be made by striking the keyboard with a flat hand.

But it shows the hope the commission gave him. The atmosphere moves almost imperceptibly from the tragic to a sense of optimism.

The orchestra climbed aboard busses after the concert to go to New Haven for a performance tonight. Wednesday it plays in Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center in New York, Thursday in Brooklyn and Friday again in Philharmonic Hall.

NORTHAMPTON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
OCT 19 1962

Boston Symphony Plays At Smith On Monday

Telephone reservations may still be made for tickets remaining in the Smith College concert course and chamber music course.

The first concert in the former course will be given Monday at 8.15 p. m. in John M. Greene Hall, Northampton, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its new director, Erich Leinsdorf. Reservations may be picked up on the day of the concert at the John M. Greene box office between 9 and 12, 2 and 5, and immediately preceding the concert from 7 to 8.15.

The symphony of the evening is the new Seventh Symphony by Walter Piston, which won the 1962 Pulitzer Prize. On Monday at 5 in Sage Hall, Room 5, Professor Emeritus Arthur Ware Locke of Smith College will discuss this symphony. The public is invited to attend.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
OCT 17 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT MONDAY

NORTHAMPTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Eric Leinsdorf will open the concert course at Smith College with a performance in John M. Green Hall Monday, the 22d at 8.15.

The program will consist of the Piston Seventh Symphony (first Northampton performance), the Bartok Concerto for orchestra, the Brahms Haydn Variations and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

Excellent Service
Imagine a complete LUNCH 95¢
700 State St.
RE 3-4121
Complete Dinners
Lunch
Van Horn
185 Old Bridge
Special Rates for Parties MAKE YOUR FOR CHRISTMAS
Music

Conductor Greeted

Dr. Thomas C. Mendenhall, left, president of Smith College, greets Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, before Monday night's concert in John M. Greene Hall, Northampton, inaugurating the annual Smith Concert Series. It was Leinsdorf's first appearance in Western Massachusetts since he took over the orchestra from the retiring Dr. Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
OCT 23 1962

New Symphony Conductor Hailed In Concert Here

No better tribute could have been paid to the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, appearing at John M. Greene Hall last evening, than the hushed silence occurring at the finish of every number. Even the thunderous applause from a captivated audience at the close of the program was not as significant of its complete approval for Mr. Leinsdorf's new, and so far, eminently successful association with the incomparable Boston Symphony.

It seemed that each individual, unusually attentive, was aware of the keynote of the evening, listening, in its fullest sense. Not only was this engendered by their critical interest in the orchestra's newest d[illegible] but by that director himself. One couldn't watch Mr. Leinsdorf without being drawn into the magic circle of aural sensitivity he creates with each composer's work, unfolding new dimensions in familiar writings.

Conducting without a baton, Mr. Leinsdorf's directions were vivid and evocative, his head moving significantly, independent of his hands, anticipating every entrance and nuance, sometimes the leading emphasis was on the main theme, and at others one felt the fine drawing and spelling out of sub themes, accompaniment and tonal coloring.

The program started with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, with second desk players taking the wind parts ably, though a bit uncertainly in spots, each variation concisely finished. Debussy's lovely Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," inspired by Stephen Mallarme's pastoral poem of the same name, was performed with breath-taking quality by the orchestra and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's matchless flute.

Commissioned by the Philadelphia Orchestra, awarded a Pulitzer Prize in music, in 1962, Walter Piston's unusually orchestrated Seventh Symphony brought the program's first half to a resounding close. Another instance of breath-taking beauty was the second movement, an adagio pastorale.

In grand contrast to the Piston was the final work, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, articulate, exciting and impressive following the composer's words, "The general mood of the work represents, apart from the jesting second movement, a gradual transition from the sterness of the first movement and the lugubrious death song of the third, to the life assertion of the last."

Sharing the stupendous applause with the wind and brass choirs, and finally the whole orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf, without the traditional bows, gave himself to the audience with modest and warm pleasure. He has said that one of the important facts in his mind, bringing him to Boston was that he didn't have to be a "bricklayer," "I don't have to build," he said.

MideBB.

Hub Orchestra

Continued From Page 1

conductor of the Boston University Orchestra, also.

Aside from Leinsdorf's first appearance in Western Massachusetts with the orchestra, the concert offered another first in this area, a performance of Walter Piston's "Seventh Symphony."

Wins Pulitzer Prize

This symphony was commissioned by the Philadelphia Orchestra, has won the 1962 Pulitzer Prize and was first performed in Philadelphia Feb. 10. Monday night it received its sixth performance by the Boston Orchestra.

It is an impressive work of dense orchestration, inner subtleties and only slight hints of old conventionality.

There are no strong contrasts such as appear in the Bartok concerto which came after intermission.

Aside from modern dissonance, with which it abounds, one of its more striking attributes is a rhythmic imbalance which has its own regular pattern, an offbeat which is off in the same way repeatedly.

Urbane, Polished

Among many notable passages is a quiet one late in the third movement. It is not of structural importance, but it makes entertaining use of a cymbal, a wood block, a tambourine and a Chinese gong. Monday night it was delicate and delightful.

Piston's music is urbane and polished. He likes sophisticated fugues and syncopation.

The program opened with Brahm's "Variations On a Theme of Haydn," played elegantly and meticulously.

There are signs that the name of this piece will be changed to "Variations On the St. Anthony Chorale," because recent discoveries by musicologists indicate that the theme doesn't come from Haydn but from one of his pupils, probably Ignaz Playel.

Wonderful Music

Either way, Brahms made it wonderful music.

Debussy's prelude to Mallarme's poem "Afternoon of a Faun," which followed the Brahms, was his first important work, and it established his reputation in the music world.

The faun is a mythological goat. He wakes up in the woods and tries to remember whether the three lovely nymphs who visited him were real or a dream. But it is a nice, warm afternoon, so he goes back to sleep.

Debussy's music recreates the atmosphere of the glen with fluid, rhapsodic, quiet sounds that seem to have no definiteness, on rhythm. They are celestial, and, at the end, they just dissolve in silence.

Bartok's "concerto for orchestra," which followed intermission, was commissioned for the Boston Symphony by Serge Koussevitsky for $1000 when Bartok was destitute and ill with leukemia in a New York hospital.

The commission gave him enough courage to get out of bed and go to work, but in 1943 it was his last completed work. He died two years later.

It is full of violent and primitive harmony and irregular rhythms, complex chords in clusters such as might be made by striking the keyboard with a flat hand.

But it shows the hope the commission gave him. The atmosphere moves almost imperceptibly from the tragic to a sense of optimism.

The orchestra climbed aboard busses after the concert to go to New Haven for a performance tonight. Wednesday it plays in Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center in New York, Thursday in Brooklyn and Friday again in Philharmonic Hall.

NEW YORK TOUR. 1

NEW HAVEN I

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244
OCT 23 1962

Boston Symphony At Woolsey Hall In Concert Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make the first of its two annual seasonal appearances here tonight in Woolsey Hall. The event will be the second in the current Woolsey Hall series under the auspices of the Yale School of Music.

Erich Leinsdorf, who has succeeded Charles Munch as music director of the famed 110-piece symphonic body, will be on the podium for his first appearance on the local concert platform.

Tonight's program will open with Bach's Sinfonia and Chorale, Cantata 18, followed by Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a. Next will be heard Piston's Symphony 7, and, after intermission, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra will conclude the musical offering.

The second visit of the Boston Symphony here this season will be on Jan. 8. Other events on the current sold-out Woolsey series schedule are Van Cliburn, the Robert Shaw Chorale, Netherlands Chamber Orchestra and Isaac Stern.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,412
OCT 24 1962

Music In Review

New Boston Conductor Welcomed At Woolsey

New Haven symphony enthusiasts gave a long, warm welcome to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, last night in Woolsey Hall, in the orchestra's first appearance here in many years without Charles Munch.

Leinsdorf comes to the Boston after a distinguished career in his native Austria and with many fine orchestras and opera companies in this country and abroad. His technique is that of the perfectionist and his work last night thrilled his audience.

He opened the conert in a new way, with only a small number of the members required for Bach's beautiful and mystical Cantata, inspired by the Book of Isaiah. Brahms' interesting Variations on the Theme of Haydn, Op. 56A, followed the Bach work, with the full orchestra interpreting the wide range of moods in masterful fashion and bringing the work to a glorious and dramatic climax.

Leinsdorf uses no baton but his expressive hands bespeak an eloquence that inspires his men to the highest achievement. His reading of the Brahms was emotional but with the artist's regard for technical perfection.

Harvard's Walter Piston was represented by his very American Symphony No. 7, in direct musical contrast to the dramatic Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok, which ended the fine concert.

In the Bartok work Leinsdorf gave rich color to the curious moods and rhythms which enrich the concerto. At its conlcusion he insisted that each choir or group which emphasized certain movements of the concerto, acknowledge the applause of the audience.

There were many cries of "bravo" and it could be said that it was an enthusiastic welcome for the members of the orchestra as well as a warm greeting to the new conductor.

F.R.J.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244
OCT 24 1962

LEINSDORF DEBUT WITH BOSTONIANS WELL RECEIVED

The Boston Symphony presented its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, to a Woolsey Hall audience Tuesday evening. So it was that this second event of the Woolsey series marked the beginning of another era in the history of the orchestra's concerts here. And judging from the way listeners applauded at the close of the program, they are quite pleased with the successor to Charles Munch.

Leinsdorf made a most impressive debut here, to say the least. First, off, he uses neither scores nor a baton. His conducting mannerisms display no taint of showmanship and while he has a distinct flair and magnetism on the podium, his sole concern is with the musicians and the performance. His hands perform wonders in every aspect of his important role; his beat is sure, his cues are unmistakable, and he molds the musical substance and line with all the skill of a master sculptor.

Of course, conducting without score is becoming "fashionable" these days and hardly worth mentioning in regard to the standard repertory. But the situation is a bit different here. Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, one of the works in this program, received its premiere only last February. Yet Leinsdorf conducted this music as though he had known it for many years. This feat was indeed a rarity!

The Piston work in this first increased stature in the minds of many, particularly those who are familiar with his earlier music. And this, despite the fact that the new symphony is in an advanced harmonic idiom for the composer though some conservative by avant guarde standards. In characteristic style, the work exudes craftsmanship, thematic ingenuity, imaginative development, and dramatic perception. The symphony is superbly orchestrated throughout, equally compelling in the exciting rhythms and recurring sonorous waves of the first and third movements and in the contrasting Adagio pastorale.

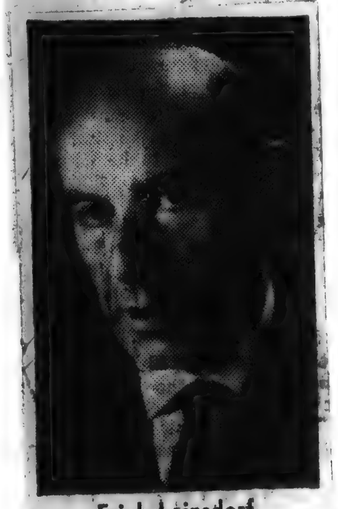
Three "B's" (Bach, Brahms, Bartok) emerged in highly musical fashion. The opening Bach Sinfonia and Chorale (from Cantata No. 18) played by "the chamber ensemble" provided beautifully blended string and wind tones. The full orchestra followed with the Brahms Variations on a Theme of Haydn and it was here that the ensemble's "new look" was delightfully apparent. This listener has never heard a performance of such tonal charm and one in which the smallest details in nuance, phrasing, and dynamics had been worked out with infinite and loving care.

The concluding Bartok Concerto for Orchestra again reminded one of the kind of individual and collective virtuosity found in the Piston performance. It would seem that the Boston musicians are going all out for their new conductor and that he's doing the same for them—and for us!

G. E. A.

NEW YORK

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
NOV 24 1962



Erich Leinsdorf

Next Wednesday evening the Boston Symphony orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, musical director, will play at Philharmonic hall, Lincoln Center, New York. Mr. Leinsdorf as well as the members of the celebrated orchestra are more than just happy or satisfied at being part of the musical medium that is making the newly established center an already history-making spot.

The orchestra will play in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Thursday night and on Friday will return to Lincoln Center. Soloist for these concerts will be Geza Anda, pianist. The next Boston concert is scheduled for Monday evening, Dec. 3, at which time Geza Anda will again be the soloist.

Herald NEW YORK Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
OCT 28 1962

Shostakovitch Is Omitted By Bostonians (No Politics)

By Francis D. Perkins

Dmitri Shostakovitch's 10th Symphony had been originally announced for the second half of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Friday night concert in Philharmonic Hall, but the admirable musicians under Erich Leinsdorf's direction played Gustav Mahler's First Symphony instead. This change, however, had nothing to do with the current crisis. Mr. Leinsdorf, consulted during the intermission, explained that one of the Bostonians' series of five New York concerts originally included symphonies by Prokofiev and Shostakovitch and the other symphonies by Mahler and Bruckner, which meant an excess of modern Russian music in one case and Austrian late romantic music in the other. The Shostakovitch work will be played here later this season.

There was, however, music by a noted Russian born composer now of American citizenship, Igor Stravinsky's "Symphonie de Psaumes" in which the choristers were Boston's Chorus Pro Music, which also sang in the chorale which closed the opening sinfonia of Bach's Cantata No. 18, "Gleich wie der Regen."

Throughout the concert, the orchestra's playing was impressive under its new conductor's persuasive leadership; the singers, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson, maintained a high vocal standard in discerning interpretations both in the Bach chorale and the Stravinsky work, which was dedicated to this orchestra on the occasion of its 50th anniversary in 1930. Stravinsky projects the emotions as well as the words of the three psalms of his choice with communicative conviction, now outspokenly and now with reflective subtlety, and these moods were fully reflected. The impression of quiet ecstasy at the close seemed less apparent than when the reviewer first heard it, but this did not seem to be owing to this laudably balanced, clearly wrought and convincing performance.

In the Bach work the Bostonians combined dignity with clearness of detail; the string tone in the opening section was firmly sonorous but not overly opulent. In what there was time to hear of the Mahler symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation suggested that he is on terms of full understanding with this music; the exuberance of the first two movements was set forth with vividness and high color, but the performance was not overblown or burdened with exaggerated changes of pace. The concert as a whole suggested that Mr. Leinsdorf's regime should be a notable chapter in the Boston Symphony's history.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
OCT 25 1962

ON THE MUSIC BEAT

4 Big Events In One Night

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHAT A NIGHT on the music beat! Four major events, each important in its own way.

Having decided to look in on them all, I started with "Fledermaus" at the Met, arrived in time for the first part of the Boston Symphony's program in Philharmonic Hall, caught the Shostakovich Eighth Symphony played by the Leningrad Philharmonic in Carnegie Hall, tarried a moment at the City Opera's performance of "The Wings of the Dove" at City Center, and reached the Met for the last act.

Quite an evening, not to be repeated soon again, I hope!

Part of the motive for carrying through this itinerary was to check the drawing power of each attraction. Three full-houses and one good-sized audience indicated that musical life in the big city is certainly thriving.

Erich Leinsdorf saw to it that the Boston Symphony started its regular Wednesday concerts on a contemporary note.

He opened with Piston's Symphony No. 7, played Schumann's Symphony No. 4, then ended with Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

In all probability the modern works fared best, for the Schumann bogged down with slow tempos. Coming to life only in the final movement, it suffered from too much "langsam."

Piston Hallmark

The European "tradition" for deliberate pacing is suspect today in this country. Last night it robbed Schumann of the very essence of his music as we have come to know it. Even the finale failed to give this listener the lift it usually does.

Piston was present to hear his work. It was notably played because the craftsmanship of both composer and conductor coincided so neatly. Its well-bred solidity reflects the conservative tonalism which is the hallmark of Piston's music.

Opportunities to hear the Shostakovich are rare. That last night given by the Leningrad Philharmonic may have been unique: Eugen Mravinsky, to whom it is dedicated, conducted the performance. Now almost 20 years old, it does not impress as even comparable to the Seventh heard recently.

Shostakovich may have visualized the future as beautiful, but to these ears he has not conveyed his feelings convincingly.

Many pages sound like a workout just as though he had suddenly become fascinated with ostinatos.

Other pages, in spite of their lyricism, do not take flight but suggest somber meanings. Incidentally Leinsdorf readers again excelled in virtuoso playing.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
OCT 28 1962

Erich Leinsdorf Leads The Boston Symphony

By JAY S. HARRISON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, performing Friday night at Philharmonic Hall under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, offered a fascinating demonstration of the virtues and follies of what is generally called "interpretation."

The first part of the program consisted of excerpts from Bach's Cantata No. 18 and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms, works that are pure, clear, devout and noble. They require no interpreting at all, and actually balk when their natural expressivity is molested. Unfortunately, Leinsdorf was not content to play the notes as they were set down by their authors. For reasons unknown, he insisted on devising a rendition, by which is meant that he attempted to make the music his own property rather than acknowledging that it was lent to him by its composers.

As a result, the performances told us more about Leinsdorf than they did about either Bach or Stravinsky. In the case of the former, the Cantata emerged as a pulpy and ill-defined pretense to devotion. And in the case of Stravinsky, The Psalm Symphony, written expressly for the Boston Symphony in 1930, was misread altogether.

Stravinsky's Advice

It has ever been Stravinsky's claim—and a just one it is, too—that no man has a right to fiddle, tamper or experiment with his scores. The notes are there, he has said repeatedly, so play them for what they are. Considering the care that goes into a Stravinsky piece, this advice seems both sound and mandatory.

But Leinsdorf, by virtue of his curious musical phraseology and eccentric rhythmic tendencies, turned the number into a shell of itself, made it hollow, false and built of balsam. It is, in actuality, none of these things; indeed, The Symphony of Psalms is one of the great works of our time.

Sensational Mahler

The Mahler First Symphony is not, and yet Leinsdorf interpreted it in such a fashion as to make one believe he was in the presence of a genius, lofty and grand. In point of fact, the Mahler First does need the ministrations of a guiding hand, for without it a conductor is likely to find at his back a dozing audience biting its fingernails in its sleep. But the brilliance, the vigor, the sheer overflow of emotion that marked Leinsdorf's performance was a subject of wonder.

At the work's conclusion the listeners rose out of their seats, as pulled by a massive magnet, to acclaim what was really an incredible reading by a maestro whose way with the romantic repertoire may very well make history.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
OCT 27 1962

LEINSDORF LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Distinctive Touch Shown in Philharmonic Hall Concert

There was nostalgia in the air, as well as promise, as Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony completed their first pair of New York concerts at Philharmonic Hall last night.

Nostalgia, because Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra began with some Bach played in an old-fashioned manner than one had assumed had disappeared from the concert scene. Many, many strings (including the full double bass section), four flutes and all the rest thundered forth the sinfonia from the Cantata No. 18, and then were joined by the full strength of the Chorus Pro Musica in the final chorale.

More respect for Bach's proportions, and for the integrity of his phrasing, is usually shown by even the largest symphony orchestras these days. But time seems to have stopped in Boston.

But then came some fine music-making. Orchestra and chorus joined in a beautifully proportionated, reverent performance of Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." Here there was promise, as once again Mr. Leinsdorf demonstrated what he is doing to the Boston orchestra; refining and clarifying its sound, restoring to it the power to honor line as well as mass. Fine points of Stravinsky's inventive scoring stood out in etched detail; quietly, the work took on sweep and power.

Came the intermission, and then Mahler's First Symphony. This, too, got a fine, respectful performance, unhurried, massive and full of subtle glints. Passages that other conductors choose to vulgarize were brilliant and full, but always in taste.

Mr. Leinsdorf showed at the very outset that he was in no hurry with the work. He even honored the optional repeat in the first movement. The trio in the scherzo was slowed down almost to motionlessness, taking on a lovely Viennese charm.

The third movement was less happy. Here, if any place, a touch of vulgarity is needed. The oboes and E flat clarinet Not so this time; they good manners were almost oppressive.

But it was an interesting performance, and, this last point aside, an eloquent one. A superior mind was obviously at work on this sprawling but lovable work, and some extremely superior playing honored the workings of that mind.

ALAN RICH.

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
OCT 27 1962 Byfield

Music.

Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony At Philharmonic Hall

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

An electrifying performance of Mahler's First Symphony by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought loud applause and cheers from a huge throng at Philharmonic Hall last night.

With all due respect to the memory of Bruno Walter and Dimitri Mitropoulos — and to their many successors — I must confess I never heard a better interpretation of this great score.

And, frankly, I never once worried about the acoustics last night. This symphony has passages of shattering power and passages of hushed intimacy. All came through perfectly. The hall was a noble setting for Mahler.

So much for the surroundings and the acoustics. For me the performance was not only Leinsdorf's most compelling to date, bar none, but one of the peaks of recent Boston Symphony history.

Benefit from Chorus

Before continuing with Mahler, let's examine two other fine performances at last night's concert—of Bach's Cantata No. 18, for orchestra and chorus, and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," for the same combination.

Each benefited enormously from the exalted singing of the Chorus Pro Musica. Though crowded in one corner of the stage, the group intoned phrases with a luminous ease reflecting prime training.

In both works Leinsdorf applied the scholarly mastery that is so obviously his, and yet that is always at the command of a profound emotional and esthetic conviction.

The Stravinsky score shaped up in a mighty thrust of counterpoint and rhythm. Wherever he starts, in the Bible, in Greek tragedy, among the myths, Stravinsky always gets his motor going briskly.

Biography of a Soul

But even this "Symphony of Psalms," compact dynamo that it is, was small stuff beside the Mahler symphony that followed after intermission. There, in four movements, we seemed to hear the biography of a soul in search of itself.

Is there anything so terrifying in the concert hall as the cleavage that slashes spirit and sound between the third and fourth movements? This is the closest thing to hell in music. What follows is surely a glimpse of salvation.

Of much the same background as Mahler, Leinsdorf brought a rich heritage of spiritual and artistic kinship to his reading. Every shade of timing and dynamics, of note and phrase, packed meaning—for him and for us.

That anyone could still reject Mahler after last night's performance seemed inconceivable. The atmosphere at the end was one of triumph and gratitude—gratitude to a great conductor and orchestra for a great revelation.

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
OCT 25 1962 Byfield

BOSTON SYMPHONY

PHILHARMONIC HALL
Lincoln Center
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, conductor: Erich Leinsdorf. The program:
Symphony No. 7.....Piston
Symphony No. 4.....Schumann
Concerto for Orchestra.....Bartok

By Paul Henry Lang

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony demonstrated last night how a program can be made to serve both public interest and the musical palate. Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony and Schumann's Fourth were spelled by Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra—a good program offering styles that are sufficiently varied to keep one's interest alive throughout the evening.

Mr. Piston's fine symphony was played not just as a gesture towards a native colleague, but with complete devotion. Notably the elegiac and meditative Adagio was very attractive, the strings pouring out the long melodic line while the winds carried on an animated conversation, then all of them uniting in powerful assertive passages. The brilliant finale showed the magnificent versatility of this great orchestra. Mr. Piston's orchestral writing is not paper music; it is at once imaginative and idiomatic. His demands on the orchestra are considerable but always feasible and grateful. Mr. Leinsdorf and his men satisfied the composer's wishes handsomely, but some of the remarkable woodwind playing was lost in the hall.

Schumann was not a symphonist either by instinct or by inclination, but the Beethovian legacy was accepted by the un-symphonic romantics as mandatory, and, with the exception of Chopin, they all wrote symphonies. Schumann's Fourth has beautiful melodies but they come as a relief from the insufficiency of the symphonic process, though at times they serve to interpret the character and thought of a great artist.

Mr. Leinsdorf approached his task with considerable technical skill. All the woodwinds were doubled—but with discrimination—thus permitting the conductor to unravel some of the more strained thematic ruminations; he was less successful with some of the other essentials of this style.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor.

With the exception of the finale all the tempos were slow, the Romanza in particular sounding labored and mannered. The oboe and violin solos suffered from this static concept; what we heard in the trio were groups of triplets, not a flowing melody. Mr. Leinsdorf has a rather fussy way with final cadences—every note is capitalized. On the other hand, both the introduction to the first and the last movement was beautifully planned and executed.

The Bartok concerto has become one of the most popular pieces of the modern repertory. In it Bartok allowed his wit and gift for sharp musical epigrams to play so dazzingly that the results please even those who are not attuned to 20th century music. Yet this is indeed 20th century music, of our own age, an art clear and purposeful that rejects the twilight luxury of mysteriousness that cannot be explained.

Mr. Leinsdorf and his men captured with sympathy and sensitiveness not only what Bartok has achieved, but also the manner in which it has been achieved, displaying brilliant yet unostentatious virtuosity. The orchestra was luminous; the ensemble work precise, the pianos delectable, and the concertizing groups of instruments beautifully in accord with one another.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
OCT 25 1962 Byfield

Music: Leinsdorf and the Boston

Piston, Schumann and Bartok Works Given

EACH of the orchestras that played for the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in its first week had its own season to open. Last night it was the turn of the Boston Symphony, and with the concert it gave at Philharmonic Hall it began its 77th New York season.

Erich Leinsdorf, the new musical director, was on the podium, and the program, having no soloist, let all the spotlight shine on him. He showed he was fully able to support such exposure. It was a concert of exceptional interest.

Erich Leinsdorf

For one thing, there was the new sound of the orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, Mr. Leinsdorf's predecessors, were always very fervid in leading the Boston and their style was often driving. Fr. Leinsdorf, on the other hand, tends in slower passages to let sound arise out of silence and to shape it as it emerges. When speed and tension are needed, he achieves them by an almost whiplash precision of movement.

It is obvious, too, that clarity is one of his musical ideals. This includes clarity of texture, clarity of detail, clarity of rhythmn and clarity in the exposure of architectural structure. As a result, the orchestra played with a tonal transparency that was new.

Mr. Leinsdorf's approach also allows individual performers to shine at the same time as it enables massed sections to display their ensemble virtuosity. Because of these factors all three of last night's pieces came off exceedingly well.

The Schumann Fourth Symphony and the Bartók Concerto for Orchestra benefited particularly from the Leinsdorfian approach. And each benefited in a different way.

Schumann has often been criticized as a turgid orchestrator, and in some cases he may be. But this time Mr. Leinsdorf showed that the Fourth Symphony can be beautifully clear. As it unfolded under his sure direction one followed all the lines—in fact, they were so clear that one often rejoiced at how many were running simultaneously. Yet the performance also had pulsing strength and a warm undercurrent of romanticism.

The Bartók Concerto was designed, as its title suggests, to let each instrument have a chance to show the sort of skill expected of a soloist. As Mr. Leinsdorf led it, each instrument or choir had a chance to display such virtuosity. This was because there was no excessive hurrying and the differing dynamic levels were always well adjusted to let each voice be heard through the other.

The other work was Walter Piston's attractive Symphony No. 7, which was commissioned and introduced a little more than a year ago by the Philadelphia Orchestra. It, too, received a beautiful performance, and because of Mr. Leinsdorf's confident grasp, it sounded almost like a classic work that had been long in the repertory.

The composer was in the audience, and he came to the stage to acknowledge the applause. After the Schuman Symphony the members of the orchestra joined the audience in applauding Mr. Leinsdorf. In fact, it was a happy evening all around, for many of the subscribers also greeted each other like old friends.

ROSS PARMENTER.

YORK TIMES, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1962

LEINSDORF LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Distinctive Touch Shown in Philharmonic Hall Concert

There was nostalgia in the air, as well as promise, as Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony completed their first pair of New York concerts at Philharmonic Hall last night.

Nostalgia, because Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra began with some Bach played in an old-fashioned manner that one had assumed had disappeared from the concert scene. Many, many strings (including the full double bass section), four flutes and all the rest thundered forth the sinfonia from the Cantata No. 18, and then were joined by the full strength of the Chorus Pro Musica in the final chorale.

More respect for Bach's proportions, and for the integrity of his phrasing, is usually shown by even the largest symphony orchestras these days. But time seems to have stopped in Boston.

But then came some fine music-making. Orchestra and chorus joined in a beautifully proportioned, reverent performance of Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." Here there was promise, as once again Mr. Leinsdorf demonstrated what he is doing to the Boston orchestra: refining and clarifying its sound, restoring to it the power to honor line as well as mass. Fine points of Stravinsky's inventive scoring stood out in etched detail; quietly the work took on sweep and power.

Came the intermission, and then Mahler's First Symphony. This, too, got a fine, respectful performance, unhurried, massive and full of subtle glints. Passages that other conductors choose to vulgarize were brilliant and full, but always in taste.

Mr. Leinsdorf showed at the very outset that he was in no hurry with the work. He even honored the optional repeat in the first movement. The trio in the scherzo was slowed down almost to motionlessness, taking on a lovely Viennese charm.

The third movement was less happy. Here, if any place, a touch of vulgarity is needed. The oboes and E flat clarinet should shriek like fishwives. Not so this time; they good manners were almost oppressive.

But it was an interesting performance, and, this last point aside, an eloquent one. A superior mind was obviously at work on this sprawling but lovable work, and some extremely superior playing honored the workings of that mind.

ALAN RICH.

Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

OCT 25 1962

Prokofieff's 'War And Peace'

Erich Leinsdorf rehearses Boston Symphony Orchestra for its 75th consecutive season at Brooklyn Academy of Music. Program includes overture to Prokofieff's opera, "War and Peace," Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Mahler's First Symphony at opening concert Thursday

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900

OCT 18 1962

'The Boston' Is Back-- With a New Maestro

'The Boston' is back.

In what has become an annual institution for music lovers on Brooklyn Heights, the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Thursday will open its 75th season of Brooklyn concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

The orchestra has a new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, who replaced Charles Munch at the end of last season.

Two seasons ago Mr. Leinsdorf appeared here as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony during a season of guest engagements. It was his work at this performance, among others that season, that impressed the orchestra's trustees to the point that he was chosen to replace Mr. Munch when the latter retired after 12 years as head of the orchestra.

While he was in his early twenties, Mr. Leinsdorf assisted Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salsburg Festivals, from 1934 to 1938.

He came to the Metropolitan Opera in 1937 as an assistant conductor. Within two years he was appointed chief conductor of German operas.

In 1941 he became music director of the Cleveland Orchestra. After serving in the United States Army during the war, he was named music director of the Rochester Philharmonic. He later left that post to rejoin the "Met" and to take on guest conducting assignments.

The Boston Symphony will appear at the Academy five times this season. Next Thursday's program, which begins at 8:30 P.M., will consist of Prokofiev's overture to his opera "War and Peace," which is based on the Tolstoy novel; "Variations on a Theme by Haydn," by Brahms; and Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D.

The program was changed earlier this week. As originally announced, it included pieces by Bach, Schumann and Shostakovich.

Erich Leinsdorf

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

OCT 29 1962

Society
Guy Pierrepont Says:

A capacity crowd turned out for the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music now in its eighty second season.

Everyone who is anyone filled the auditorium to capacity. All the boxes were occupied and we noticed the following members of the smart set. Mr. and Mrs. Elias J. Audi, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Holzschuler Jr., the Alfred H. Eversons, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Faison, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Borman, Mr. Gus Vasiliadis, and his wife, Teresa, a provisional member of the Junior League, "Bitsy" McMahon with her mother, Mrs. John Shaw McMahon.

Also the newlywed Dino Veroneses, just back from a Bermuda honeymoon; Dr. and Mrs. Robert Mainzer. Other members of the Women's Committee for the Concerts present were: the John W. Faison's Jr.; Mrs. John R. Bartels, Mrs. Irving G. Idler, Mrs. Lawrence E. Frost; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bruchhausen, Mr. and Mrs. H. Haughton Bell, the Berton J. Delmhorsts, Dr. and Mrs. Merrill N. Foote.

Also Dr. and Mrs. Warren L. Hafely, Mrs. R. Whitney Gosnell, Mr. and Mrs. J. Victor Herd, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hoffmann, the John Baily Kings, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederick Lohman Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard S. Maynard, the Carlton D. Masons, Mr. and Mrs. Allan G. Richtmyer, Mr. and Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer, Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn B. Tuttle and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas K. Ware.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

SEP 29 1962

Boston Symphony To Play Five Concerts at Academy

Thomas D. Perry, jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra will present over 220 concerts during the 1962-1963 season. Five of these will be played at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evenings. The first Brooklyn concert will be given on October 25.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, October 21, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN DAILY
Thursday, October 18, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, October 19, 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 40,130

OCT 18 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200

OCT 19 1962

Boston Symphony To Open Season With Leinsdorf

Erich Leinsdorf's debut in Brooklyn as the Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will occur on Thursday evening, October 25, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. The noted conductor will present a program of works by Serge Prokofiev, Johannes Brahms and Gustav Mahler.

This is a new program that presents Mahler's Symphony in D, No. 1 (The Titan) as the major work. Viennese Leinsdorf is an acknowledged master in interpreting the work of Mahler, one of the great musical idols of Vienna.

Leinsdorf will open the first program of the five-concert Brooklyn series with the Overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," is work based on the Leo Tolstoi novel) which he conducted at his opening concert in Symphony Hall, Boston. Following the Prokofiev, he will direct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, concluding the concert with the Mahler First.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, October 7, 1962

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND ADVOCATE
D. 20,100

OCT 5 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

OCT 5 1962

FLUSHING, N.Y.
JACKSON HEIGHTS
RECORD
W. 9,500

OCT 11 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000

OCT 13 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 886,367 S. 1,158,921

OCT 14 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061

OCT 5 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

SEP 2 1962

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND ADVOCATE
D. 20,100

OCT 11 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,147,219

SEP 1 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 40,130

OCT 9 1962

FLUSHING, N.Y.
FRESH MEADOWS
TOWNSMAN
W. 13,750

OCT 11 1962

Symphony Orchestra To Open 75th Season

Under the baton of its new dusic Director, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 75th season of Brooklyn concerts on Thursday evening, October 25th, at 8:30 P.M., in the Opera House of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

A highlight of Brooklyn's cultural and sicial life since 1888, the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of five concerts is firmly woven into the community's activities. The 1962-63 season that begins on October 25 already has a heavy subscription basis, indicating a continuation of capacity houses during the coming year.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FRESH MEADOWS TOWNSMAN
Thursday, October 11, 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

NOV 3 1962

Paul Affelder's music notes:

Leinsdorf Brings Out Best In Boston Unit

What a change Erich Leinsdorf has wrought in the Boston Symphony Orchestra! In only a few short weeks, the new music director has transformed it from an orchestra with a brilliant, almost brittle French sound to one with a warmer, better balanced, extremely refined tone. The new sound was noticeable already when the Bostonians participated in the opening-week concerts at Philharmonic Hall, and it was just as apparent when they began their Brooklyn season at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening.

The principal work on Thursday's program was Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D Major, which Leinsdorf interpreted in a unique and interesting fashion.

Mahler himself called this symphony "The Titan," and many conductors like to play on its many contrasts, blowing up the heavier passages. Not so Mr. Leinsdorf. He was inclined to make the softer passages whisper and to scale down the louder ones to more intimate proportions. If this robbed the symphony of some of its storm and passion, it also made more cohesion and sense out of the frequent inconsistencies in the last two movements.

One felt that the conductor was in absolute control of every note, playing, as it were, upon the orchestra and drawing forth some extremely sensitive phrases. An example was the introduction to the first movement, where he had trumpets and horns playing so softly that they seemed to be coming from offstage. It is one of Leinsdorf's most notable achievements with this orchestra that he has been able to control the formerly blatant brasses so well. Only in the last movement did the trumpets get out of hand and bleat forth in their old manner. Some polishing has still to be done, but many wonders have already been accomplished.

Much of the same stylistic refinement was to be heard in the Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn, whose finale, itself a miniature set of variations in the form of a passacaglia or chaconne, assumed added nobility from broader tempos.

Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," an unexpected but welcome addition to the program, was set forth with great care, perhaps a little too much care. There was more sensitivity than sensuality, though the flute solos by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, as always, were exquisite.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RIDGEWOOD ADVOCATE
Thursday, October 11, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

QUEENS OBSERVER
Thursday, October 11, 1962

Symphony Orchestra To Open 75th Season

Under the baton of its new dusic Director, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 75th season of Brooklyn concerts on Thursday evening, October 25th, at 8:30 P.M., in the Opera House of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

A highlight of Brooklyn's cultural and sicial life since 1888, the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of five concerts is firmly woven into the community's activities. The 1962-63 season that begins on October 25 already has a heavy subscription basis, indicating a continuation of capacity houses during the coming year.

BOSTON 6.

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SIBELIUS . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

I. Allegretto
II. Tempo andante ma rubato
III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

INTERMISSION

BLACHER . . . . . Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26
(First performance in Boston)

STRAUSS . . . . . "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 28 1962

Burgin to Conduct Symphony Concert

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct for the first time this season at the Symphony Hall Concerts this week.

Tuesday evening Mr. Burgin will conduct a program opening with Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2. Following the intermission Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini Op. 26 and Richard Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

In honor of United Nations Day, Richard Burgin will begin his concerts on Friday and Saturday with the first Boston performance of Aaron Copland's Preamble for a Solemn Occasion.

Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2 and Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini will also be heard at these concerts. Richard Burgin will conclude the Friday-Saturday concerts with Death and Transfiguration by Strauss.

Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. the second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. Other concerts this week:

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
OCT 27 1962

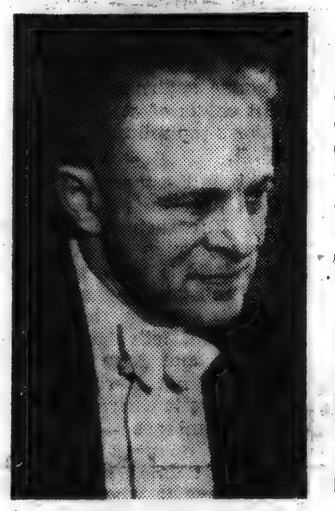
Music

Pianists to Open Groton Concert Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Duo-pianists Gold and Fizdale will open the 1962-63 Groton Music association concert series tomorrow evening at 8:00 o'clock in Groton school.

Gold and Fizdale have achieved much success during the past few seasons and their recognition has been such that today the duo is regarded as one of the leading piano combines on the international musical scene.



Richard Burgin

Since their graduation at Juilliard, an occasion that marked their introduction to the leading concert halls in America, they have scored in more than one field of endeavor. They have done much to advance the cause of modern classic writers for one thing. Secondly, they have made it possible for several composers to grow in the eyes of critics and concert devotees alike. A pleasant and unusual result of all of this has been the appreciation shown by such composers as Barber, Milhaud and Poulenc. This appreciation has been in the form of many new compositions, and all of them dedicated to and to be premiered by Messrs. Gold and Fizdale.

The series will present two more programs in the series. The second is scheduled for Jan. 13, 1963, and featured will be the Juilliard String quartet. The final performance will be in the spring and as a new "twist" to the series, the world of jazz will be ushered in the haloed halls of Groton school. Listed to provide the program will be the Mitchell-Ruff duo.

Richard Burgin who has retired as concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra, but has remained as associate conductor, will direct the orchestra for the first time this season next week. Tuesday evening Mr. Burgin will conduct the third program of the Tuesday series. His program will include the Jean Sibelius "Symphony No. 2"; the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's "Variations" on a theme by Paganini Op. 26, and Richard Strauss'—"Death and Transfiguration."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 27 1962

Burgin on Symphony Podium Next Week

For the first time this season Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts next week.

On Tuesday at 8:30 p. m., Mr. Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third program of the Tuesday series. His program will open with Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2. Following the intermission Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini Op. 26 and Richard Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

Mr. Burgin, in honor of United Nations Day, will begin his concerts on Friday and Saturday with the first Boston performance of Aaron Copland's Preamble for a Solemn Occasion. This was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, in New York's Carnegie Hall on Dec. 10, 1949, the first anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations.

Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2 and Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini will be heard for the first time at these concerts. Mr. Burgin will conclude the Friday-Saturday concerts with Death and Transfiguration by Strauss.

Thursday at 7:30 p. m., the second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

COPLAND . . . . . Preamble for a Solemn Occasion
(First performance in Boston)

IVES . . . . . Symphony No. 2

I. Andante moderato
II. Allegro
III. Adagio cantabile
IV. Lento maestoso
V. Allegro molto vivace
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

BLACHER . . . . . Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26
(First performance in this series)

STRAUSS . . . . . "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON 6.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

I. Allegretto
II. Tempo andante ma rubato
III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

INTERMISSION

BLACHER ..... Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26
(First performance in Boston)

STRAUSS ..... "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

COPLAND ..... Preamble for a Solemn Occasion
(First performance in Boston)

IVES ..... Symphony No. 2

I. Andante moderato
II. Allegro
III. Adagio cantabile
IV. Lento maestoso
V. Allegro molto vivace
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

BLACHER ..... Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26
(First performance in this series)

STRAUSS ..... "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 28 1962

Burgin to Conduct Symphony Concert

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct for the first time this season at the Symphony Hall Concerts this week.

Tuesday evening Mr. Burgin will conduct a program opening with Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2. Following the intermission Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini Op. 26 and Richard Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

In honor of United Nations Day Richard Burgin will begin his concerts on Friday and Saturday with the first Boston performance of Aaron Copland's Preamble for a Solemn Occasion.

Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2 and Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini will also be heard at these concerts. Richard Burgin will conclude the Friday-Saturday concerts with Death and Transfiguration by Strauss.

Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. the second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. Other concerts this week

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,284
OCT 27 1962

Music

Pianists to Open Groton Concert Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Duo-pianists Gold and Fizdale will open the 1962-63 Groton Music association concert series tomorrow evening at 8:00 o'clock in Groton school.

Gold and Fizdale have achieved much success during the past few seasons and their recognition has been such that today the duo is regarded as one of the leading piano combines on the international musical scene.

Richard Burgin

Since their graduation at Juilliard, an occasion that marked their introduction to the leading concert halls in America, they have scored in more than one field of endeavor. They have done much to advance the cause of modern classic writers for one thing. Secondly, they have made it possible for several composers to grow in the eyes of critics and concert devotees alike. A pleasant and unusual result of all of this has been the appreciation shown by such composers as Barber, Milhaud and Poulenc. This appreciation has been in the form of many new compositions, and all of them dedicated to and to be premiered by Messrs. Gold and Fizdale.

The series will present two more programs in the series. The second is scheduled for Jan. 13, 1963, and featured will be the Juilliard String quartet. The final performance will be in the spring and as a new "twist" to the series, the world of jazz will be ushered in the haloed halls of Groton school. Listed to provide the program will be the Mitchell-Ruff duo.

Richard Burgin who has retired as concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra, but has remained as associate conductor, will direct the orchestra for the first time this season next week. Tuesday evening Mr. Burgin will conduct the third program of the Tuesday series. His program will include the Jean Sibelius "Symphony No. 2"; the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's "Variations" on a theme by Paganini Op. 26, and Richard St[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
OCT 27 1962

Burgin on Symphony Podium Next Week

For the first time this season Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts next week.

On Tuesday at 8:30 p. m., Mr. Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third program of the Tuesday series. His program will open with Jean Sibelius' Symphony No. 2. Following the intermission Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Boris Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini Op. 26 and Richard Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

Mr. Burgin, in honor of United Nations Day, will begin his concerts on Friday and Saturday with the first Boston performance of Aaron Copland's Preamble for a Solemn Occasion. This was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, in New York's Carnegie Hall on Dec. 10, 1949, the first anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations.

Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2 and Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini will be heard for the first time at these concerts. Mr. Burgin will conclude the Friday-Saturday concerts with Death and Transfiguration by Strauss.

Thursday at 7:30 p. m., the [illegible] Rehearsal of the [illegible] season will be held in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

Burgin Conducts Symphony

Richard Burgin will make his first appearances of the season as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall this week. At the end of last season Mr. Burgin retired as concertmaster of the orchestra but retained his post of associate conductor.

Tuesday evening at 8:30 Mr. Burgin will present Sibelius' Symphony No. 2, in D major; Boris Blacher's Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26 (first time in Boston), and "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

At the concerts of Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30, Mr. Burgin will begin with Aaron Copland's "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion" (first time in Boston), and the Second Symphony by Charles Ives (first performance at these concerts). The works of Blacher and Strauss will end the concerts.

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (EVENING)
D, 147,750

NOV 3 1962

Burgin Leads Symphony In Variety of Moderns

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the sixth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented Preamble for a Solemn Occasion (first time in Boston), Aaron Copland; Symphony No. 2 (first time at these concerts), Charles Ives; Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26 (first time in these series), Boris Blacher; "Death and Transfiguration," Strauss.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin gave us a rich, varied and rather wonderful program of moderns, with Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" as high-caloric dessert, at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. It was almost more than we could digest in an afternoon.

Well, call them moderns, even though some academics may question the strict legality of the term. Modern was the position all his life of the largely unknown Ives, who died in 1954, aged a few months under 80. Copland at 62, and Blacher at 59, are alive and at work, though rapidly becoming elder statesmen.

This modern music we heard yesterday is real music, pure if by no means simple, the produce of real musical brains, imaginations and skills. It sounds ordered and agreeable, and attracts the ear. Upon closer acquaintance it may well arouse that warmth and pleasure we call heart.

Ives wrote much more adventurous music than his Second Symphony, but for a man of 27 this is an altogether remarkable work. For one thing it has a sense of formal logic and symmetry; for another it is a very clever long essay in counterpoint, and I said counterpoint, not animated harmony. In the course of its five movements, European methods, manners and devices were joined to a free-wheeling Yankee insouciance.

Ives had the temerity to counterpoint with German-style symphonic themes, all manner of fragmentary quotations of American tunes, from "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" to "America, the Beautiful," with two phrases from the Reveille bugle call tossed in just before the final cadence chords. Think what that would have sounded like—had it been performed—in 1901!

Blacher's Paganini Variations astonished and pleased this listener, who had been prepared for a drenching in 12-tone pepper-and-vinegar. Far from it! The 16 Variations (most so run together it is hard to count them as they pass) are harmonically tart, but not sour, and they have true vivacity and constant motion.

The great fascination about these Variations is twofold: rhythmic complexity and the glint of massed and single instrumental colors. Blacher, having stated the theme to be varied—the same one of the 24th Violin Caprice that Brahms and Rachmaninoff, among others, found so useful—swings far out in his varying. So far that, for the remainder the work only an occasional, fleeting suggestion of the theme reappears. The orchestral technic is really brilliant.

Copland's Preamble is a fittingly grave, imposing and fanfarish piece (with contrasting lyricism in the middle) for a ceremonial occasion, a solemn one, that is. It is authentic Copland, intelligible music, if not the best he ever wrote. Let us look this gift horse calmly in the dental structures and conclude it will be useful for certain chores.

Burgin, this week making his first appearances of the season as associate conductor, was greeted with the special affection he has commanded these many years As conductor he was at his finest, with a long and very difficult program, dealing with the moderns admirably, and concluding with a glorious performance of "Death and Transfiguration."

Burgin was generous in sharing the applause with the Orchestra. After Ives' Symphony, he singled out first cellist Mayes and hornists Yancich and McConathy for notable solo work, and after Blacher, he brought forward first clarinet Cioffi. Both works also afforded solo display for the new concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, who played beautifully but, I thought, a little too delicately.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf will return. He will present Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony; Bartok's Second Piano Concerto (first time in Boston) with Geza Anda as soloist, and the Suite of incidental music Mendelssohn wrote for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with chorus and soloists.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

NOV 3 1962

The Symphony

Ives Work Offers Stirring Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Charles Ives's Symphony No. 2, which Richard Burgin revived in a second performance yesterday, hails Columbia, recalls those amber waves of grain, skips to my Lou, echoes the clear high cornet of the village bandstand at dusk, the reveries of the parlor organist, the pride of a native son.

In short, it is a statement wholly in the American grain, a symphonic patriotic panorama. Created by the composer, then still a Yale undergraduate, the music makes one of the most concrete anr tangible of utterances. Ives's stature as a speculative, abstract innovator exerts perhaps more influence today than his Whitmanesque character: but his content and style are inseparable.

Not for Long

Here the pattern of the work seems simple, the intent plain. Still—as one of the characters in Fitzgerald's "The Last Tycoon" remarks—Americans may be out in the open, but not for long. The harmonic tissue and melodic outline are unconventional. Out of the brooding prelude mount the hymnal tunes of the 70's and 80's, mingling with barn dance fiddles, folk quotations, and, ultimately, a coda that invokes every star spangled Glorious Fourth, fire laddies' parade and box social from sea to shining sea.

This cracker barrel material could easily become jingoistic after the manner of merely competent arrangers of national melodies; or it could be quaint; from a man of brittle sophistication it might invoke Dr. Johnson's views on the last refuge of scoundrels. The listener responds, however, through sheer originality. To translate these tunes which everyone knows, and which have acquired extra-musical associations, to establish an individual vision, represents a feat of sweeping power.

Enormous Impact

The juxtaposition of unrelated themes is certainly no novelty today, though when Ives wrote, the revolutionary aspect loomed large. The work also reveals the fact that Ives, striving to divorce himself from the European tradition, was yet influenced by the musical climate of his period, unconsciously absorbed.

The scoring exhibits Wagner's enormous impact on the age, and is not as skillfully executed as the other elements of the design. I wouldn't give the symphony as high a rank in Ives's canon as the "Three Places In New England," but it affords a stirring, remarkable experience nontheless.

One welcomes the return of Mr. Burgin as guest. Not only does he arrange striking programs and maintain a distinguished level of leadership; he also embodies an ideal of nearly a half-century's service, the dedication of an artist to the meaning of the Boston Symphony. It was a pleasure to hear him in his initial appearance as associate conductor, following his retirement as concertmaster last spring.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the sixth program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Preamble for a Solemn Occasion ..... Copland
Symphony No. 2 ..... Ives
Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26 ..... Blacher
"Tod und Verklarung," Tone Poem, Op. 24 ..... Strauss

Besides Ives's idiomatic score, he brought us the first Boston performance of Aaron Copland's Preamble for a Solemn Occasion, which emerged as an occasional piece of high quality. There is weight and substance deftly apportioned in the Preamble, fashioned for the first anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations. The means are simple, and instead of the nervous serial syntax with which Copland opened the Lincoln Center recently, the composer uses a relatively orthodox vocabulary. The cumulative seniority seems somehow more appropriate to affairs of state.

Limp, Contrived

I'm afraid I found the Blacher variations of Paganini's theme, which Brahms and Rachmaninoff treated so inventively (not to mention Paganini himself) limp and contrived. The 18 variations on the 24th Caprice unfold with a spongy dissonant texture; Joseph Silverstein's statement of the caprice forms the only redeeming feature.

After the ponderous pedantries of Blacher, "Death and Transfiguration": the Transfiguration due not only to Strauss's genius, but to Mr. Burgin's persuasive account, articulated in a tempo gentle enough to allow the massive angelic sweep at the climax. This was conducting that expressed a lifetime's intimacy with the structure and shading of the musical form. All the more impressive, too, by lack of estentation.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled the first Boston performance of Bartok's Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra, Geza Anda soloist, Mendelssohn's Overture (Op. 21) and Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61, complete, with The New England Conservatory Chorus; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, round off the program.

MONDAY 2

Second Program

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

COPLAND ..... Preamble for a Solemn Occasion

IVES ..... Symphony No. 2

I. Andante moderato
II. Allegro
III. Adagio cantabile
IV. Lento maestoso
V. Allegro molto vivace

INTERMISSION

BLACHER ..... Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 26

STRAUSS ..... "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

PROVIDENCE 2

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
JOURNAL
D. 61,910 S. 191,554

NOV 7 1962 Buffalo

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Presents Second Concert in Series

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the second concert of its series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the program which included Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the controversial Symphony No. 10 by Shostakovitch. Two more interestingly paired works could scarcely be imagined. The musicians once again proved that there is untold wealth of tonal contrast in this fine organization. Their inspired playing did full justice to the two composers and to the keen musical intelligence of their conductor.

More than 100 years separates these two symphonies. Yet there is similarity in the manner of assembling the materials. Schumann's themes, all elegance and grace, were short and intricately threaded together. Many beautiful passages for solo instruments were heard and many subtleties of rhythmic play were used. Warmth of expression and emotional appeal characterized the Schumann era. Schumann says over again what he has liked to say and somehow the repetitive sections are somewhat like a paragraph constructed according to the old rules of rhetoric.

The Shostakovitch writing is in short thematic bits. He, too, likes short sentences for solo instruments. His writing is as stark and blunt as some of the present day prose and it might also be said, nearly as inscrutable, at times. Yet admiration for the total effect produced is bound to follow such an interpretation as we heard. Erich Leinsdorf seemed to convey the feeling that Shostakovitch was on the march again with originality and inspiration.

Too much can not be said for the sectional excellence of the music. Never was there so ineffable a tone from a French horn or so perfect a duo by piccolo and flute. Woodwind ensembles were striking in their beauty of tone and the string section played as one instrument at each level of tone in its composite quartet. Percussion was at its most emphatic best and the entire concert was an amazing demonstration of interpretative skill.

What wonderful fortune to have heard music a century apart so amazingly related. Erich Leinsdorf, conducting without a score throughout the program, has, by now, given us ample proof of his musicianship. He was recalled several times and shared the applause generously with his musicians who had starred in the various solo bits and then with the entire orchestra. The evening was a very exciting one.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
NOV 7 1962

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Presents Second Concert in Series

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the second concert of its series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the program which included Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and the controversial Symphony No. 10 by Shostakovitch. Two more interestingly paired works could scarcely be imagined. The musicians once again proved that there is untold wealth of tonal contrast in this fine organization. Their inspired playing did full justice to the two composers and to the keen musical intelligence of their conductor.

More than 100 years separates these two symphonies. Yet there is similarity in the manner of assembling the materials. Schumann's themes, all elegance and grace, were short and intricately threaded together. Many beautiful passages for solo instruments were heard and many subtleties of rhythmic play were used. Warmth of expression and emotional appeal characterized the Schumann era. Schumann says over again what he has liked to say and somehow the repetitive sections are somewhat like a paragraph constructed according to the old rules of rhetoric.

The Shostakovitch writing is in short thematic bits. He, too, likes short sentences for solo instruments. His writing is as stark and blunt as some of the present day prose and it might also be said, nearly as inscrutable, at times. Yet admiration for the total effect produced is bound to follow such an interpretation as we heard. Erich Leinsdorf seemed to convey the feeling that Shostakovitch was on the march again with originality and inspiration.

Too much can not be said for the sectional excellence of the music. Never was there so ineffable a tone from a French horn or so perfect a duo by piccolo and flute. Woodwind ensembles were striking in their beauty of tone and the string section played as one instrument at each level of tone in its composite quartet. Percussion was at its most emphatic best and the entire concert was an amazing demonstration of interpretative skill.

What wonderful fortune to have heard music a century apart so amazingly related. Erich Leinsdorf, conducting without a score throughout the program, has, by now, given us ample proof of his musicianship. He was recalled several times and shared the applause generously with his musicians who had starred in the various solo bits and then with the entire orchestra. The evening was a very exciting one.

PAWTUCKET, R.I.
TIMES
D. 38,197

NOV 7 1962 Buffalo

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Director Acclaimed At R. I. Concert

Again the Boston Symphony Orchestra proved its superb quality in a most expressive playing of Schumann's "Symphony No. 4 in D-Minor" under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence. And their performance of Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 10 in E-Minor" was something to remember for days to come.

✦✦✦

ERICH LEINSDORF has the gift of commanding eloquent expression from the men he directs and the rise and fall of force and volume in the first movement of the Schumann symphony produced floods of enchanting sound, contrasted and balanced with delicacy and sheer beauty. The romantic second movement began with a full-voiced announcement by the brasses which was taken over by the gentle woodwinds singing the serenade, and then embellished in the solo violin.

The scherzo, third movement, seemed to mockingly deride the beauty of the preceding movement but provided a beauty of its own. And the finale was an inverted recapitulation of the first movement that brought prolonged applause, enough for three curtain calls for Leinsdorf.

✦✦✦

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH was puzzling as to theme and purpose, and the modern harmonics were harsh and often dissonant yet there was an infectious enthusiasm among the musicians that was imparted to the audience. Some of Leinsdorf's podium antics are distracting to the listener, if he pays too much notice to them, but they have the ability to bring out the best playing of the orchestra groups. And his control of contrast makes for pleasant listening. The two symphonies comprised the complete program and it was musical fare that made a worthwhile evening.

C.H.L.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 7

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

BARTÓK . . . . . Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra
I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

SOLOIST
GEZA ANDA

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN . . . . . Overture (Op. 21), and Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61

Overture
Scherzo
Fairy March
Song with chorus
Intermezzo
Nocturne
Fanfare
A Dance of Rustics (Bergomask)
Wedding March
Finale

Soprano: ARLENE SAUNDERS
Mezzo-soprano: HELEN VANNI
Speaker: INGA SWENSON

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Director

Mr. ANDA plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
NOV 5 1962

GEZA ANDA

Eric Leinsdorf, director, in preparing the Mendelssohn Suite, reread the Shakespeare play and found it so enhanced his enjoyment of the music that he has invited the actress Inge Swenson to read several excerpts between sections of the Suite as part of the Symphony Hall performance. Leinsdorf's vocal soloists for this performance will be Arlene Saunders, soprano, Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, will conclude a week of concerts with the Orchestra tomorrow evening. Mr. Burgin's program will be Copland's "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion," Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2, the first performance at these concerts of "Variations on a Theme of Paganini" by Boris Blacher, and "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance of the season in Providence.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
NOV 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (MORNING)
D. 192,118 S. 445,834
NOV 4 1962

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 4 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performance of Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week in Symphony Hall.

Geza Anda will make his first appearance with the Orchestra as soloist in the concerto. The Friday-Saturday programs will begin with the Symphony No. 8, "Unfinished," by Schubert and conclude with a performance of Mendelssohn's Suite of Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
NOV 3 1962

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in preparing the Mendelssohn Suite, reread the Shakespeare play and found it so enhanced his enjoyment of the music that he has invited the actress Inge Swenson to read several excerpts between sections of the Suite as part of the program. Mr. Leinsdorf's vocal soloists for this performance includes Arlene Saunders, soprano; Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, and the New England Conservatory of Music chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 8 1962

Geza Anda will appear in the Boston première of Bartók's Piano Concerto No. 2 at the weekend Symphony Hall concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
NOV 8 1962

HUNGARIAN PIANIST Geza Anda will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto of Bela Bartok which will be given its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

SHOWTHROUGH

Boston 117

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

BARTÓK ..... Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

SOLOIST
GEZA ANDA

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN ..... Overture (Op. 21), and Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61

Overture
Scherzo
Fairy March
Song with chorus
Intermezzo
Nocturne
Fanfare
A Dance of Rustics (Bergomask)
Wedding March
Finale

Soprano: ARLENE SAUNDERS
Mezzo-soprano: HELEN VANNI
Speaker: INGA SWENSON

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Director

Mr. ANDA plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
NOV 3 1962

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in preparing the Mendelssohn Suite, reread the Shakespeare play and found it so enhanced his enjoyment of the music that he has invited the actress Inge Swenson to read several excerpts between sections of the Suite as part of the program. Mr. Leinsdorf's vocal soloists for this performance includes Arlene Saunders, soprano; Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, and the New England Conservatory of Music chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 8 1962

Geza Anda will appear in the Boston première of Bartók's Piano Concerto No. 2 at the weekend Symphony Hall concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
NOV 8 1962

HUNGARIAN PIANIST Geza Anda will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto of Bela Bartok which will be given its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week in Symphony Hall. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
NOV 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]
1962

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (MORNING)
D. 192,118 S. 445,834
NOV 4 1962

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 4 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performance of Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week in Symphony Hall.

Geza Anda will make his first appearance with the Orchestra as soloist in the concerto. The Friday-Saturday programs will begin with the Symphony No. 8, "Unfinished," by Schubert and conclude with a performance of Mendelssohn's Suite of Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

GEZA ANDA

Eric Leinsdorf, director, in preparing the Mendelssohn Suite, reread the Shakespeare play and found it so enhanced his enjoyment of the music that he had invited the actress Inge Swenson to read several excerpts between sections of the Suite as part of the Symphony Hall performance. Leinsdorf's vocal soloists for this performance will be Arlene Saunders, soprano, Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, will conclude a week of concerts with the Orchestra tomorrow evening. Mr. Burgin's program will be Copland's "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion," Charles Ives' Symphony No. 2, the first performance at these concerts of "Variations on a Theme of Paganini" by Boris Blacher, and "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance of the season in Providence.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
NOV 9 1962

At Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performance of Bela Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2 today, tomorrow and Sunday, with Geza Anda making his debut with the orchestra as soloist.

The Friday - Saturday programs will include Schubert's Symphony No. 8, "Unfinished," and Mendelssohn's Suite of Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Actress Inge Swenson will be speaker for the Mendelssohn, with Arlene Saundrrs, soprano, Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, and the New England Conservatory

Sunday's concert will begin promptly at 3 P.M., since it will be transmitted by the trans-Atlantic cable to England and broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation. The Boston Symphony is representing North America in the series for the BBC Home Service's 40th Anniversary Week.

The Schumann Symphony No. 4, a 33-minute work, will be played first on the program and is played without pause. Also scheduled are Piston's Symphony No. 7, the Bartolk Piano zconcerto with Geza Anda and Mendelssohn's Scherzo and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The orchestra will also be seen Sunday on television as part of NBC's "Report on the National Cultural Center." Filmed in color at ySmphony Hall Oct. 19, it will show Erich Leinsdorf conducting the final movement of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 10 1962

The Symphony

Symmetry Rests On Its Contrasts

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Every work of art contains a law, a balance of forces. The symmetry of this weekend's symphony program depends on contrasts of light and shade, fragiles and solids, presenting a profile not unlike the slender span of a suspension bridge buttressed by massive pilings.

The underpinning supplied by Bartok's gruff and granitic Concerto, brilliantly modelled by the piano soloist, Geza Anda, supported the spidery arch of Schubert's "Unfinished" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream." the Mendelssohn interludes to

The latter made a striking and novel presentation of this music so seldom heard entire, and which, indeed, has not been done complete here since April 13, 1894, in the regime of Emil Paur. Mr. Leinsdorf, editing the score for concert performance, selected the Overture and nine of the 13 incidental moods, employing a small chorus of women's voices and a narrator for the Shakespearean text.

Wave Length

But the Bartok, too, receives infrequent hearing, and its significance to contemporary musical literature is greater. It no longer seems as revolutionary as it did for the 1931 audience conditioned to the late romantic wave length. Neither does it seem to merit the exaggerated rhetoric of its partisans ("the highest pinnacle of pure music").

Rather, with the passage of time, it becomes an imaginative modern score remarkable for innovation and rhythmic resource, but melodically spare and achieving impact through the adroit manipulation of surface instead of profound statement.

Granted, a concerto is a showpiece; and Bartok's also displays emotional deeps. His treatment of the solo voice isn't empty bravura and maintains a thematic relation to the orchestra. Nevertheless, the ultimate contour is virtuosic: the barbaric, tumultuous sturm und drang of the opening (which dispenses with strings), the dialogue between piano and tympani (competing in terms of percussion), and the growling bass drum accompaniment of the last movement, all create an atmosphere of feverish stress.

It is no mean feat to clothe the classical concerto in such a 20th century garb, yet the final effect seems diffuse and relying on technical invention as an ideal end. The gypsy melos and contrapuntal development have the kind of uncanny skill that calls attention to itself.

These reservations did not extend to the playing of Mr. Anda, whose wiry attacks, propulsive vigor and lean phrasings disclosed a formidable talent. Despite the frenzied digital demands his tone avoided the hard or brittle; he projected dramatic passions and an interior lyricism in a style of contemporaneity, and his lack of the mechanical bespoke his interpretive breadth.

In Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, the little chorus of women was stationed at upper stage right, while Miss Inga Swenson read the play's passages down front, sitting beside a lectern. An extraordinarily handsome girl, she looked for all the world like a Tenniel Alice, in accord with the musical period, and her articulation of the text was clear, crisp and delightful. She is an accomplished actress, but should be warned that in the wide-open spaces of Symphony Hall gesture seldom conveys the intimacy of gesture in the legitimate theater; it needs operatic stances; and that would be out of character.

The New England Conservatory chorus sang with a lovely, transparent texture, and the soloists, Arlene Saunders, and Helen Vanni, contributed admirable vocal work, nicely focussed and tonally engaging. The score, of course, is light, sugary perhaps; but you shall hear no demurrer here otherwise. Was there ever a more haunting and suggestive translation from a literary source, ranging from the golden horns of the faery nocturne to the now-traditional Wedding March? One is grateful for Mr. Leinsdorf's efforts: the result I found delectable.

Not Laggard

And his reading of the "Unfinished" as well. It is slow, but not laggard, and the cumulative structure radiant with detail. The dynamic facility and long, discreet tempos offer a dignity and richness this score needs if it is not to sound slushy. Mr. Leinsdorf's expressive patterns furnished graciousness and ease.

Next weekend Joseph de Pasquale will be the viola soloist in the first Boston performance of Milhaud's Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf has also scheduled Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 96, and Schonberg's orchestral arrangement of Brahms's Quartet for Piano and Strings, in G minor, Op. 25.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the seventh program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Geza Anda, piano, was the Bartok soloist. The New England Conservatory Chorus was prepared under the direction of Lorna Cooke de Varon. Arlene Saunders, soprano, Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano, were the Mendelssohn soloists; and Inga Swenson was the speaker. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished" ..... Schubert
Concerto No. 2, for Piano and Orchestra ..... Bartok
Overture (Op. 21), and Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Op. 61) ..... Mendelssohn

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
NOV 10 1962

Symphony: Mendelssohn's 'Dream'; Anda in Bartok

By CYRUS DURGIN

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the seventh program of the Friday-Saturday series. Schubert: "Unfinished" Symphony; Bela Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2 (first performance in Boston), Geza Anda soloist (Boston debut); Mendelssohn: "Overture and Incidental Music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Assisting: Arlene Saunders, soprano; Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano; Inga Swenson, speaker; 24 female members of the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon.

Erich Leinsdorf promised us a "total repertory" in his first three or so years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and he is making good. Already he has begun to explore neglected areas, and this week he goes a little further.

Bela Bartok's formidable Second Piano Concerto receives first local performance with Hungarian-born Geza Anda making his Boston debut as soloist. From Mendelssohn, Leinsdorf selected 10 of the numbers from the score to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," most of them unheard in years.

Bartok's fiercely difficult and glittering Concerto, 31 years old last month, is likely to continue a rarity, and for good reason: only the best orchestras and biggest keyboard virtuosi can play it! To all others it will remain distant and unattainable. In the prodigious Geza Anda, whose muscles have the fortune to be governed by mind and heart full of music, the work likely has an ideal proponent.

First movement and last to go at giddy speed, bristle with digital and harmonic involvements, rhythmical complexities and cross-accents, keeping 10 fingers conjuring what would occupy 20. The tissue of the work is highly sophisticated, percussive and plangent, thoroughly concealing the origin of any folk material that went into its facture. In the orchestra, the percussion figure importantly and a conductor is faced with split-second accuracy in beat and cues.

Yesterday Leinsdorf, Anda and the Boston Symphony made it a victory of expertise, brilliant to the point of stunning.

Leinsdorf is the first Boston Symphony conductor since Pierre Monteux with as much —or even more—experience of theater as symphonic hall. The fact is important with certain scores, the "Midsummer Night's Dream" Suite among them. Yesterday's success was built upon this double command. He selected certain speeches of Titania, Puck, Bottom and the others to be spoken by actress Inge Swensen, between numbers and in some cases over the music—what used to be called "melodrama" and is in our theater today a vanished art.

Miss Swenson spoke beguilingly, but not very clearly. Tonight's broadcasts, microphones available to increase her voice as it could not be amplified in Symphony Hall, no doubt will show improvement.

The speeches would hardly illuminate one not knowing "A Midsummer Night's Dream" but they did help decisively to establish and intensify mood qualities of theater music. The two-dozen Conservatory girls sang with fine delicacy, and the solo work of Arlene Saunders and Helen Vanni was important to the sum total.

The expert hand of the theater musician was in the spectacular effect of the Wedding March—fresh and powerful in all its length and the splendor of full orchestra; in the sense of processional the march conveyed; in the sudden return to the violin shimmerings of Oberon and Titania's fairly realm, in the drama of spoken lines against music. If Leinsdorf is willing to go further into this present terra incognita of music, we may have more memorable pleasures ahead.

Just one sentence is left to commit to the record that Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony (apart from an unaccountable doublebass rasp in the very opening phrase) was a glorious threnody, lustered with that beauty which emanates from a great orchestra and a conductor for whom the right tempo, the felicitous style and utmost polish are as vital as breathing.

Next week Leinsdorf will conduct Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 96; Milhaud's Viola Concerto with Joseph De Pasquale as soloist, and Schoenberg's orchestral arrangement of Brahms' G minor Piano Quartet.

BLANK PAGE

SUNDAY 2

Second Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 11, at 3:00 o'clock

SCHUMANN ..... Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Op. 120

I. Ziemlich langsam; Lebhaft
II. Romanze: Ziemlich langsam
III. Scherzo: Lebhaft
IV. Langsam; Lebhaft

(Played without pause)

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 7

I. Con moto
II. Adagio pastorale
III. Allegro festevole

INTERMISSION

BARTÓK ..... Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro molto

MENDELSSOHN ..... Scherzo and Wedding March from the Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61

SOLOIST
GEZA ANDA
MR. ANDA plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON, 8

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony in D major, No. 96

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance at these concerts)

MILHAUD ..... Concerto for Viola and Orchestra

I. Animé
II. Lent
III. Souple et animé
IV. Vif

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Quartet for Piano and Strings, in G minor, Op. 25
(Arranged for Orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg)

I. Allegro
II. Allegro ma non tanto
III. Andante con moto
IV. Rondo alla Zingarese

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 16 1962

By Boris and Milton

Joseph de Pasquale will be soloist in the Boston première of Milhaud's Viola Concerto at the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Saturday and Tuesday evenings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 17 1962

Joseph de Pasquale Symphony Soloist

Violist Heard in Boston Première of Milhaud Concerto

By Harold Rogers

The program featured by Erich Leinsdorf at the Boston Symphony's weekend concerts has its plums and its pleasantries. Nothing adds up to anything truly great; there isn't much to shake a listener to the bottom of his emotional boots; and little remains to feed the fires of controversy.

It all amounts to good listening, what with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 96 (given its first performance by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon), Milhaud's Viola Concerto of 1929 (given its Boston première), and a Brahms-Schoenberg hybrid that has been heard here about once every 10 years for the past three decades, and that, perhaps, is about enough.

The Haydn took its gentlemanly way, as was to be expected; Mr. Leinsdorf reduced the orchestra and guided his players through a reading marked by classical balance and grace. The Milhaud was a little less gentlemanly, as were the French Six during the late 1920's; but his naughtiness of that time is tame by today's standards: the four sections moved along pertly or insinuatingly; each was short, shining, and sweet enough for most ears.

Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's first viola, was the suave soloist. With élan he carried off the business that Milhaud had assigned him, work enough for any musician and too much for most. Yet Mr. de Pasquale has a flawless ear; intonation poses for him no evident problems; with a cool head and a warm heart he tossed off accelerated passages with facile fingers.

There are those who favor transcriptions, and those who don't; generally those who favor them are the people who make them or the artists for whom the transcriptions provide another vehicle for expression. Stokowski is certainly in favor of his grandiloquent transcriptions of Bach, and the Busoni piano transcriptions still afford some awesome moments in the recital hall.

The Respighi transcription of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major is an unhappy affair at best, yet it is trotted out from time to time at Symphony Hall where it grinds its ponderous way from first to last. And there are those who rightly point out that Bach himself was his own best transcriber; he had no compunction in taking a good harpsichord concerto and recasting it for the violin or some other instrument.

The answer, I suppose, is whether or not the transcription truly works without doing the composed any injustice in the process. What Schoenberg has done for Brahms in transcribing the Quartet for Piano and Strings, Op. 25, contains no rank injustices; it is plain that Schoenberg was trying his best to emulate the way that Brahms had handled the orchestra.

But perhaps Schoenberg was at times a little more verbose than Brahms would have been; there is not always the translucence of a Brahms orchestration, though the colors are remarkably true. Whatever the reason, the results do not measure up to one of the Brahms symphonies; most chamber works are not conceived in symphonic terms, though many of Brahms' chamber compositions come closer to being symphonic than happens to be the case with other composers.

Yet if the piece has its tedious parts, it became radiantly alive from time to time in Mr. Leinsdorf's hands. Few would care to resist the charms of the waltzing second movement, the full parade regalia of the third, or the swirling gypsy rhythms of the fourth.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
D 177,899 S. 289,439
NOV 11 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

At its Friday-Saturday concerts this week the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performances of the Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's solo violist, will be the soloist for these performances.

The Friday-Saturday programs will begin with Haydn's Symphony No. 96, which will be heard for the first time at these concerts. Brahms' Piano Quartet, Op. 25, arranged for orchestra by Schoenberg, will complete the program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in Sanders Theatre on Tuesday for the second concert of the Cambridge series. Director Erich Leinsdorf will begin the Sanders Theatre concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Hayden, which will be followed by a performance of Mendelssohn's Suite of Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The Suite will include the Overture, Scherzo, Nocturne, and Wedding March. Mendelssohn's music will be supplemented by excerpts from Shakespeare's play spoken by the actress Inga Swenson. Following the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Strauss.

Today's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Symphony Hall will be transmitted by the trans-Atlantic cable to England and broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation as a part of its Home Service's 40th Anniversary Week. Today's concert will begin promptly at 3 o'clock.

Other concerts this week include:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
NOV 11 1962

Milhaud Viola Concerto, De Pasquale as Soloist

Joseph De Pasquale, first violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist in the Boston performances of the Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud at the concerts in Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The work was composed in 1929.

The program will begin with what is announced as first performance at these concerts of Haydn's Symphony No. 96, and will end with the orchestral transcription of the Piano Quartet, Op. 25, by Brahms.

Other Boston Symphony concerts of the week:

This afternoon at 3, Symphony Hall, Leinsdorf conducting. Schumann: Symphony No. 4; Piston: Symphony No. 7; Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2, Geza Anda soloist; Mendelssohn: Scherzo and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Leinsdorf conducting. Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Mendelssohn: Overture, Scherzo, Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream", Inga Swenson, speaker; Schumann: Symphony No. 4; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
NOV 8 1962

Milhaud Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first local performance of Darius Milhaud's viola concerto next Friday at 2:15 p.m. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's solo violist, will be featured in the new work Nov. 16 and Nov. 17 at 8:30 p.m.

BOSTON 8 1/2

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in D major, No. 96

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance at these concerts)

MILHAUD . . . . . Concerto for Viola and Orchestra

I. Animé
II. Lent
III. Souple et animé
IV. Vif

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Quartet for Piano and Strings, in G minor, Op. 25
(Arranged for Orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg)

I. Allegro
II. Allegro ma non tanto
III. Andante con moto
IV. Rondo alla Zingarese

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
D 177,889 S. 288,439

NOV 11 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

At its Friday-Saturday concert this week the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performances of the Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's solo violist, will be the soloist for these performances.

The Friday-Saturday program will begin with Haydn's Symphony No. 96, which will be heard for the first time at these concerts. Brahms' Piano Quartet, Op. 25, arranged for orchestra by Schoenberg, will complete the program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in Sanders Theatre on Tuesday for the second concert of the Cambridge series. Director Erich Leinsdorf will begin the Sanders Theatre concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Hayden, which will be followed by a performance of Mendelssohn's Suite of Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The Suite will include the Overture, Scherzo, Nocturne, and Wedding March. Mendelssohn's music will be supplemented by excerpts from Shakespeare's play spoken by the actress Inga Swenson. Following the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in Schumann's Symphony No. 4 and "Till Eulenspiegel" by Strauss.

Today's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Symphony Hall will be transmitted by the trans-Atlantic cable to England and broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation as a part of its Home Service's 40th Anniversary Week. Today's concert will begin promptly at 3 o'clock.

Other concerts this week include

BOSTON, MASS.
Circ. 445,624
NOV 11 1962

Milhaud Viola Concerto, De Pasquale as Soloist

Joseph De Pasquale, first violist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist in the Boston performances of the Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud at the concerts in Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The work was composed in 1929.

The program will begin with what is announced as first performance at these concerts of Haydn's Symphony No. 96, and will end with the orchestral transcription of the Piano Quartet, Op. 25, by Brahms.

Other Boston Symphony concerts of the week:

This afternoon at 3, Symphony Hall, Leinsdorf conducting. Schumann: Symphony No. 4; Pistoni Symphony No. 7; Bartok: Piano Concerto No. 2, Geza Anda soloist; Mendelssohn: Scherzo and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Leinsdorf conducting. Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Mendelssohn: Overture, Scherzo, Nocturne and Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Inga Swensen, speaker; Schumann: Symphony No. 4; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
NOV 8 1962

Milhaud Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first local performance of Darius Milhaud's viola concerto next Friday at 2:15 p.m. Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's solo violist, will be featured in the new work Nov. 16 and Nov. 17 at 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 10 1962

By Boris and Milton

Joseph de Pasquale will be soloist in the Boston premiere of Milhaud's Viola Concerto at the Boston Symphony concerts this afternoon, Saturday and Tuesday evenings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
NOV 17 1962

Joseph de Pasquale Symphony Soloist

Violist Heard in Boston Première of Milhaud Concerto

By Harold Rogers

The program featured by Erich Leinsdorf at the Boston Symphony's weekend concerts has its plums and its pleasantries. Nothing adds up to anything truly great; there isn't much to shake a listener to the bottom of his emotional boots; and little remains to feed the fires of controversy.

It all amounts to good listening, what with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 96 (given its first performance by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon), Milhaud's Viola Concerto of 1929 (given its Boston première), and a Brahms-Schoenberg hybrid that has been heard here about once every 10 years for the past three decades, and that, perhaps, is about enough.

The Haydn took its gentlemanly way, as was to be expected; Mr. Leinsdorf reduced the orchestra and guided his players through a reading marked by classical balance and grace. The Milhaud was a little less gentlemanly, as were the French-Six during the late 1920's; but his naughtiness of that time is tame by today's standards: the four sections moved along pertly or insinuatingly; each was short, shining, and sweet enough for most ears.

Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's first viola, was the suave soloist. With élan he carried off the business that Milhaud had assigned him, work enough for any musician and too much for most. Yet Mr. de Pasquale has a flawless ear; intonation poses for him no evident problems; with a cool head and a warm heart he tossed off accelerated passages with facile fingers.

There are those who favor transcriptions, and those who don't; generally those who favor them are the people who make them or the artists for whom the transcriptions provide another vehicle for expression. Stokowski is certainly in favor of his grandiloquent transcriptions of Bach, and the Busoni piano transcriptions still afford some awesome moments in the recital hall.

The Respighi transcription of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major is an unhappy affair at best, yet it is trotted out from time to time at Symphony Hall where it grinds its ponderous way from first to last. And there are those who rightly point out that Bach himself was his own best transcriber; he had no compunction in taking a good harpsichord concerto and recasting it for the violin or some other instrument.

The answer, I suppose, is whether or not the transcription truly works without doing the composed any injustice in the process. What Schoenberg has done for Brahms in transcribing the Quartet for Piano and Strings, Op. 25, contains no rank injustices; it is plain that Schoenberg was trying his best to emulate the way that Brahms had handled the orchestra.

But perhaps Schoenberg was at times a little more verbose than Brahms would have been; there is not always the translucence of a Brahms orchestration, though the colors are remarkably true. Whatever the reason, the results do not measure up to one of the Brahms symphonies; most chamber works are not conceived in symphonic terms, though many of Brahms' chamber compositions come closer to being symphonic than happens to be the case with other composers.

Yet if the piece has its tedious parts, it became radiantly alive from time to time in Mr. Leinsdorf's hands. Few would care to resist the charms of the waltzing second movement, the full parade regalia of the third, or the swirling gypsy rhythms of the fourth.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
NOV 17 1962

The Symphony

Program Almost In Own Category

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Brahms's Fifth Symphony"—as Erich Leinsdorf has fondly referred to Schoenberg's orchestral transcription of the Piano Quartet in G Minor, Op. 25—the first BSO performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 96, and the Boston premiere of Milhaud's viola concerto: a program this weekend, rich beyond the dreams of musical avarice.

Indeed, among the eight programs Mr. Leinsdorf has presented this season I am tempted to place this one, if possible, in special category of superlative. Not only was it splendidly organized and executed, with a brilliant solo account from Joseph de Pasquale, the orchestra's first violist, but each item bore unusual creative significance.

Prolific Genius

The so-called "Miracle" Symphony of Haydn, for example, bespoke a genius so prolific that only in 1962 are we encountering one of his finest scores played by an orchestra of the Boston's caliber. Milhaud's Concerto, introduced nearly 33 years ago, comprises a generous contribution to the sparse modern literature for viola, (and why haven't we heard it sooner?) And the Schoenberg-Brahms collaboration was announced by Mr. Leinsdorf as one of his cherished projects before the season began. Undoubtedly, it will appear in records before long.

Of course, Haydn's No. 96, which present-day scholarship has placed at the head of the London series once presumed to begin with the "Oxford," was offered by The Harvard Musical Association as long ago as 1869. But for inexplicable reasons, the work has long been in the shadow of the "Clock", the "Military" and the other symphonies of this period. So astute a critic as Tovey preferred 102 and 104 to 96. Despite the neglect, however, the music abounds in orchestral felicities on Haydn's highest level.

Crisp Outlook

One suspects, perhaps wrongly, that the dynamics require a singular temperament, a cosmopolitan conductor of peerless urbanity, and anything less means disaster, —a conductor on the order of Thomas Beecham, or Mr. Leinsdorf who shares much of the same crisp international outlook.

The delicacy and refinement of the Haydn orchestra, whose dimensions maintained an expressive balance (the symphony is innocent of clarinets), conveyed a crystalline benignity. The pace combined suavity and drama without spelling out those astonishing points like the key transitions in which Haydn still sounds so contemporary.

The Milhaud Concerto reflects the characteristic intimacy and gentle, nostalgic line of the composer in a restrained structure affording the soloist ample opportunity. Although the demands are not ostentatious, the player needs virtuosity and the tastefulness of assured modesty to boot. Joseph de Pasquale seemed to me an ideal exponent.

His authority cannot be faulted; the nuances of his tone and touch, the accuracy of his stops and bowing, assert rank in a world aristocracy of his instrument. Milhaud, however, insists on a more profound insight than technic will supply; and Mr. de Pasquale accomodated himself to the sensitive lyric profile. He demonstrated that big effects and bombast do not always coincide. His fastidious art, encompassing almost the entire solo viola range, once again offered an exquisite statement.

Songful Dignity

Schoenberg's transcription may not please either the fanatic Brahmins or the 12-tone scholastics who don't find enough of their man in the music as the case may be. It is, rather, an extraordinary work in its own right, joining Brahms's noble, songful dignity with Schoenberg's mastery of orchestration. As a pure musical experience it realizes a startling impact. Few partnerships so separated by time and temperament, have attained such rhapsodic rapport.

The G Minor Piano Quartet in its original form is almost never heard in concert, and the transcription to orchestra alters only the form. The spirit remains. The gain in color, weight and texture actually heightens the music; the role of the clarinet and woodwinds, central to the conception, strikingly pays homage to the Brahms orchestra without attempting drudging reproduction.

Time and again Schoenberg dazzles us with the way he has been able to translate the original mood into today's instrumental idiom. He does not let us forget the original scale, as in the finale, when for a wistful moment, violin, 'cello and viola dialogue soars against the ensemble. The transcription, which Mr. Leinsdorf treated eloquently, reminds us that Brahms himself was constantly recasting his works in other mediums.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Alvin Ettler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra; Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C Minor, Op. 67.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the eighth program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Joseph de Pasquale, viola, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony in D major, No. 96 ..... Haydn
Concerto for Viola and Orchestra ..... Milhaud
Quartet for Piano and Strings in G Minor, Op. 25, arr. for orchestra by Schoenberg ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
NOV 17 1962

De Pasquale Is Soloist In Milhaud at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the eighth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Haydn: Symphony in D major, No. 96 (first time at these concerts); Milhaud: Viola Concerto No. 1 (first time in Boston), Joseph de Pasquale soloist; Brahms: Piano Quartet in G minor, orchestrated by Arnold Schoenberg.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Considered as news, the middle portion of the Boston Symphony concert yesterday was the more important: first performance here of the Milhaud Viola Concerto No. 1, with the Orchestra's first violist, Joseph de Pasquale giving a brilliant account of the solo part.

The Concerto is a merciless demand upon a violist's technic, working him inexorably, though to glittering effect, in the course of the four short movements. The soloist seems to go his own way, thematically and in the matter of key sequences, while the smallish orchestra (foundationed by four double-basses and tuba) go 'round in circles, never really arriving anywhere.

Since Erich Leinsdorf is a remarkable scholar among the conducting virtuosi, and since Milhaud knows exactly what effects he wishes to produce and beyond doubt hears them in his inward ear, the sound we experienced yesterday quite as doubtless was correct. But, to my mind, not interesting. In the solo part, yes, even piquant in the rush of chords, figurations, accents and what that late King of Siam learned to include as et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Yet from so keen a technician as Milhaud, one seldom has heard an orchestral background so muddled and sluggish. It is as if an amateur at mixing paints had the usual result of arriving at what the more candid among American artists describe as tobacco-juice brown. One can understand why this work has been so long arriving here, having been written in 1920. Requiescat, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Sensitivity, Beauty

It is a little surprising that the first of the dozen great symphonies by Haydn known as "the Salomon symphonies" should not have turned up at these concerts until now. All the more credit, then, to Leinsdorf, for performing it—and performing it with such sensitivity of style and beauty of sound.

Here he reduced the strings in all categories, the double-basses down to four (would five have been a little better?), and, I do believe, with that scholarly imaginative projection into the past which is very important to him, attempted to gauge how the work might have sounded when it was new. Here was no delicate-porcelain treatment, but it was most carefully proportioned. Vigor was not stifled, nor was it uninhibited.

As conducting and playing technic, this Haydn performance left me overwhelmed with admiration for Leinsdorf and the Orchestra. Just as a small example, toward the end of the andante, those successive entrances, upon trills, of flutes, oboes and bassoons, followed by the quiet little chromatic passage from the double-basses—sheer wizardry!

To Brahms' G minor Piano Quartet, in the super-colossal orchestration of Arnold Schoenberg it remained to provide the high excitement of the afternoon. That a man with the revolutionary temperament Schoenberg possessed should have looked to the Romantic past and wrought so romantic and gorgeous an arrangement, is an enigma among mysteries.

Although the same charge may be brought against it that the purists bring against Bach transcriptions—that it is not Brahms, and to be sure it isn't —the skill here was consummate.

At the opening, the winds sound like a large organ; in the first movement Schoenberg got the real timbre of Brahms' own orchestration, the andante he managed to have sound like Richard Strauss. In the Hungarian gypsy finale, Schoenberg, that wry mechanic of the 12-tone system, made a great high-colored and bejewelled tonal fabric. Leinsdorf's performance, concluding with a real, galloping furioso, left you limp.

Next week: Schoenberg's "Transfigured Night"; Alvin Etler's revised Concerto for Wind Quintet, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Leinsdorf will conduct.

STAGE IN TOWN

PLYMOUTH CONCERT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
NOV 17 1962

Spooner Concert Fund Brings Boston Symphony to Plymouth

Noted Orchestra Opens Concert Series for Town

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its brilliant new director, Eric Leinsdorf, will be in Plymouth on Monday evening, Nov. 19, to give the first in the series of free public concerts arranged for under the will of James Spooner, lifetime resident of the town. The concert will be at 8:30 in Plymouth Memorial Hall.

Mr. Leinsdorf has been acclaimed by critics and patrons alike for concerts given in Boston and at the new Lincoln Centre, New York City, since his appointment as leader of the world-famous Boston Symphony.

Mr. Spooner, whose generosity made this concert and others of highest musical quality possible, was a member of various musical organizations in Plymouth and active in bringing musical groups to the Plymouth area. He also presented numerous musicales in his home, now one of the town's historical homes and museums.

The Plymouth National Bank, trustee under Mr. Spooner's will, is in charge of arrangements for the concerts. On the advisory committee assisting in the many details entailed in such an important project are Philip S. Barnes, Harold Boyer and Alfred Volta. Charles H. Randall, Jr., of the bank is trustee of the Spooner Concert Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
NOV 11 1962

Plymouth Slates 1st Spooner Concert

Special to The Standard-Times

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 10—Musical patron, athlete and quiet philanthropist when he lived, the late James Spooner, who died in 1954 at 86, will long be remembered in Plymouth.

Under terms of his will he left an estate of some $200,000, the income to be used in benefactions for the people of Plymouth. A portion of this amount was designated for an unusual purpose . . . to provide a musical heritage for coming generations in his town.

Concerts Offered

The Spooner Public Concert Fund will be used for "the purpose of providing for and defraying the expenses of high-grade public concerts in Plymouth to which the public shall be admitted without charge."

Mr. Spooner expressed the hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be brought to Plymouth from time to time, as well as grand opera singers and other musicians of distinction.

Charles H. Randall Jr., trust officer of Plymouth National Bank, trustee of the Spooner will, assisted by Alfred A. Volta, Phillip S. Barnes and Harold A. Boyer have arranged for the first of the concerts which will ultimately be presented around Thanksgiving each year. The initial offering will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is scheduled for Memorial Hall at 8:30 p. m. Nov. 19.

More than 100 instruments under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf will bring to Plymouth natives, the same special source of pleasure it brought to Mr. Spooner. For many years he was paymaster of Plymouth Cordage Company and played the french horn in the company band.

A descendant of William Spooner, who arrived in Plymouth from Colchester, Essex, England, early in 1637, Mr. Spooner was the son of James Walter and Frona (Smith) Spooner. He was educated in Plymouth schools and graduated from Plymouth High School with the Class of 1887.

Generous Spirit

Unmarried, thrifty, meticulous in manner, devoted to his parents and exemplifying in his life, high moral standards and a generous spirit, Mr. Spooner enjoyed skiing, swimming, figure skating and was an accomplished dancer.

He is especially remembered for his many kindnesses to and interest in young people. Many high school graduates recall Class Night when Mr. Spooner, congratulating the student, pressed a $10 gold piece into his hand.

It was his habit to accompany

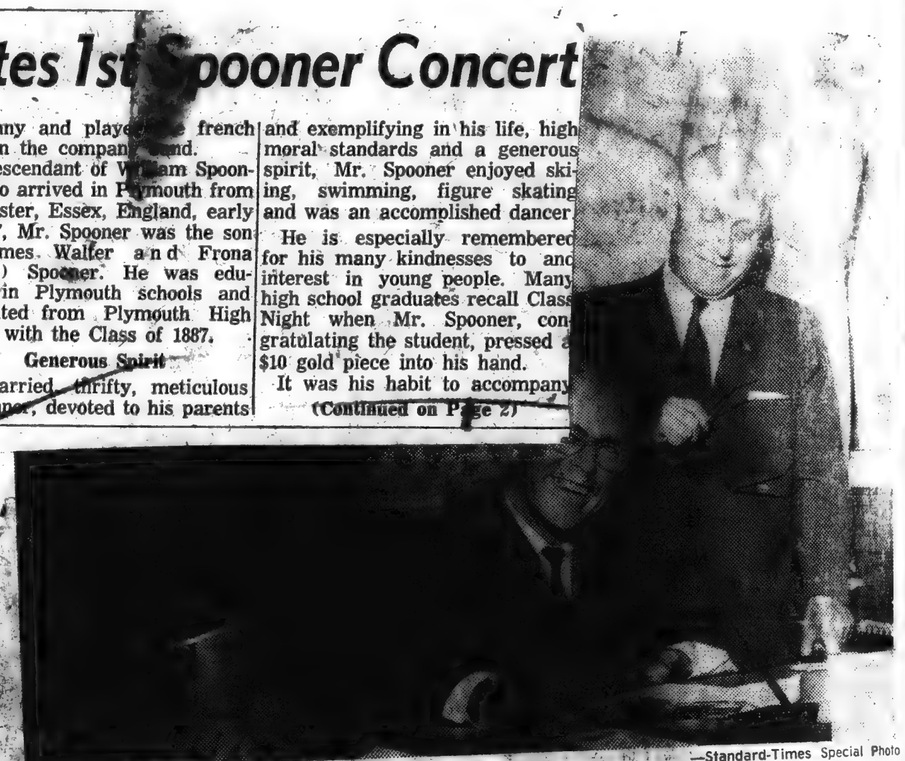
(Continued on Page 2)

r the pro- hurch and His at the ns of e will usic in eet, ac- accord- be pre- sed as to be use."

rian So- ins the um open Summer addition e town, by one two cen- any fine furniture, Anne pe-

1,700 free cert were outh resi- ere quick- y located will mail the first come, first served basis, as long as the supply lasts. Children under 12 were not allowed to make application and only two tickets will be sent to each family.

Cost of this initial program, an estimated $7,000, will be absorbed by the Spooner Public Concert Fund, Mr. Randall said.



—Standard-Times Special Photo

PLYMOUTH PLANNERS completing details for the appearance of Boston Symphony Orchestra, here Nov. 19, are, left to right, Alfred A. Volta, Charles H. Randall Jr., seated, and Harold A. Boyer. The musical treat, free to the first 1,700 who filed applications for tickets early this week is presented under the will of James Spooner Plymouth benefactor, who died in 1954. The performance marks the first annual concert, bring fine music to residents here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
NOV 19 1962

Plymouth Concert Set for Tonight

Special to The Standard-Times

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 19 — Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Memorial Hall concert at 8:30 tonight. Mr. Leinsdorf is the orchestra's musical director.

On the program are Milhaud's "Concerto for Viola and Orchestra," with Joseph de Pasquale, soloist; Mozart's "Symphony in C Major," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and incidental music to "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn.

Approximately 1,700 free tickets have been distributed. The program is sponsored by the James Spooner Memorial Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
OCT 8 1962

* * *

The Plymouth National Bank, trustee under the will of James Spooner, announced that arrangements are being completed for the first free public concert to be given under the provisions of a trust set up by Mr. Spooner's will. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been engaged for this initial concert which will be held in Plymouth Memorial Hall at 8:30 P. M. on Nov. 19. The Boston Symphony under the brilliant leadership of its new director, Erich Leinsdorf, has received rave notices from New York music critics on its recent concert in New York's new Lincoln Center. It has long been outstanding among the world's great symphonic orchestras. James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth, provided in his will that the income from a portion of his estate be used to provide free public concerts in Plymouth and specifically referred to the Boston Symphony as an example of the quality of performance which he wished his trust to provide. During his lifetime, Mr. Spooner was a member of numerous Plymouth musical organizations, and he was active in promoting musical entertainment in Plymouth. The trust department of The Plymouth National Bank has been assisted in handling the many details in arranging for the concert by an advisory committee consisting of Philip S. Barnes, Harold Boyer and Alfred Volta.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 4 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT IN PLYMOUTH UNDER WILL

On Monday, Nov. 19 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an evening concert presented under the provisions of a trust set up under the will of James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth.

Mr. Spooner, who died in 1954, was an ardent music enthusiast and an active member of numerous musical organizations. He directed in his will that the income from a portion of his estate be used to provide free public concerts in Plymouth.

His will specifically referred to the Boston Symphony as an example of the quality of performance which he wished to have presented to the people of Plymouth.

The Plymouth National Bank, trustee under Mr. Spooner's will, has selected Thanksgiving week for the first concert. It is hoped that the concert can become an annual event each succeeding Thanksgiving week as an addition to the numerous local activities honoring the first Thanksgiving of the Pilgrims.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
OCT 6 1962

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of more than 100 pieces, is to come to Plymouth Nov. 19 and give a free concert in Memorial Building. It will do so under the terms of the will of James Spooner, who left a part of his fortune to be used to provide public concerts in Plymouth of the highest grade and specifically cited the Boston Symphony as an example of high quality.

Plymouth National Bank, trustee under terms of the Spooner will, will soon announce plans for distribution of tickets. There will be about 1,700 seats available. The complete cost will be paid from the Spooner fund and will total in excess of $7,000.

DESIGNS BOOTS

CONCERT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471

...n't What

...ing twenties, the Model ...henever repairs were ne... ...er, today's sleek miracles ...echanics using speciali... ...y's cars.

...get repair services ar... ...where factory-trained t... ...neers who desi... ...o designed it ar... ...atch jobs. Get... ...s; clean your... ...the carbureto... ...els; $7.50 or... ...battery c... ...uretor, and adj... ...eights.

...pooner Concert Set

(Continued from Page 1)

groups of young people, as his guests, to musical events in Boston and he made it possible for a number of young folks to get a musical education, by offering financial assistance.

Music Served

He also made provision for the enrichment of the musical program of the First Parish Church at regular Sunday services and occasional vesper concerts. His words, "It is my desire that the church shall have musicians of the highest order, so there will be a real contribution to music in Plymouth."

His home at 27 North Street, together with its contents, according to his will, were "to be preserved, maintained and used as relics of antiquity . . . to be known as the Spooner House."

The Plymouth Antiquarian Society owns and maintains the Spooner House as a museum open to the public during Summer months. It is a worthy addition to the museums of the town, showing a house occupied by one family for more than two centuries. It contained many fine examples of antique furniture, especially of the Queen Anne period.

1,700 Seats

Applications for some 1,700 free seats at the Nov. 19 concert were made available to Plymouth residents last week. They were quickly filled at four centrally located banks. The committee will mail tickets to applicants, on the first come, first served basis, as long as the supply lasts. Children under 12 were not allowed to make application and only two tickets will be sent to each family.

Cost of this initial program, an estimated $7,000, will be absorbed by the Spooner Public Concert Fund, Mr. Randall said.

—Standard-Times Special Photo

PLYMOUTH PLANNERS completing details for the appearance of Boston Symphony Orchestra, here Nov. 19, are, left to right, Alfred A. Volta, Charles H. Randall Jr., seated, and Harold A. Boyer. The musical treat, free to the first 1,700 who filed applications for tickets early this week is presented under the will of James Spooner Plymouth benefactor, who died in 1954. The performance marks the first annual concert, bring fine music to residents here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 4 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT IN PLYMOUTH UNDER WILL

On Monday, Nov. 19 the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an evening concert presented under the provisions of a trust set up under the will of James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth.

Mr. Spooner, who died in 1954, was an ardent music enthusiast and an active member of numerous musical organizations. He directed in his will that the income from a portion of his estate be used to provide free public concerts in Plymouth.

His will specifically referred to the Boston Symphony as an example of the quality of performance which he wished to have presented to the people of Plymouth.

The Plymouth National Bank, trustee under Mr. Spooner's will, has selected Thanksgiving week for the first concert. It is hoped that the concert can become an annual event each succeeding Thanksgiving week as an addition to the numerous local activities honoring the first Thanksgiving of the Pilgrims.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
NOV 19 1962

Plymouth Concert Set for Tonight

Special to The Standard-Times

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 19 — Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Memorial Hall concert at 8:30 tonight. Mr. Leinsdorf is the orchestra's musical director.

On the program are Milhaud's "Concerto for Viola and Orchestra," with Joseph de Pasquale, soloist; Mozart's "Symphony in C Major," Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and incidental music to "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn.

Approximately 1,700 free tickets have been distributed. The program is sponsored by the James Spooner Memorial Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
OCT 9 1962

* * *

The Plymouth National Bank, trustee under the will of James Spooner, announced that arrangements are being completed for the first free public concert to be given under the provisions of a trust set up by Mr. Spooner's will. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been engaged for this initial concert which will be held in Plymouth Memorial Hall at 8:30 P. M. on Nov. 19. The Boston Symphony under the brilliant leadership of its new director, Erich Leinsdorf, has received rave notices from New York music critics on its recent concert in New York's new Lincoln Center. It has long been outstanding among the world's great symphonic orchestras. James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth, provided in his will that the income from a portion of his estate be used to provide free public concerts in Plymouth and specifically referred to the Boston Symphony as an example of the quality of performance which he wished his trust to provide. During his lifetime, Mr. Spooner was a member of numerous Plymouth musical organizations, and he was active in promoting musical entertainment in Plymouth. The trust department of The Plymouth National Bank has been assisted in handling the many details in arranging for the concert by an advisory committee consisting of Philip S. Barnes, Harold Boyer and Alfred Volta.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
OCT 6 1962

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of more than 100 pieces, is to come to Plymouth Nov. 19 and give a free concert in Memorial Building. It will do so under the terms of the will of James Spooner, who left a part of his fortune to be used to provide public concerts in Plymouth of the highest grade and specifically cited the Boston Symphony as an example of high quality.

Plymouth National Bank, trustee under terms of the Spooner will, will soon announce plans for distribution of tickets. There will be about 1,700 seats available. The complete cost will be paid from the Spooner fund and will total in excess of $7,000.

RESIGNS POST

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

OCT 31 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451

NOV 19

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910

NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970

NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,172

OCT 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 16,711

NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954

NOV 19 1962

Hub Symphony To Give Concert In Plymouth

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make a rare appearance in Memorial Hall tonight in a Thanksgiving week concert sponsored by the late James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth.

In his will, Spooner directed that a portion of the estate income be used for a series of free public concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will direct the orchestra in a program of music by Mozart, Milhaud, Debussy and Mendelssohn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,371

NOV 21 1962

Spooner Concert Enchants Packed Audience of 2200

"Superb" was the general comment made Monday night by the audience of 2200 in Memorial Hall following the first James Spooner Concert, performed by the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The highly appreciative audience called the distinguished Conductor Erich Leinsdorf back three times at the conclusion of the hour and a half program.

Every seat in the hall, including those on the floor as well as the first and second balconies, was occupied. Previous demand for tickets was overwhelming according to statements made by the Spooner Concert Fund trustees.

The concert amply fullfilled its promise of being one of the greatest entertainments in the history of the town.

Ellis W. Brewster, director of the Plymouth National Bank which was made trustee under Mr. Spooner's will, made the introductory speech:

"I want to welcome you all to the first of the James Spooner concerts in Plymouth. Mr. Spooner would be delighted to see this large audience. It is just the sort of thing he hoped for.

"I speak to you as an old friend of Jimmy Spooner and for the Plymouth National Bank for whom as trustee under Mr. Spooner's will, is given the responsibility of these concerts.

"And in making the arrangements the bank wishes to acknowledge the great help of the committee, Philip S. Barnes, Harold A. Boyer and Alfred A. Volta.

(Continued on Page 6)

ERICH LEINSDORF, CONDUCTOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Thanks to him, a wonderful evening . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

"I cannot refrain from saying a word about James Spooner and his benefactions even though the subject is more adequately detailed in the little leaflet you have with your program written by Dr. Charles C. Forman. I hope you all read it fully as he (Mr. Spooner) did much for Plymouth and for all of us. In addition to the preservation of the Spooner House, he has also provided generously for music both at his church (First Parish, Unitarian) and at these public concerts.

"Beautiful music, musicians of the highest order," to use his expressions in his will were close to his heart. And it seemed that there could be no more fitting way to begin these concerts than with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which Mr. Spooner mentioned in particular.

"Therefore I turn the program over to them and present the conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Erich Leinsdorf."

The program included Mozart's' Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551; Milhaud's concerto for viola and orchestra with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist; Debussy's "Prelude to Afternoon of a Faun" and Mendelssohn's "Incidental Music to A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61.

The Plymouth audience, like the thousands of others who have listened to it since it was first played in 1788, were enchanted by the Mozart "Jupiter" symphony.

A special treat, perhaps not adequately appreciated, was Milhaud's viola concerto, beautifully played by Joseph de Pasquale of the orchestra. The acoustics of Memorial Hall, though they offered no problem to the full orchestra, were a little more than the viola alone could overcome.

Following Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" the program wound up with Mendelssohn's equally beloved "Incidental Music to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,'" the piece with the "Wedding March" as a fifth movement. The march, as expected, brought down the house.

Mr. Leinsdorf expressed himself as delighted with Plymouth's warm response to his orchestra's exquisite music. The new director of the Boston Symphony throughout most of his earlier career has been connected with European opera and the Met in New York.

The fee for the orchestra, according to the trustees of the James Spooner Public Concert Fund, was $6500, but other expenses will probably increase this figure to $7000-$7500.

Under the terms of the Spooner will income from a legacy of $200,000 is to be used for three purposes: 20 per cent to support the Spooner House, now maintained under Antiquarian Society auspices; 26⅔ per cent for free public musical programs of various kinds; and 53⅓ per cent for musical programs at the First Parish Church. Other free musical entertainments for Plymoutheans will be provided at intervals as income from the fund appreciates.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

NOV 19 1962

Symphony Tonight in Plymouth

PLYMOUTH—A capacity audience of 1700 people from the Plymouth area will enjoy a concert Monday night at Plymouth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert is free to the public, made possible through the will of James Spooner one of Plymouth's outstanding benefactors who desired that a portion of his $750,000 estate should be used "for the purposes of providing for and defraying the expenses of high grade public concerts in Plymouth to which the public shall be admitted without charge."

In his will Spooner has expressed the hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be brought to Plymouth from time to time as well as grand opera singers and other musicians of distinction.

Tonight's concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall is the first of a series of such music programs as expressed in the Spooner will.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
OCT 31 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
NOV

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,172
OCT 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 16,711
NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
NOV 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954
NOV 19 1962

Hub Symphony To Give Concert In Plymouth

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make a rare appearance in Memorial Hall tonight in a Thanksgiving week concert sponsored by the late James Spooner, a lifetime resident of Plymouth.

In his will, Spooner directed that a portion of the estate income be used for a series of free public concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will direct the orchestra in a program of music by Mozart, Milhaud, Debussy and Mendelssohn.

IMPORTED ORNA
AT 1:3

Hugh Maragby 10.00
Gill's Appliance Center 5.00
The Charm Shop 5.00
Pilgrim Society 5.00
A.L. Ellis Company 10.00
Plymouth Marine Railway 5.00
Bradley Pharmacy 5.00
Stevens the Florist 10.00

Total to Date $540.00

• Among kickoff contributors inadvertently omitted from initial list.

OLD COLONY MEMORIAL

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY at the Memorial Press, Inc., 21 Middle Street, Plymouth, Mass., U. S. A.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES are as follows:

by the year, $5.00; for six months, $2.50; three months, $1.50; single copies by mail, 10¢; at newsstands and by route boys, single copies, 5¢; yearly subscription price to those in the armed forces, $3.00.

Second Class Postage Paid at Plymouth, Mass.

Chris

Open T

(Thanksg

Concert Enchants 2200

ERICH LEINSDORF, CONDUCTOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Thanks to him, a wonderful evening . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

"I cannot refrain from saying a word about James Spooner and his benefactions even though the subject is more adequately detailed in the little leaflet you have with your program written by Dr. Charles C. Forman. I hope you all read it fully as he (Mr. Spooner) did much for Plymouth and for all of us. In addition to the preservation of the Spooner House, he has also provided generously for music both at his church (First Parish, Unitarian) and at these public concerts.

"Beautiful music, musicians of the highest order," to use his expressions in his will were close to his heart. And it seemed that there could be no more fitting way to begin these concerts than with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which Mr. Spooner mentioned in particular.

"Therefore I turn the program over to them and present the conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Erich Leinsdorf."

The program included Mozart's' Symphony No. 41, in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551; Milhaud's concerto for viola and orchestra with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist; Debussy's "Prelude to Afternoon of a Faun" and Mendelssohn's "Incidental Music to A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 61.

The Plymouth audience, like the thousands of others who have listened to it since it was first played in 1788, were enchanted by the Mozart "Jupiter" symphony.

A special treat, perhaps not adequately appreciated, was Milhaud's viola concerto, beautifully played by Joseph de Pasquale of the orchestra. The acoustics of Memorial Hall, though they offered no problem to the full orchestra, were a little more than the viola alone could overcome.

Following Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" the program wound up with Mendelssohn's equally beloved "Incidental Music to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,'" the piece with the "Wedding March" as a fifth movement. The march, as expected, brought down the house.

Mr. Leinsdorf expressed himself as delighted with Plymouth's warm response to his orchestra's exquisite music. The new director of the Boston Symphony throughout most of his earlier career has been connected with European opera and the Met in New York.

The fee for the orchestra, according to the trustees of the James Spooner Public Concert Fund, was $6500, but other expenses will probably increase this figure to $7000-$7500.

Under the terms of the Spooner will income from a legacy of $200,000 is to be used for three purposes: 20 per cent to support the Spooner House, now maintained under Antiquarian Society auspices; 26⅔ per cent for free public musical programs of various kinds; and 53⅓ per cent for musical programs at the First Parish Church. Other free musical entertainments for Plymouthians will be provided at intervals as income from the fund appreciates.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
NOV 19 1962

Symphony Tonight in Plymouth

PLYMOUTH—A capacity audience of 1700 people from the Plymouth area will enjoy a concert Monday night at Plymouth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert is free to the public, made possible through the will of James Spooner one of Plymouth's outstanding benefactors who desired that a portion of his $750,000 estate should be used "for the purposes of providing for and defraying the expenses of high grade public concerts in Plymouth to which the public shall be admitted without charge."

In his will Spooner has expressed the hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be brought to Plymouth from time to time as well as grand opera singers and other musicians of distinction.

Tonight's concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall is the first of a series of such music programs as expressed in the Spooner will.

TUESDAY 4

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 20, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

MILHAUD . . . . . Concerto for Viola and Orchestra

I. Animé
II. Lent
III. Souple et animé
IV. Vif

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93

I. Moderato
II. Allegro
III. Allegretto
IV. Andante; Allegro

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON 9

TY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Ninth Program

IDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 23, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 24, at 8:30 o'clock

HOENBERG ..... "Verklärte Nacht" ("Transfigured Night"), String Sextet, Op. 4, arranged for String Orchestra

ETLER ..... Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra

I. Maestoso; Allegro moderato
II. Lento
III. Allegro energico

Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER — Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI
Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG — Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67

I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro; Trio
IV. Allegro

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
NOV 24 1962

[521]

The Symphony

New Concerto A Modest Work

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Alvin Etler's new Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra, which had its first Boston performance at yesterday's Symphony concert, is a modest, competent and tidy work.

The composer, who now teaches at Smith College, has addressed himself to the solution of a distinct problem: translating the baroque concerto grosso into modern terms. The form of the concerto grosso consists of a body of solo voices, the 'concertino,' against the main orchestra, the 'ripieno.' Using flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn, Mr. Etler has produced a statement full of instrumental color and rhythmic ingenuity as his restyling of the tradition of Corelli and Vivaldi.

That he is not wholly successful seems to me due less to an able treatment of shiny sonorities and a harmonic texture shimmering on the edge of atonality; but rather, to our contemporary habits of listening. Thanks to the romantics, we are accustomed to expecting a more distinct identity from solo performers.

Although Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano represent the highest standard of orchestral virtuosity, Mr. Etler does not supply much contrast.

Solo Relief

In order to bring out the solo relief, the composer, at the suggestion of Mr. Leinsdorf, has eliminated the woodwinds from the tutti. Nevertheless, the separation is not marked enough. The most striking portions of the concerto fall, indeed, to the main orchestra: the steely harp glissandi of the finale, the jazz syncopations of bongo drums and plucked basses. It is possible to enjoy the score for a craftsmanlike handling of such elements of technique. The appearance of the wind chamber group rouses anticipations that are not fulfilled, however. Mr. Etler, a tall man with horn-rimmed glasses, a Shakespearian forehead and wavy gray-black hair, was on hand for a stage bow.

I'm afraid that Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht," has dated sadly since it was last presented at these concerts nearly 30 years ago. The historic importance of the score and its role in the development of the composer merit the revival after such a lapse. Alas, the result is almost purely of antiquarian interest.

Little Contrast

Schoenberg, of course, wrote originally for six instruments, and orchestral magnification does not improve the youthful, ardent post-romantic music. One can hear several influences: the endless chromaticism of Wagner, Strauss-ian chords, the balances of Mahler. Enchanted night, in this derivative context, becomes a long day's journey. Scarcely a ripple of contrast disturbs the continuous development. The profound feelings of the people wandering about in the cold moonlight deny the audience that most therapeutic of night's qualities, sleep.

Mr. Leinsdorf's conception of the Bethoven Fifth is splendidly classic. After the "Eroica," which he presented earlier in the season, it now becomes apparent that his approach to the composer demands flawless articulation and precision; he is cutting away the romantic swaddling around the Beethoven image of the theatrical conductors.

This places the emphasis on the right subject. The danger is obvious; such scrupulous stress on proportion may tend to diminish the heroic. There was nothing flashy about yesterday's performance of the Fifth. The phraseology of every movement was enunciated with extreme care, and the orchestra displayed a luminous transparency of phrase.

Yet Mr. Leinsdorf made it sound incisive and forceful, too. I like the way in which the vivid and brisk tempos heightened the mood and tension, since Beethoven is no less sublime for being direct and clear. In an otherwise dullish concert, here was the highlight.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, returning Dec. 7 and 8 under Mr. Burgin. The associate conductor has scheduled Stravinsky's "Le Baiser de la Fee" divertimento, and Mahler's Symphony No. 4, in G. major, with Virginia Babikian as the soprano soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
NOV 21 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
NOV 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
NOV 18 1962

Revised Etler Concerto Scheduled by Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present first Boston performances of Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15, and Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, French horn, all first desk players of the Orchestra, to be soloists.

Etler is professor of composition at Smith College. His concerto received its world premiere earlier this Autumn by the Japan Philharmonic, and its American premiere by the New York Philharmonic Oct. 25. Since these performances, and in consultation with Leinsdorf, Etler has revised the score with particular emphasis on the balance between orchestra and soloists. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the first performance of the revised version.

Also to be heard at these concerts will be Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht" ("Transfigured Night"), String Sextet, Op. 24, arranged for string orchestra, and Beethoven's Symphony No 5.

Monday Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an evening concert in Plymouth presented under the provisions of a trust created by the will of James Spooner, a lifelong resident of Plymouth. Spooner's will directed that a portion of the income from his estate be used for a series of free public concerts in Plymouth. He considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra an example of the quality of performance he wished to have presented.

The program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, Milhaud's Viola Concerto with Joseph de Pasquale soloist; Debussy's "Prelude to The Afternoon of a Faun"; and the Suite of Incidental Music from "A Midsummer Night's Dream", by Mendelssohn.

The concert Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall conducted by Leinsdorf, will include the Milhaud Viola Concerto. Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's prihcipal violist, will be soloist. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10 also will be heard.

BOSTON 9

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 23, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 24, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHOENBERG . . . . . "Verklärte Nacht" ("Transfigured Night"), String Sextet, Op. 4, arranged for String Orchestra

ETLER . . . . . Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra

I. Maestoso; Allegro moderato
II. Lento
III. Allegro energico

Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER — Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI
Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG — Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67

I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro; Trio
IV. Allegro

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
NOV 24 1962

The Symphony

New Concerto A Modest Work

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Alvin Etler's new Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra, which had its first Boston performance at yesterday's Symphony concert, is a modest, competent and tidy work.

The composer, who now teaches at Smith College, has addressed himself to the solution of a distinct problem: translating the baroque concerto grosso into modern terms. The form of the concerto grosso consists of a body of solo voices, the "concertino," against the main orchestra, the "ripieno." Using flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn, Mr. Etler has produced a statement full of instrumental color and rhythmic ingenuity as his restyling of the tradition of Corelli and Vivaldi.

That he is not wholly successful seems to me due less to unstable treatment of tonal sonorities and a harmonic texture shimmering on the edge of atonality, but rather, to our contemporary habits of listening. Thanks to the romantics, we are accustomed to expecting a more distinct identity from solo performers.

Although Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano represent the highest standard of orchestral virtuosity, Mr. Etler does not supply much contrast.

Solo Relief

In order to bring out the solo relief, the composer, at the suggestion of Mr. Leinsdorf, has eliminated the woodwinds from the tutti. Nevertheless, the separation is not marked enough. The most striking passions of the concerto fall, indeed, to the main orchestra: the steely harp glissandi of the finale, the jazz syncopations of bongo drums and plucked basses. It is possible to enjoy the score for a craftsmanlike handling of such elements of technique. The appearance of the wind chamber group rouses anticipations that are not fulfilled, however. Mr. Etler, a tall man with horn-rimmed glasses, a Shakespearean forehead and wavy gray hair, was on hand for ... that Schoenberg's ... Nacht," has dated ... was last presented ... nearly 30 years ago. The historic importance of the score and its role in the development of the composer merit the revival after such a lapse. Alas, the result is almost purely of antiquarian interest.

Little Contrast

Schoenberg, of course, wrote ...

post-romantic music. One can hear several influences: the endless chromaticism of Wagner, Strauss-ian chords, the balances of Mahler. Enchanted night, in this derivative context, becomes a long day's journey. Scarcely a ripple of contrast disturbs the continuous development. The profound feelings of the people wandering about in the cold moonlight deny the audience that most therapeutic of night's qualities, sleep.

Mr. Leinsdorf's conception of the Bethoven Fifth is splendidly classic. After the "Eroica," which he presented earlier in the season, it now becomes apparent that his approach to the composer demands flawless articulation and precision; he is cutting away the romantic swaddling around the Beethoven image of the theatrical conductor.

This places the emphasis on the right subject. The danger is obvious; such scrupulous stress on proportion may tend to diminish the heroic. There was nothing flashy about yesterday's performance of the Fifth. The phraseology of every movement was enunciated with extreme care, and the orchestra displayed a luminous transparency of phrase.

Yet Mr. Leinsdorf made it sound incisive and forceful, too. I like the way in which the vivid and brisk tempos heightened the mood and tension, since Beethoven is no less sublime for being correct and clear. In an otherwise stylish concert, here was the highlight.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, returning Dec. 7 and 8 under Mr. Burgin. The associate conductor has scheduled Stravinsky's "Le Baiser de la Fee" divertimento, and Mahler's Symphony No. 4, in G major, with ...

Herald (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
NOV 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
NOV 18 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
NOV 17 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
NOV 18 1962

Revised Etler Concerto Scheduled by Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present first Boston performances of Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15, and Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, French horn, all first desk players of the Orchestra, to be soloists.

Etler is professor of composition at Smith College. His concerto received its world premiere earlier this Autumn by the Japan Philharmonic, and its American premiere by the New York Philharmonic Oct. 25. Since these performances, and in consultation with Leinsdorf, Etler has revised the score with particular emphasis on the balance between orchestra and soloists. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the first performance of the revised version.

Also to be heard at these concerts will be Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht" ("Transfigured Night"), String Sextet, Op. 24, arranged for string orchestra, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

Monday Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give an evening concert in Plymouth presented under the provisions of a trust created by the will of James Spooner, a lifelong resident of Plymouth. Spooner's will directed that a portion of the income from his estate be used for a series of free public concerts in Plymouth. He considered the Boston Symphony Orchestra an example of the quality of performance he wished to have presented.

The program will include Mozart's Symphony No. 41, Milhaud's Viola Concerto with Joseph de Pasquale soloist; Debussy's "Prelude to The Afternoon of a Faun"; and the Suite of Incidental Music from "A Midsummer Night's Dream", by Mendelssohn.

The concert Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall conducted by Leinsdorf, will include the Milhaud Viola Concerto. Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal violist, will be soloist. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10 also will be heard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
NOV 29 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

B.S.O.: ETLER WIND CONCERTO

Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra was the new work on last week's agenda. It would probably, on first listening, have sounded like lively stuff in its own right. But in light of the restraint that characterized and ultimately plagued the other two numbers on the program, Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht" and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the Etler composition appeared especially fresh and resourceful.

Inspired by the baroque concerto grosso form, the solo quintet is the concertino, consisting of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn; the ripieno is the full orchestra. As with baroque performances, the solo performers are placed to the fore. Whether by inadvertency or by design, however, the contrast between soloists and orchestra was considerably less discernible than one would have expected. It may be that a very full modern orchestra makes it impossible to execute the concerto grosso idea with whole success.

The idiom was biting and reasonably dissonant and the quintet writing intricately though deftly fused. The soloists, Mrs. Dwyer and Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano, all played with the aplomb and facility to be expected of the first desk players that they are. Mr. Etler, who is professor of Composition at Smith College, was on hand to share in the applause.

I have already noted on previous occasions that Mr. Leinsdorf is unhurried in his performances. Up to now this has been an unquestionable asset in arriving at interpretations which have been spacious in concept and beautifully wrought in detail. There is an inherent risk, though, that in this leisured probing and refining, the spark that will cause a performance to catch fire may flicker out.

Such was what befell both the Schoenberg and the Beethoven pieces. As for the former, although the harmonic clashes occasioned by the contrapuntal writing are often rather daring even in today's terms, this essay in expressionism has a quite limited range of ideas. Nor does a string orchestra as an instrumental entity bear up indefinitely. After a while the deliberateness and sheer passage of time drove out much of whatever interest the piece holds. And as for the Beethoven, the slow pace — unmistakably apparent even with the first four notes — robbed the first three movements of the tautness and propulsiveness so vital to the nobility of affirmation which this magnificent old masterpiece so marvelously embodies. That in all other respects the performances of both works were magnificent is therefore somwhat beside the point.

I realize, of course, that deliberateness of approach is said to be a hallmark of the central European conducting tradition in contrast, say, to the more mercurial notions of the French or the driving quality of the Italian. Yet a Steinberg, a Szell or a Reiner — all nurtured in central Europe — never seem called upon to answer the charge of over-deliberateness; nor until this concert, did Mr. Leinsdorf himself. Hence I choose to think that the two readings in question were passing aberrations.

This week the orchestra is away on a tour of Connecticut and New York. Mr. Burgin takes over again for the next two weeks. His December 7-8 programs include Stravinsky's "Le Baiser de la Fee" and Mahler's Fourth Symphony, with Virginia Babikian as soprano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
NOV 24 1962

Classical Grandeur From Leinsdorf and Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the ninth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, conducted "Verklaerte Nacht," by Schoenberg; Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra (first Boston performance), and the Symphony No. 5, in C minor, by Beethoven.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony quite likely is entering upon a new Golden Age, what I suspect may be termed one of Classical Grandeur. It will be quite different from the tonal incandescence and the personal interpretive aspects of the Koussevitzky era, the transparent Gallic sound and the driving passion of the Munch period.

Evidence has accumulated this Autumn to suggest that Erich Leinsdorf is probably the most profound musical scholar since Karl Muck among the Orchestra's conductors. All that he has accomplished in his transformation of technical efficiency, especially in the string sections; in effectiveness of ensemble and the sheer tone quality, has seemed to be based upon a sense of historical fitness, past and present, and to be governed by the hallowed virtue of moderation.

That, in sum, indicates classic grandeur, and of it we had a most impressive demonstration yesterday. Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht" is late Romantic in expressive manner and harmonic vocabulary, somewhat neurotic in its underlying emotional febrility. Alvin Etler's new Concerto is forceful in an academic-mechanistic idiom. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is a battered though not tattered classic of early Romanticism, become stale through over-playing and distortion. Each of these works yesterday was turned out with exemplary care, polish and restraint.

Schoenberg and Beethoven, each in a different way, even a different character of sound, proved the remarkable alteration in the Boston Symphony strings. Schoenberg's counterpoint was clear as glass, Beethoven's dynamic pages crisp and healthy. Expressive proportion was exact. Schoenberg and his emotional sweep received appropriate stress, no more. Not even the color of string tone was voluptuary.

All was sculptural perfection in Beethoven, nothing added save the instrumental doubling now generally considered wise, and in it Leinsdorf follows the guidance of Weingartner, a model of Beethoven perfection. No slowings-down or speedings-up, save those marked in the score. The result was much renewed power in this abused work.

All this further suggests a high practicality in Leinsdorf as orchestral executant. He is thoroughly practical, even if some of his gestures yesterday, by his hands-without-baton, appeared to have little relation to the accepted grammar of conducting. But if his method works, then it is practical.

The man in O-28 asked his companion why should a man put all that time and effort into composing such a Concerto as Alvin Etler has written? Etler's five wind instruments, a sort of storm-tossed concertino in the gale of blasts and crashes from the main orchestra, were kept mercilessly busy. What the composer asks them to produce might be the sonorities of a hive of mutant, giant bees.

The public is not going to buy this type of mechanistic music. Some musicians will find its effect interesting, such as the quick-speaking required of orchestral brass in the first movement. Other musicians will find it deft in academic points of structure. Still others will find it mostly dull, as did I.

Soloists Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; James Stagliano, horn; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Gino Cioffi, clarinet, gave of their glorious best, and were applauded. So was Leinsdorf, so was the Orchestra, so was composer Etler, who appeared on stage. But who wants to hear the Concerto a second time? Speak up now!

Next week the Orchestra will be away on tour. At Symphony Hall, Dec. 7 and 8, Richard Burgin will conduct Stravinsky's Divertimento from "Le Baiser de la Fee," and Mahler's Symphony No. 4, with Virginia Babikian soprano soloist.

NEW YORK TOUR 2. 61

HARTFORD I

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

NOV 11 1962

Boston Symphony Here on Nov. 26 For Third Symphony Series Event

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the third concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series at 8:15 p.m. Nov. 26.

Charles Munch's successor as music director of the orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, will conduct a program or works by Mzart and Brahms.

Long rated in the top three of the New World's symphony orchestras, the Boston ensemble of 101 players has been a favorite in Hartford since its first concerts here in the 1890s. It has performed more often and to more people in Hartford than any other unit since the opening of the Bushnell in 1930. It has been presented at least once each year, and often twice, as will be the case this season.

Dr. Leinsdorf is not a stranger to the Bushnell, where he last conducted the Rochester Philharmonic in 1950 and 1952. A native of Vienna, the 50-years-old conductor obtained his first musical education there, and in his early twenties he started his professional career as assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. In 1943 he was named permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra but almost immediately he wes called to serve in the U.S. Army. After the war he became permanent conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic, holding the post until 1957 when he was appointed music consultant and conductor at the Metropolitan Opera. He left this post when named to succeed the retiring Munch.

For his Bushnell program Dr. Leinsdorf has selected: Mozart's final symphony, the C major, also known as the "Jupiter;" Brahms' Quartet in G minor for Piano and Strings as transcribed for full orchestra by Arnold Schonberg.

A limited number of tickets are now on sale at the Bushnell.

Doors Open 1:45 pm • Last Feature 9:20 pm

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

NOV 18 1962

Leinsdorf Here On Nov. 26 with Boston Symphony

Mozart's final symphony, known as the "Jupiter," and a Brahms work originally written for piano and strings but transcribed for full orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Bushnell Memorial, Nov. 26 at 8:30 p.m. Dr. Erich Leinsdorff will conduct the concert in his first local appearance as new music director of the orchestra.

The upcoming performance will be the third in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series. A limited number of tickets are available.

Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, which has been heard but infrequently in Hartford in recent decades, has been described as the best of "the three supreme symphonies of the summer of 1788, the last that Mozart was destined to write." The "Jupiter" was committed to paper with astounding speed during July and August, at a time when the amazing composer's finances were in their most distressing state.

The Brahms work selected by Dr. Leinsdorf is the Quartet in G minor for piano and strings, in four movements, which has been transcribed for orchestra by Schoenberg.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108

NOV 26 1962

Boston Symphony At Bushnell Tonight

The 101-member Boston Symphony will be presented on the Bushnell Memorial stage tonight at 8:15 with Erich Leinsdorf conducting his first concert here as new music director of the ensemble. This concert will be third in the current Bushnell series, which has already brought the French National Orchestra with Lorin Maazel and the Detroit Symphony with Paul Paray. Dr. Leinsdorf's program will include the Mozart "Jupiter" symphony and the Brahms Quartet in G minor for piano and strings as transcribed for full orchestra by Arnold Scheoenberg. A limited number of tickets are available.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

NOV 26 1962

Boston Symphony Concert Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting his first local concert as its new music director, will be presented at the Bushnell Memorial tonight (8:15).

Dr. Leinsdorf has selected works by Mozart and Brahms for his program, the third in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

A limited number of tickets are available at the box office.

The Boston Symphony, long rated among the world's first orchestras, has been a favorite in Hartford since its earliest concerts here in the 1890's.

It has performed at least once, and often twice, in each season since the Bushnell Memorial opened its doors in 1930.

Most of its concerts in the past quarter-century have been conducted by Koussevitzky or Charles Munch, now retired, although there have been numerous prominent guest conductors.

* * *

DR. LEINSDORF is not a newcomer to Bushnell audiences; he conducted the Rochester Philharmonic here in concerts a decade ago.

Born in Vienna 50 years ago, he received his early music education there, and while still in his early 20s he served as assistant in conducting to Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter.

Named conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1943, he left almost immediately to serve in the U. S. Army; on discharge, he was named permanent conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic, remaining with the group until 1957 when he was made conductor and music consultant at the Metropolitan Opera.

* * *

DR. LEINSDORF has selected two outstanding works of the classical repertory, "Mozart's final symphony, the "Jupiter," and the Brahms Quartet in G minor for piano and strings as transcribed for full orchestra by Arnold Schonberg.

WIDEM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

NOV 25 1962

Leinsdorf Bows In Hartford Monday As Conductor of Boston Symphony

Hartford will welcome the Boston Symphony, under a new conductor Monday night when Erich Leinsdorf brings the 101 members of his famous ensemble to the Bushnell Memorial. The concert will be the third in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, and is scheduled to start at 8:15 p.m. A limited number of tickets will be available at the box office.

Dr. Leinsdorf will be making his first Hartford appearance in a decade when he bows to his audience. He last performed here in 1950 and 1952 as conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic. In the interim, after remaining in Rochester until 1957, he moved to the Metropolitan Opera Company as music consultant and conductor, leaving New York for Boston upon the retirement of Charles Munch a few months ago.

Two great works in the literature of music have been selected by Dr. Leinsdorf for Monday's concert. Mozart's final symphony, completed two years before his death, the "Jupiter," will make up the first half of the program. The second half will bring Brahms' Quartet in G minor for Piano and Strings as transcribed for full orchestra by Arnold Schoenberg. Each work runs close to three-quarters of an hour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

NOV 24 1962

Leinsdorf Will Show New Boston Symphony

UNDER its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is acknowledged to have reached new heights.

At the time of the dedication of the new Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center, the manager of another major orchestra, who asked that his name not be disclosed, said that the Boston performance had fairly lifted him from his seat.

* * *

"UNDER MUNCH, also a great musician," he said, "Boston reached a mellow perfection which was always a delight. But with Leinsdorf in charge, the men seemed to have been galvanized to great heights. Your Bushnell audience (Monday) is in for a simply wonderful evening."

For the Bushnell concert Leinsdorf has chosen a work never before played in Hartford, the Brahms Quartet No. 25, as orchestrated by Schoenberg. This work, which Leinsdorf calls the "Brahms Fifth" will be preceded by one of the imperishable classics of the concert hall, Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the beautiful "Jupiter."

* * *

ROSS PARMENTER in the New York Times said:

ERICH LEINSDORF

"Mr. Leinsdorf . . . tends in slower passages to let sound arise out of silence and to shape it as it emerges. When speed and tension are needed, he achieves them by an almost whiplash precision of movement.

"It is obvious too that clarity is one of his musical ideals. . . . The orchestra played with a tonal transparency that was new . . . ."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
NOV 27 1962

In Review

Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony

By GEORGE W. STOWE

No stranger to Hartford, Erich Leinsdorf made his first appearance here as the newly appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Bushnell.

In an unorthodox program that juxtaposed Mozart's familiar "Jupiter" Symphony against a Schoenberg transcription for orchestra of one of Brahm's chamber works, this concert proved, for one thing, that Mr. Leinsdorf is no slavish follower of tradition.

* * *

THE MOZART performance immediately established the fact that this famed orchestra is producing a different sound under its new conductor. The string tone is leaner and considerably more mercurial, the attacks are crisper, and the articulation is cleaner.

In short, the reading was classical to the core, which should have been pleasing to the purists. Personally, I prefer a little more pathos than Mr. Leinsdorf brought to the second movement, something the late Bruno Walter always summoned forth from his players.

Otherwise this was an exemplary performance. The finale, which one astute critic referred to as a "brilliant rondo with four themes," came off beautifully last night, a model of transparency.

* * *

ARNOLD SCHOENBERG'S reworking of Brahms' Piano Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) for full orchestra was something of a novelty to me. It is similar in style to this 20th Century composer's transcriptions of the Bach chorale preludes.

In other words, this was Schoenberg in his most effulgent post-romantic style. Anyone who had expected a musical essay in dissonant atonalism was disappointed because this was definitely something that had its antecedents in Mahler and Bruckner.

I can imagine that the composer had a lot of fun concocting this grandiloquent setting for full orchestra, particularly in the finale, which is full of Magyar flavor. Schoenberg could not resist the temptation to throw all the orchestral resources into this finale.

* * *

BRAHMS fortunately gave Schoenberg a great wealth of thematic material, notably in the first and third movements, and it is exploited to the hilt in this transcription.

Everyone, including both the players and the audience, seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely and Mr. Leinsdorf was greeted with a storm of applause at the conclusion of this most unusual and gratifying program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
NOV 27 1962 1

Leinsdorf And Boston Heard Here

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the memorial auditorium Monday night. The program:

Symphony No. 41 . . . . . Mozart
Quartet for Piano and Strings . . . Brahms-Schoenberg

Erich Leinsdorf's entry into Hartford as conductor of the Boston Symphony certainly seemed to be a triumph as far as the Bushnell audience was concerned last night.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave the customers a performance that was big and shiny, and interpretations of Mozart and Brahms - Schoenberg enriched with emotional Vitamin D. It all apparently reminded everybody of the zestful, lusty music of the late, great Serge Koussevitzky, and they thanked Mr. Leinsdorf loud and long for the memories.

The Boston's new leader is not a very large man, but you'd never know it from the great gestures with which he conducts. He uses no baton and so has both hands free to carve the shape and portent of the music on the air, which—far more than beating time—is his intent. He sweeps, he swings, he swims and clutches, and he points his finger like a pistol at the head of the orchestra to get what he wants. Plenty of body - English and a touch of the twist keep him conducting all over. Still, it produces results, and when we get more used to it, we probably won't even notice it any more.

Adventure For Everyone

Last night was full of adventures for everyone. Before the concert, the orchestra sat on a gloom-shrouded stage, and the customers were making book as to whether something was wrong with the lights, or whether it represented some idiocyncracy of the new conductor. Then just as Mr. Leinsdorf was about to give the first beat (the lights were up by this time), the distinct sound of a radio playing seeped in from the wings. After the first movement of the Mozart, when the hall was relighted for latecomers, Mr. Leinsdorf waited patiently for them to dim. But they did not, until the music was already under way again. and finally, in a red-hot pizzicato passage of the Brahms, cellist Samuel Mayes broke a string and there was the ever-fascinating business of handing up a new instrument, and giving first aid to the victim one.

And besides all this, there was the music. Though Mr. Leinsdorf has reconverted the orchestra from the French style of his predecessor Charles Munch, he still shared one of the latter's characteristics in reading the Mozart "Jupiter." After a pedantic first movement, he began fussing over the rest of the score until I for one had difficulty identifying what I was hearing. The interpretation was a search for over-effectiveness, as far as I was concerned, and it made me worry and fidget.

Till the Cows Come Home

There are people who can doubtless listen to Brahms until the cows come home. But in Schoenberg's arrangement of the Quartet for Piano and Strings, the cows came home early last night. The arrangement is a doubling in spades of all of Brahms' orchestral devices and musical idioms, and where one might admire the skill with which Schoenberg gave his imitation one might have admired his discretion more had he skipped the whole business. Or had Schoenberg inserted a little more of his own brand of writing, it might have been an antidote to what now is a thick and suffocating exercise conveying little of the true music of the original Opus 25.

However, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave it all a bang-up performance, and the audience seemed quite happy to accept it as Brahms' Fifth Symphony. Brahms' reply may be a little late getting here.

T.H.P.

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Circ. 18,289
NOV 28 1962

Ovation Establishes New Boston Symphony Conductor

By MARJORIE C. TOWER

Never have I hard a heartier ovation than that accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, by a capacity audience at Bushnell Memorial in Hartford Monday evening. For decades Hartford concert-goers have felt an affection for the Boston Symphony and have followed its distinguished conductors with fondness as well as admiration. There is no question but that the devotees are now more than certain that Mr. Leinsdorf has the stature and the command to succeed Koussevitzky and Charles Munche. That is what the ovation meant.

Mr. Leinsdorf is a man of moderate size, mostly head, body and arms. Born in Vienna in 1912, he became assistant to Bruno Walter and Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival at the age of 22. He has arrived as the permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony by way of the Cleveland Orchestra, the U. S. Army, as guest conductor of many famous orchestras, nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic, and conductor at the Metropolitan Opera.

Using no baton, Mr. Leinsdorf manages magnificently to convey his designs with extended arms and graceful but exact use of his hands. As one musician said, "He's no time-beater." Most of the time his gestures are not spectacular, but at the final, resounding climax in the Brahms even Sir Thomas Beecham would have conveted his dynamic, physical exclamation point.

The printed program looked simple: only Mozart's Symphony No. 41, the "Jupiter"; and Brahms' Quartet for piano and strings, arranged for orchestra by Arnold Schonberg.

With the customary reduced orchestra for Mozart, the conductor magically transformed the frequently - heard, but eternal masterpiece, into a fresh and lovelier structure. It was precise, but with a singing sweetness beyond anything in memory. The andante cantabile, with its surging syncopation and its choice complexities of runs and countermelodies, contained a phrase ending with a little flute sally, beautiful beyond compare, played by the woman flautist. With such a dayspring of simplicity the entire work evolved. The very literate audience knew that, musically, nothing in the world is as difficult and as rare as perfection in Mozart. And here it was.

Altogether different was the Brahms. Here a work, originally for four instruments, had been grandiosely arranged for the complete equipment of a modern orchestra, including cymbals and xylophone. About everything but the piano. In four movements lovers of Brahms could revel in his charactistic harmonies, emotionally warm to hot. To me, the most memorable movements were the Andante con moto, massive with singing 'cello melodies, and the strong, Germanic sound of the brass choir; and the "Rondo alla Zingarese". In this final movement, the impetuous, decisive Czardas - type of dance vied with other dance forms and a spinning song. As each section essayed the fleet step in turn, violins, of course, then 'cellos, violas, and even the trombones, enthusiasm boiled over. The ovation, always generously shared by conductor with the orchestra, was titanic, full of joy at the thought of similar concerts for the years to come.

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
NOV 28 1962

Leinsdorf And Boston Heard Here

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the memorial auditorium Monday night. The program:

Symphony No. 41 . . . . . Mozart
Quartet for Piano and Strings . . . Brahms-Schoenberg

Erich Leinsdorf's entry into Hartford as conductor of the Boston Symphony certainly seemed to be a triumph as far as the Bushnell audience was concerned last night.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave the customers a performance that was big and shiny, and interpretations of Mozart and Brahms - Schoenberg enriched with emotional Vitamin D. It all apparently reminded everybody of the zestful, lusty music of the late, great Serge Koussevitzky, and they thanked Mr. Leinsdorf loud and long for the memories.

The Boston's new leader is not a very large man, but you'd never know it from the great gestures with which he conducts. He uses no baton and so has both hands free to carve the shape and portent of the music on the air, which—far more than beating time—is his intent. He sweeps, he swings, he swims and clutches, and he points his finger like a pistol at the head of the orchestra to get what he wants. Plenty of body - English and a touch of the twist keep him conducting all over. Still, it produces results, and when we get more used to it, we probably won't even notice it any more.

Adventure For Everyone

Last night was full of adventures for everyone. Before the concert, the orchestra sat on a gloom-shrouded stage, and the customers were making book as to whether something was wrong with the lights, or whether it represented some idiosyncrasy of the new conductor. Then just as Mr. Leinsdorf was about to give the first beat (the lights were up by this time), the distinct sound of a radio playing seeped in from the wings. After the first movement of the Mozart, when the hall was relighted for latecomers, Mr. Leinsdorf waited patiently for them to dim. But they did not, until the music was already under way again. and finally, in a red-hot pizzicato passage of the Brahms, cellist Samuel Mayes broke a string and there was the ever-fascinating business of handing up a new instrument, and giving first aid to the victim one.

And besides all this, there was the music. Though Mr. Leinsdorf has reconverted the orchestra from the French style of his predecessor Charles Munch, he still shared one of the latter's characteristics in reading the Mozart "Jupiter." After a pedantic first movement, he began fussing over the rest of the score until I for one had difficulty identifying what I was hearing. The interpretation was a search for over-effectiveness, as far as I was concerned, and it made me worry and fidget.

Till the Cows Come Home

There are people who can doubtless listen to Brahms until the cows come home. But in Schoenberg's arrangement of the Quartet for Piano and Strings, the cows came home early last night. The arrangement is a doubling in spades of all of Brahms' orchestral devices and musical idioms, and where one might admire the skill with which Schoenberg gave his imitation one might have admired his discretion more had he skipped the whole business. Or had Schoenberg inserted a little more of his own brand of writing, it might have been an antidote to what now is a thick and suffocating exercise conveying little of the true music of the original Opus 25.

However, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave it all a bang-up performance, and the audience seemed quite happy to accept it as Brahms' Fifth Symphony. Brahms' reply may be a little late getting here.

T.H.P.

[627]

NEW LONDON

63

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 29,197

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 28,195
NOV 2 2 1962

Boston Symphony In City Concert

NEW LONDON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its annual appearance in New London next Tuesday night in the second subscription concert of the 1962-63 Connecticut College Concert series. The orchestra will be under the direction of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The world-famous musical organization was headed by Charles Munch from 1949 until his retirement last year.

For its New London program, the Boston Symphony has chosen to play three standard works from the concert repertory: the Suite from Mendelssohn's Incidental Music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, Debussy's Prelude to The Afternoon of a Faun, and the Symphony No. 5 by Beethoven.

The concert will take place in Palmer auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 29,197
NOV 2 8 1962

Erich Leinsdorf Leads The Boston Symphony

By WILLIAM MEREDITH

For some years now the annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has marked the official, and often the actual high-point of New London's musical season. Its appearance last night at Palmer Auditorium had been awaited with more than usual interest as the first since the appointment of a new conductor and musical director. Admirers of the historic orchestra may rest easy.

Erich Leinsdorf, who came to the Boston after conducting some of the world's great orchestras and following some considerable achievements at the Metropolitan Opera, left no doubt, except in the matter of programming, that he is a fit successor to Munch, Koussevitsky and the other leaders who have shaped and attuned this mellow and sensitive instrument.

The program got under way musically speaking, with the second work, Debussy's Afternoon of a Fawn. It was played with a wide range of sonority. The fastidiousness of Leinsdorf's phrasing (which had served only to expose the poverty of musical imagination in the Mendelssohn piece that began the concert) revealed the originality of this familiar work of the impressionist master.

The conductor singled out the flute and the harps for applause, but the seamless ensemble which is the Boston Symphony was the real hero. The sensuous tonality of the strings was as much responsible for the success of the piece as the talented instrumentalists who carried the special parts.

The second half of the program consisted of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. The striking quality of last night's reading of this great symphony was its warmth. Without any romantic distortions of tempo or dynamics, Maestro Leinsdorf gave the work a fresh and natural lyricism. It is a composition that makes particular demands of the famous string section of the orchestra, and to the opening movement and the following andante this section brought a rich lyric quality.

The third movement was characterized by a delicacy and mystery, and by very gentle dynamics, so that the finale was set off with brilliance but without the brassy, martial effect that it is sometimes mistakenly given to achieve contrast. All in all this was a performance of unusual directness and feeling, with a simplicity that represented deep musical understanding.

The program had opened—and this is an error that New London audiences are beginning to be touchy about—with an old and outsize chestnut that belongs either in the seminars of a music conservatory, where they study errors of the past, or in the aisles of a supermarket, where its banal repetitious patterns might seem cheerful.

In neither case, though, would Mendelssohn's Overture and Incidental Music to A Midsummer Night's Dream merit the attention of the conductor, musicians or audience that it detained for a long half hour last night.

The work is a bore, and to play it as articulately as the orchestra played it last night is probably to make bad matters worse: when the batonless maestro took it in his skilled bare hands, the pretentious parts became eloquently pretentious, the coy parts unbearably coy.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 28,195
NOV 2 6 1962

Boston Symphony Concert Tuesday

NEW LONDON — Erich Leinsdorf, former music consultant and conductor of the Metropolitan Opera company, will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert at Palmer auditorium, Connecticut college, at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday.

It will be the second subscription concert of the season and the annual presentation of the Boston symphony.

Leinsdorf was appointed conductor last year replacing Charles Munch, who retired.

The program Tuesday is The Suite from Mendelssohn's Incisental Music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, Debussy's Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun, Beethowen's Symphony No. 5.

Recollections of 'Capricious Singers' Make Leinsdorf Happy in Present Job

By LORETTA LEONE, Day Staff Writer

Conducting in opera is "a great deal of fun," but "the symphony orchestra enables the conductor to make music without compromise."

Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night mused on his transition from conductor at the Metropolitan Opera Company to the Boston group before his first performance in Connecticut College's concert series.

He said enthusiastically that he is enjoying his work with the symphony orchestra "much better" than as conductor at the Met.

'Capricious Singers'

"There is no musical compromise which is brought about, in opera, from capricious singers," he said.

Opera singers today can be quite independent, Leinsdorf indicated, due to what he referred to as a "new pattern" which has developed.

"Perhaps two crews of singers serve ten opera houses," he said. They travel to opera houses from Chicago to Milan, Italy. "They are quite indispensable," he said.

Of course, Leinsdorf noted, opera singers probably think conductors are capricious.

"It's just a natural result of age-old contrasts in artistic life," he said.

The 50-year old man, who began his career in music as a pianist about 30 years ago in his native Vienna, said the program of a symphony orchestra offers much more to the conductor because of its diversity.

"There are many changes of reportory and many, many rehearsals," Leinsdorf said. "For the conductor, the rehearsal is a pre-condition of a good performance."

Musicians are able and willing to rehearse. And they want to, he said. About the Boston Symphony members their new leader said—

"I admire them greatly — First, their mentality, and also their entire attitude toward the organization."

The unit, he said, is notable fo its lack of strife. This is not s in many of the orchestras, h added.

"Everything is open books wit the Boston orchestra. I think a important reason is that th people who run the orchestra wan fine music first, not to wield un limited power."

Erich Leinsdorf is a man sma in stature and in build. He i bald in monk-like fashion and hi roughhewn face is marked b

Please Turn to Page

Leinsdorf Is Happy in Present Job

Continued from Page 1

dark eyes and deep side character lines.

He speaks in moderate tones and when his fine hands gesture, they do so moderately.

He is a friendly man with a broad smile. He almost looks like anybody you might see on the street, but he isn't.

His versatile career in music has spanned Europe and the United States, where he has conducted in opera, at the famous summer music festivals and for symphony orchestras, including being permanent conductor for the Rochester Symphony.

When he is not thinking about music or conducting it, Leinsdorf spends his time reading.

"I don't read nearly as much as I would like to," he said.

Choosy About Jazz

He enjoys listening to the Jerry Mulligan type of jazz, but not the Louis Armstrong brand.

"I don't like loud horns for a long period. After a while, they begin to sound like a screech."

He enjoys occasional swimming and hiking, but says he does not partake enough to call it a sport.

He confines his calisthenics to his conducting. His motions are not extravagant. The drop of a finger, a clenched fist or the quick unfolding and folding of compressed fingers will evoke a note or a tempo from his musicians.

Leinsdorf was guest conductor for the Boston Symphony two years ago. Since assuming its leadership, he has added one instrument, a bass.

Will the orchestra have a new sound under his direction?

"The tradition of the orchestra is great . . . it has an illustrious past . . . I hope it will lead to an illustrious future," Mr. Leinsdorf said.

"Let the public decide."

Erich Leinsdorf

64 NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

NOV 28 1962

Anderson, Bartok at Academy

In a double booking at the Academy of Music, the Equity Library Theater will present Maxwell Anderson's "Elizabeth the Queen" Thursday night while the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs in another hall. The drama performance, starring Muriel Kirkland, left, is sold out for Thursday but will be repeated on Friday. The world-famous Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, right, will be soloist with the orchestra in a performance of Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 2.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

NOV 29 1962

Music: Concert by Boston Symphony

Brahms Orchestration by Schoenberg Played

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

A CURIOUS selection closed last night's Boston Symphony concert at Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra in Arnold Schoenberg's orchestration of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet. It is a strange inconsistency that Schoenberg, the great avant-gardist, felt impelled to make some oversized orchestrations of earlier music. He did it with Bach, throwing in everything but an anvil chorus, and in this Brahms orchestration he made no attempt to be Brahmsian. A very large orchestra is employed, including glockenspiel, xylophone and tambourine.

The whole thing is rather pointless, and it runs counter to today's esthetic.

Most musicians nowadays tend to be purists who favor things as they actually were written. Transcriptions of most kinds are out, and only a few die-hards, mostly veterans, still continue to program them.

In the case of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, the legitimate question is why Schoenberg wasted his time. An analogy would be the act of a painter blowing up a Rembrandt etching and coloring it. Another question would be why Mr. Leinsdorf programmed it. There is so much wonderful orchestral music that is almost never heard. Why, then, take up time with such an example of bad taste?

In the forepart of the program were Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra, and Mozart's Piano Concerto in G (K. 453) with Geza Anda as soloist.

If nothing else, this was an unusual performance of a Mozart concerto. In the solo part, Mr. Anda seemed to be a right-hand pianist. It was almost as though he was ashamed of the Mozart "Alberti bass" patterns — those busy repeated figurations so characteristic of his style—and held them back to the point where one had to strain to hear them. Often they were completely inaudible; and for this the hall could not be blamed.

Mr. Anda's concept of the concerto was strongly romantic. This was most apparent in the cadenzas, where he had no conductor to hold him to a steady beat. In the two cadenzas—Mozart's were used—there were incessant changes of tempo and dynamics, and constant fussing with detail. There was a good deal of fuss, too, elsewhere in the concerto, some of it from the conductor. Both pianist and conductor were over-intent on shadings, a case in point being the G minor variation in the last movement. All of a sudden strange things happened to the tempo as the performers decided to emphasize the tragic mood.

As a result the performance was mannered and even effeminate. The gracious patterns of this loveliest of concertos did not achieve a natural flow, and the music gave the impression of mincing rather than dancing.

The Etler work had previously been heard this season in a performance by the New York Philharmonic. A repeated hearing still did not change the feeling that the solo quintet is insufficiently differentiated from the orchestra. Nor did a chance to hear it again uncover any increase in quality of musical thought.

The first-desk players of the Boston Symphony took positions up front—Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomberg, oboist; Gino Cioffi, clarinetist; Sherman Walt, bassoonist, and James Stagliano, horn[illegible]. Mr. Etler was in the audience and made it to the stage, after a hazardous trip up the aisle, for several bows.

Geza Anda rehearsing with Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor; Geza Anda, pianist. At Philharmonic Hall.

Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra ..... Etler
Piano Concerto in G (K. 453) ..... Mozart
Piano Quartet in G minor (Op. 25, Brahms-Schoenberg

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,41

DEC 1 1962

GEZA ANDA PLAYS PIANO SOLO HERE

Artist Heard in Concerto by Bartok in Boston Series

Geza Anda, the Hungarian pianist, made a spectacular account of [illegible] talents in Philharmonic Hall last night, when he appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the second concerto of Bartok. It was one of those marvelous rare occasions in which a great piece of music engages exactly the right sympathies in a fine performer, and the result was tremendous.

This was the final concert in the orchestra's second subscription week in New York. Both of Mr. Leinsdorf's programs this week had Mr. Anda as soloist, and each also had a work in which Arnold Schoenberg was involved—either as orchestrator (in the arrangement of a Brahms quartet played on Wednesday) or as soloist (in the "Verklärte Nacht" last night).

In neither case, however, did the music reflect much honor on the [illegible] Schoenberg. The trouble with "Verklärte Nacht" these days is that audiences have outgrown it in its expanded version for string orchestra. The original setting for string sextet now gets played and recorded, and it shames the composer's second thoughts.

Mr. Leinsdorf did what he could to contain the work's swollen emotional heavings, and the famous Boston strings played with luminous lightness of tone. Even so, the piece comes off now terribly dated, a real curio, vacillating uneasily among many musical spheres.

But then came the Bartok, and the 20th century was exonerated. This, too, is an atypical work in relation to late Bartok. A sharp-edged and steely flexing of muscles. But, as Mr. Anda played it, the music had profundity beneath the glitter. The framework supplied by the conductor and orchestra was fully in accord with this approach.

The program ended with sensible, clean, and admirably understated performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Leinsdorf seemed bent on reestablishing the classical trails in the work; he seemed to realize, probably correctly, that the romantic side can take care of itself. In any case, the performance was eminently fresh in its shape and sound, and that, at this late date, is no mean feat to pull off with the Fifth.

ALAN RICH.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra "New York"

The Bostonians' 77th season of regularly scheduled New York concerts opened at Philharmonic Hall Oct. 24, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, the Schumann Fourth Symphony, and Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. On Oct. 26 Bach's Cantata No. 18, the Stravinsky "Symphonie de Psaumes," and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 10 were offered, inaugurating the new Friday evening series.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

NOV 29 1962

AT PHILHARMONIC-CARNEGIE HALLS

A Night of Great Music

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHEN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY and the Philadelphia Orchestra both play in New York on the same night, that is news in the musical world.

It happened because we now have two major concert halls, a fact made clearer last night because of the simultaneous concerts but also because of drawing capacity audiences to both Philharmonic and Carnegie Halls.

Erich Leinsdorf brings fresh interest to the Boston Symphony programs in lining up such works as Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra, Mozart's Piano Concerto K.453, and Schonberg's arrangement for piano and strings in G minor, Opus 25.

They made good if not wholly satisfying listening.

The Etler work sounded better last night than when played by the Philharmonic during the opening week of Philharmonic Hall. That fact did not enhance its worth, however. This music churns too much, and for want of salient material, attention wanders.

Polite Response

Though it expresses a characteristic American trait in its energetic propulsion, it also registers an academic tinge. Audience reaction was only polite even with the composer present to take a bow.

The quintet of Doriot Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano gave the performance its extra quality.

Geza Anda played the Mozart concerto with such clarity and polish that the music lost its spontaneity. Calculated purity of note made it sound too scholarly for comfort, however admirable the pianism involved.

A listener shouldn't find himself concentrating on how the pianist's fingers are making the music so clean-cut!

The reduced orchestra provided the stylish element with the wood winds beautifully articulate especially in the second movement. Mr. Leinsdorf has certainly changed the Boston Symphony's approach to Mozart.

All Beethoven

Carnegie Hall Society presented the Philadelphians in an all-Beethoven concert. Combining the First with the Ninth Symphonies, Eugene Ormandy went all out in the finale of the Ninth.

With the Rutgers University choir to give him the maximum in youthful exuberance and brilliant singing, he could demand dramatic intensity from all concerned. He got it and won a spontaneous round of cheers for his efforts.

McHenry Boatwright sparked this part of the performance. He broke the instrumental barrier, intoning the baritone solo with thrilling resonance and authoritative vocalism. Seldom has the vocal expansion of the score been heralded so joyfully.

The other members of the quartet, Judith Raskin, Lili Chookasian, and Richard Cassilly, acquitted themselves admirably. It was, however, the choir that glorified Mr. Ormandy's virtuosity.

Other performances of this great work have been more poetic and profound, but this one excelled in clarity, precision, and brilliance.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061

NOV 29 1962

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Anda Plays Mozart With Bostonians

Proceeding from Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra to Mozart's Piano Concerto in G Major, K. 453, last night in Philharmonic Hall, was like being whisked from the Sudan's luxurious tropical jungles to Amsterdam's orderly 50 canals and 500 bridges.

The choice was dramatic programming on the part of music director Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted the Boston Symphony in its second Wednesday subscription concert of the season. Hungarian-born pianist Gesa Anda was the soloist in the Mozart.

Etler pits a big orchestra against his solo quintet: flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn. While the quintet, especially the flute, expressed delicacy and even sensuosness when playing unaccompanied, much of the music the quintet and other solo instruments found asserting themselves from the thick mass of a full orchestra. The result was an exotic conflagration of sound playing music that was more often intellectual than emotional in content.

The composer uses the quintet more as an adjunct, in the manner of the 18th Century concerto grosso than as a set of virtuosos. Except for the Lento movement, in which the quintet was featured, the solos from the big orchestra seemed just as significant as those from the quintet. From the large percussion contingent, including bongo drums, tom tom, bells and tambourine, the xylophone was singled out for some bright specialties.

There was urgency in the first and last movements, questioning in the Lento; but the impact of the orchestration generally was more powerful than the content of the music, provocative and complex though it often proved to be.

Leinsdorf performed the piece (which had been revised since its performance by the Philharmonic earlier this season) brilliantly. Etler, who teaches at Smith College, was present and took a bow.

Played With Scholar's Concern

After the Etler instrumental banquet, the Mozart Concerto's liquid ease and transparency was especially refreshing. Anda —a Mozart specialist— played with a scholar's concern for the meaning of every phrase. His large, chunky, well-padded hand served him well in re-creating the wealth of melody in the concerto, one of the most beautiful Mozart ever wrote. Anda has used his superior equipment to become a master of tone production.

While at times he was overcareful — more spontaneity would have enhanced the interpretation—it was still a delight to have the work played with so much meaning, color and with judicious pedaling.

Leinsdorf's collaboration was sympathetic and well modulated.

Music and Dance Tonight

Metropolitan Opera, "Die Meistersinger," Metropolitan Opera House, 7:15.

N. Y. Philharmonic, John Barbirolli conducting, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30.

Bolshoi Ballet, Madison Square Garden, 8:30.

Ernst Ulmer, pianist, Town Hall, 8:30.

Matthew Raimondi, violinist, Yehudi Wyner, pianist, Carnegie Recital Hall, 8:30.

Helen Merritt, soprano, Judson Hall, 8:30.

N. Y. Pro Musica, Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum, 8:30.

Annual Music Festival, benefit for N. Y. Assn. for the Blind, Lighthouse Auditorium, 114 E. 60th St., 8:30.

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Brooklyn Academy, 8:30.

New York Herald Tribune Thursday,

MUSIC 11/29/63

Boston Symphony

PHILHARMONIC HALL
Lincoln Center
Conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; soloist: Geza Anda, pianist. The program: Concerto for Wind Quintet.....Etler
Piano Concerto in G, K. 453.....Mozart
Quartet for Piano and Strings, in G minor.....Brahms-Schoenberg

By Ronald Eyer

The delightful and revealing Mozart playing of the Budapest-born pianist, Geza Anda, lent an air of particular distinction to last night's concert by the Boston Symphony. The concert, be it said, would have had distinction, and to spare, even without Mr. Anda's contribution, for the Bostonians already are beginning to show a new zip and vitality under their new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The Piano Concerto in G Major is, to the taste of this writer, among the best, maybe the very best, among the almost countless pieces of its genre written by Mozart. This feeling stems, perhaps, from the fact that it is so un-concerto-like in its whole basic conception. It is not just a showpiece with prefabricated and completely predictable passages to show off the prowess of the manipulator at the keyboard, and make all of the standard contrasts between orchestral tuttis and flights into the empyrean by the soloist.

It has much more the quality of chamber music in its intimacy of conception and the feeling that the participants are wedded in a kind of dual poetry-reading in which no stanza wars with another and a kind of gentle oratory is exchanged quietly, unostentatiously between them.

The piano part, therefore, does not appear spectacular. The serenity of the Andante is beautifully preserved even in the piano cadenza which is conceived not to show mere virtuosity but to carry forth the symphonic unity of the whole movement.

Only in the dancing final movement does the basic gravity and poignancy give way to roistering and to more patent exhibitionism in the piano part, but still within the restrained, aristocratic framework of the composition as an artistic totality.

Mr. Anda has a Mozart style which, while elegant and clean-limbed, is by no means pale or lacking in vigor. His articulation is incisive, there never is any question about where a phrase is going or how it is going to end, and his tone is perfectly adjusted to the very likeness of chamber music mentioned above.

Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra, an estimable piece which was reviewed in these columns earlier this season, provided a rare opportunity to display the fine musicianship of the orchestra's solo woodwinds—Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. Although the composer, at the suggestion of Mr. Leinsdorf, has moved all woodwinds from the main body of the orchestra, the solo concertino still seems lacking in prominence considering the importance it should have in a work of this construction.

Brahms' Quartet for Piano and Strings was played in the arrangement for orchestra by Arnold Schonberg. If you didn't know the composition in its original form, you probably would conclude that it is a very good orchestral piece because, especially in its first movement, it has a truly symphonic sweep and power and grandeur of gesture. But Brahms' original intentions still are good enough for me.

Geza Anda, pianist.

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
NOV 29 1962

Music

Anda Heard at Philharmo

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

A Mozart piano concerto, radiantly performed, brought sunlight and well being into Philharmonic Hall last night.

The concerto was that in G Major (K. 453), the soloist the Hungarian-born Geza Anda, and the orchestra the Boston Symphony, back in town for its second round of visits this season.

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the concerto had the design and proportion Mozart put on paper and the rest of us dream of. Every detail was in place at the right time and to the right degree.

Ideal Pianist

Anda was the ideal pianist for the job last night — no extravagance of any kind, only what the concerto asked, which is more than enough. Neither tone nor temperament ever spilled over.

To achieve that combined illusion of spontaneity and sobriety must have required sedulous study. It certainly paid off. Everything seemed natural and inevitable. As inevitable, and divinely simple, as Mozart himself.

It is a pity that Anda, when he made his debut in New York some years ago, didn't choose Mozart. The two seemed to have been predestined for one another.

Schoenberg Heard

Because of still another visiting orchestra, I had to give up the rare chance of hearing Arnold Schoenberg's orchestral arrangement of Brahms' G Minor Piano Quartet.

What I did catch of the remainder of the Boston Symphony program was Alvin Etler's Concerto for Wind Quintet and Orchestra. This I had heard earlier this season and am happy to revise my estimate upwards.

More of its direction and momentum came through this time. That is the way with all valid music, I suppose. Etler knows how to keep moving. Ideas and colors follow, if not in a straight line, definitely in a curved one.

I believe it was Puccini who said that the three things music must do are to interest, to surprise, and to move. Etler's concerto interested me last night; it surprised me in the sense that I liked it more.

As for being moved, that may be asking too much of modern music. At least I was moved to an admission of greater interest and surprise. The excellent performance definitely helped.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
DEC 2 1962

Leinsdorf & Bostonians

By William Bender

For this morning's seminar, the subject will be podium techniques and the text will be by Maestro Erich Leinsdorf.

The maestro has recently arrived on the New York musical scene as music director of the Boston Symphony and in his appearances here so far with his fine orchestra has made a generally favorable impression. He did so again Friday night at Philharmonic Hall.

This is one reason for examining his baton (or batonless, in his case) style. In Music, as in some other things, good results justify the means. Another reason for examining his method of conducting is the rather strange look of it to the audience, at any rate. To the orchestra, it is crystal clear. In fact, Mr. Leinsdorf goes almost to extremes (physically) to make the beat clear, to signal entrances, and that sort of thing. It works, but oh the look of it.

Mr. Leinsdorf showed what he could do with this technique in a glowing performance of Schoenberg's "Verklarte Nacht" and a scintillating accompaniment for pianist Geza Anda in one of Bela Bartok's finest compositions, the Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Anda, who has been playing this work for 10 years in Europe, was equally impressive. The Beethoven Fifth Symphony came too late in the evening to be heard in its entirety.

First of all, Mr. Leinsdorf's movements of his body and arms are very rigid, almost like a mechanical doll. His hands, however, hanging on the ends of this stiff sticks, are wonderfully expressive. They circle gracefully in the air as though they were making curlicues, such as are sometimes drawn by Steinberg.

Mr. Leinsdorf does not just signal a player to begin playing. He reaches as far as possible toward the player, seeming to come precariously close to the edge of the podium. At other times he sweeps his right arm like a military policeman waving traffic by.

His arms reach out in unexpected directions, sometimes like a harried husband reaching through a hole in the screen door to release the latch. His arms sometimes go up and down together like a football referee signaling a touchdown. At other times he seems to be describing a huge fish to someone who speaks another language.

But it is a dedicated, authoritative podium manner, that is not without its touch of humility. He almost invariably invites his first desk men, and the whole orchestra for that matter, to share the applause. Not all conductors are this selfless.

BLANK PAGE

66

NEW HAVEN 2

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244
JAN 9 1963

MUSIC

WOOLSEY FANS GET 2ND VIEW OF 'NEW LOOK'

The Boston Symphony made its second and final appearance in the current Woolsey series Tuesday evening. Just when patrons of these concerts are starting to get acquainted with the orchestra's "new look" under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, it seems that they'll have to wait until next season for another hearing.

This is Leinsdorf's first season with the Boston Symphony. He made an impressive debut here in the orchestra's earlier concert when it was obvious to listeners that the new conductor has some "new ideas" of his own. This fact was even more obvious in this second concert.

We have heard the Boston Symphony play Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, by Strauss, under the batons of two former conductors—Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch. The Leinsdorf version is something else again! Surely the rogue in this musical story has never cavorted his way to an untimely end in more dramatic fashion than on this occasion.

This listener at first found himself, as is somewhat natural in the face of a departure from the "norm", in disagreement with Leinsdorf's interpretation. The relentless tempo and hurried pace, among other things in this highly personalized reading, seemed to emphasize emotional intensity at the expense of expressive subtleties. But as the performance went on I found myself liking what I heard and marveling at the unexpected potential in this imaginative work and its superb orchestration.

Probably there were mixed feelings among listeners with regard to the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 10, the other major offering in the program. My complaints would center on the work itself rather than the performance which was certainly of virtuoso calibre. I think the work, for all its musical splendors and exciting climaxes, is too long and overdrawn with the exception of the second movement, Allegro. The full resources of the orchestra came into play in this boisterous and frenzied movement with its overpowering sonorities and cacophony in the swirl of rushing, clashing lines.

A "half orchstra" of strings opened the program with a full treatment of Mozart's Eine kleine Nachtm U sik (K. 525). Attacks were among the precisions in this appealing performance which found the strings leading tonal distinction to contours and textures.

G. E. A.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,412
JAN 9 1963

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Hailed In Season's Second Visit

The Boston Symphony Orchestra performed its traditional second seasonal concert in Woolsey Hall last night with a sell-out audience enthusiastically welcoming back to New Haven the organization's brilliant new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

Like his predecessor, Charles Munch, Leinsdorf brings a new personality to the orchestra, and last night's music carried a distinctive mood that could only be attributed to the different technique of the new director.

Leaving a distinguished career in Vienna, Leinsdorf has more recently been affiliated with the Metropolitan Opera. His directing is gracefully precise, trim and clean-cut, reflecting a complete discipline over his men and an absolute knowledge of the work he is directing.

Mozart's light hearted Eine Kleine Nachtmusik opened the evening's fine program and one could easily visualize the brilliant social function for which it was composed.

A masterpiece of 18th century grace and elegance, it was given a beautiful presentation by the orchestra. The graceful trills in the principal theme and the smoothly swinging pace of the work were a delight to the audience.

Richard Strauss's vigorous tone poem Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks kept up the high mood of the program as the second number. Under the vigorous direction of leinsdorf, the whole exciting story of Till unfolded before the listeners.

The second half of the program was given over to the momentous 10th Symphony in E minor by Shostakovich in which the orchestra gave a refreshing and disciplined presentation of the strong rhythms which accent the work.

In thinking back on this performance one remembers particularly the fiery second movement, the busy percussionists who accented the work and the final brilliant work for the strings. There were special, beautiful moments for the clarinets and flutes, of course, and at the conclusion Leinsdorf generously shared his applause with the special sections which contributed so much to this powerful work.

This is the last time until next fall that the Boston will be heard in Woolsey. In the meantime, there is much anticipation to hear the orchestra again under its brilliant new director.

F.R.J.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,153
DEC 16 1962

Concert Series . . .

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert at 8:30 p.m., January 8, in Woolsey Hall in New Haven.

The performance will be the 66th appearance of the world-famous orchestra on the Woolsey Hall Series at the School of Music, Yale University.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Chronicle
HAMDEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4,080
JAN 3 1963

Erich Leinsdorf is shown during a rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will appear at Woolsey Hall Tuesday evening. The program, sponsored by the Yale School of Music, will begin at 8:30.

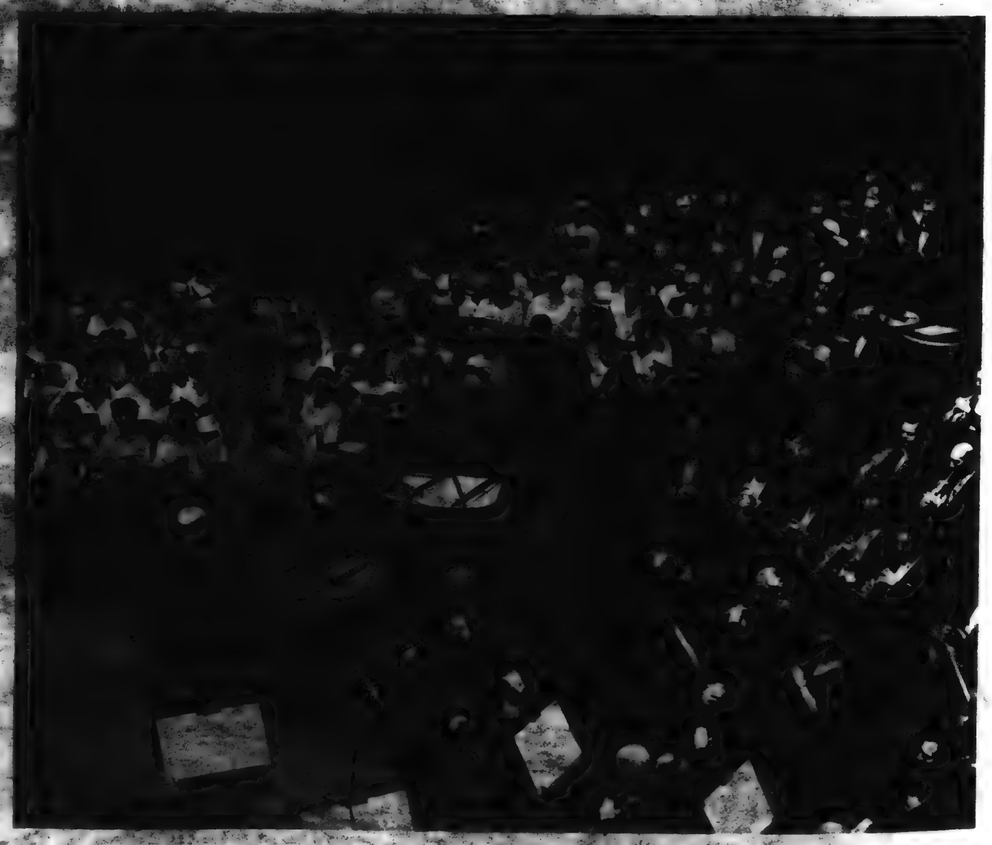
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 2 1962

Armed with provisions for the ride to Lincoln Center, members of the Chorus pro Musica [illegible] ready to board a bus. Left to right in left photo, Carolyn Sy[illegible]mont, [illegible] Kelsay of Framingham, Rev. Theodore Romberg [illegible] and Walter Brassert of Boston. Above, Alexandra Russell of Cambridge and Gwen Colescott of Boston catch up on their knitting during the trip.

Chorus Pro [illegible]ings in New York

A group of 120 Bostonians who make up the Chorus pro Musica, a non-profit Boston singing club rated one of the finest choral groups in the country, sang at New York's Lincoln Center with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, making it the first visiting singers to perform in the center's Philharmonic Hall. After driving through early-season snowstorm the overdue singers made their way [illegible] the caverns of the then unfinished hall to the stage, where Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra awaited them. Also on stage was Alfred Nash Patterson, founder and director of the chorus, who anxiously watched the clock for his late-arriving chorus to show up. "It was worth every minute of it," said one chorister backstage after they sang Bach's Cantata No. 18 and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." The New York reviews, which praised the concert, echoed her sentiments.

Eric Leinsdorf, center, director of Boston Symphony Orchestra, discussing concert plans with Alfred Nash Patterson, director of the Chorus pro Musica, right, and Victor Alpert, orchestra librarian, on stage at Lincoln Center's new Philharmonic Hall.



Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Chorus pro Musica in Bach's Cantata No. 18 and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

MUSICAL
NEW YORK
MONTHLY
DEC

ORCHESTR

A Debut an

During Oc
born, two fo for the first ductor retur
All of this local and exciting, no seat fille occasion
With
pleted, operation
showplace Carnegie number hailed in
It is re be requ ing of the on the st ing are changes, cessive day the sound i instrumenta sounds esp some spot alive than acoustics,
the final co

Erich Le phony
24th and musical to the becam produci an he it emp allows the itself.
will be int
ahead.

Bartok
came off less brilli
Schumann
Seventh idiomati

The earlier have a m brighter vinsky's
Mahler's tional uppermo cess o extremes quired.

The exempl and sure
A goodly generated Pro Musi contribu ribbon perfo Mahler timental dated.

Bu
the perfo
wis,

BROOKLYN

69

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1962

ORCHES AS IN NEW YORK

A De d a Legend

D tober, a new orchestra was Born reign ensembles appeared for th time, and a legendary con- ducto ned after a long absence. All in addition to the regular local isiting orchestras. It was exce reover, to see virtually every seat on all but two of these occas

Wit pening-week festivities com- pleted hilharmonic Hall was in opera offering a second major show for orchestral concerts. If Carn Hall was thereby slighted in numb performances, the new hall failed winning acoustical superiority. It is rted that at least a year will be re ed to finish the difficult tun- ing o new hall. Movable features on th age enclosure and on the ceil- ing a already responsible for audible chan noticeable sometimes on suc- cessi ays. At the moment, though, the s d is far away, and some subtle instru ntal overtones are lost. Bass sound specially tend to be weak, and some pots on the stage remain less alive than others. Full appraisal of the acoustics, needless to say, must await the final completion of tuning.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall on the 24th and 26th in his first season as its musical director. He is no newcomer to these parts, and his work has long been held in regard. With a solid approach and a firm hold on every detail, he is emphatic without pushing, and allows the music to flow and speak for itself. The results on the orchestra will be interesting to watch in the years ahead.

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra came off swimmingly, if with slightly less brilliance than might be desired. Schumann's Fourth and Walter Piston's Seventh were also presented, each in idiomatic readings.

The second concert confirmed the earlier impression that the Boston will have a more opalescent tone, a clearer, brighter texture, than before. Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" and Mahler's First Symphony gave additional evidence. Formal values are uppermost, and taste trims off any excess of brilliance, though dynamic extremes are always available when required.

The Stravinsky and Mahler further exemplified Leinsdorf's dependability and surety in projecting different styles. A goodly amount of excitement was generated in both. The excellent Chorus Pro Musica, from Boston, importantly contributed to the Stravinsky, summoning a wide gamut of emotions tempered by nearly perfect concision. The Mahler, played direct and without sentimentality, seemed surprisingly undated.

Bach's Sinfonia and Chorale from the Cantata No. 18, though expertly performed by the chorus and orchestra, was, due to the size of the forces, fogged rather than limned.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, November 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN DAILY
Thursday, November 15, 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900
NOV 22 1962
New York World-Telegram
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
NOV 26 1962

Footlights and Spotlights

Boston Symphony Returning To Academy, Pianist to Debut

By HENDERSON CLEAVES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the Academy of Music Thursday night for the second of five Brooklyn concerts to be given this season.

The program will introduce to Brooklyn the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, who will perform Bartok's Concerto No. 2, a work for which he is supposed to have a special sympathy.

Anda last year won the Grand Prix du Disque for his recording of this piece. The son of a Budapest schoolmaster, he studied at the Royal Academy of Music in that city under Erno Dohnanyi, later winning the Franz Liszt prize, given to Hungary's best young pianist.

He escaped to Switzerland during World War II and has played since the war in France, Holland, Belgium, England, Austria, Norway, Denmark and Israel. He made his first American tour in 1955-56 and has since played with all of the major American orchestras.

The program will open with Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht" and will close with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

Erich Leinsdorf, the symphony's new music director, will be conducting throughout this, the orchestra's 75th Brooklyn season. The program is at 8:30 in the Opera House.

* * *

GEZA ANDA

NEW YORK, N.Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 18,796
DEC 6 1962

Leinsdorf ....

The same evening as Miss Schwarzkopf's recital, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were playing an oddly made but interesting program at Philharmonic Hall, a program this writer was able to hear the night before at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The highlight was a furiously brilliant reading by Geza Anda of Bartok's astonishing Second Piano Concerto. The piece is Stravinsky's "Capriccio" transformed by good honest sweat on its brow and potent wine in its stomach and the piano reeling off with tympani and the bass drum out into the alley for a good, bloody brawl. Before the concerto came Schoenberg's long, lush "Verklaerte Nacht" and something called the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, both of which—by some amalgam of rather dry and dead acoustics and Mr. Leinsdorf's preference for clarity above all else—emerged almost in the unhackneyed and not unwelcome guise of chamber works.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300
NOV 17 1962
Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
NOV 25 1962

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday. The program will feature the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
NOV 14 1962

Boston Symphony Sets 2d Brooklyn Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its new director, Erich Leinsdorf, returns to the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening, Nov 29, for its second concert of the season.

Featured artist will be the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, who will perform Bela Bartok's Concerto No. 2.

Included on the program are Arnold Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht," ("Transfigured Night"), an early masterpiece originally written for string sextet and arranged by the composer for string orchestra and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Geza Anda is one of a select group of pianists who has won world-fame in the post-war period.

He has performed with the Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Vancouver, New York Philharmonic, St Louis and Pittsburgh orchestras.

Last year, Mr. Anda was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for his recording of the second Bartok concerto, the same work he will perform at the Academy of Music.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
DEC 1962

ORCHESTRAS IN NEW YORK

A Debut and a Legend

Dur[ing] October, a new orchestra was born, [two] foreign ensembles appeared for the first time, and a legendary conductor returned after a long absence. All of [this] in addition to the regular local and visiting orchestras. It was exciting, moreover, to see virtually every seat filled on all but two of these occasions.

With the opening-week festivities completed, Philharmonic Hall was in operation, offering a second major showplace for orchestral concerts. If Carnegie Hall was thereby slighted in number of performances, the new hall hailed for winning acoustical superiority. It is reported that at least a year will be required to finish the difficult tuning of the new hall. Movable features on the stage enclosure and on the ceiling are already responsible for audible changes, noticeable sometimes on successive days. At the moment, though, the sound is far away, and some subtle instrumental overtones are lost. Bass sounds especially tend to be weak, and some spots on the stage remain less alive than others. Full appraisal of the acoustics, needless to say, must await the final completion of tuning.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall on the 24th and 26th in his first season as its musical director. He is no newcomer to these parts, and his work has long been held in regard. With a solid approach and a firm hold on every detail, he is emphatic without pushing, and allows the music to flow and speak for itself. The results on the orchestra will be interesting to watch in the years ahead.

Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra came off swimmingly, if with slightly less brilliance than might be desired. Schumann's Fourth and Walter Piston's Seventh were also presented, each in idiomatic readings.

The second concert confirmed the earlier impression that the Boston will have a more opalescent tone, a clearer, brighter texture, than before. Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms" and Mahler's First Symphony gave additional evidence. Formal values are uppermost, and taste trims off any excess of brilliance, though dynamic extremes are always available when required.

The Stravinsky and Mahler further exemplified Leinsdorf's dependability and surety in projecting different styles. A goodly amount of excitement was generated in both. The excellent Chorus Pro Musica, from Boston, importantly contributed to the Stravinsky, summoning a wide gamut of emotions tempered by nearly perfect concision. The Mahler, played direct and without sentimentality, seemed surprisingly undated.

Bach's Sinfonia and Chorale from the Cantata No. 18, though expertly performed by the chorus and orchestra, was, due to the size of the forces, fogged rather than limned.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, November 16, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN DAILY
Thursday, November 15, 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900
NOV 22 1962

New York World-Telegram
D. 963,291 SAT. 175,139
NOV 26 1962

Footlights and Spotlights

Boston Symphony Returning To Academy, Pianist to Debut

By HENDERSON CLEAVES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the Academy of Music Thursday night for the second of five Brooklyn concerts to be given this season.

The program will introduce to Brooklyn the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, who will perform Bartok's Concerto No. 2, a work for which he is supposed to have a special sympathy.

Anda last year won the Grand Prix du Disque for his recording of this piece. The son of a Budapest schoolmaster, he studied at the Royal Academy of Music in that city under Erno Dohnanyi, later winning the Franz Liszt prize, given to Hungary's best young pianist.

He escaped to Switzerland during World War II and has played since the war in France, Holland, Belgium, England, Austria, Norway, Denmark and Israel. He made his first American tour in 1955-56 and has since played with all of the major American orchestras.

The program will open with Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht" and will close with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

Erich Leinsdorf, the symphony's new music director, will be conducting throughout this, the orchestra's 75th Brooklyn season. The program is at 8:30 in the Opera House.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 18,786
DEC 6 1962

Leinsdorf ....

The same evening as Miss Schwarzkopf's recital, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were playing an oddly made but interesting program at Philharmonic Hall, a program this writer was able to hear the night before at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The highlight was a furiously brilliant reading by Geza Anda of Bartok's astonishing Second Piano Concerto. The piece is Stravinsky's "Capriccio" transformed by good honest sweat on its brow and potent wine in its stomach and the piano reeling off with tympani and the bass drum out into the alley for a good, bloody brawl. Before the concerto came Schoenberg's long, lush "Verklaerte Nacht" and something called the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, both of which—by some amalgam of rather dry and dead acoustics and Mr. Leinsdorf's preference for clarity above all else—emerged almost in the unhackneyed and not unwelcome guise of chamber works.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300
NOV 17 1962

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday. The program will feature the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 817,250 S. 773,570
NOV 14 1962

Boston Symphony Sets 2d Brooklyn Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its new director, Erich Leinsdorf, returns to the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening, Nov 29, for its second concert of the season.

Featured artist will be the Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, who will perform Bela Bartok's Concerto No. 2.

Included on the program will be Arnold Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht," ("Transfigured Night"), an early masterpiece originally written for string sextet and arranged by the composer for string orchestra, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Geza Anda is one of a select group of pianists who has won world-fame in the post-war period.

He has performed with the Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Vancouver, New York Philharmonic, St Louis and Pittsburgh orchestras.

Last year, Mr. Anda was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for his recording of the second Bartok concerto, the same work he will perform at the Academy of Music.

70 MONDAY 3

Third Program

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN . . Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 21

MOZART . . . . . Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegretto; Presto

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93

I. Moderato
II. Allegro
III. Allegretto
IV. Andante; Allegro

SOLOIST
GEZA ANDA
MR. ANDA plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Globe 12/8/62

Anda Soloist in Mozart Concerto With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf music director, performed at Symphony Hall last night the third program of the Monday series. Mendelssohn: Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Mozart: Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453); Geza Anda soloist; Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 10, in E minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Geza Anda, the Hungarian-born pianist who made his local debut a few weeks ago as soloist in the Friday-Saturday series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned in the same capacity at the third Monday concert of the season last night.

Before, he had performed the formidable Bartok Second Concerto. Last night he was heard in that polar opposite, the G major Concerto (K. 453) of Mozart, a work of delectable beauty, mostly lyrical, but with a certain dappled variety of mood throughout its source.

All was neat, trim, deftly turned and accurate in technical respects. This was a loving performance, with supple grace of phrase and much delicacy in the matter of accents.

It was also a little old-fashioned as Mozart is played today: a trace too much, I thought, of heavy-cream sentiment, a disposition to linger over details at a certain expense of continuity and rhythmic flow. Indeed, when it came to the cadenzas, Mozart for the moment was almost Schumann.

For the orchestral portion, Erich Leinsdorf had trimmed down the strings to a foundation of three doublebasses, and had the violas change seats with the cellos. In reducing the orchestra he unconventionally did this by dismissing the first desk players (even in wind parts), which doubtless was a considerate course during a week when three different programs must be played. It also, I believe, was a high compliment to the Orchestra as a whole.

It may be that a perfect performance of this Concerto is not possible unless it were to be heard from very small ensemble and with the soloist using a Mozart-period piano, with its much lighter weight of tone. The intimacies of this unique work (which has no fellow even in Mozart) have been lost among the tonal improvements of orchestral instruments. Yet, Leinsdorf conducted a brisk and clean performance which greatly pleased, and all hands were roundly applauded.

Perfection was no more than one hair's breadth from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture. There were some details of instrumental balance and solo playing of astonishing brilliance and virtuosity. In the Symphony No. 10 of Shostakovitch there were even more.

At its conclusion Mr. Leinsdorf, as he had done earlier in the evening, singled out wind and percussion players for a bow of their own.

Time and time again, during the intricacies of this long and exacting Symphony one thought in excited admiration: "What a great, great conductor and Orchestra!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
DEC 1 1962

Burgin to Conduct at Dec. 7 and 8 Concerts

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the third concert in the ~~Monday series~~ Monday at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall. He will begin the concert with Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream,' which will be followed by the Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 by Mozart, with Geza Anda, soloist. Following the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening. Mr. Leinsdorf's program for this concert includes the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18 and the Symphony No. 96 by Haydn.

Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's solo violist, will be soloist in a performance of Milhaud's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Mahler's Symphony No. 1 will be the concluding work on this program which will be televised live by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the two weeks beginning Friday-Saturday, Dec. 7-8. He has invited Virginia Babikian, soprano, to be his guest in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4. This program will begin with Stravinsky's Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee," Allegorical Ballet.

SYMPHONY — Herald 12/8/62

Geza, Anda, Pianist, In Mozart Concerto

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Two weeks ago the young Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, appeared as soloist with The Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bartok's Second Concerto. Last night, the third concert of the Monday evening series, he undertook a challenge of a different order, Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 17, in G, which he presented with sensibility and grace.

A more contrasting set of scores than the Bartok and the Concerto in G would be hard to imagine, the former's Second Concerto barbaric, steely and tumultuous, while the delectable G major, an infinitely greater work, demands a gentle and urbane touch.

Folksong Theme

Indeed, the folksong theme of the finale—which recalls the finale of "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," and Papageno's bird-catcher song also in G—is said to have been whistled by a sterling bought by Mozart.

Apocryphal though this may be, the Concerto reminds one of the loveliest and happier statements in the total range of western music, not without its moments of profound dramatic emotion, but all the whole only delicately touched by shadow. Mr. Anda's approach was stylistically impeccable. The several themes emerged clearly and lyrically, the phrasing crisp and subtly accented.

What I liked best about the soloist's performance was his conception of the gulf between a large and a virtuosic attack. The Concerto in G is not a showpiece in the 19th century sense, the romantic period to which our ears are still tuned. Yet it has an astonishing breadth of idea that will not appear in too refined an account.

Virility Preserved

Mr. Anda preserved the virility of the fine-grained writing, simultaneously ranging through a variety of moods; he had color, tenderness and passion.

Possibly one may play Bartok's Concerto with only a formidable technical equipment; but to play the Mozart G Major one must posses extraordinary brilliancy and control. Last night Mr. Anda demonstrated conclusively that he is a talent of the finest interpretive grain. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra, 'cellos to the fore, supplied tactful and radiant balances.

The concert got underway with Mendelssohn's Overture and closed with the Shostakovitch Tenth, both already featured in the Friday-Saturday series.

The Program

The third program of the Monday night series of the 82nd season of The Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last night, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Geza Anda, pianist, was the soloist.
Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 21 . . . . . Mendelssohn
Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 . . . . . Mozart
Symphony No. 10 in E minor, Op. 93 . . . . . Shostakovitch

10

MONDAY 3

Third Program

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN . . Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 21

MOZART . . . . . Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegretto; Presto

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93

I. Moderato
II. Allegro
III. Allegretto
IV. Andante; Allegro

SOLOIST
GEZA ANDA
plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Globe 12/2/62

Anda Soloist in Mozart Concerto With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf music director, performed at Symphony Hall last night the third program of the Monday series. Mendelssohn: Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Mozart: Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453), Geza Anda soloist; Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 10, in E minor.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Geza Anda, the Hungarian-born pianist who made his local debut a few weeks ago as soloist in the Friday-Saturday series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned in the same capacity at the third Monday concert of the season last night.

Before, he had performed the formidable Bartok Second Concerto. Last night he was heard in that polar opposite, the G major Concerto (K. 453) of Mozart, a work of delectable beauty, mostly lyrical, but with a certain dappled variety of mood throughout its course.

All was neat, trim, deftly turned and accurate in technical respects. This was a loving performance, with supple grace of phrase and much delicacy in the matter of accents.

It was also a little old-fashioned as Mozart is played today: a trifle too much, I thought, of heavy-cream sentiment, a disposition to linger over details at a certain expense of continuity and rhythmic flow. Indeed, when "it came to the cadenza Mozart [illegible] for the moment was almost Schumann.

For the orchestral portion, Erich Leinsdorf had trimmed down the strings to a foundation of three double basses, and had the violas change seats with the cellos. In reducing the orchestra he unconventionally did this by dismissing the first desk players (even in wind parts), which doubtless was a considerate course during a week when three different programs must be played. It also, I believe, was a high compliment to the Orchestra as a whole.

It may be that a perfect performance of this Concerto is not possible unless it were to be heard from very small ensemble and with the soloist using a Mozart-period piano, with its much lighter weight of tone. The intimacies of this unique work (which has no fellow even in Mozart) have been lost among the tonal improvements of orchestral instruments. Yet, Leinsdorf conducted a brisk and clean performance which greatly pleased, and all hands were roundly applauded.

Perfection was no more than one hair's breadth from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture. There were some details of instrumental balance and solo playing of astonishing brilliance and virtuosity. In the Symphony No. 10 of Shostakovitch there were even more.

At its conclusion Mr. Leinsdorf, as he had done earlier in the evening, singled out wind and percussion players for a bow of their own.

Time and time again, during the intricacies of this long and exacting Symphony one thought in excited admiration: "What a [illegible] great conductor and orchestra!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
DEC 1 1962

Burgin to Conduct at Dec. 7 and 8 Concerts

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the third concert in the Monday series Monday at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall. He will begin the concert with Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which will be followed by the Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 by Mozart, with Geza Anda, soloist. Following the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening. Mr. Leinsdorf's program for this concert includes the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach's Cantata No. 18 and the Symphony No. 96 by Haydn.

Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's solo violist, will be soloist in a performance of Milhaud's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Mahler's Symphony No. 1 will be the concluding work on this program which will be televised live by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the two weeks beginning Friday-Saturday, Dec. 7-8. He has invited Virginia Babikian, soprano, to be his guest in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4. This program will begin with Stravinsky's Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee," Allegorical Ballet.

SYMPHONY Herald 12/3/62

Geza Anda, Pianist, In Mozart Concerto

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Two weeks ago the young Hungarian pianist, Geza Anda, appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bartok's Second Concerto. Last night, the third concert of the Monday evening series, he undertook a challenge of a different order, Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 17, in G, which he presented with sensibility and grace.

A more contrasting set of scores than the Bartok and the Concerto in G would be hard to imagine, the former's Second Concerto barbaric, steely and tumultuous, while the delectable G major, an infinitely greater work, demands a gentle and urbane touch.

Folksong Theme

[illegible] the folksong theme of the finale—which recalls the final of "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," and Papageno's bird-catcher song also in G—is said to have been whistled by a starling bought by Mozart.

Apocryphal though this may be, the Concerto remains one of the loveliest and [illegible] statements in the [illegible] of western music. [illegible] its moments of [illegible] dramatic emotion, but [illegible] whole daily delicately [illegible] shadow. Mr. Anda's [illegible] was stylish—deadly [illegible] the several themes [illegible] and lyrically, the phrasing crisp and subtly accented.

What I liked best about the soloist's performance was his conception of the gulf between a lyrical and a virtuosic style. The Concerto in G [illegible] the 19th century sense, the romantic period to which our ears are still tuned. Yet it has an astonishing breadth of idea that will not appear in too refined an account.

Virility Preserved

Mr. Anda preserved [illegible] of the fine-grained writing [illegible] ously ranging through a [illegible] ty of moods; he had color, tenderness and passion.

Possibly one may play Bartok's Concerto with only a formidable technical equipment; but to play the Mozart G Major one must [illegible] extraordinary [illegible] and control. Last night Mr. Anda demonstrated conclusively that he is a talent of the finest interpretive grain. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra, 'cellos to the fore, supplied tactful and radiant balances.

The concert got underway with Mendelssohn's Overture and closed with the Shostakovitch Tenth, both already featured in the Friday-Saturday series.

The Program

The third program of the Monday night series [illegible] season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] Erich Leinsdorf conducting: Geza Anda, pianist, in Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Op. 21; Mozart's Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453; Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10, in E minor, Op. 93.

BOSTON 10

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 7, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

STRAVINSKY ..... "Fireworks," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY ... Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fée," Allegorical Ballet

I. Sinfonia
II. Danses Suisses
III. Scherzo
IV. Pas de deux
Adagio — Variation — Coda

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 4, in G major (with Soprano Voice)

I. Bedächtig (Deliberately)
II In gemächlicher Bewegung (With leisurely motion)
III. Ruhevoll (Peacefully)
IV. Sehr behaglich (Very easily)

SOLOIST
VIRGINIA BABIKIAN, Soprano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 7 1962

By Boris and Milton

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will conduct this weekend's concerts at Symphony Hall, as well as those of Dec. 14, 15, 16, and 18.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,362
DEC 6 1962

To Conduct

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the concerts of the next two weeks, during Erich Leinsdorf's vacation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Leader-Herald & News Gazette
EVERETT, Mass.
Weekly 8 Circ. 12,900
1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 6 1962

Virginia Babikian will be the soprano soloist in Mahler's Fourth Symphony in the Boston Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall Dec. 7-8, and in Providence, R.I., on Tuesday night, Dec. 11.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 2 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the two weeks beginning this Friday and Saturday. He has invited Virginia Babikian, soprano, to be his guest in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4. This program will begin with Stravinsky's "Fireworks" and continue with his Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee," Allegorical Ballet.

Tomorrow evening Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the third concert in the Monday series at Symphony Hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will begin this concert with Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which will be followed by the Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 by Mozart, with Geza Anda, soloist. Following the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10.

The orchestra will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge on Tuesday evening. Mr. Leinsdorf's program for this concert includes the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach Cantata No. 18 and the Symphony No. 96 by Haydn. Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's solo violist, will be soloist in a performance of Milhaud's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Mahler's Symphony No. 1 will be the concluding work on this program which will be televised live by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the orchestra for two weeks, starting with the Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts this week at Symphony Hall.

BOSTON 10

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 7, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

STRAVINSKY . . . . . "Fireworks," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY . . . Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fée," Allegorical Ballet

I. Sinfonia
II. Danses Suisses
III. Scherzo
IV. Pas de deux
Adagio — Variation — Coda

INTERMISSION

MAHLER . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in G major (with Soprano Voice)

I. Bedächtig (Deliberately)
II. In gemächlicher Bewegung (With leisurely motion)
III. Ruhevoll (Peacefully)
IV. Sehr behaglich (Very easily)

SOLOIST
VIRGINIA BABIKIAN, Soprano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[585]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 7 1962

By Boris and Milton

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will conduct this weekend's concerts at Symphony Hall as well as those of Dec. 14, 15, 16, and 18.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
DEC 6 1962

To Conduct

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the concerts of the next two weeks, during Erich Leinsdorf's vacation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Leader-Herald & News-Gazette
EVERETT, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,900
DEC 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 6 1962

Virginia Babikian will be the soprano soloist in Mahler's Fourth Symphony in the Boston Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall Dec. 7-8, and in Providence, R.I., on Tuesday night.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 2 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the two weeks beginning this Friday and Saturday. He has invited Virginia Babikian, soprano, to be his guest in a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 4. This program will begin with Stravinsky's "Fireworks" and continue with his Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee," Allegorical Ballet.

Tomorrow evening Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the third concert in the Monday series at Symphony Hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will begin this concert with Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which will be followed by the Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 by Mozart, with Gesa Anda, soloist. Following the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10.

The orchestra will be in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge on Tuesday evening. Mr. Leinsdorf's program for this concert include the Sinfonia and Chorale from Bach Cantata No. 18 and the Symphony No. 98 by Haydn. Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's solo violist, will be soloist in a performance of Bartok's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Mahler's Symphony No. 1 will be the concluding work on this program. [illegible] will be broadcast live [illegible] EDUCATIONAL Channel 2.

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the orchestra for two weeks, starting with the Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts this week at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 2 1962

Burgin Conducts Mahler, Stravinsky at Symphony

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be at the helm of the Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts for the next two weeks. His program for Dec. 7 and 8 will consist of two works by Igor Stravinsky—"Fireworks" and the Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee", and the Symphony No. 4 by Mahler. Soprano soloist in the latter will be Virginia Babikian.

For the concerts of Dec. 14 and 15, Mr. Burgin has announced the following program: Irving Fine: Notturno for Strings and Harp (first time at these concerts); Olivier Messiaen: "L'Ascension"; Prokofieff: "Chout" Ballet Suite; Hindemith: Symphony, "Die Harmonie ders Welt."

Music director Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two concerts this week before departing upon a brief respite from his duties. They will be as follows:

Monday at 8:30 p.m., Symphony Hall. Mendelssohn: Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Mozart: Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453), Geza Anda soloist; Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 10 in E minor.

Tuesday at 8:30, Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Bach: Sinfonia and Chorale from Cantata No. 18; Haydn: Symphony No. 96, in D major; Mahler: Symphony No. 1, in D major.

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts for two weeks, Dec. 7-8 and 14-15, at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
DEC 8 1962

The Symphony

Burgin Conducts Cheerful Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Mahler and Stravinsky in their lighter mood formed the pastel substance of a cheerful program as Richard Burgin, the associate conductor, made his second appearance of the season at Symphony yesterday.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the 10th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Virginia Babikian, soprano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Fireworks," Op. 4 . . . Stravinsky
Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee" Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4, in G major . . . Mahler

Mr. Burgin's association with the Mahler Fourth here is firmly established. Indeed, he and Bruno Walter have conducted every prior performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and last February the work was offered by the New England Conservatory Orchestra as an appropriate gesture to Mr. Walter's memory. It is sufficient to say that Richard Burgin's comprehension, authority and devotion would meet the approval of Mahler's ardent disciple.

I do not think yesterday's account emerged as memorably as it should under such conditions, however, though the reading was notable in many ways. The major element lacking was a sense of the diabolic in the scherzo. Not that the Fourth is sinister, or demands even the flash-powder and tin-hammered thunders of a Berlioz "Witches' Sabbath" —but for contrast to the haunting celestial sweetness, a spectral hint intrudes.

Peasant Gaiety

As Mahler himself declared: "The scherzo is so mysterious, confused and supernatural that your hair will stand on end when you hear it. But in the following adagio, where all this passes off, you will immediately see that it was not meant so seriously."

The episode is not unlike a Breughel, teeming with robust peasant gaiety but unobtrusively paced by a luminous and skeletal violinist in the shadows. Mr. Silverstein's "scordatura" voice—that is, a violin tuned a tone higher than normal—did not accent the grotesque country-fiddler interruptions too graphically because Mr. Burgin chose to emphasize the sprightly flow of the surrounding material.

Moreover, in the "Wunderhorn" text of the last movement Miss Virginia Balbikian could have brought more clarity to the enunciation of her German. She has an attractive soprano, and her approach to the heavenly passage captures the silvery naive timbre of a choirboy's floating tone. In spite of her tasteful interpretation, the ease of her production and a polished vocal technique otherwise, there were blurred vowels and, consequently, the images like St. Peter with his nets and bait, lacked decisive contour.

Supple Line

Nevertheless, she offered a scrupulous professional attack as did the orchestra and Mr. Burgin. The values of the performance lay in the exquisite modelling of the first movement and the long-breathed, supple line; breadth and delicacy mingled in the handling of the structure; and if the want of contrast tended toward a uniform finish, the lyrical simplicity of Mahler's majestic and radiant mystical vision was poignantly conveyed.

The two Stravinsky scores provided blithe, sophisticated drollery, the one a youthful occasional piece almost never heard today, the other the more familiar "Fairy's Kiss" ballet, and both exhibiting the decorative skill of urbane banter. Stravinsky's uncommon ability as a mimic adorns the various turns of phrase: in "Fireworks" he assumes the manner of Strauss and Dukas, in the ballet he deliberately adopts the guise of Tchaikowsky.

The derivations are, in the first case, concealed (the borrowing from the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" and "Till Eulenspiegel" may be direct, but lurks amid other impressionism and Stravinsky's own additions), and in the ballet, overt; yet it is interesting how so much of Stravinsky's artistic personality, ironic, dry and classical, hovers over the workmanship.

On the surface "Fireworks" follows the shimmering fin-de-siecle French tradition, while "The Fairy's Kiss" belongs in the lush line of Russian romanticism. But Stravinsky translates the allusive French style into a crisper, astringent idiom; and the opulent Slavic melodic colors into a champagne-pale scintillation. Both afford the enjoyment of superior decor.

Next week Mr. Burgin has scheduled Messiaen's "L'Ascension" and Hindemith's symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"; the late Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp and the suite from Prokofiev's ballet "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
DEC 8 1962

True Splendor: Mahler, Stravinsky From Burgin

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 10th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented "Fireworks" and the Divertimento from "Le Baiser de la Fee" by Stravinsky, and the Symphony No. 4, in G major, by Gustav Mahler. Virginia Babikian, soprano, was soloist in the latter.

BY CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin yesterday began the first of two weeks at the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while music director Erich Leinsdorf takes a near-mid-season respite. No matter how cold, raw and dark became the afternoon, all was warmth, radiance and splendor within Symphony Hall, where the concert was divided between Igor Stravinsky and Gustav Mahler.

Now the words warmth, radiance and splendor may seem unlikely when applied to Stravinsky, but in this case they are accurate. "Fireworks" is an early and orchestrally elaborate score, while the Divertimento from the Ballet "Le Baiser de la Fee" is a highly agreeable blend of Stravinsky's neo-classicism and tunes by Tchaikovsky.

To call the Divertimento delectable triviality is more a statement of fact than of opinion. Reduce the music to its constituent elements and the value is negligible prettiness. Take it as a whole, recognizing the kinetic drive of a ballet score, and under the circumstances of so brilliant a performance as yesterday, and you have a first-rate occasion of light pleasure.

As I remember Stravinsky himself conducting it, the Divertimento was all accents and patterns, pace and line. That made it angular, a little stiff though charming. With Burgin and the Boston Symphony virtuosi of 1962, the approach is gentler, with polish, delicacy and even just a modicum of sly humor. This way the effect is of more resilience, color and variety.

Let us all utter a courteous thank you (of moderate intensity) for the privilege of hearing "Fireworks" again. As a historical curiosity it is interesting, showing Stravinsky's grasp of instrumental detail when he was about 26. As music, you could say that, along the same line of descriptive purpose, Debussy did more with less.

With the increased richness, depth and weight of tone which the Boston Symphony has re-acquired under its new artistic direction, the music of Gustav Mahler may be presented in more nearly its true colors. Mahler was a Central European and the timbres which really best suit his music can be supplied by a cosmopolitan orchestra, but not by one with an essentially French style.

(I shall not forget the horror of a Paris performance—and under Bruno Walter, too!—of "Das Lied von der Erde," the French hornists giving their notes throat vibrato that makes horns sound like saxophones!)

So, yesterday, the Fourth Symphony had a depth and range of color, and a true orchestral splendor not characteristic of Mahler performances here in recent years. Burgin conducted it marvelously, the orcestra responded nobly, with a total result a performance that seemed as Mahleresque as one could hear: full of warmth and tenderness, lingering over the moderate tempi just enough to make all rounded and fully expressed.

There are two ways of singing the soprano solo of the final movement: one with the full color and vigor of a mature voice, the other not parodistic but rather light and with the character of a child's wonderment over the foods of heaven. The first way seems in my belief to match better the musical texture of the work, the second more vividly expresses the sense and mood of the text.

Soprano Virginia Babikian yesterday sang it in the first way, displaying a lovely full resonance and the musical intelligence of an artist.

Next week Burgin will conduct Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp; "L'Ascension" by Messiaen; Prokofieff's "Chout" Suite, and Hindemith's Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 8 1962

Symphony in Two-Composer Program

Burgin Conducts Stravinsky, Mahler

By Louis Chapin

Late 19th-century composers took the symphonic mold which Beethoven stretched, and filled it in a variety of more or less effusive ways. Two means, in the 20th century, of coming to terms with such effusions appeared during Richard Burgin's program yesterday with the Boston Symphony.

One, if you happened to be Stravinsky in 1928, was to recook the sound of Tchaikovsky in a fragrant little ballet-casserole called "Le Baiser de la Fée." The other, if you (more likely) were in yesterday's Symphony Hall audience, was to realize that while Mahler wrote at some length, his music speaks today with as much originality as ever.

Mr. Burgin prefaced the 1928 Stravinsky with one of the composer's earliest pieces still in the repertoire, the "Fireworks" of 1908, written for the wedding of Rimsky-Korsakov's daughter. The conductor's easy manner, sometimes evoking the give and take of rehearsal rather than performance, perhaps did not prepare for the opening intensity, and there was some off-balance brass playing. Thereafter the bursts of color followed each other with proper precision.

* * *

The change from forward-looking early Stravinsky to retrospective middle Stravinsky, casting admiring glances toward Tchaikovsky, proves again what Roland-Manuel wrote: "Stravinsky is the most methodical man in the world, and the least systematic. . . . It is generally imagined that he changes skins when what he does is to change tasks."

His task, this time, was not only to suitably clothe a story of fairy enchantment, but also, doing honor to his admired Tchaikovsky, to let the melodic and orchestral feel of the earlier master similarly enchant his score.

Hearing the performance's suave richness we were convinced that Stravinsky could as aptly reassemble details from Tchaikovsky's music as Picasso's cubism could reassemble details of the face—and with no more hurt to the original.

The only weaknesses, again, were a fussy moment or two in the horns (was it a yodel during the Danses Suisses?) when more certainty was needed either by player or conductor or both.

* * *

Mr. Burgin's authority communicated its fullness, however, during the more leisurely enchantments of Mahler's Fourth Symphony. It is a remarkable thing that such lengths of music with so little obvious contrast can keep an audience's attention right up to and beyond its wholly unpretentious ending.

What does it is the straight talk of Mahler's detail, and that was carefully directed and executed in yesterday's performance. The pervasive concern with the hereafter was that of a sophisticated, expert musician in search of peace; yet it is childlike enough to shake away the shrouds of mystery. Mahler comes to his conclusions, in the fourth movement, with idyllic stanzas from his well of poetic source-material, "Des Knaben Wunderhorn." Virginia Babikian, singing these, seemed to let the first three movements prepare her for the unashamed delights of this paradise, and described them in the spirit of directness.

Her tone was partly obscured by some orchestral passages, but she wisely refused to force it, and her controlled fullness came through where most needed—as in the exquisite closing lines of each stanza.

Mr. Burgin's way with Mahler's innocence of style was equally in keeping with its intent, and brought out his particular success as a conductor.

B

w

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 9 1962

Irving Fine Notturno Scheduled by Burgin

Richard Burgin, who is conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the mid-season vacation of music director Erich Leinsdorf, has scheduled the Notturno for Strings and Harp by the late Irving Fine. The work by the late Professor of Music at Brandeis University will begin the Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 p.m., and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The program will include "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations by Olivier Messiaen; the "Chout" Ballet Suite by Prokofieff, and the Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt," by Hindemith. The entire program also will be heard at the Symphony Hall Sunday concert Dec. 16 at 3 p.m.

Of these four composers, Hindemith (in 1940), Messiaen (in 1949) and Fine have been members of the composition faculty at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood.

SHOWTHROUGH

74 BOSTON 11 V

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

(First performance at these concerts)

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Andantino scherzando)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

DEC 15 1962

Burgin Leads Symphony In 20th Century Music

Cyrus Durgin, Globe music-drama editor, died suddenly last night. This is his review, completed a short time before his death, of yesterday afternoon's Symphony performance.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 11th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented the following works: Notturno for Strings and Harp (first time at these concerts), Irving Fine; "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations, Olivier Messiaen; "Chout" Ballet Suite, Prokofieff; Symphony from "Die Harmonie der Welt", Hindemith.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Associate conductor Richard Burgin had his courage firmly summoned, and an artistic purpose in mind when he chose the program for this week's Boston Symphony concerts. It consists of 20th Century music, four works composed between 1915 and 1953, in national origin from the United States, France, old Russia, and expatriate Germans.

It is a very interesting program, including nothing trivial or dull. It is also too much of a sameness, too demanding of an audience.

By the time that the best work of the four arrived, Hindemith's "Die Harmonie der Welt," my powers of concentration were ebbing low.

By the end of the first movement, they evaporated.

Nor was there any suggestion of Christmas in this list. (Messiaen's "L'Ascension" is, indeed, an Easter piece) to give a special holiday flavor. Is it too much to ask that such be forthcoming from the Boston Symphony?

Fine, Delicate

Taking yesterday's matters in chronological order, the first was new to these concerts, although the late Irving Fine conducted his Notturno at a Zimbler Sinfonietta concert nearly 12 years ago. This is fine, delicate, sensitive music, involving the contrast of solo harp, a tiny concertino of two violins, viola and cello, and a small string orchestra.

The idiom is modified 12-tone method, the texture beautifully clear, the musical thought of a high order, the influence late Stravinsky, the mood alternately elegiac and discreetly brisk.

Irving Fine was a most sincere and dedicated musician. What he wrote, he wrote to release that which was musical within him.

One thought sadly of his passing as the elegiac lento and adagio pursued their course. One also thought with certitude, that if his own elegy had to be written, he himself had done so in this glowing music. Not least of its merit is the excellent writing for harp, an instrument which few composers know how to treat well.

Messiaen's "L'Ascension" is, I believe, of that peculiarly cerebral sort of artistic manifestation which celebrates religious connotation if not impulse. The four movements are not without feeling, however, and the first, "Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Father" seems to invoke in brass the grandeur of the chorale.

The musical and emotional tension increases in the subsequent three movements, ending in a peculiar half-cadence (that left the audience bewildered a moment) on "Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father." Yet in all of this ardor, I could not escape the impression of an over-mastering intellectual governance of the music.

Less Prokofieff

Prokofieff's "Chout" Suite might well have been deferred to another occasion. It is lesser Prokofieff, obviously owing muching to Stravinsky of the "Petrouchka" period.

Too bad that "Die Harmonie der Welt" was left for last, when audience enthusiasm was waning and some persons walked out. This music is a glorious tissue of sound and ideas, in its symphonic derivation from an opera, though not in manner, recalling Hindemith's other "operatic symphony", "Mathis der Maler". There is so much to hear and perceive! If any 20th Century composers survive the wear and tear of a couple more centuries, Hindemith surely will be in the forefront!

The virtuosi of the Boston Symphony, including one extra percussionist, were kept exceedingly busy through the afternoon. Burgin was at the top of his technical form, and the musicians did their best by him.

Next week the entire Orchestra will be on Christmas vacation. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be a Mozart program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, Dec. 28 and 29, devoted to Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525), the C minor Piano Concerto (K. 491), with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist, and the "Posthorn" Serenade (K. 320).

SHOWTHROUGH

14 BOSTON 11

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 14, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

(First performance at these concerts)

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Allegretto)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

These concerts will end about [illegible] o'clock [illegible] Afternoon [illegible] on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[649]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3090, Boston 64 Richmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,560
DEC 15 1962

Burgin Leads Symphony In 20th Century Music

Cyrus Durgin, Globe music-drama editor, died suddenly last night. This is his review, completed a short time before his death, of yesterday afternoon's Symphony performance.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed its Symphony Hall [illegible] yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 11th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented the following works: Notturno for Strings and Harp (first time at these concerts), Irving Fine; "L'Ascension" [illegible] Symphonic Meditations, Olivier Messiaen; "Chout" Ballet Suite, Prokofieff; Symphony from "Die Harmonie der Welt", Hindemith.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Associate conductor Richard Burgin had his courage firmly summoned, and an artistic purpose in mind when he chose the program for this week's Boston Symphony concerts. It consists of 20th Century music, four works composed between 1915 and 1[illegible] in national origin from United States, France, Russia and expatriate Germans.

It is a very interesting program, including nothing trivial or dull. It is also too much of a sameness, too demanding of an audience.

By the time that the [illegible] work of the four arrived, Hindemith's "Die Harmonie der Welt," my powers of concentration were ebbing [illegible]

By the end of the first movement, they evaporated.

Nor was there any suggestion of Christmas in this list. (Messiaen's "L'Ascension" is, indeed, an Easter piece) to give a special holiday flavor. Is it too much to ask that such be forthcoming from the Boston Symphony?

Fine, Delicate

Taking yesterday's matters in chronological order, the first was new to these concerts, although the late Irving Fine conducted his Notturno at a Zimbler Sinfonietta concert nearly 12 years ago. This is fine, delicate, sensitive music involving the contrast of solo harp, a tiny concertino of two violins, viola and cello, and a small string orchestra.

The idiom is modified 12-tone method, the texture beautifully clear, the musical thought of a high order, the influence late Stravinsky, the mood alternately elegiac and discreetly brisk.

Irving Fine was a most sincere and dedicated musician. What he wrote, he wrote to release that which was musical within him.

One thought sadly of his passing as the elegiac lento and adagio pursued their course. One also thought and made [illegible] with certitude, that if his own elegy had to be written, he himself had done so in this glowing music. Not least of its merit is the excellent writing for harp, an instrument which few composers know how to treat well.

Messiaen's "L'Ascension" is, I believe, of that peculiarly decadent sort of artistic manifestation which celebrates religious connotation if not impulse. The four movements are not without feeling, however, and the first, "Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Father" seems to invoke in brass the grandeur of the chorale.

The [illegible] and emotional tension increases in the subsequent three movements, ending in a peculiar half-cadence (that left the audience bewildered for a moment) on "Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father." Yet in all of this ardor, I could not escape the impression of an over-mastering intellectual governance of the music.

Less Prokofieff

Prokofieff's "Chout" Suite might well have been deferred to another occasion. It is lesser Prokofieff, obviously owing much to Stravinsky of the "Petrouchka" period.

Too bad that "Die Harmonie der Welt" was left for last, when audience enthusiasm was waning and some persons walked out. This music is a glorious tissue of sound and ideas, in its symphonic derivation from an opera, though not in manner, recalling Hindemith's other "operatic symphony", "Mathis der Maler". There is so much to hear and perceive! If any 20th Century composers survive the wear and tear of a couple more centuries, Hindemith surely will be in the forefront.

The virtuosi of the Boston Symphony, including one extra percussionist, were kept exceedingly busy through the afternoon. Burgin was at the top of his technical form, and the musicians did their best by him.

Next week the entire Orchestra will be on Christmas vacation. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be a Mozart program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, Dec. 28 and 29, devoted to Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525), the C minor Piano Concerto (K. 491), with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist, and the "Posthorn" Serenade (K. 320).

BLANK PAGE

SHOWTHROUGH

76 BOSTON SUN 3. Tues. 5

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 3:00 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Andantino scherzando)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 18, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Andantino scherzando)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
DEC 16 1962

Burgin To Lead Symphony

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon at 3 o'clock and Tuesday evening at 8:30, in its final concerts prior to the orchestra's mid-winter vacation.

At today's concert he will offer works by four well known contemporary composers. Beginning with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, the program will continue with "L'Ascension," four Symphonic Meditations by Messiaen and Prokofiev's Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" (Buffoon). Paul Hindemith's Symphony "Die Harmonie der Welt" will conclude the concert, which will be repeated on Tuesday evening.

Following the vacation period, the Symphony Orchestra's concerts will resume with Mozart programs on Dec. 28 and 29.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 16 1962

Symphony's Mid-Season Vacation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform this week the last two concerts before the annual mid-season vacation for all members.

At Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3, Richard Burgin will conduct the Notturno for Strings and Harp by the late Irving Fine; Messiaen's "L'Ascension"; the "Chout" Ballet Suite by Prokofieff, and the Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt", by Hindemith. The program will be repeated at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a program devoted to Mozart, by small orchestra, at the next Friday — Saturday concerts in Symphony Hall Dec. 28 and 29. The numbers will be Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525), the Piano Concerto in C minor (K. 491), with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist, and the "Posthorn" Serenade (K. 320).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 16 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

This afternoon and Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in its final concerts prior to the orchestra's mid-winter vacation. Richard Burgin will conduct the concert this afternoon and also on Tuesday evening.

At today's concert Mr. Burgin will conduct works by four well-known contemporary composers.

The concert will begin with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp. Also to be heard will be "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations by Messiaen, and Prokofiev's Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"). Paul Hindemith's Symphony "Die Harmonie der Welt" will conclude the concert. This program will be repeated on Tuesday evening.

Following the vacation the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will resume with the Mozart programs on Friday and Saturday, Dec. 28 and 29.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
DEC 21 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
DEC 19 196

NewEnglandNewsclipAg
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchm
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
DEC 20 1962

Christmas Vacation For Hub Symphony

Musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on a week's vacation.

The orchestra, which has the longest season of any symphonic group in the country, was given the week off as a Christmas gift by the trustees.

They played a concert Tuesday night and won't return until after the holiday.

SHOWTHROUGH

76 BOSTON SUN 3. Dec. 5

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 3:00 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Andantino scherzando)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 18, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

FINE ..... Notturno for Strings and Harp

I. Lento
II. Animato
III. Adagio

MESSIAEN ..... "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations

Majesty of Christ Beseeching His Glory of His Father
Serene Hallelujahs of a Soul that Longs for Heaven
Hallelujah on the Trumpet, Hallelujah on the Cymbal
Prayer of Christ Ascending to His Father

PROKOFIEV ..... Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" ("Buffoon"), Op. 21

The clown and his wife (Andantino scherzando)
The clown dresses up as a young girl (Andantino innocente)
The young girl is transformed into a goat (Moderato con agitazione)
Final dance (Moderato; Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

HINDEMITH ..... Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt"

I. Musica Instrumentalis
II. Musica Humana
III. Musica Mundana

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
DEC 16 1962

Burgin To Lead Symphony

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon at 3 o'clock and Tuesday evening at 8:30, in its final concerts prior to the orchestra's mid-winter vacation.

At today's concert he will offer works by four well known contemporary composers. Beginning with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, the program will continue with "L'Ascension," four Symphonic Meditations by Messiaen and Prokofiev's Suite from the Ballet, "Chout" (Buffoon). Paul Hindemith's Symphony "Die Harmonie der Welt" will conclude the concert, which will be repeated on Tuesday evening.

Following the vacation period, the Symphony Orchestra's concerts will resume with Mozart programs on Fri. 28 and 29.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 16 1962

Symphony's Mid-Season Vacation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform this week the last two concerts before the annual mid-season vacation for all members.

At Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3, Richard Burgin will conduct the Notturno for Strings and Harp by the late Irving Fine; Messiaen's "L'Ascension"; the "Chout" Ballet Suite by Prokofieff, and the Symphony, "Die Harmonie der Welt", by Hindemith. The program will be repeated at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a program devoted to Mozart, by small orchestra, at the next Friday — Saturday concerts in Symphony Hall Dec. 28 and 29. The numbers will be Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525), the Piano Concerto in C minor (K. 491), with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist, and the "Posthorn" Serenade (K. 320).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 16 1962

Concert Calendar For Week

This afternoon and Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in its final concerts prior to the orchestra's mid-winter vacation. Richard Burgin will conduct the concert this afternoon and also on Tuesday evening.

At today's concert Mr. Burgin will conduct works by four well known contemporary composers.

The concert will begin with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp. Also to be heard will be "L'Ascension," Four Symphonic Meditations by Messiaen, and Prokofiev's Suite from the Ballet "Chout" ("Buffoon"). Paul Hindemith's Symphony "Die Harmonie der Welt" will conclude the concert. This program will be repeated on Tuesday evening.

Following the vacation the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will resume with the Mozart programs on Friday and Saturday, Dec. 28 and 29.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
DEC 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471
DEC 19 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
DEC 20 1962

Christmas Vacation For Hub Symphony

Musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on a week's vacation.

The orchestra, which has the longest season of any symphonic group in the country, was given the week off as a Christmas gift by the trustees.

They played a concert Tuesday night and won't return until after the holiday.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 12.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART

Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525
- I. Allegro
- II. Romanze: Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegretto
- IV. Rondo: Allegro

Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K. 491
- I. (Allegro)
- II. Larghetto
- III. (Allegretto)

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

Serenade in D major, No. 9, K. 320 ("Posthorn")
- Adagio maestoso: Allegro con spirito
- Concertante: Andante grazioso
- Menuetto: Allegretto
- Rondeau: Allegro ma non troppo
- Andantino
- Menuetto
- Finale: Presto

SOLOIST

GABRIEL TACCHINO

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOW.
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

DEC 1962

ORCHESTRAS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

Mr. Leinsdorf, with only two months at the helm, has already put some needed wind in the orchestra's sails. On December 28 and 29, he and his men will accompany Gabriel Tacchino in Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor (K. 491) in the work's first performance in the Symphony Hall series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

DEC 29 1962

Boston Symphony Plays An All-Mozart Program

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the following all-Mozart program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," K.525; the Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K.491, with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist (American debut); and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K.320.

(This week's reviewer of the Symphony Concert is Associate Professor of Music at Brandeis University).

By CALDWELL TITCOMB

Precious few composers (and still fewer precious composers) can easily support a concert devoted exclusively to their own works. Mozart is, perhaps, one of them. Erich Leinsdorf obviously thinks so, for this week he is concentrating entirely on three works by the dazzling supernova of the Classical galaxy. Clearly our Vienna-bred conductor feels a special rapport with the Vienna-bedded composer; and that rapport was lovingly extended to those sitting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

But although the music was all more than a century and a half old, the occasion by no means lacked novelty. For one thing, it was the first time the C-minor piano concerto had ever been played by the Orchestra in the Friday-Saturday series. Mozart, through 21 examples, singlehandedly raised the solo piano concerto to the level of the symphony. In no other medium to which he turned with some frequency did he achieve such a high percentage of masterpieces. This concerto is a gem among gems—the most serious, profound, and progressive of them all. So it is hard to believe that we haven't had it before; but program annotator John Burk is a meticulous researcher, and we had best just be thankful for its belated appearance.

Further novelty lay in the fact that the soloist, Gabriel Tacchino, was making his American debut. The choice of a Mozart work took courage. It prevented him from making a splashy, rafter-ringing impact. It also meant that any technical errors would be readily noticeable—and, with the pianistic field as crowded as it is today, we expect any young aspirant to offer a near-flawless technique as a minimum (this was not true with earlier generations).

The French-Italian pianist looks younger than his 28 years. His stage manner is impassive and impressive. He means business, and has no annoying mannerisms. There is no doubting his dedication.

Tacchino's playing was neither overdone nor anemic. His technique was secure, and there was only a handful of scamped notes. He never cheated with the pedal, and knew the difference between soft and medium soft, and between forefront and background pianism. He also had the intelligence to elaborate occasionally on the notes that Mozart left in a skeleton state.

Mozart left no cadenzas for the concerto, and Tacchino used the ones by Heidseck (whoever he was). Only the first-movement cadenza was at all extensive, and it proved to be serviceable at least. But here Tacchino's tone became harsh and his playing rather labored—the only unsuccessful part of his performance. In general, the sole lack in his playing was a supreme effortlessness—and this will doubtless come in time.

Mozart's use here of both oboes and clarinets (rare for him) and of divided violas lends a richness to the sonority that well suits the portentous chromaticism of the opening orchestral ritornello, and the high seriousness of the finale (cast in the form of theme and variations, a form in which Mozart was not often at his best). Save for some excessively loud horn playing in the first movement and some out-of-tune clarinet notes in the second, the Orchestra's collaboration was laudable.

The "Posthorn" Serenade in D-major, which closed the concert, is something of a novelty, too, and had not been played by the Orchestra for 25 years. Its seven movements run nearly three quarters of an hour—much too long for the work's slight content. If it is not first-rate Mozart, Leinsdorf pretended that it was—which is as it should be.

The nickname comes from the fact that the second minuet contains a solo restricted to the notes of the tonic chord, the only notes playable on the posthorn (a valveless ancestor of the cornet). Yesterday Roger Voisin tooted these quaint fanfares on an actual posthorn. Flutist Doriot Dwyer, oboist Ralph Gomberg, and bassoonist Sherman Walt merit special praise for their solo playing.

The program opened with the familiar serenade "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," a polished work of lightness, gaiety, and simplicity. Taking all the repeats—Orpheus be praised!—Leinsdorf elicited a subtly phrased and caressing performance from his properly reduced group of three dozen.

Next week's program includes the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's piano concerto, with the composer as soloist; Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3;" and Bruckner's "Symphony No. 9 in D-minor."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

DEC 23 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

DEC 27 1962

Tacchino to Make American Debut at BSO's Fri. Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday and Saturday programs, at 2:15 and 8:30 p.m., respectively, will consist of three works by Mozart. Gabriel Tacchino will make his American debut with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf has invited the young French pianist to perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, No. 24, in C minor, K. 491.

Also to be heard on this program will be "Eline Kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525, and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K. 320. For the Serenade Roger Voisin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal trumpet, will play an old posthorn, which belongs to his orchestra colleague, Harold Meek.

The posthorn, forerunner of the modern cornet, is a coiled brass instrument formerly used by the guards of the mail coaches to announce their arrival in European villages and towns.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

DEC 21 1962

French Pianist To Make U.S. Debut

The young French pianist Gabriel Tacchino will make his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Erich Leinsdorf has invited the 28-year-old winner of many European piano competitions to perform Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24 in the orchestra's all-Mozart program next weekend.

Roger Voisin will play the posthorn, the forerunner of the modern coronet, in the orchestra's rendition of Mozart's Serenade in D major.

Also on the 2:15 p.m. Dec. 28 and 8:30 p.m. Dec. 29 program will be Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."

Symphony Holiday

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is believed to have the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, have given the musicians a week off for Christmas.

The symphony plays 50 out of 52 weeks a year in many cities across the country. The season extends from September until late in August.

Orchestra spokesmen also said the musicians, instead of exchanging gifts, made presents for CARE and for the support of two 8-year-old children they adopted some time ago, a boy in Hong Kong and a girl in Korea.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 12.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO—SIXTY-THREE

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART

Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525

I. Allegro
II. Romanze: Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Rondo: Allegro

Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K. 491

I. (Allegro)
II. Larghetto
III. (Allegretto)

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

Serenade in D major, No. 9, K. 320 ("Posthorn")

Adagio maestoso: Allegro con spirito
Concertante: Andante grazioso
Menuetto: Allegretto
Rondeau: Allegro ma non troppo
Andantino
Menuetto
Finale: Presto

SOLOIST
GABRIEL TACCHINO

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[713]

SHOW.
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

DEC 1962

ORCHESTRAS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

Mr. Leinsdorf, with only two months at the helm, has already put some needed wind in the orchestra's sails. On December 28 and 29, he and his men will accompany Gabriel Tacchino in Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor (K. 491) in the work's first performance in the Symphony Hall series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

DEC 29 1962

Boston Symphony Plays An All-Mozart Program

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the following all-Mozart program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" K.525; the Piano Concerto No. 24 in C minor, K.491, with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist (American debut); and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K.320.

(This week's reviewer of the Symphony Concert is Associate Professor of Music at Brandeis University).

By CALDWELL TITCOMB

Precious few composers (and still fewer precious composers) can easily support a concert devoted exclusively to their own works. Mozart is, perhaps, one of them. Erich Leinsdorf obviously thinks so, for this week he is concentrating entirely on three works by the dazzling supernova of the Classical galaxy. Clearly our Vienna-bred conductor feels a special rapport with the Vienna-bedded composer; and that rapport was lovingly extended to those sitting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

But although the music was all more than a century and a half old, the occasion by no means lacked novelty. For one thing, it was the first time the C-minor piano concerto had ever been played by the Orchestra in the Friday-Saturday series. Mozart, through 21 examples, singlehandedly raised the solo piano concerto to the level of the symphony. In no other medium to which he turned with some frequency did he achieve such a high percentage of masterpieces. This concerto is a gem among gems—the most serious, profound, and progressive of them all. So it is hard to believe that we haven't had it before; but program annotator John Burk is a meticulous researcher, and we had best just be thankful for its belated appearance.

Further novelty lay in the fact that the soloist, Gabriel Tacchino, was making his American debut. The choice of a Mozart work took courage. It prevented him from making a splashy, rafter-ringing impact. It also meant that any technical errors would be readily noticeable—and, with the pianistic field as crowded as it is today, we expect any young aspirant to offer a near-flawless technique as a minimum (this was not true with earlier generations).

The French-Italian pianist looks younger than his 28 years. His stage manner is impassive and impressive. He means business, and has no annoying mannerisms. There is no doubting his dedication.

Tacchino's playing was neither overdone nor anemic. His technique was secure, and there was only a handful of scamped notes. He never beat the piano, and knew the difference between soft and medium soft, and between forefront and background pianism. He also had the intelligence to elaborate occasionally on the notes that Mozart left in a skeleton state.

Mozart left no cadenzas for the concerto, and Tacchino used the ones by Heidseck (whoever he was). Only the first-movement cadenza was at all extensive, and it proved to be serviceable at least. But here Tacchino's tone became harsh and his playing rather labored—the only unsuccessful part of his performance. In general, the solo lack in his playing was a supreme effortlessness—and this will doubtless come in time.

Mozart's use here of both oboes and clarinets (rare for him) and of divided violas lends a richness to the sonority that well suits the portentous chromaticism of the opening orchestral ritornello, and the high seriousness of the finale (cast in the form of theme and variations, a form in which Mozart was not often at his best). Save for some excessively loud horn playing in the first movement and some out-of-tune clarinet notes in the second, the Orchestra's collaboration was laudable.

The "Posthorn" Serenade in D-major, which closed the concert, is something of a novelty, too, and had not been played by the Orchestra for 25 years. Its seven movements run nearly three-quarters of an hour—much too long for the work's slight content. If it is not first-rate Mozart, Leinsdorf pretended that it was—which is as it should be.

The nickname comes from the fact that the second minuet contains a solo restricted to the notes of the tonic chord, the only notes playable on the post horn (a valveless ancestor of the cornet). Yesterday Roger Voisin tooted these quaint fanfares on an actual posthorn. Flutist Doriot Dwyer, oboist Ralph Gomberg, and bassoonist Sherman Walt merit special praise for their solo playing.

The program opened with the familiar serenade "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," a polished work of lightness, gaiety, and simplicity. Taking all the repeats—Orpheus be praised!—Leinsdorf elicited a subtly phrased and caressing performance from his properly reduced group of three dozen.

Next week's program includes the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's piano concerto, with the composer as soloist; Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3;" and Bruckner's "Symphony No. 2 in D-minor."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

DEC 23 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

DEC 27 1962

Tacchino to Make American Debut at BSO's Fri. Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday and Saturday programs, at 2:15 and 8:30 p.m., respectively, will consist of three works by Mozart. Gabriel Tacchino will make his American debut with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf has invited the young French pianist to perform the Mozart Piano Concerto, No. 24, in C minor, K. 491.

Also to be heard on this program will be "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525, and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K. 320. For the Serenade Roger Voisin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal trumpet, will play an old posthorn, which belongs to his orchestra colleague, Harold Meek.

The posthorn, forerunner of the modern cornet, is a coiled brass instrument formerly used by the guards of the mail coaches to announce their arrivals in European villages and towns.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

DEC 21 1962

French Pianist To Make U.S. Debut

The young French pianist Gabriel Tacchino will make his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Erich Leinsdorf has invited the 28-year-old winner of many European piano competitions to perform Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24 in the orchestra's all-Mozart program next weekend.

Roger Voisin will play the posthorn, the forerunner of the modern cornet, in the orchestra's rendition of Mozart's Serenade in D major.

Also on the 2:15 p.m. Dec. 28 and 8:30 p.m. Dec. 29 program will be Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."

Symphony Holiday

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is believed to have the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, have given the musicians a week off for Christmas.

The symphony plays 50 out of 52 weeks a year in [illegible] across the country. The season [illegible] from September until late in August.

Orchestra spokesmen also said the musicians, instead of exchanging gifts, made presents for CARE and for the support of two 6-year-old children they adopted some time ago, a boy in Hong Kong and a girl in Korea.

78

—A New Year's Serenade at Symphony

Gabriel Tacchino Makes His United States Debut

By Harold Rogers

For his final concerts of the old year, and indeed for his first concert of the new year on New Year's Day, Erich Leinsdorf is offering something of a serenade to his Boston Symphony audiences. And who better than Mozart knew how to fashion a serenade?

So Mr. Leinsdorf is opening his weekend Symphony Hall concerts with "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" and is closing them with the "Posthorn" Serenade in D major, K. 320, while in between he has placed the more somber Piano Concerto No. 24 in C minor for appropriate contrast. In this concerto the young French pianist, Gabriel Tacchino, made his United States debut on Friday afternoon.

M. Tacchino, at the age of 28, has come a long way in his mastery of the technique and the sound for Mozart, and in his performance he was truly commendable for a proper sense of balance, control, and color; yet he has much farther to go before he steps into that charmed area inhabited by few Mozart players—by Clara Haskil, to name but one of the greatest.

The secret of interpretation, in short, has still to be divined by M. Tacchino—the ability to frame the music in a halo as Mme Haskil once framed it. When she played, the listener found himself caught up in an aura of wonderment; the head was no longer interested in analysis, the heart was reveling in the highest and deepest degree of communion known to the art.

* * *

Yet it is not surprising that young musicians seldom find the secret; few, indeed, are the teachers who know how to teach it, and there are young players who can glibly run over the explanations without managing to put them to work. There are exceptions, of course — Glenn Gould and Vladimir Ashkenazy — but most musicians have to live longer and struggle longer and suffer longer until the miracle happens—until certain self-limitations fall away and the divine shines through.

A total devotion to the music, of course, will do it—the ability to so value the musical idea at hand that nothing exterior to it can be permitted to enter the mental and emotional arena. The only way an artist can bring his listeners 100 percent into the music is to enter into it 100 percent himself. There is no other way. If he has divided his consciousness by giving 50 percent of his attention to the musical idea and 50 percent of his attention to the problems involved in giving technical expression to that idea, he has simply reduced the emotional communion by half. And listeners are let down. They may not know why—especially if the sound is right—but they are let down all the same.

This very problem also enters into Mr. Leinsdorf's direction of the Boston Symphony. We have now come to the halfway mark of his first season as the orchestra's musical director, and perhaps a certain minor appraisal can be made at this point. There is no gainsaying that he has done wonders with the orchestra, that he has refined its tone, adjusted its balance, polished its timbres.

* * *

Yet in nearly everything he does—as he did with "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" and the "Posthorn" Serenade—his intelligence holds a slight edge over his emotions. For the finest and greatest music making, of course, the heart should hold a slight edge over the head.

And this, we hope, is what will eventually happen in Mr. Leinsdorf's development. For if the mantle of true greatness is to settle on his shoulders, he too will have to enter 100 percent into the inner substance of the music. Else we shall go on hearing concerts that are superb, true enough, but not superlative.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
DEC 29 1962

Symphony Gives Mozart Program

By McLAREN HARRIS

The program at yesterday's Symphony placed the light features of two serenades on either side of the darker tones of a piano concerto, a plan both balanced and cohesive—and the music was all Mazart.

At the center of the plan was the C minor Concerto No. 24, K. 491, in which the soloist was youthful Parisian, Gabriel Tacchino, making his first visit to this country.

There is a theory that one may gauge Mozart's popularity, and hence his prosperity, over a given period of his life by the number of piano concertos he produced during that period, since he was invariably the soloist at the performances. The C minor concerto was the third of the season of 1785-86, and as this indicates rather good public favor, one wonders why this concerto contains so much of the tragic element.

Appear as Equals

The piano and orchestra are not treated as opposing voices on a strict solo-ensemble basis, but appear as equals in an almost symphonic context. The orchestra proclaims the principal theme of the allegro with grim determination; the piano adds striking octaves to the chromatic intervals and gives a feeling of restless motion with extended scale passages.

As the first movment ends with resignation to the minor, so the final allegretto shakes off the passages in C major, returning again to Ci minor for its concluding statement. Only the serenity of the intervening Larghetto breaks the somber hold of the work.

Serenade Opens

Opening the concert was the Serenade, K. 525, "Eine kleine Nachtmusik." For works of such small scale, I am inclined to prefer a chamber group to an orchestra. For this occasion, though, no worries were in order. Mr. Leinsdorf maintains a discipline that insures cleanliness and coordination, yet phrases do not become clipped or detached. Subtle lengthening of staccatos and controlled accents provide considerable lightness in the minuet, while an unhurried tempo in the Rondo allow each theme to speak with a natural spirit.

Both the "Nachtmusik" and the Serenade in D major, K. 320, were intended for similar function: to be served piecemeal at courtly gatherings for purposes of casual entertainment. Judging fro mthe length of the D major Serenade (7 movements), the evening must have been quite long. It is called the "Posthorn" serenade, but with thin justification, for the predecessor of modern trumpets makes only one short appearance, in the second trio of the second minuet. Roger Voisin made the most of it, on an instrument from his own collection.

Like some others, I have wondered whether our modern concert performances of Mozart's serenades are all for the best. We approach the music with respect and give it a formal treatment, very different from that for which it was intended. To provdie diversion but not distraction, the movements are light and comparatively brief, and are not designed with continuity in mind, except in contrast of character. And is it really correct to assume that 18th century nobility was ignorant of the music's great value?

In Mozart's case, the answer is likely to be—yes. With his occasional pieces Mozart gave more than he was paid for. While I think that concert performance is not the ideal medium, this music is not apt to be heard elsewhere, least of all done by musicians of such stature as Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the twelfth concert of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Gabriel Tacchino was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30, and consists of works of Mozart: Serenade, "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525; Piano Concerto in C minor, K. 491; Serenade in D major, K. 320, "Posthorn."

Amusements

SHOWTHROUGH

TUESDAY 6

79

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 1, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART

Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525

I. Allegro
II. Romanze: Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Rondo: Allegro

Piano Concerto No. 24, in C minor, K. 491

I. (Allegro)
II. Larghetto
III. (Allegretto)

INTERMISSION

Serenade in D major, No. 9, K. 320 ("Posthorn")

Adagio maestoso: Allegro con spirito
Concertante: Andante grazioso
Menuetto: Allegretto
Rondeau: Allegro ma non troppo
Andantino
Menuetto
Finale: Presto

SOLOIST
GABRIEL TACCHINO

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOWTHROUGH

80 BOSTON 13.

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 4, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 5, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72

KIRCHNER ..... Piano Concerto No. 1

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro ma non troppo

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
LEON KIRCHNER
MR. KIRCHNER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 30 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 30 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
JAN 10 1963

SHOW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000
JAN 1963
1962

Harvard Composer

Symphony to Play Kirchner Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performances of Leon Kirchner's Piano Concerto No. 1 at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week.

Mr. Kirchner, a member of the faculty of the Harvard University music department, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be the soloist in these performances.

The Concerto, written by commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, was first performed by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos on Feb. 23, 1956. The composer was also the soloist on that occasion.

Brooklyn-Born

Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in performances of Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3 and the Symphony No. 9, in D minor by Bruckner.

Born in Brokolyn, Leon Kirchner has lived the greatest part of his life in California, where he received his musical education at the University of California. There he studied with Albert Elkus, Edward Strickland, and Arnold Schoenberg. Mr. Kirchner was also a student of Roger Sessions in New York. Before coming to Harvard he taught at the University of Southern California and was professor of music at Mills College. In the summer of 1959 he was a member of the faculty of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

On Tuesday evening the sixth program in the Tuesday series, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program devoted to the music of Mozart. The program will consist of "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525; the Piano Concerto No. 24, K. 491, with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist; and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K. 320.

Other concerts listed in Places to Go, Things to See, in Herald TV section.

Robert Taylor is on vacation. His Notes on Music will resume next Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 1963

Kirchner Concerto in Boston Première

Composer Soloist at the Keyboard

By Harold Rogers

Verbosity prevails at the Boston Symphony weekend concerts. Verbosity in Leon Kirchner's contemporary sense and in Anton Bruckner's late-romantic sense. The first work was debatable; the second its long past debating. At the Friday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall the Kirchner was coolly received; the Bruckner, perhaps partly by contrast, was indeed a success.

Mr. Kirchner, now on the musical faculty of Harvard University, is a native of Brooklyn; his fellow New Yorkers will have an opportunity to appraise his Piano Concerto No. 1, with himself at the keyboard, at Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday evening, Jan. 9.

* * *

On Friday Mr. Kirchner played with a composer's touch—a little banging plus too much pedal. His score propped before him, he turned his own pages, bobbed his head to manage the beat, and labored to transform what is manifestly a difficult piece of writing into acceptable sound.

But the work as a whole does not go down easily—not because the idiom is difficult. By any contemporary terms you choose, the idiom is easy; the fabric is largely tonal, though spiced with some augmented or diminished intervals; there is a good deal of parallel writing, contrasted with contrary motion; more than once the middle period Stravinsky comes to mind.

* * *

But the work fails on first hearing (and hardly invites a second) owing to what may be structural flaws and a sameness of color and rhythm. The end movements, for instance, sound too much alike; the middle Adagio contains the best writing as the piano sets forth its aspiring monologues, abetted from time to time by an intense underlining on the part of the orchestra.

Mr. Kirchner must have had some sense of form in mind, yet it is hardly in evidence. The work seems to be through-composed, its basic materials maining unchanged, the whole prolonged beyond sufferance. The concert was having its first Boston hearing.

The Bruckner Ninth Symphony—its fourth and final movement unfinished and therefore unplayed—was presented in its original version by Mr. Leinsdorf. But here the verbosity has the support of a good solid Austrian sense of form.

Bruckner may have said more than he need to have said, and said it again and again; but he leaves you in no doubt as to his architecture. You can recognize his themes, primary and secondary; his developments and redevelopments; his extended codas and whatever else he may have employed to hold the whole massive thing together. Even if you let your mind wander while enjoying his radiant timbres and magnificent melodies, he will bring you back again and again to his form, reminding you where you are at the moment.

Mr. Leinsdorf's reading had its glories and its sunbursts; also its pathos as the Adagio movement closed as Bruckner's career itself had closed—without fanfares, without triple-fortes, but in the quiet of contemplation.

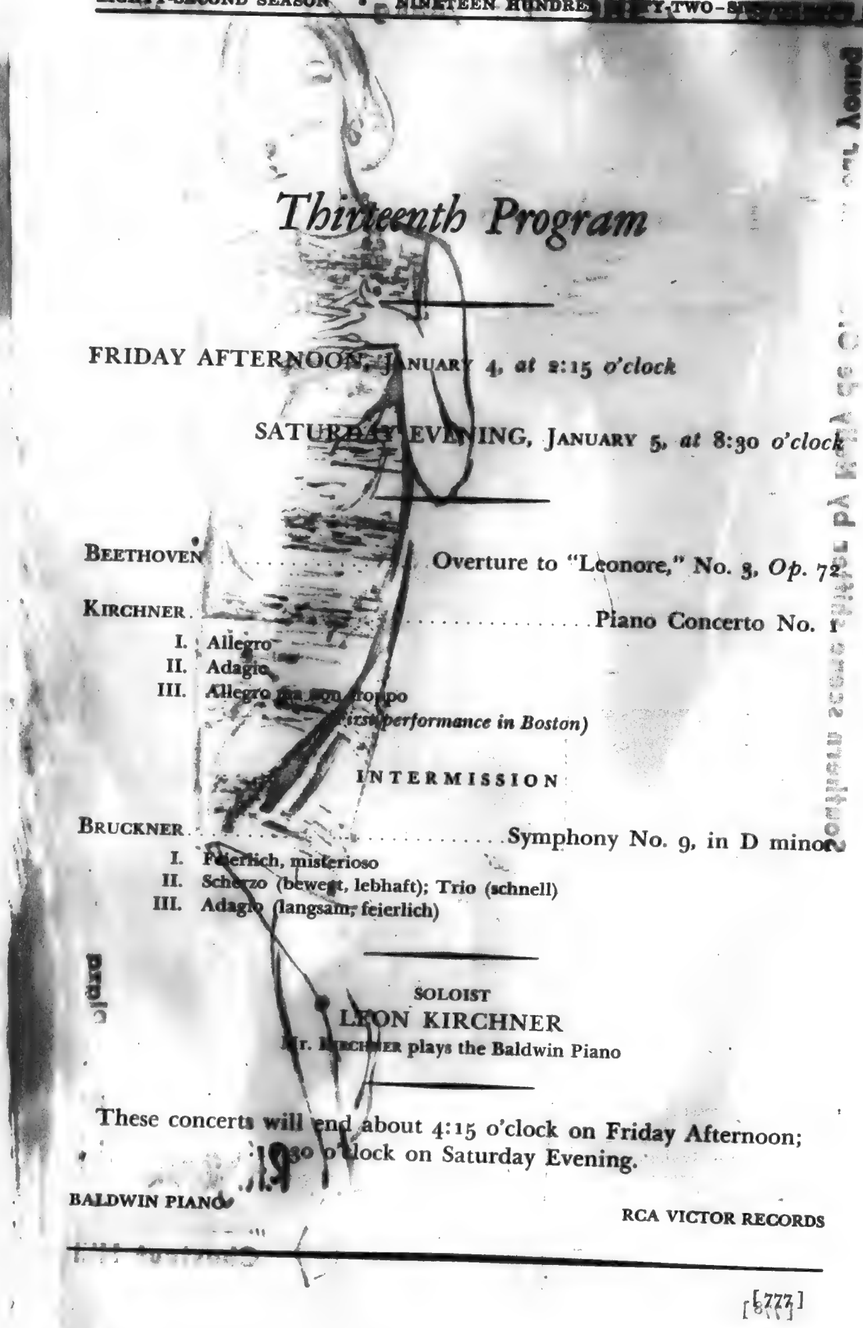
Hazel's Poems

Robert Hazel will read his own poems in the Hayden Library Lounge at MIT Thursday, Jan. 10, at 8 o'clock. Mr. Hazel has published two novels and a book of poems.

SHOWTHROUGH

80 BOSTON 13.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO-SIXTY-THREE



Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 4, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 5, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72

KIRCHNER ..... Piano Concerto No. 1

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro ma non troppo

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
LEON KIRCHNER
Mr. KIRCHNER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[777]

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 30 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
JAN 10 1963

SHOW.
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000
JAN 1963
1962

Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
DEC 30 1962

Harvard Composer

Symphony to Play Kirchner Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first Boston performances of Leon Kirchner's Piano Concerto No. 1 at the Friday-Saturday concerts this week.

Mr. Kirchner, a member of the faculty of the Harvard University music department, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be the soloist in these performances.

The Concerto, written by commission of the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, was first performed by the New York Philharmonic under Dimitri Mitropoulos on Feb. 28, 1962. The composer was also the soloist on that occasion.

Brooklyn-Born

Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in performances of Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3 and the Symphony No. 9 in D minor by Bruckner.

Born in Brooklyn, Leon Kirchner has lived the greatest part of his life in California, where he received his musical education at the University of California. There he studied with Albert Elkus, Edward Strickland, and Arnold Schoenberg. Mr. Kirchner was also a student of Roger Sessions in New York. Before coming to Harvard he taught at the University of Southern California and was professor of music at Mills College. In the summer of 1959 he was a member of the faculty of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

On Tuesday evening the sixth program in the Tuesday series, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program devoted to the music of Mozart. The program will consist of "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," K. 525; the Piano Concerto No. 24, K. 491, with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist; and the Serenade in D major, No. 9 ("Posthorn"), K. 320.

Other concerts listed in Places to Go, Things to See, in Herald TV section.

Robert Taylor is on vacation. His Notes on Music will resume next Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 5 1963
9-62

Kirchner Concerto in Boston Premiere

Composer Soloist at the Keyboard

By Harold Rogers

Verbosity prevails at the Boston Symphony's weekend concerts, verbosity in Leon Kirchner's contemporary sense and in Anton Bruckner's late-romantic sense. The first work was debatable; the second long past debating. At the Friday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall the Kirchner was coolly received; the Bruckner, perhaps partly by contrast, was indeed a success.

Mr. Kirchner, now [illegible] musical faculty [illegible] ard University, is a [illegible] of Brooklyn, his [illegible] New [illegible] cess who have an opportunity to appraise his Piano Concerto No. 1 [illegible] at the keyboard at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Jan. 9.

On Friday Mr. Kirchner played with a co[illegible]'s touch [illegible] too much [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] form that is necessarily a difficult piece of writing into acceptable sound.

But the work as a whole does not go down easily because the idiom is [illegible] difficult. By any contemporary [illegible] you choose, the idiom is easy; the fabric is largely tonal, though spiced with [illegible] augmented or dim[illegible] vals; there is a [illegible] parallel writing, with contrary mo[illegible] than once the mid[illegible] Stravinsky comes to m[illegible]

But the work fails on [illegible] hearing (and hardly invites a second) owing to what may be structural flaws and a sameness of color and rhythm. The end movements, fo[illegible] sound too much alik[illegible] Andante contains [illegible] as the piano sol[illegible] soaring monologues, [illegible] from time to time by an intense underlining on the part of the orchestra.

Mr. Kirchner must have had some sense of form in mind, yet it is hardly in evidence. The work seems to be through-composed, its [illegible] maining unchanged, [illegible] prolonged beyond [illegible] The concert was having its first Boston hearing.

The Bruckner Ninth Symphony—its fourth and final movement unfinished and therefore unplayed—was presented in its original version by Mr. Leinsdorf. But here the verbosity has the support of a good solid Austrian sense of form.

Bruckner may have said more than he need to have said, and said it again and again; but [illegible] you in no doubt as to [illegible] ucture. You can [illegible] themes, primary [illegible] his develop[illegible] developments; his [illegible] and whatever [illegible] ave employed to [illegible] massive thing if you let your[illegible] while enjoying [illegible] res and mag[illegible] he will bring [illegible] and again to [illegible] ng you where [illegible] ment.

Mr. Leinsdorf had its glories and [illegible] murmurs; also its pathos [illegible] the Adagio movement clos[illegible] Bruckner's career itself [illegible] ed—without fanfares, [illegible] but triple-[illegible] but in the [illegible] iet of con-[illegible]

Hazel's Poems

Robert Hazel will read his own poems in the Hayden Library Lounge at MIT Thursday, Jan. 10, at 8 o'clock. Mr. [illegible] published two novels [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JAN 5 1963

The Symphony

Kirchener Plays His Own Concerto

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Although the glorious Bruckner Ninth Symphony dominated yesterday's Symphony program, Leon Kirchmer's solid but abstruse Piano Concerto No. 1 —heard for the first time here—marked the revival of a rare custom, the tradition of the composer-performer.

Mr. Kirchner, who is now a member of the Harvard faculty, chose to appear as the soloist in his own concerto; and, in doing so, followed the example of Prokofieff, Gershwin, Rachmaninoff, Mrs. H. A. A. Beach, Henry Holden Huss and many others who have been their own advocate in Symphony Hall. He gave a competent performance of his craggy music, too. It is an incredibly difficult work that probably needs a first-rank virtuoso for ultimate refinement; but Mr. Kirchner's tone, dynamic control, vigor and marksmanship showed that he had not underestimated his abilities.

Grand Manner

As for the music itself, it is a statement in the grand manner, which utilizes virtually every known device of chromaticism. Essentially romantic, the concerto seethes with contemporary rhythmic tensions, with brooding darkness, with introspection and abrupt intervals of savage dissonance.

The virtuosity of the dialogue between the soloist and the orchestra is subordinated to expression; there is much to hear that attracts the ear in an idiom deriving both from Liszt and Bartok.

But other sources emerge as well. The relationship to the Adagio of Beethoven's G major Concerto can be discerned in Mr. Kirchner's Adagio; and flickers of Chopin and Scarlatti even.

In short, Mr. Kirchner, like so many composers of the present day, seeks to reinterpret a fertile humanism within the context of today's idioms. One may question, however, if the workmanship, skilled as it is, may not be a trifle too polished; for one is aware of the manipulation of a concept of 'originality' here, quite alien to the composer's models.

Dazzling Coups

Mr. Kirchner pulls off many dazzling coups such as the 'fioriture', the improvised embellishment of the cadenzas, that sound to us theatrical, whereas to a Baroque audience these might sound entirely natural.

As the invaluable Alfred Einstein has put it: "Can one call Beethoven truly original? Undoubtedly not, as far as 'invention' is concerned. If we look at Beethoven's work, we see that he was not intent upon being 'different' from his predecessors or contemporaries, but that he tried to surpass them in magnitude. . . His originality does not reside in his melody, rhythm or harmony, however, personal these may be; it resides in the power of his temperament. . ."

There is power in Mr. Kirchner's temperament patently, but his concerto involves such formidable technical problems that the listener is frequently conscious of the quest for the original.

Magnificent Score

Mr. Leinsdorf's performance of the three movements of Bruckner's final symphony may be accounted one of the cherishable events of the season. This is a magificent score, prismatic in its color, hushed in its mystical resplendence, andu belongs near the top of the master's output. (The correspondence between it and Schubert's 'Unfinshed' should not be prodded, for whereas Schubert probably realized his two movements stood complete, Bruckner would have finished if he could.)

The score employed by Mr. Leinsdorf is that of the "restored" version of Bruno Walter. The latter introduced it to Boston in 1947 after many years here of the Ferdinand Lowe emendations, which did for Bruckner what Nahum Tate did for Shakespeare.

We may assume that Mr. Leinsdorf presented it without cuts, although it seemed to me that the themes of the recapitulation went remarkably fast. But the performance as a whole displayed the steady, cumulative power of Bruckner's vocabulary, his luminous detail, his transfigured vision.

Curtain Raiser

The "Lenore No. 3," made a welcome curtain-raiser, not only for its innate qualities, but because we have heard few overture this season, and because it serves to remind one of Mr. Leinsdorf's background.

The interpretation was vibrant and spirited, and the offstage trumpet by the Maestro's magic, floated from afar over the orchestra's middle, instead of from the stage door as in the past.

Next week the Boston Symphony tours; and on Jan. 18-19 Charles Munch appears as guest conductor for the first time. He has scheduled Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite, Op. 80; Ravel's Valses Nobles et Sentimentales and La Valse, Choreographic Poem; and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JAN 5 1963

Composer as Soloist

Kirchner Piano Concerto Played by Boston Sym.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, gave the following program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72, Beethoven; Piano Concerto No. 1, Leon Kirchner, with the composer as soloist; and Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Bruckner.

By NICHOLAS VAN SLYCK

(The guest reviewer of this week's Boston Symphony concert is the director of the Longy School of Music.)

The Friday afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony opened rather sedately with Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3. Some curious phrasing and a lack of drive left matters in some doubt for the first few minutes. However, with the off-stage trumpet call, played with proper military precision by Mr. Voisin, the afternoon began to get off the ground, and in one way or another it stayed aloft throughout the remainder of the concert.

The Kirchner piano concerto, featured in its Boston debut with the composer as soloist, cannot be said to be a true concerto. A certain largeness of plan, and a welding of the solo with the orchestral forces is implied by the title "Concerto." It is not enough that each comment alternately on the musical material at hand, but a true artistic reason for the presence of both the solo and the orchestra must be established before a work justifies this title with its impressive heritage.

Notwithstanding there are the makings of important and exciting music in this creation of Leon Kirchner. The first movement gets down to business after an erruption in the piano part, and establishes an atmosphere of chamber music. Fragmented melodies abound and the piano interjects ornamental versions of these ideas. A large battery of percussion instruments creates a general mood of excitement which was further intensified by Kirchner's split second turning of his own pages, a task that nearly caused him serious trouble at more than one point.

All three movements of the concerto give the impression of alternating between fast and slow sections just as the composer overemphasize the alteration between the solo and orchestra. However, it is not until the second movement that a true feeling for line emerges. Many of Kirchner's lyric ideas seem ill suited to the keyboard and are less heavily ornamented, but the first sustained utterance by the piano in this movement is logical without being academic and has the simplicity and complexity of a fine melodic inspiration.

Again later on in the movement one hears through the layer of trills and arpeggios and recognizes the true poet. These, the most telling utterances in the piece are effectively set off by threatening interruptions in the cellos and basses.

The last movement, as is the case with many, adds but little to the general impression. With the exception of greater virtuoso requirements for the soloist and a well-timed violin solo, played with great sensitivity by the concertmaster, Mr. Silverstein, the piece began to cover ground amply examined in earlier moments. By this time Kirchner's piano writing began to show its limitations. But at no moment were there any doubts about his skill as a performer. He commands all the speed, control and variety of touch that his music demands, and he could serve other contemporary music well with his pianistic art.

As a conductor Erich Leinsdorf is a superb craftsman. Nowhere was this more apparent than in his traversal of the Bruckner Ninth Symphony. Many a listener is grateful for the fact that Bruckner never finished this lengthy work, but one suspects for the wrong reasons. After the hush of yesterday's concluding phrases, there must have been many who wished for the chance to hear what new stream of melodies would have issued from his pen had Bruckner added the customary Finale.

Leinsdorf's way with this music results in an underlining of its dramatic and elegant qualities. His insistence upon clarity of detail shows us what a master composer Bruckner really was. The thick orchestration often criticized was nowhere in evidence yesterday through Leinsdorf's unerring sense of balance. Some of Bruckner's repetitious melodies need to be conducted with the heart instead of the head or else they lose their way. If some did yesterday, it was a small price to pay for the spine-tingling climaxes and nobility of conception.

Following a tour of Storrs, New Haven, New York and Brooklyn Jan. 7-11, the Boston Symphony will play the following program at Symphony Hall: Faure, "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite; Ravel, Valses Nobles et Sentimentales; Franck, Symphony in D minor. Charles Munch will return to the podium to conduct these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 6 1963

Boston Symphony Tours This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on tour this week presenting concerts in Connecticut and New York.

The orchestra's next Symphony Hall concerts will be on January 18 and 19 when retired Music Director Charles Munch returns as guest conductor.

David Craighead, chairman of the organ department of the Eastman School of Music, will open the Third Season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts Sunday, Jan. 20. The series will also include concerts by E. Power Briggs on February 10; Joseph Miranda, March 3; and Berj Zamkochian, April 7.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
JAN 4 1963

Symphony To Tour Next Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Connecticut and New York next week, performing in four cities in as many days.

The orchestra will be heard at the University of Connecticut, in Storrs, Monday evening and perform in New Haven the next night.

The symphony will play at Philharmonic Hall, New York City, Wednesday and appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday evening.

Tuesday evening at 8:30, WGBH will televise the second program in its series, "Symphony Hall—An Intimate View." On the taped show, narrator William Pierce will interview orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. and acoustical scientist Leo J. Beranek.

Gabriel Tacchino, who made his American debut with the symphony this afternoon, will solo in the orchestra's New York concerts. Composer Leon Kirchner will play his Piano Concerto No. 1 at the Philharmonic Hall performance.

Charles Munch, retired music director, will return as guest conductor Jan. 18 and 19 when the orchestra makes its next Symphony Hall appearances.

NEW YORK 3.
STORRS.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 7,070

JAN 10 1963

Boston Symphony Bright With Director Leinsdorf

STORRS — The new musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has indicated a bright and reinvigorated period is in store for that fine musical organization.

The Boston Symphony returned to the University of Connecticut Auditorium Monday for its annual visit. However, in a certain sense this was a "first" as the orchestra was led by its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf—a guest conductor here two seasons back.

Born in Vienna, Austria, Mr. Leinsdorf received his education there, and served as assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival from 1934 to 1938. Following a period with the Metropolitan Opera in New York, he was appointed Music Director and Conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1943.

After service in the United States Army, he became music director and conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Metropolitan Opera as Music Consultant and Conductor from 1957 to 1962 before assuming his present position with the Boston Symphony last September 21.

He will also be the Director of the Berkshire Festival this coming summer. He is now the eleventh maestro to lead the Boston organization which is in its eighty-second season.

The program opened with Mozart's Serenade in G major, K. 525, more known as the "Eine kleine Nachtmusik." This "Little Serenade" which has been called "a joy forever" is an accomplished piece of work, seemingly simple, but in reality a difficult task.

It was originally written as a quintet in which form it is but vcasionally heard. Although it is played as a four movement work today, Mozart, in his own thematic catalog refers to the work as being in five movements, but the other movement was either purposely removed from the score or was lost.

The composition was played by a reduced string section of the orchestra, in keeping with the nature of the work, and was given a crystalline performance.

Leinsdorf's way with Mozart is justly well known, for some time ago he undertook the recording of all forty-one of the Mozart symphonies with the London Philharmonic. Monday evening's performance was a fine introduction of Mr. Leinsdorf to the Storrs audience.

There followed the Leonore Overture No. 3, Opus 72a, of Beethoven, which, also, was given a fine performance. Beethoven wrote four overtures for the opera now known as Fidelio. The first three are known, in order or composition, as Leonore No. 2, Leonore No. 3, and Leonore No. 1; Beethoven then withdrew the opera for some revision, and finally presented it as Fidelio with another new overture.

The Leonore No. 3 is the one which is most often heard in concert. It is written in three broadly defined sections, and it is climaxed by one of the finest perorations in orchestral literature.

Particularly interesting in this performance was the use of the off stage trumpet calls, which, instead of being backstage, were delivered from the balcony — quite a surprise for those sitting in that part of the auditorium.

Following the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the Symphony in D minor by Anton Bruckner, which was written between the years 1887 and 1894, and yet remains an uncompleted score. There has been a good deal of contention surrounding the music of Bruckner, but within recent years his symphonies have been performed more frequently.

For a long time there was a good deal of confusion surrounding the Ninth Symphony. The symphony was first presented in 1903 by Ferdinand Loewe, a Bruckner disciple, who had prepared an "arrangement" from the original score. However, it was a somewhat strangely polished, even "slick" Bruckner, and after almost thirty years, the musicologists Robert Hass and Lafred Orel investigated the original manuscript. Only then was it discovered that the orchestration had been radically altered, passages omitted, and new passages interpolated by Loewe inserted.

In 1932, a test concert was arranged in Munich with both the Loewe and original versions presented for purposes of comparison. The performance was decisive in favor of the original version.

The opening sections of some of the Bruckner symphonies are some of the best in symphonic literature, and the extended introduction to the Ninth is almost awe inspiring. However, as in the Seventh Symphony, the composer fails to realize the promise of the introduction in what follows. There is a fecundity of thematic material, and yet this material is strung together in a continuing patchwork.

The Scherzo, with its dark fury, is a true work of art, with the form and cohesion to make it a complete success. The Adagio contains some of the most beautiful passages in Bruckner's compositions, and yet, again, the music needs to be tightened up considerably. Here, the composition abruptly ends; the finale was apparently never written.

In a sense, the slow movement of the Bruckner symphony is an inconclusive way to conclude a concert, and yet, there is little else which could logically follow it.

It was good to hear Bruckner performed for the first time in the Storrs concert series, and to hear it performed in the manner in which it was on Monday evening.

It was good to again hear Mr. Leinsdorf and what he is doing with the Boston Symphony. —M.T.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

JAN 1 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

JAN 6 1963

Boston Orchestra Has UofC Date

STORRS (Special) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, will offer its eighth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Monday at 8:15 p.m.

Leinsdorf, who first led the Boston Symphony at Storrs as a guest conductor two seasons ago, will be making his first appearance at the UofC as the Orchestra's music director. He replaced Charles Munch this year.

The new conductor is the 11th maestro to lead the Boston Orchestra in its history and only the third music director in the past 38 years. He came to Boston with a brilliant record in opera and has been conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, director of the New York City Opera, and music director and conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic.

The orchestra will perform Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525"; Beethoven's "Overture to 'Leonore' No. 3, Op. 72" and Bruckner's "Symphony No. 9, in D minor."

Tickets may be obtained by mail order only.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
ROCKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,567

JAN 3 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JAN 6 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT UCONN MONDAY

STORRS, Conn. — The celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, will offer its eighth annual concert at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Auditorium Monday at 8.15 p.m.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who first led the Boston Symphony at Storrs as a guest conductor two seasons ago, will be making his first appearance at the U of C as the orchestra's music director. He replaced Charles Munch last year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 12,916

JAN 8 1963

Boston Scores Hit at UConn

By JOHN GRUBER

Erich Leinsdorf last night demonstrated that he has the stuff from which really great symphonic conductors are made. His direction of the Boston Symphony, at Storrs, showed that he has every intention of restoring that organization to absolute first rank among the world's famous orchestras.

Precision in the strings was once again what it had been under Koussevitsky, and the tonal resources of the orchestra showed a vastly increased palet of tone colors. Only four months have passed since Mr. Leinsdorf officially became the conductor, but the improvement in orchestral techniques is remarkable.

This is a tremendous achievement, for the improvement all had to be made close to the absolute end of human possibilities; the orchestra was a great organization anyway, and, to many, further improvement might have seemed impossible.

Members of the orchestra with whom I talked during intermission are agreed that he is a hard taskmaster. One of them said, "He works our tails off; he's as bad as Koussevitsky used to be!" Paradoxically, this may make him as good as Koussevitsky used to be.

Last night Beethoven's third "Lenore" Overture received a performance that was absolutely breathtaking in conception and execution. I cannot recall a finer performance anywhere, at any time. The same statement cannot, however, be made of the opening Mozart.

"Eine Klein Nachtmusik" was played with flawless intonation, and absolute precision. But truly exquisite feeling for Mozart's delicious phrasing was absent. The first section of the trio in the Minuet approached true understanding of the composer, and the finale was not far from the mark. The remainder, however, verged on pomposity, rather than the grace that was born in Mozart's very bones.

This was rather surprising. Mr. Leinsdorf studied with Bruno Walter and Arturo Tosconini, both of whom were excellent with Mozart, but in the last analysis all they could give him was technique and understanding for the composer, not inborn sympathy with him.

Bruckner's massive "Symphony No. 9" concluded the evening. This was beautifully played. In fact, you are not likely to hear a better performance. Excessively long, particularly for a three movement work, I have sometimes been bored to death with it, but last night I found it interesting. Happily, Mr. Leinsdorf was able to express the composer's sincerity and simplicity throughout, despite the very apparent prolixities of the composition.

Altogether it was a great concert, played by a great orchestra under a great conductor. What more could you ask?

NEW YORK

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 432,953

JAN 19 1963

I WENT to the Boston Symphony's concert in Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday evening mainly to see how Erich Leinsdorf would conduct Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. Fine Bruckner conducting is not at all common, and the ability to hold that master's mammoth creations together in such a way as to realize their complete coherence is an altogether special one. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading lacked the fire, the tenderness, and the passion that I have heard some other conductors, notably the late Bruno Walter, inject into the symphony. This Bruckner was elegant and refined, rather than deeply contemplative and exalted. Nevertheless, it did have the virtues of coherence and exemplary clarity. On the same

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 266,534

JAN 26 1963

AT THE other concert, Leinsdorf introduced the French-Italian pianist Gabriel Tacchino in the C minor (K.491) Concerto of Mozart. He is a credit to either side of the frontier where facility and pianistic assurance are concerned, but there was little evidence of warm feeling for, or even intellectual comprehension of, the composer's idiom. It was neat, rhythmically precise, and blandly innocent of insight. Together the soloist and conductor achieved the almost impossible feat of dehumanizing this music, of rendering null the charm of the C major intrusion in the final movement.

There were, otherwise, meticulously prepared and almost flawless performances of Beethoven's "Leonore No. 3" overture and the Bruckner No. 9 (with the Kyrchner) and Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture and the Shostakovitch No. 10 (with the Mozart). It is understandable that the Boston Orchestra needs a period of discipline after the relative laxness under Munch, but in the present procedure, Leinsdorf is admonishing the audience as well as the orchestra.

Musical America 11/13/63

Boston Symphony and Gabriel Tacchino at Philharmonic Hall

We are unaccustomed to so thoughtful and tasteful a reading of Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" as was given January 11 by Leinsdorf and the Bostonians at Philharmonic Hall. And there is freshness still in those familiar hills. Examples of sensitivity in dynamics and formal balance could be cited by the dozen, and nowhere more strikingly than in the simplicity of the opening chords. When so exemplified, what a beautiful instrument the orchestra is. Leinsdorf unquestionably has a pair of the most sensitive ears hereabout.

Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor—one of that composer's highest achievements in any form—is yet a more difficult task. Control and insight are required in supreme quantity, and the Boston was all but seraphic. In the face of such an experience, it somehow mattered less than would be expected that the pianist was matching the orchestra none at all. He was bland, barely audible at times, and had none of the orchestra's pearly sheen. In the slow movement, he was inhibited and square, and while the last movement was passable, his sense of direction was never clear. An artist can have off-nights, and we certainly hope to hear better work in Gabriel Tacchino's second New York appearance.

Following this, Leinsdorf turned his good offices to the Shostakovitch Tenth Symphony, showing again the high level of both conductor and orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

JAN 14 1963

Music: Shostakovich Symphony

The Boston Orchestra Plays His Tenth

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times.

NEW YORK.

Dmitri Shostakovich composed his Tenth Symphony in 1953, and it was heard in New York the following year, but it has had precious few performances since then. It therefore was something of a novelty when it was presented Friday night in Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf and the Bostom Symphony were the sponsors.

As Shostakovich symphonies go, this one is less cliche-ridden than most. But, again like most Shostakovich symphonies beginning with No. 5, it is nevertheless predictable. One knew in advance that there would be a long slow movement with meandering melodies. One knew there would be solemn percussion raps and rhymthmic mottoes slowing dying away. One expected a fast two-four movement with lively melodic skits. And one was not disappointed.

The trouble with the Shostakovich symphonies is, I think, that basically lightweight ideas are subjected to very heavy and portentous treatment. After awhile the result is irritating, and not many Shostakovich symphonies can stand repeated hearings.

It may be that this kind of writing stems from the Communist ideology imposed on any Soviet composer. Shostakovich was going along in grand, free - wheeling style until the ideological crackdowns of the nineteen thirties and nineteen forties. After that, he had to revert to a much more conservative style, to put blinders and a check-rein on his muse. All indications are that Shostakovich has been running scared ever since he was first spanked.

The loss is the world's, for he was by far the most promising Russian composer after Prokofieff.

Also on the program were Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture, and Mozart's piano concerto in C minor (K. 491) with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist.

Tacchino is French - born and French - trained (at the Paris Conservatoire). He is now 34 years old. All that this performance demonstrated was that his training has taught him to play accurately.

The notes were in place, and the runs were effortlessly spun forth.

What the interpretation lacked was a touch of imagination, of intensity, of tension. Almost any qualified student could have played the C minor as Tacchino played it. The fact that this concerto is Mozart's grandest conception, that its harmonies are highly colored, that it demands breadth and virility—all this seems to escape Mr. Tacchino.

The curious thing was that Mr. Tacchino (or was it Mr. Leinsdorf?) had obviously been doing some thinking about the music. A few bars in the piano part were filled in, and an effort was made to rethink the music. But the most important element of all was missing, and that was a fervent belief in the music as music.

NEW YORK

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 432,953

JAN 19 1963

I WENT to the Boston Symphony's concert in Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday evening mainly to see how Erich Leinsdorf would conduct Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. Fine Bruckner conducting is not at all common, and the ability to hold that master's mammoth creations together in such a way as to realize their complete coherence is an altogether special one. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading lacked the fire, the tenderness, and the passion that I have heard some other conductors, notably the late Bruno Walter, inject into the symphony. This Bruckner was elegant and refined, rather than deeply contemplative and exalted. Nevertheless, it did have the virtues of coherence and exemplary clarity. On the same

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 286,534

JAN 26 1963

AT THE other [illegible] introduced the [illegible] Gabriel Tacchino in the C minor (K.491) Concerto of Mozart. He is a credit to either side of the frontier [illegible] ability and pianistic assurance are concerned, but there was little evidence of [illegible] or even intelligent comprehension of, the composer's idiom. His [illegible] rhythmically precise, and blandly innocent of insight. Together the soloist and conductor achieved the almost impossible feat of dehumanizing the music, of rendering dull the charm of the C major intrusion in the final movement.

There were, [illegible] carefully prepared and [illegible] performances of Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 3 overture and the Schumann Symphony No. 2 (with the [illegible] John's "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture and the Shostakovich No. 10 (with the Mozart). [illegible] that the Boston Orchestra is a period of discipline after the relative laxness under Munch, but in the present procedure Leinsdorf is admonishing the [illegible] as well as the orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

JAN 14 1963

Music: Shostakovich Symphony

The Boston Orchestra Plays His Tenth

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times.

NEW YORK.

Dmitri Shostakovich composed his Tenth Symphony in 1953, and it was heard in New York the following year, but it has had precious few performances since then. It therefore was something of a novelty when it was presented Friday night in Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were the sponsors.

As Shostakovich symphonies go, this one is less cliche-ridden than most. But, again like most Shostakovich symphonies beginning with No. 5, it is nevertheless predictable. One knew in advance that there would be a long slow movement with meandering melodies. One knew there would be solemn percussion raps and rhythmic mottoes slowing dying away. One expected a fast, two-four movement with lively melodic skits. And one was not disappointed.

The trouble with the Shostakovich symphonies is, I think, that basically lightweight ideas are subjected to very heavy and portentous treatment. After awhile the result is irritating, and not many Shostakovich symphonies can stand repeated hearings.

It may be that this kind of writing stems from the Communist ideology imposed on any Soviet composer. Shostakovich was going along in grand, free-wheeling style until the ideological crackdowns of the nineteen thirties and nineteen forties. After that, he had to resort to a much more conservative style, to put blinders and a check-rein on his muse. All indications are that Shostakovich has been running scared ever since he was first spanked.

The loss is the world's, for he was by far the most promising Russian composer after Prokofieff.

Also on the program were Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture, and Mozart's piano concerto in C minor (K. 491) with Gabriel Tacchino as soloist.

Tacchino is French - born and French - trained (at the Paris Conservatoire). He is now 34 years old. All that this performance demonstrated was that his training has taught him to play accurately.

The notes were in place, and the runs were effortlessly spun forth.

What the interpretation lacked was a touch of imagination, of intensity, of tension. Almost any qualified student could have played the C minor as Tacchino played it. The fact that this concerto is Mozart's grandest conception, that its harmonies are highly colored, that it demands breadth and virility—all this seems to escape Mr. Tacchino.

The curious thing was that Mr. Tacchino (or was it Mr. Leinsdorf?) had obviously been doing some thinking about the music. A few bars in the piano part were filled in, and an effort was made to rethink the music. But the most important element of all was missing, and that was a fervent belief in the music as music.

Musical America 1/1963

Boston Symphony and Gabriel Tacchino at Philharmonic Hall

We are unaccustomed to so thoughtful and tasteful a reading of Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" as was given January 11 by Leinsdorf and the Bostonians at Philharmonic Hall. And there is freshness still in those familiar hills. Examples of sensitivity in dynamics and formal balance could be cited by the dozen, and nowhere more strikingly than in the Valhalla-like C major opening chords. When so exemplified, what a beautiful instrument the orchestra is, Leinsdorf unquestionably has a pair of the most sensitive ears hereabout.

Mozart's Piano Concerto in C minor—one of that composer's highest achievements in any form—is yet a more difficult task. Control and insight are required in supreme quantity, and the Boston was all but seraphic. In the face of such an experience, it somehow mattered less than would be expected that the pianist was matching the orchestra none at all. He was bland, barely audible at times, and had none of the orchestra's pearly sheen. In the slow movement he was inhibited and square, and while the last movement was passable, his sense of direction was never clear. An artist can have off-nights, and we certainly hope to hear better work in Gabriel Tacchino's second New York appearance.

Following this, Leinsdorf turned his good offices to the Shostakovitch Tenth Symphony, showing again the high level of both conductor and orchestra.

BROOKLYN

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RIDGEWOOD TIMES
Thursday, January 3, 1963

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, January 4, 1963

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, January 5, 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300

JAN 5 1963

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050

JAN 3 1963

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900

JAN 3 1963

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000

JAN 12 1963

1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000

JAN 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200

JAN 4 1963

Boston Symphony At Academy On Thursday Night

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will perform a program of classical, romantic and contemporary works at its third Brooklyn concert of the 1962-63 season on Thursday evening, January 10th, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. This concert will introduce to the New York area the brilliant 28-year old pianist, Gabriel Tacchino, who will perform Mozart's C minor piano concerto, K. 491.

The January 10 concert will open with the Overture to Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," to be followed by the Mozart piano concerto. After the intermission, Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovich's Symphony No. 10, which originally had been scheduled for the opening concert of the season.

Young Tacchino, who is making his first American tour, has been hailed as a virtuoso who is "the revelation of the year." One Paris critic wrote that he "is loaded with rare gifts" and many reviewers have commented on his "formidable technique," his "really prodigious talent" and "staggering musicianship." Not many pianists in their twenties can point to such laudatory press notices from the critics of Europe and South America, where he has toured with great success.

Born in Cannes of an Italian father and a French mother, Tacchino plays with the fire and temperament of a Latin artist. At six, he was enrolled at the Cannes Conservatory. When only 12, he went to the Paris Conservatory, where he won the First Prize. In 1955 and 1956, he won three more first prizes in European competitions, and these awards launched an international career. Engagements in Peru, Argentina and Brazil were followed by a London triumph in Prokofiew's third concerto.

Tickets for the January 10 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert are priced at $3, $3.50, $4, and $4.50.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521
DEC 1962

NOACK TRACKER FIRST PIPE ORGAN AT LINCOLN CENTER

The first pipe organ heard with orchestra in New York's new Lincoln Center was a tracker action built by Fritz Noack with a self-contained wind supply. The occasion was the Boston Symphony concert on Oct. 26 when Daniel Pinkham was organist for the Sonfonia and Chorale from Bach Cantata 19, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

The same instrument was heard earlier in three concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, and in Wolsey Hall, New Haven.

Musical America Jan 18, 1963

BMT Out of Tune; Boston Symphony Sings the Blues

The BMT was not in harmony Jan. 10. As a result the Boston Symphony was singing the blues.

The orchestra had been scheduled to start a concert in the evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. However, a BMT train carrying a number of the orchestra's members stalled on the way to Brooklyn.

At 8:30 P.M. only three violinists had made it to the academy. Also on hand were Erich Leinsdorf and pianist Gabriel Tacchino, who had come by private car. By 9 P.M., when the concert began, only half of the 104-member orchestra was on stage. It was not until 10:10 P.M. that all hands were accounted for.

Meanwhile, back in Boston, a spokesman said that although the orchestra had occasionally started concerts late, the Boston Symphony had never been disrupted by the Boston subway.

who dat?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
ROCKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,567

JAN 10 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108

JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244

JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245

JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954

JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

JAN 11 1963

Boston Symphony Stalled in Subway

NEW YORK (AP) — Pianist Gabriel Tacchino's New York debut was delayed about a half-hour Thursday night. A stalled subway train held up most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians en route to the Brooklyn Academy of Music to accompany him.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000

MUSIC

Long-suffering [illegible] BMT were accompanied [illegible] night's power failure by the Transit Authority's most distinguished victims to date: members of the Boston Symphony on their way to work at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. By 8:30, only five bewildered musicians had appeared on the Opera Hall stage. They were soon joined by a representative of management, whose announcement of the delay ("Let us begin the program with intermission,") occasioned prolonged and decidedly empathetic applause from the S.R.O. audience.

One can therefore, perhaps, attribute squarely to the BMT two aspects of the Overture's performance some thirty minutes later. The first violins, apparently shaken by their underground ordeal, responded with rather tentative intonation throughout. And Mr. Leinsdorf's somber, reading of Mendelssohn's customarily airy measures seemed at times more evocative of "Hamlet" than "a Midsummer Night's Dream."

No matter. During the Mozart Concerto which followed, the house was impeccably in order, and Mr. Leinsdorf, sans score and baton, its undisputed master.

Gabriel Tacchino, 28-year-old French pianist, was accorded a richly-deserved storm of approval at the Concerto's conclusion. His playing is warm, effortless, and in excellent taste.

The second half of the evening consisted entirely of Shostakovich's Tenth Symphony, composed in 1953 and first performed in the United States a year later. It is a demanding work, of great length and complexity, well-suited to the virtuoso abilities of the Boston Symphony. And if the ultimate degree of nationalistic fervor was absent from last night's performance, surely nothing else was missing. Mr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra unalteringly through fifty minutes of symphonic emotions, styles and technical problems. It was an absorbing performance.

Special mention should be made of Boston's invincible woodwinds—notably a recurring piccolo duet in the final movement performed exquisitely at roughly the speed of light, as well as outstanding solo work from trumpet, oboe, and English horn.

The program will be repeated Friday night at Philharmonic Hall, hopefully without the participation of the B M T or any other line.

—Judith Pearlman

OREGON
Allen's
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Established 1888
PORTLAND
Seattle
San Francisco - Los Angeles

Portland, Oregon
The Oregonian
(Cir. D. 200,116 - S. 260,829)

JAN 11 1963

DEBUT DELAYED 952

NEW YORK (AP) — Pianist Gabriel Tacchino's New York debut was delayed about a half-hour Thursday night. A stalled subway train held up most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians en route to the Brooklyn Academy of Music to accompany him.

Brooklyn

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RIDGEWOOD TIMES
Thursday, January 3, 1963

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, January 4, 1963

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, January 5, 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300
JAN 5 1963
RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050
JAN 3 1963

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BARCLAY 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 CHURCH STREET NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,800
JAN 3 1963

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000
JAN 12 1963
1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000
JAN 8 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200
JAN 4 1963

Boston Symphony At Academy On Thursday Night

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will perform a program of classical, romantic and contemporary works at its third Brooklyn concert of the 1962-63 season on Thursday evening, January 10th, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. This concert will introduce to the New York area the brilliant 28-year old pianist, Gabriel Tacchino, who will perform Mozart's C minor piano concerto, K. 491.

The January 10 concert will open with the Overture to Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," to be followed by the Mozart piano concerto. After the intermission, Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovich's Symphony No. 10, which originally had been scheduled for the opening concert of the season.

Young Tacchino, who is making his first American tour, has been hailed as a virtuoso who is "the revelation of the year." One Paris critic wrote that he "is loaded with rare gifts" and many reviewers have commented on his "formidable technique," his "really prodigious talent" and "staggering musicianship." Not many pianists in their twenties can point to such laudatory press notices from the critics of Europe and South America, where he has toured with great success.

Born in Cannes of an Italian father and a French mother, Tacchino plays with the fire and temperament of a Latin artist. At six, he was enrolled at the Cannes Conservatory. When only 12, he went to the Paris Conservatory, where he won the First Prize. In 1955 and 1956, he won three more first prizes in European competitions, and these awards launched an international career. Engagements in Peru, Argentina and Brazil were followed by a London triumph in Prokofiev's third concerto.

Tickets for the January 10 Boston Symphony Orchestra concert are priced at $3, $3.50, $4, and $4.50.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521
DEC 1962

NOACK TRACKER FIRST PIPE ORGAN AT LINCOLN CENTER

The first pipe organ heard with orchestra in New York's new Lincoln Center was a tracker action built by Fritz Noack with a self-contained wind supply. The occasion was the Boston Symphony concert on Oct. 26 when Daniel Pinkham was organist for the Sonfonia and Chorale from Bach Cantata 19, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

The same instrument was heard earlier in three concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, and in Wolsey Hall, New Haven.

Musical America Jan 18, 1963

BMT Out of Tune; Boston Symphony Sings the Blues

The BMT was not in harmony Jan. 10. As a result the Boston Symphony was singing the blues last night.

The orchestra had been scheduled to play a concert in the evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. However, a BMT train carrying a number of the orchestra's members stalled on the tracks in Brooklyn.

At 8:30 P.M. only two violinists had made it to the academy. Also on hand were Erich Leinsdorf and pianist Gabriel Tacchino, who had come by private car. By 9 P.M., when the concert began, only half of the 104-member orchestra was on stage. It was not until 10:10 P.M. that all hands were accounted for.

Meanwhile, back in Boston, a spokesman said that although the orchestra had occasionally started concerts late, the Boston Symphony had never been disrupted by the Boston subway.

who dat?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
ROCKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,567
JAN 10 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244
JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245
JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,954
JAN 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JAN 11 1963

Boston Symphony Stalled in Subway

NEW YORK (AP) — Pianist Gabriel Tacchino's New York debut was delayed about a half-hour Thursday night. A stalled subway train held up most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians en route to the Brooklyn Academy of Music to accompany him.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000
JAN 15 1963

MUSIC

Long-suffering habitués of the BMT were accompanied during last night's power failure by the Transit Authority's most distinguished victims to date: members of the Boston Symphony on their way to work at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. By 8:30, only five bewildered musicians had appeared on the Opera Hall stage. They were soon joined by a representative of management, whose announcement of the delay ("Let us begin the program with intermission,") occasioned prolonged and decidedly empathetic applause from the S.R.O. audience.

One can therefore, perhaps, attribute squarely to the BMT two aspects of the Overture's performance some thirty minutes later. The first violins, apparently shaken by their underground ordeal, responded with rather tentative intonation throughout. And Mr. Leinsdorf's somber, reading of Mendelssohn's customarily airy measures seemed at times more evocative of "Hamlet" than "a Midsummer Night's Dream."

No matter. During the Mozart Concerto which followed, the house was impeccably in order, and Mr. Leinsdorf, sans score and baton, its undisputed master.

Gabriel Tacchino, 28-year-old French pianist, was accorded a richly-deserved storm of approval at the Concerto's conclusion. His playing is warm, effortless, and in excellent taste.

The second half of the evening consisted entirely of Shostakovich's Tenth Symphony, composed in 1953 and first performed in the United States a year later. It is a demanding work, of great length and complexity, well-suited to the virtuoso abilities of the Boston Symphony. And if the ultimate degree of nationalistic fervor was absent from last night's performance, surely nothing else was missing. Mr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra unfalteringly through fifty minutes of symphonic emotions, styles and technical problems. It was an absorbing performance.

Special mention should be made of Boston's invincible woodwinds—notably a recurring piccolo duet in the final movement performed exquisitely at roughly the speed of light, as well as outstanding solo work from trumpet, oboe, and English horn.

The program will be repeated Friday night at Philharmonic Hall, hopefully without the participation of the B M T or any other line.

—Judith Pearlman

OREGON
Allen's
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Established 1888
PORTLAND
Seattle
San Francisco - Los Angeles
Portland, Oregon
The Oregonian
(Cir. D. 200,116 - S. 260,829)
JAN 11 1963

DEBUT DELAYED

NEW YORK (AP) — Pianist Gabriel Tacchino's New York debut was delayed about a half-hour Thursday night. A stalled subway train held up most of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians en route to the Brooklyn Academy of Music to accompany him.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY & SUN.-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

JAN 13 1963

85

BSO Wins Over BMT, Show Goes On Tardily

By PAUL AFFELDER

When it came time to begin the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Academy of Music Thursday evening, the stage was almost empty. It turned out to be a case of the BSO versus the BMT.

During each of their five regular three-day visits to the city, when they play two programs at Philharmonic Hall and one at the Academy, the musicians are housed at a hotel in midtown Manhattan, and a good many of them ride the subway to Brooklyn.

A disabled BMT train in the Canal st station caused delays up to an hour; and it seemed that a lot of the Bostonians were caught in the jam.

Finally, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, was obliged to explain the delay to the waiting audience, adding that the program would be rearranged, and would "begin with the intermission."

By nine o'clock, enough players had arrived so that it was possible to perform the opening number, Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The next work, Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 24 in C Minor, required an even smaller orchestra. And by the time the second intermission was over, the full orchestra was on hand to meet the instrumental demands of Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 10 in E Minor.

Perhaps the conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, was concerned over the delay, for his reading of the fairy-like Mendelssohn overture, while unusually clean-cut in its execution, was inclined to be rather stiff.

The soloist in the Mozart concerto was the 28-year-old French pianist, Gabriel Tacchino, just embarking on his first tour of the United States, and on this occasion making his initial appearance in New York. He showed at once that he is not a flashy pianist, as so many of our young people are today, but a musician of serious intent. His manner is quiet, his technique and taste impeccable. Besides, he has a lovely, if rather light singing tone, which he employed with telling effect in the slow movement. His relative reserve in the opening movement was in keeping with the tragic character of this, Mozart's most poignant concerto. The final Allegretto, with its double set of variations, calls for a little more drama and variation of color than M. Tacchino gave it.

Mr. Leinsdorf led his reduced forces in an accompaniment that was sensitive and fine-grained throughout, and which featured some exceptionally beautiful work from the superb Boston woodwinds.

The Shostakovich Tenth Symphony hasn't been played very much here since the late Dimitri Mitropoulos introduced it with the New York Philharmonic in 1954. If the Mozart concerto is a poignant work, this symphony is music of deep tragedy, colored by the composer's own personal misfortunes at the time he was writing it. It begins with a long, brooding slow movement. Its second movement is defiant, almost bellicose, and this is followed by an Allegretto that is light in texture but again dark in color. After an unusually long, slow, serious introduction, the final Allegro breaks out at last in a mood of gaiety and optimism.

Whereas most conductors are inclined to play this and the other Shostakovitch symphonies in a rather brash manner, Mr. Leinsdorf approached the music with deep respect for its inherent pathos. Everything seemed more polished and refined than one customarily hears. This was especially true of the slow sections, which created a most affecting listening experience. The second and fourth movements, however, had their ample share of brilliance, and the rousing conclusion brought loud approbation from the audience.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 14

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 18, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

RAVEL ..... Valses Nobles et Sentimentales
Modéré — Assez lent — Modéré — Assez animé — Presque lent — Assez vif — Moins vif — Epilogue: Lent

*La Valse, Choreographic Poem

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 12 1963

By John Brook

Charles Munch will return to Boston to conduct the concerts on Jan. 18, 19, 25, and 26 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096

DEC 1962

AMERICAN record guide

DECEMBER, 1962

AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF OPINION

Charles Munch

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 50,013
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890
JAN 17 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY GREETS OLD BOSS

BOSTON, Jan. 16 (UPI)—Members of the Boston Symphony orchestra welcomed back their old boss today when Charles Munch returned to rehearse for two weeks' appearance as guest conductor.

It was Munch's first appearance with the Bostonians since he retired last August after 13 years as the orchestra's musical director. He was succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 14

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 18, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

FAURÉ . . . . . "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

RAVEL . . . . . Valses Nobles et Sentimentales
Modéré — Assez lent — Modéré — Assez animé — Presque lent — Assez vif — Moins vif — Epilogue: Lent

*La Valse, Choreographic Poem

INTERMISSION

FRANCK . . . . . *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Christian Science Monitor (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 120,112
JAN 17

By John Sweet

Charles Munch will return to Boston to conduct the concerts on January 18, 19, and 20 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
DEC 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 50,013
JAN 17 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890
JAN 17 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY MEETS OLD BOSS

BOSTON, Jan. 18 (UPI)—Members of the Boston Symphony orchestra welcomed back their old boss today when Charles Munch returned to rehearse for two weeks' appearance as guest conductor.

It was Munch's first appearance with the Bostonians since he retired last August after 13 years as the orchestra's musical director. He was succeeded by Leon[illegible]

AMERICAN
record guide
DECEMBER, 1962
AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF OPINION

Charles Munch

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
JAN 1 (963

New England Newsclip Agency, I
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
13 963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
2 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
JAN 11 963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JAN 16 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
N 13 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 13 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 450,303
AN 13 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AN 17 1963

BOSTON, MASS.
GLOBE (MORNING)
D. 192,118 S. 445,834
JAN 16 1963

Charles Munch Returns For Concerts Here

By MARGO MILLER

Charles Munch, who stepped down last Summer after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has by no means retired from conducting. He returned to Boston Tuesday night to begin three weeks of concerts with his old orchestra.

Christmas found him in Tokyo finishing up a two-week engagement with the Japan Philharmonic. Munch came here via France where he spent the New Year's holidays at Louveciennes, his home near Paris.

On hand to greet him at Logan International Airport were Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the B.S.O.; Sally Hempel, secretary to Perry, and Mrs. Leonard Burkat, wife of the orchestra's music administrator. Burkat met the conductor's flight at Idlewild and accompanied him to Boston.

Munch's concert schedule in Boston begins tomorrow night with the Boston Symphony's Open Rehearsal at 7:30. He will conduct three successive Friday-Saturday pairs of concerts in addition to single concerts in the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday series. He will also be with the orchestra in Providence Jan. 29. And he returns to Boston for concerts Mar. 29-Apr. 2.

Since the end of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Munch has conducted orchestras on three continents. He directed 15 concerts by the Orchestre National Francais in October during its American tour. He was then guest conductor of the Montreal Symphony. Returning to Europe in November Munch conducted in Lausanne and Geneva before going to Japan.

Following his Boston concerts he will spend February and March in this country filling engagements with the Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia orchestras. In April he will conduct in London, Rome, Florence and Turin.

This schedule would give a younger man pause (Munch is 71). But conductors are known to be long-lived and hardy creatures. After the final Tanglewood concert—a performance of Beethoven's Ninth—and just before flying off to conduct at two European festivals, Munch remarked, "I become tired only when I am not working."

CONDUCTOR RETURNS—Dr. Charles Munch (right), retired conductor of the Boston Symphony, is greeted upon return from Europe by Thomas D. Perry Jr., symphony manager, and Sally Hempel, secretary.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 20 1963

Orchestras and Art Engage Conductor's Attention in Travels

By MARGO MILLER

"The Boston is the best orchestra in the world." Such was the judgment of Charles Munch who returned on Tuesday for a three-week engagement with his old orchestra. Since his retirement at the end of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood he has conducted orchestras on three continents. And during a career which dates from his Paris debut in 1933 he has known not only the major orchestras of the world but their conductors.

★ ★ ★

So the welcome—many vociferous minutes of cheering and stamping—by the B.S.O. players before his first rehearsal Wednesday morning was particularly sweet. Ovations greeted the 71-year-old conductor at Thursday's Open Rehearsal (a Munch innovation in 1950) and at the week-end concerts just concluded. And it was obvious when he took his bows, hand to his heart, that he was delighted to be back.

While having stepped down after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Munch has by no means retired. His schedule since the end of Tanglewood would give a younger man pause. But as he remarked at the end of the Berkshire Festival, "I am tired only when I am not working." Whereupon he flew to Europe to conduct at two other festivals.

What He Saw

Gossip of the musical world aside, a resume of Munch's travels is mostly likely to tell of what the conductor saw in shop windows or what he acquired for his various art collections.

Thus a question about New York concerts — L'Orchestre National Francais at Philharmonic Hall last October—is briefly answered. Instead Munch remarks that Manhattan's 57th st., den of antique dealers, silversmiths, sellers of drawings and objets d'art, is still "the most beautiful street in the world." And he will add, "the most expensive street." This last comment is accompanied by that Gallic snort common alike to the housewife disputing the price of day-old eggs in a Paris market and to the international collector looking at silver wine tasters.

How was Tokyo? Munch had conducted three performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Japan Philharmonic during a two-week engagement there in December. Well, the concerts were good. But better were the pieces of lacquer, the lengths of silk, strings of pearls, all "so beautiful."

Repository for Munch's treasures and souvenirs of his travels in his house at Louveciennes, a town near Paris. The estate—park, manor house and smaller buildings—was once part of the lands belonging to Mme. Du Barry, favorite of Louis XV.

Collections

When not globe-trotting—in April, Munch conducts in London, Florence, Rome, Milan and Turin—he lives in the 18th-century manor house.

Jewel ("un bijou") though the house is, a few changes were made upon Munch's occupation. He installed different walls in his library, constructed a terrace.

The furniture is Renaissance and Louis XIII. Paintings include works by Renoir, Sisley, Manet, Degas and several oils by Dutch masters. He has many fine Durers, also collects Canaletto etchings, old silver objects. And a clutter of old and new art catalogues keep him informed about what went to other collectors at sales and what may be coming on the market.

On the conductor's property also live his nephew Jean-Jacques Schweitzer, whose wife, the pianist Nicolle Henriot, appeared often with the B.S.O. and was soloist with Munch and the Japan Philharmonic. Another figure familiar in Symphony Hall was Roger Toureau, the conductor's chauffeur and valet of many years. Toureau and his wife occupy a guest cottage on the estate. Munch will spend the month of May in Louveciennes. It will be a rare vacation for a man whose baton never gathers dust.

His remaining schedule in Boston includes the next two Friday-Saturday pairs of concerts, as well as single concerts in the Sunday, Monday and Tuesday series. The Jan. 29 performance in Providence will also be under his direction. Following engagements in Chicago, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Munch returns here Mar. 20-Apr. 2 as guest conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,814
JAN 24 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Phoenix
BRISTOL, R. I.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 3,084
JAN 25 1963

RETURN OF DR. MUNCH

THE RETURN of Dr. Charles Munch, retired Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as guest conductor evoked such an affectionate reception by the orchestra's musicians that his efforts to begin rehearsing were held up by a long standing and cheering ovation. The photo was taken at the time, when the orchestra was rehearsing on Jan. 16. The orchestra will appear Jan. 29 in Providence, with Dr. Munch conducting, at Veteran's Auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 19 1963

8-62

Munch Returns to Symphony Hall Podium

Noted Conductor Wins Rapturous Acclaim

By Harold Rogers

"You're never sitting out on the back porch when Munch plays!" exclaimed an ecstatic listener at intermission. "When he plays you're always out on the balcony — in moonlight, with white orchids!"

Charles Munch had just completed his extraordinary coupling of the Ravel Valses Nobles et Sentimentales and La Valse, as he once did a few seasons back when he was the conductor of the Boston Symphony. This time, however, he was facing the orchestra for the first time after his retirement, and he was facing his players with a strange heart, that was no question about that. He simply leaned back with that benign smile on his face and opened the flood gates. The music poured forth, infused with the joy that he was obviously expressing. After all, there is no greater communicating power than love.

The listener is always put on the moonlit balcony when Munch plays — because he places the music out on the balcony, on full display. He may hold back the sound, as he does when he carefully shepherds a pianissimo, but he never holds back the emotion.

* * *

Now that he has retired he evidently is programing only the music he loves best. And his French program for the weekend concerts at Symphony Hall is just the kind that his detractors belabored him for — Fauré's Suite from the Incidental Music for "Pelléas et Mélisande," the two Ravel works listed above, and the Franck Symphony in D minor.

Yet somehow it just didn't matter what he played. Even the Franck warhorse leapt forward, eager with new vigor and vitality. What did matter is that it was not merely music for the ears; it was music for the soul; no one much cared if he spun it too quickly here or suspended a righ too long there. Few could have cared if every jot and tittle were dutifully noted. The result was the radiant expression of unadulterated musical joy. That's what happens, nothing else really matters.

When he opened with the Fauré "Pelléas et Mélisande," the whole thing came forth in an aura of hushed wonder, as if he were caressing the music, polishing it to a soft glow. The tour de force, of course, was the Ravel waltzes. Here again he gave us the opportunity to survey the Valses Nobles et Sentimentales and to note what a seedbed they were for La Valse, Ravel's apotheosis composed a decade later. To the sweet nostalgia of the pre-World War I waltzes was added the despair of the post-war. La Valse, the heartbreak of seeing a society in disintegration.

* * *

The era has now passed; the society is gone; La Valse is no longer prophetic; it, too, has become a period piece with all the Johann Strauss waltzes it aimed to honor.

Beethoven spoke of the "divine demon" that drove him in the creation of his inspired masterworks. Munch, too, must have been driven by some similar emotion as he played the Ravel.

As one experienced concert-goer has summed it up: "Most conductors merely possess the music, but Beau Charles is possessed by the music!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JAN 19 1963

Charles Munch Returns To Symphony Podium

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of its retired music director Charles Munch, gave the following concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: "Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80, by Faure; Valses Nobles et Sentimentales, and La Valse, Choreographic Poem, by Ravel, and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

BY ROBERT DUMM

(This week's guest reviewer is the Dean of the Boston Conservatory of Music.)

Yesterday's concert by the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall belonged entirely to Charles Munch, back for a homecoming after his retirement.

The standing ovation that greeted his walk to the podium warmly stated his permanent right, by Eminent Domain, to it, and the hearts of Bostonians who love him.

One finds himself sharply reconsidering the features of a friend who has been away, and becoming newly conscious of what he wants from music and the ways he gets it by looks and gestures. Along with the musicians, we followed those hands that gently ride the air at soft places, point piano finger-on-lip, or simply hang inert while the sound floods past them. Once again, we were stirred by the quaking half-crouches he will save for climaxes, and the straggles of song he uses to urge some point or other. And that vivid look of surprise, pleasure, or pleading that he darts to his men says nothing less than, 'Please, just a little more of the impossible.'

Everything had had its rehearsals, of course, but Dr. Munch, with the bravery of the inspired, likes to redefine a phrase, risk a quicker tempo, take a chance on a miracle—right on the spot. He has seen and heard much, and wastes no doubts about what is the punchline of a musical exegesis, and which are the quibbling preliminaries. What of the fuzziness or splash here and there—they're part of the calculated risk.

Even as we witnessed him refining his purposes, we were newly convinced that one of them is to enjoy the music, and persuade his men to share that enjoyment, confident that the contagion will drift to the audience. He succeeded brilliantly, and of all the places he's been conducting—in Japan and over the world—we suspect he's stored a special plan for Boston.

I remember something he said when he came to Boston the first time: '—a musician must let his phrases breathe. His phrases do; moreover, they speak and dance too.

That impulse to dance, a sort of gentle levitation, he communicated from the opening pieces of Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite. Munch wisely deferred to the essential stillness of this score, and bound his players to a complicity to spin in finer, smoother and softer than ever strings had done to airwaves. He managed this by a hundred coaxing signs; hinting, restraining, mutely suggestion, so that the stillness emerged intact, a breathless overlay of veils.

The conductor again used an essential of dance in the two Ravel waltz-fantasies that followed, from his cracking downbeat of the Valses Nobles to the last cymbal of La Valse. Whether in whipping a sudden wave of crescendo, or instantly warning an offbeat that overslept, or in giving himself entire to the three-quarter-time whirl, he sustained a brilliant focus of musical figures gyrating in a panoply of colors. Certainly his minute gradation of the big crescendo of La Valse, the one that starts underground in basses and harps, and pounds to an earthquake of erupting brass, triggered the second salvo of bravos from the audience, and induced a general belief in theater for its own sake.

Munch's firm grip on essentials held through his reading of the Franck Symphony, and exposed a riddle in the music itself. Long ranked as a storeroom of chromatic harmony, this score often bogs under the turgid tempi and well-thickened profundity lavished upon it. Much reads it rather as a surge of joy, and lets those Gallic sunbursts of brass take you off-guard, dropping their Wagnerian accent as no disguise for plain old joie de vivre. It's still a stimulating answer to an old symphonic question, even though intent overshot realization once or twice when the brass and percussion became noisily overwhelming in trying to overpower their listeners.

Next wtek, we're sure to be treated to another homecoming celebration when Dr. Munch again conducts the orchestra. The program includes Honegger's Second Symphony for Strings, Ibert's Movement symphonique, Berlioz' 'Royal Hunt and Storm' Symphony, from the 'Trojans', and St.-Saens' Symphony No. 3, with Organ, Berj Zamkochian, soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
JAN 24 1963

Dr. Munch Conducts

Boston Symphony in French Program

By ALLAN SLY

No reader of this column needs to be told of Charles Munch's return as the BSO's guest conductor for three weeks. But those who could not attend the season's 14th program last week may like to have it described. They will hardly expect the present reporter to find fault with it.

The other Charles (the one who stayed in Paris) having taking this contrast as a point of departure, Dr. Munch delivered the Franck in a mood of stark, hair-shirted, ascetic self-denial. Stone-cold and austere were the colors of the wind choir, sharp as a spear-point the strings. And the middle movement hurried by as though in denial of the flesh. The final exulting mood grew thus inevitably and from within, focused, radiant and convincing.

Come to think of it, what other French symphony has stood its ground as this one has, or for that matter what other symphonies (aside from the echt-Deutsch tide)? Franck's biographer claims that his partly Rhinelander blood (shall we say genes?) establishes his kinship with Beethoven. Maybe. But Saturday he sounded French. Is this a hint of the greater France we are now told to look for? Charles Munch may have his finger very close to the pulse of today.

But such thoughts could restrain the rush for the parking lots. When will the Saturday [illegible] stay long enough to express Boston's recognition of the orchestra and the [illegible] it presents?

Next week we are to have [illegible] new Ibert, Berlioz (Trojans) and Saint-Saens No. 3 with organ.

ISRAEL has a total of 45,000 private automobiles registered throughout the country. This compares with 25,000 cars registered two years ago. (JTA)

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JAN 19 1963

THE THEATER

Dr. Munch Returns To Symphony Hall

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Charles Munch came home yesterday. The French conductor who for 13 years guided the destinies of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, once more stood before his former colleagues while Boston expressed its immeasurable pride in his meaning as an artist and a man.

And so yesterday, too, there was a rising appreciation at Dr. Munch's first appearance. Since he last conducted an emotion-spangled Beethoven Ninth at Tanglewood in August, he has been a musical cosmopolite. He has conducted the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise in Europe and he U.S.; the Symphony Orchestra of Montreal; the orchestras of Lausanne and Geneva; the Japan Philharmonic.

From Boston other engagements will take him to the Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia Orchestras, until he returns here to conduct Debussy's The Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian next March.

But for the moment Charles Munch had come full circle, to the aesthetic center of the orchestra where his life in music had been most fully realized. There were cheers and applause toward a debt that never can be refunded.

He Looks Fit

Despite such a grueling schedule—and it should not be forgotten that he is a septuagenarian—it is a pleasure to report that he looks fit. The silver mane is still thick, the face is relatively unlined and his quick fleeting smile as shy. He seems robust enough to rival in years the career of his countryman, Pierre Monteux.

Under such circumstances one would have to be a churl to intrude a carping critical note; but I fear that one must distinguish between Dr. Munch and his music yesterday. Professional considerations, alas, often attach harsh and ungracious flourishes on occasions that ought to be sentimental. Although Charles Munch is an acknowledged master of the French repertoire, this week-end's program is the weakest of the three he will present here.

Its high point is the Faure Suite from 'Pelleas and Melisande'. The music is not as distinguished as Debussy's on the same theme, but still contains a tincture of fluent poetry. Dr. Munch invests the sweet, shimmering score with a gentle and sighing grace. The horns of elfland in the Prelude, the sense of brooding and elusive mystery that he imparts to the melodic contour, enhance the essential air of legend surrounding the suite.

Clean, Polished

The orchestral playing was clean and polished here, as it remained throughout the afternoon. The musicians, incidentally, resume the old pattern and are off risers. Thus Dr. Munch achieves the dynamic balance and sound he prefers, that of the dry, crisp, brilliant Gallic tradition. I'm afraid, however, that I did not agree with either his approach to the Ravel waltzes or Franck's D Minor Symphony.

The former really are too insubstantial to occupy such a pivotal program position. Moreover, the juxtaposition of the Valses Nobles et Sentimentales with La Valse is not a sound relationship: the first are a chain of waltzes by the example of Schubert, while the latter is a balletic gesture in which theatrics cancel out the simpler styles of romanticism.

Dr. Munch offered the Valses Nobles straightforwardly, indicating the duration of each. This clear and neat method, however gave way to liberties of tempo in La Valse that had the orchestra scrambling after the beat and producing an effect of wild athleticism. Rather than a waltz we heard a reel.

Franck D Minor

Similarly, in the Franck D Minor, unpredictable moods marred the final movements. The opening section retained a searching fervent warmth that was most engaging; the allegretto went a shade too fast and the Allegro non troppo was taken Presto. The result was an erratic reading, often moving but in general, overblown. No matter, however: it is a privilege to welcome home such an artist, and next week Dr. Munch has scheduled Saint-Saens 'Organ' Symphony, No. 3, in C Minor, together with the first performance of Ibert's Mouvement symphonique; the Honegger Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra and the 'Royal Hunt and Storm' from Berlioz's "The Trojans".

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch guest conductor, presented the 14th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite from The Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op 80 ..... Faure
Valses Nobles et Sentimentals; La Valse, Choreographic Poem .... Ravel
Symphony in D Minor ..... Franck

Amusements

SHOWTHROUGH

90

BOSTON 15.

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 25, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 26, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

HONEGGER . . . . . Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra
- I. Molto moderato
- II. Adagio mesto
- III. Vivace, non troppo

IBERT . . . . . Mouvement symphonique, "Bostoniana"
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

BERLIOZ . . . . . "Royal Hunt and Storm," Descriptive Symphony from "The Trojans"

SAINT-SAËNS . . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in C minor (with Organ), Op. 78
- I. Adagio; Allegro moderato; Poco adagio
- II. Allegro moderato; Presto; Maestoso; Allegro

Organ: BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
JAN 18 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 20 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 20 963

Dr. Munch to Conduct Four BSO Concerts

Charles Munch will begin his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall. He will also conduct concerts in Symphony Hall on Tuesday at 8:30, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

The program for Monday's concert, which will be repeated the following evening, includes the Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, "Pelleas et Melisande"; Ravel's Valses Nobles et Sentimentales and La Valse and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Dr. Munch will present the world premiere of Jacques Ibert's "Mouvement symphonique" at the Friday and Saturday concerts. Born in Paris in 1890, the composer had been director of the Academy of Rome and director of the united management of the Paris Opera and Opera-Comique. In 1950 Ibert was composer in residence at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

SHOWTHROUGH

90 BOSTON 15.

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 25, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 26, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

HONEGGER . . . . . Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra
- I. Molto moderato
- II. Adagio mesto
- III. Vivace, non troppo

IBERT . . . . . Mouvement symphonique, "Bostoniana"
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

BERLIOZ . . . . . "Royal Hunt and Storm," Descriptive Symphony from "The Trojans"

SAINT-SAËNS . . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in C minor (with Organ), Op. 78
- I. Adagio; Allegro moderato; Poco adagio
- II. Allegro moderato; Presto; Maestoso; Allegro

Organ: BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (S)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 331,565
JAN 18 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 20 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 20 1963

Dr. Munch to Conduct Four BSO Concerts

Charles Munch will begin his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall. He will also conduct concerts in Symphony Hall on Tuesday at 8:30, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

The program for Monday's concert, which will be repeated the following evening, includes the Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, "Pelleas et Melisande"; Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales and La Valse and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

Dr. Munch will present the world premiere of Jacques Ibert's "Mouvement symphonique" at the Friday and Saturday concerts. Born in Paris in 1890, the composer had been director of the Academy of Rome and director of the United Management of the Paris Opera and Opera-Comique. In 1950 Ibert was composer in residence at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JAN 26 1963

The Symphony

Splendid Program Inspires Dr. Munch

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A composer's final thoughts interrupted by death's shoulder-tap generally echo gloom and loss. Jacques Ibert's "Mouvement symphonique," however, is a cheerful last act. The world premiere took place here yesterday under guest conductor Charles Munch, who was throughout the afternoon, in peerless estate.

Invited by The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation to compose a symphony for the 75th season's anniversary in 1956, Ibert was presumably delayed by ill-health and only completed one movement. He died, Feb. 5, 1962, leaving this remnant marked "Allegro comodo." Hence, as so often happens, a composer's final creative gesture is not synonymous with his final opus.

Yet if the movement is incomplete, in a curious way it almost possesses a life due to that very fact. The vivid orchestration, clarity and adroit technique, hallmarks of Ibert's style, are eminently enthralling. The thought does not strike deep, but the quality of the musical vocabulary never ceases to enchant.

Brilliant Motion

As Andre George declared of Ibert: "An air of good fellowship and delicate amiability reveals him to be an artist of breeding." And aristocratic concern for form is the panache of the solitary fragment. It opens with a brilliant rhythmic motion, accented by kettledrums and brass, moves into the principal theme stated distinctly by strings, and develops in a tranquil impressionism into a broad, jovial triple forte, again accented by tympani.

Ibert's handling of instrumental combinations discloses a masterly treatment of color and weight, especially among his favorite woodwinds. The crisp dash and variety are not unrelated to the painting of Matisse, say, or the writing of Ibert's contemporary, Milhaud. In either case, the celebration of pure enjoyment becomes an aesthetic in itself. One might wish that Ibert had built on such a foundation; yet it makes a picturesque, half-finished design, though the sign-board attached, "Bostoniana," seems to have been designed by the indefatigable Anon who christened Beethoven's E. Flat Piano Concerto, "Emperor."

Message of Hope

After a disappointing inaugural last week, Dr. Munch more than rose to the challenge of his second program of his return in the role of guest. He was inspired yesterday. His conducting of a splendid program touched peaks of splendor, glorious realizations of diverse and demanding scores It is doubtful indeed, that any conductor can equal his interpretations of French music when he is at his best; and this concert found him exhausting critical superlatives.

The Honegger Symphony for Strings, steeped in the harrowing shadows of the Nazi Occupation years, attained a darkling and profound power. The introspective melancholia, broken by spasmodic dissonances and snarling rhythms, expresses the mood of Paris under the jackboot. The mood establishes intolerable tensions, but the despair is that of suffering rather than depletion, intensely emotional and finally erupting into an unassailable message of hope in the chorale. It is a work emblematic of our times—and rare in that it refuses to submit, asserting the human spirit against the void.

The delicate misteriose of the Royal Hunt and Storm was in contrast to the energies with which Dr. Munch charged his Honegger; and the lovely and sensitive fluency of the distant horn calls, superbly played by James Stagliano emerged hauntingly. Then, as if to demonstrate his supreme powers in this area, we heard a stirring and impassioned, Saint-Saens Third, an electrifying performance.

Next week Dr. Munch has scheduled Rameau's Suite from "Dardanus," Dutilleux's Symphony No. 2, for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra, Barber's "Die Natali" Choruses and Debussy's "La Mer."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch guest conductor, presented the 15th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Berj Zamkochian was the Saint-Saens' organist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra ..... Honegger
Mouvement symphonique, "Bostoniana" ..... Ibert
"Royal Hunt and Storm," from "The Troians" ..... Berlioz
Symphony No. 3, in C minor, (with organ), Op 78 ..... Saint-Saens

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 26 1963

'—Munch and Saint-Saëns' Third

Stirs Up a Glorious Noise

By Harold Rogers

Several years ago while chatting with Pierre Monteux backstage at the Metropolitan in New York, he asked me what Charles Munch was playing that weekend in Boston.

"The Saint-Saëns Symphony No. 3," I replied.

"Oh, I know you critics are tired of the Franck D minor and the Saint-Saëns Third," he said, "but they are wonderful symphonies for the conductor. Munch and I . . . well, we like them!"

Karl Muck liked the Saint-Saëns Third, too; or if he didn't truly like it, at least on one occasion he gave it a rousing performance in the presence of Saint-Saëns himself. This happened when the Boston Symphony was paying a visit to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco on Sunday afternoon, May 23, 1915.

"The Bostonians gave a superb reading of the work," wrote Grena J. Bennett, "and were being appreciably applauded when someone in the audience discovered the presence of the composer. Dr. Muck modestly retired from the stage; the musicians rose, the violinists discreetly tapped their violins with their bows; the audience stood, applauding and waving handkerchiefs and programs at Saint-Saëns, who, apparently embarrassed by this cordiality, bowed and smiled to each portion of the hall."

♪ ♪ ♪

And if Saint-Saëns were pleased with the performance on that occasion, he could have been no less pleased had he been in Symphony Hall when Charles Munch conducted it for the weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony. The Third wears well, especially when revitalized by a dynamic man like Dr. Munch. Even critics forget that they are supposed to be tired of it when listening to a performance by Munch.

Dr. Muck built his 1915 program this way: the Saint-Saëns Third, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," three pieces from Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust," and the overture to Chabrier's opera "Gwendoline."

The large symphony came first; the lighter items later. Programs are seldom built that way these days, which may be some indication that American audiences have come of age. Now, more often than not, the lighter things come first; the large symphony is saved for the piece de résistance. Dr. Munch tended to follow this plan in his program for the second week of his three-week return to Boston in the role of guest conductor.

♪ ♪ ♪

He opened with Honegger's wartime Symphony No. 2, composed for strings and trumpets. While indeed more modest than the Saint-Saëns, it digs for musical gold of which Saint-Saëns was unaware. Its movements are comparatively short; its emotion distilled; its message more dramatic than theatrical.

If one may presume to add a program to it, one might say that Honegger was writing about occupied Paris; the movements might carry the following subtitles: Anguish and Despair, Active Waiting, and Joyous Liberation.

This time Dr. Munch did not dramatize the trumpet chorale at the conclusion, as he was wont to do. The bells of the instruments did not rise above the music stands. Perhaps this is better. It was none the less exciting.

He then gave something called "Mouvement symphonique" by Jacques Ibert its first performance. It is the first movement to a symphony that Ibert was commissioned to compose in honor of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, a work he was unable to complete.

In this music it was obvious that Ibert was trying to wear a serious face; by and large he succeeded in doing so; yet his irrepressive ebullience came to the surface again and again in an upsurge of brilliance and wit.

♪ ♪ ♪

It is nothing so frivolous as his "Capriccio" or so aromatic as his "Escales." While it is still diatonic he has added more bite and a little more growl. But it is still Ibert. One has the feeling that the symphony, were it complete, would be too heavy to be thoroughly winsome, and too light to be thoroughly great.

After the serenities of the Berlioz "Royal Hunt and Storm" (even the storm is serene by contemporary standards), Dr. Munch launched into the Sturm und Drang of the Saint-Saëns (though the French doubtless have another name for it). It throbbed, it glowed, it soared, it sang, with Berj Zamkochian lending his weight at the console. It was indeed a glorious noise.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
JAN 26 1963

Music Review

Major Honegger, Minor Ibert at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under direction of guest conductor Charles Munch, gave the following program yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall: Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra, the first performance of Ibert's Mouvement symphonique, "Bostoniana;" Berlioz' "Royal Hunt and Storm," Descriptive Symphony from "The Trojans," and Saint-Saens' Symphony No. 3 in C minor with Organ, Op. 78. To be repeated tonight at 8:30 p.m.

By MARGO MILLER

A world premiere of one work, another hearing of a symphony which Charles Munch introduced to this country in 1946, and two chestnuts—which under the baton of our guest conductor became marrons glaces—made up the Boston Symphony Orchestra's all French program yesterday afternoon.

Jacques Ibert, commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, to write a symphony for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, finished only one movement. The "Mouvement symphonique" is subtitled "Bostoniana." While it is not meant as a tone poem, the intermittant shrillness of the brass writing suggests the present commotion at the Massachusetts av. detour. The work never really gets anywhere, either, although there is an isolated sequence for first desk strings which is a pleasant oasis. Most listeners would not be wildly upset that the work was never finished. Chiefly the Ibert served in retrospect to emphasize what a major work is the Honegger Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra, which opened the concert.

Munch, who was in top form yesterday afternoon, first introduced this symphony when he was a guest conductor in the days of Koussevitzky.

Both in performance and in its composition the Honegger has that taut quality found in superior chamber music. But in musical development it is a true symphony (even if it omits a scherzo or minuet).

Honegger here uses the dark colors of his palette: solo viola against violins in the first movement, solo cello in its higher registers in the second, double basses in chorus all the way through. Violins are almost the inner voices. They are allowed to soar briefly in the last movement against agitated playing by the violas.

Then comes a chorale tune, original with Honegger, for three trumpets in unison, over the strings. It is majestic music. The dignity of the brass sound and the sustained, solid melody given it, is the climax toward which the symphony has been steadily moving. Munch and the Orchestra invested the work with the tensions and with the sonorities it demands.

Now for dessert: those marrons glaces. Munch's performances of Berlioz have long been regarded as the perfect matching of man to music. While the "Royal Hunt and Storm," that descriptive symphony from the opera "The Trojans" is not major Berlioz, Munch manages to make it better than it is. He called for unusually languid horn calls, plaintive piping from the woodwinds, bombast in the final section. It was faintly stagey in the manner of certain 19th-century steel engravings, an amusing period piece.

The Saint-Saens received a razzle-dazzle treatment in its concluding four-part movement. Tempos were on the strident side, all stops let out by organ (Berj Zamkochian) and percussion, the piano (four-hands in one spot) purling away. But no dreamer could fail to muse along with the verdant Romanticism of the first movement. The Orchestra responded to Munch's broad smiles. All was most persuasive melody.

For next week's program (Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30 and Sunday at 3 p.m.), Munch has chosen music by one American and three French composers: Rameau's Suite from his opera, "Dardanus," Dutilleaux's Symphony No. 2 for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra, Samuel Barber's "Die Natale," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, and Debussy's La Mer.

Amusements

92 MONDAY 4. TUESDAY 7.

Fourth Program

MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

RAVEL ..... Valses Nobles et Sentimentales
Modéré — Assez lent — Modéré — Assez animé — Presque lent — Assez vif — Moins vif — Epilogue: Lent

*La Valse, Choreographic Poem

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 22, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

RAVEL ..... Valses Nobles et Sentimentales
Modéré — Assez lent — Modéré — Assez animé — Presque lent — Assez vif — Moins vif — Epilogue: Lent

*La Valse, Choreographic Poem

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON 16.

93

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 2, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

RAMEAU ..... Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus"

I. Entrée (gracieusement et un peu gai)
II. Rondeau du sommeil (modéré)
III. Rigaudon (assez modéré)
IV. Rondeau gai (gaîment)

DUTILLEUX ..... Symphony No. 2, for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra

I. Animato, ma misterioso
II. Andantino sostenuto
III. Allegro fuocoso — calmato

INTERMISSION

BARBER ..... "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas

DEBUSSY ..... *"La Mer" (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
JAN 24 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly. Circ. 14,000
JAN 31 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 27 1963

Concert Calendar This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this week in Symphony Hall and in Providence. With these programs Dr. Munch completes three weeks as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Following engagements in Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, Dr. Munch will return to Boston for one week in March.

The sixteenth pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be given on Friday and Saturday of this week. For these concerts Charles Munch has selected works by three French composers and one American composer.

The program will begin with Rameau's Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus," and continue with Dutilleux' Symphony No. 2 for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra. Following intermission Dr. Munch will conduct performances of the American composer Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, and "La Mer" by Debussy. This program will be repeated next Sunday.

Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its fourth concert of the season in Providence. This will be Charles Munch's first appearance in Providence since his retirement as Music Director of the Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 27 1963

Charles Munch's Programs For Remaining Concerts

For his concerts this week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch has chosen works by three French composers and one American.

The programs for Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30 and next Sunday at 3 p.m. in Symphony Hall will begin with the Suite from Rameau's opera "Dardanus" and continue with Dutilleux's Symphony No. 2 for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra. Following intermission Dr. Munch will conduct performances of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, and Debussy's La Mer.

The Boston Symphony concert in Providence on Tuesday will also be under Dr. Munch's direction.

Following engagements in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia the conductor will return to Boston for one week in March.

SHOWTHROUGH

Boston 16.

913

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 2, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

RAMEAU . . . . . Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus"

I. Entrée (gracieusement et un peu gai)
II. Rondeau du sommeil (modéré)
III. Rigaudon (assez modéré)
IV. Rondeau gai (gaiment)

DUTILLEUX . . . . . Symphony No. 2, for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra

I. Animato, ma misterioso
II. Andantino sostenuto
III. Allegro fuocoso — calmato

INTERMISSION

BARBER . . . . . "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas

DEBUSSY . . . . . *"La Mer" (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
JAN 24 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
JAN 31 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 27 1963

Concert Calendar This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts this week in Symphony Hall and in Providence. With these programs Dr. Munch completes three weeks as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Following engagements in Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, Dr. Munch will return to Boston for one week in March.

The sixteenth pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be given on Friday and Saturday of this week. For these concerts Charles Munch has selected works by three French composers and one American composer.

The program will begin with Rameau's Suite from the Opera "Dardanus," and continue with Dutilleux' Symphony No. 2 for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra. Following intermission Dr. Munch will conduct performances of the American composer Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas and "La Mer" by Debussy. This program will be repeated next Sunday.

Tuesday evening the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its fourth concert of the season in Providence. This will be Charles Munch's first appearance in Providence since his retirement as Music Director of the Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 27 1963

Charles Munch's Programs For Remaining Concerts

For his concerts this week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch has chosen works by three French composers and one American.

The programs for Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30 and next Sunday at 3 p.m. in Symphony Hall will begin with the Suite from Rameau's opera "Dardanus" and continue with Dutilleux's Symphony No. 2 for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra. Following intermission Dr. Munch will conduct performances of Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, and Debussy's La Mer.

The Boston Symphony concert in Providence on Tuesday will also be under Dr. Munch's direction.

Following engagements in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia the conductor will return to Boston for one week in March.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
FEB 2 1963

The Symphony

Munch's 'La Mer' Unexcelled

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Charles Munch's farewell performances during his current brief tenure as guest conductor are in the nature of a reprise: music he has introduced here or that bears the strong seal of his personality.

In an afternoon ranging from the elegant rococo style of Rameau through a curious Christmas medley by Samuel Barber to a prismastic reading of "La Mer," it was evident that the most relevant and arresting statement for a contemporary audience was a 20th century concerto grosso by the modern composer, Henri Dutilleux.

Uneven Score

This work was introduced to the United States by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Munch eight years ago. It is a bizarre and uneven score in many ways.

I think it exhibits a schizophrenic clash between a content that is romantic, pensive, lyrical, and a form that is cerebral, curt and austere. But the symphony's emotional forces often burst through obligatory experimental bonds, especially in the last movement which is more incisive and sweeping than the first pair.

Mr. Dutilleux fuses two distinct idiomatic ideas: the tradition of the concerto grosso involving the exchange of dialogue between a chamber orchestra (here comprising 12 musicians) and a tutti or general ensemble; and modern preoccupation with spatial placement of instruments, exotic timbres and colors symbolized, say, by the stereophonic phonograph. He treats the concerto grosso, in short, as though it functioned for a long-playing record.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch guest conductor, presented the 16th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus" — Rameau
Symphony No. 2, for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra — Dutilleux
"Die Natali," Choral Preludes for Christmas — Barber
"La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches — Debussy

Cross-rhythms

The result is an almost continually compelling exercise in pulsating cross-rhythms and brilliant sonorities. The small chamber orchestra doesn't achieve the effect of separation, however, since it is seated in a crescent before the main orchestra and is mostly undistinguishable from it as a group. What really carries the music is the talent of Mr. Dutilleux for orchestration; his scoring is realtively lean yet graphic; the alternate sections of strain and resolution are marked by such biquant mixtures as harpsichord and tympani.

The musical themes are generally interesting, too, and relect an influence of Strauss. Indeed the climax ends on a reminiscence suspiciously akin to the opening of "Death and Transfiguration!" The score is a mosaic of engaging inventions, although it does not attain unity.

Rameau's "Dardanus" Suite displays the urbanity and grace of a polished age, and the lustrous Boston strings lent it a rare sheen. A divertissment, perhaps, but here decor reaches the level of art.

Can't Say Much

One cannot say as much for Samuel Barber's chorale preludes, which stitch together a number of well-known Christmas carols into a cherry pattern. As occasional music one wonders why it had to be done at this inappropriate season (and the reaction of the Koussevitsky Foundation who commissioned the piece). Mr. Barber is a distinguished and enduring American contemporary, but so obvious is the workmanship here that virtually any conservatory student could duplicate it.

By the way of compensation there is Charles Munch's "La Mer". No other living conductor present it as well, in such painstaking detail. The glorious sweep of the line, and dynamic ferver and glittering intensity of Charles Munch's atmosphere represent a rich, spectacular standard.

The sensibility of his phrasing places his version in a category of its own. We have reason to be grateful to Mr. Munch on many counts, and none so lastingly—may he return often to Boston on these interpretive tides.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf is back with the world premiere of Lees' Violin Concerto; and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70 (till now given here as No. 2) and Kodaly's Suite from "Hary Janos."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
FEB 2 1963

Music Review

Munch Conducts French Program With Great Skill

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under guest conductor Charles Munch, gave the following program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus," Rameau; Symphony No. 2, for Large Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra, Dutilleux; "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, Barber; and "La Mer," ("The Sea"), Three Symphonic Sketches, Debussy.

By ROBERT DUMM

(This week's guest reviewer is the Dean of the Boston Conservatory of Music.)

Continuing his loving reprise of French scores, Charles Munch guided the Boston Symphony through still and rolling seas with an unfailing supple hand Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

He began with a solicitous reading of the suite from Rameau's opera, 'Dardanus.' The French place this composer at the fountainhead, if not at the source, of their national music, and one knows why, the more one hears of his piquant disguises for folk tunes, his mordant twists of phrase, as knowing as a wink from Voltaire. Munch's tempi for the Entree and Rondeau du sommeil (sleep-a-bye rondo) seemed a bit literally slow, though he staunched our awareness of time passing with a silky, deep-plied string sound.

With the Rigaudon, pert upbeats put an edge on things, transforming its wittiness to pure legerdemain. Sharpness was honed to brittleness in the closing Rondeau gai, which evoked the brilliant age that knew anything could be done if it was done with galanterie.

Next came Henri Dutilleux' Symphony for Large and Chamber Orchestras, which had been commissioned for the 75th birthday celebration of the Boston Symphony and first played here in 1959. Munch donned his spectacles for the big score, and bent to with a will, kinetically molding his body to each plastic phrase.

The direction of the music sometimes gets muddled (which was undoubtedly said of Beethoven's 'Eroica' when it was new), but the outcome of each movement is plain enough.

After a lividly imaginative beginning, astir with the mewings and bleatings of a superior electronic zoo, the opening movement loses force to fussy over-writing, but recovers in time.

The second movement, marked Andantino Sostenuto, continually manifests the flair for acoustics in eery caterwauls set off by astringent jetties from the harpsichord. In the final movement, Allegro fuocoso, the bright jazz idiom seems more affected than felt, its outrages rigged from the worn stuff of syncopation and overbearing brass.

After intermission, France was forsaken for Hollywood in 'Die Natali', the elegant nomer Samuel Barber prefixes to his settings of familiar Christmas carols.

What irked was the treacle treatment Barber has given them, and the exoterica that touches the funnybone with a 'Far-Eastern' version of the lugubrious 'We, Three Kings' complete with cobra-charming English horn, and 'King Wenceslaus' done up as a barefoot Hebrew stamping dance.

Munch kept a cool head through it all, though, and conjured at least one shattering climax before the score reverted again to studious mystery, an affectation that smears the innocence and well-deep stillness of this music.

The program ended with the more distilled sweets of Debussy's 'La Mer' (The Sea), the major canvas he modestly calls 'Three Symphonic Sketches.' From the sirenic question of the opening upward wholestep, Munch played this music 'by ear', which for a great muyea-saying that comes from mind, heart, and toes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 2 1963

95

Munch's Third Week at Symphony

Dutilleux and Barber Featured on Program

By Warren Storey Smith

In the matter of French music the Boston Symphony concerts for the past 15 seasons, and the first two-thirds of the present one, have offered either a feast or a famine.

The famine, presumably a matter of deliberate policy on the part of Erich Leinsdorf, and broken only by the performance of Messiaen's "L'Ascension" under Richard Burgin, prevailed until Charles Munch returned as guest two weeks ago. And now in the three programs which have constituted his present and altogether welcome visit he has given us a truly comprehensive survey, stylistically and historically.

In the following order we have heard, in works with which the returning conductor's name was more or less closely associated, the music of Fauré, Ravel, Franck, Honegger, Berlioz, Ibert, Saint-Saëns, Rameau, Dutilleux, and Debussy.

♩ ♩ ♩

The single exception to this all-Gallic array is the third number on the current list, Samuel Barber's "Die Natali," Chorale Preludes for Christmas, appropriately introduced to us and to the world in general at the concerts of Dec. 22 and 23, 1960.

Dr. Munch's reason could have been a double one when he placed this seasonal composition (presented out of season) between the Second Symphony of Henri Dutilleux, which he also introduced to us three years ago, and Debussy's "La Mer." He may have wished to separate two works overmuch alike in sound, if not in style, and also to recall his not inconsiderable service to the native composer. In any event, the piece, surprisingly bland and conventional for this day and age, undoubtedly pleased those members of the audience who rejoice in the familiar and the untaxing.

The suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," exquisitely played by a band of chamber dimensions, served again as a reminder that Rameau and his predecessor, Lully, are masters heard less often in Symphony Hall than they deserve, even if they did not compose symphonic music in the now-accepted sense.

Quite possibly in accordance with Dr. Munch's deliberate intentions, we heard yesterday first a chamber orchestra; then, in the Dutilleux symphony, a work composed, as the title states, for large orchestra and chamber orchestra; and next, in the Barber Christmas piece and Debussy's "La Mer" (the latter a fitting climax to the whole French parade) two works for the full modern orchestra, as such.

♩ ♩ ♩

It was no easier in the Dutilleux symphony than it was before to distinguish, aurally, between the smaller group and the larger one, but the whole added up to an interesting texture of sound, which might almost be the greater part of what the composer had to offer. Nevertheless, there are ingenious rhythms, arresting harmonies, and pleasing, if not especially individual, melodic thoughts. In the matter of idiom this was the most "modern" of the pieces that Dr. Munch has offered us in this recent survey.

Like everything else on the program, the Dutilleux was superbly set forth, while to hear a finer presentation of "La Mer" you would have to travel far. To say it was on a par with the famed version of Serge Koussevitzky is to pay it the highest possible compliment.

In just one detail the Russian maestro had the edge on his immediate successor. The reference is to the beginning of the third and final movement when he achieved an unforgettably graphic suggestion of surf breaking on the shore that this particular pair of ears has never encountered elsewhere. And this, of course, is quibbling.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

FEB 7 1963

Dr. Munch Completes
Survey of French Music with BSO

By ALLAN SLY

Dr. Munch's three-week survey of French symphonic music reached a coruscating fulfillment last week-end in Debussy's La Mer. From the sunburst of sound at Dawn to the later stages of the Dialogue the B.S.O. outdid itself, as though to the manner born, and we land-lubbers were transported, sea-borne, into some larger measure of understanding.

This partly explains, in retrospect, what was missing in the Dutilleux Symphony No. 2, heard earlier, before intermission. This composer wields a fascinating web of sound, using a sort of double orchestral image with harpsichord, celeste and other resources, including a large lay-out of sonorities. An unusually precise sense of dissonance imparts a forward motion to his texture, though the over-all result seems to be a classic edifice where the intelligence is more welcome than the heart. Moreover, where the Debussy idiom seems to reflect gestures recognizable as human traits, the Dutilleux seems to stay static—eliciting no visceral response. The sound itself becomes a kind of mystique. All this is very interesting, even fascinating. But I must admit that Debussy walked away with the honors, possibly by virtue of his seniority.

As La Mer had followed Barber's "Die Natali," the Dutilleux had followed an exquisite retrospect of the Baroque. Rameau's sovereign style, as evidenced in the Dardanus Suite, set me to envying those who can claim this in their own parental heritage. Some of us have none of this in our bones—after all, Colonial Boston had only a transplanted Anglo-Saxon style, which at best was a very pale reflection of those continental classic glories paraded so persuasively by Dr. Munch last week. To be sure he romanticized it all a bit, but to what enchantment! The long broadening at the end of the fourth piece was a most regretful leave-taking of an infinitely precious recollection.

Following intermission came the Barber. It amounts to a potpourri of rather threadbare tunes, most of them, but to be sure there is wit and humor, tenderness, compassion, in the manipulations they are put through. I hardly feel Mr. Barber is justified in borrowing the term Chorale Prelude from the great liturgical traditions, however. And I found the opus a bit over-extended in length for what it seems bent on accomplishing. Does Dr. Munch really like this piece? It is very nice to see him piloting the B.S.O. through the intricacies that are part of its nature; though it must be said the orchestra came round the final bend a bit tattered, torn and tousled.

However, they were all abroad and very ship-shape for La Mer. What a performance that was! And a very touching leave-taking (until next time) of Boston's beloved Charles Munch.

96

PROVIDENCE 4.23.

The Providence Journal, Wednesday, Dec. 12, 1962

Music Last Night

Boston Orchestra Plays At Memorial Auditorium

By RUTH TRIPP

Richard Burgin conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Veterans Memorial Auditorium last evening. The concert, third of the series, was a rare array of music which required only imagination to transport the listener to faraway places and other times.

Mahler's Symphony No. 4, with Virginia Babikian as soloist, Stravinsky's Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee", an allegorical ballet, and Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, made the magical sounds we heard and by the end of the evening I felt very much like the child in the Milne poem, whose favorite stopping place was halfway up the stairs. His lines describe the evening well: "It isn't any place at all, it's somewhere else instead." And by the time Burgin had turned the last page of his score, we were all, "somewhere else instead." In this curious whirling world, it is no small achievement to help one find such pleasant places in which to wander in imagination.

The orchestra played exceedingly well for the associate conductor and the gentle sounds we heard made translucent, pastel patterns. Mr. Burgin began to turn his imaginative pages with music written in this era. Irving Fine, whose untimely death last August cut short a promising career, was a professor at Brandeis. His Notturno was refined dissonance with ample display of craftsmanship within its three sections. Composed 10 years ago, it has already taken on the feeling of music which will last in the repertoire.

Turning back to the first quarter of this century, the Stravinsky ballet music showed another style of orchestral color which was delightful to listen to. At every turn, there were reminiscent fragments patterned after the music of Tchaikovsky, because the composer had dedicated the score to his memory. The four sections of this Suite made an admirable choice for the holiday season. All the skill required to play this music so well, was completely concealed in the graceful, artistic interpretation we heard. And when the playing was done, it occurred to me that probably Stravinsky was the one who had enjoyed the whole thing most thoroughly because he had succeeded so well in his allegory.

The Mahler Symphony, another gentle, rhythmical work was easy to follow. Repetitions permitted freedom to compare themes and to watch their working out in the structure. The soloist, whose beautiful voice took on the exact color needed to interpret the text of the simple poem, sang well. Her long wait for the three first sections of the symphony to be played, showed her complete poise. She sat like a beautiful smiling statue. Her artistic singing added greatly to the enjoyment of the unusual program.

It was interesting to watch the concert-master change to the specially tuned violin, which Mahler had requested in the score. Its tuning, one tone higher than usual, was a small detail perhaps, but an indication of the careful directions of a composer intent on a special effect.

All of the solo bits for instrumentalists were exquisitely delivered and the conductor shared the applause with them. Altogether, this unusual concert was a delightful surprise for the holidays and a fine start for the gay season ahead.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554

JAN 27 1963

TUESDAY

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, retired Boston Symphony conductor, will guest conduct the orchestra in their program at Veterans Memorial Auditorium at 8:15 p.m. Since his last concert as the music director of CHARLES MUNCH, guest, conducts the Boston Symphony here Tuesday night.

he orchestra Dr. Munch ha been continuously active as guest conductor in many par of the world.

The program:
Suite from "Pelleas et Melisande"..Fau
Valses Nobles et Sentimentals.....Ra
La Valse.....Ra
Symphony in D Minor.....Fran

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910

JAN 30 1963

Music Last Night

Charles Munch Conducts Hub Symphony Orchestra

By RUTH TRIPP

Charles Munch was guest conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at the fourth concert of the series here. The concert was sold out, and if there were vacant seats it was because subscribers had not turned the unused tickets in to be resold for the pension fund of the orchestra. The audience greeted Dr. Munch with hearty applause, and it really did seem like old times to see this distinguished conductor on the podium here once again.

Since his retirement from the Boston Symphony conductorship, Charles Munch has appeared in France, Switzerland, Canada and many parts of the United States. He has been in Tokyo recently to lead the Japan Philharmonic. After a series of guest apearances this spring in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, he will have a tour of Italy and an appearance in London. This would hardly seem to be retirement.

The program Dr. Munch chose, featured two of his best interpretations, Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite and La Valse by Ravel. This last choreographic poem was preceded by Ravel's Valses Nobles et Sentimentales. The final half of the program was Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Tone quality in the string section reached a new peak of perfection in the graceful Faure score. Delicacy vaguely describes it. Yet it had no suggestion of fragile quality. Throughout the work there was a living and breathing pulse to the music. The little "Spinning Song" was a gem. It was not hard to imagine the scenes of the Maeterlinck tragedy.

Things came to life with the Ravel music, and we heard all the types of waltzes imaginable. Beautiful contrasts, entrancing rhythms and a sweep of orchestral color left one with no choice but to dance in imagination with the orchestra's entrancing performance. This is truly a combination of musicians and conductor which is hard to surpass in the area of French music.

The Franck Symphony has not been heard here recently. Its rich chromatic changes and pure melodic themes were grateful sounds. Each choir of the orchestra seemed more eloquent than the one just heard and the solo instruments outdid themselves. Dr. Munch's interpretation was not the staid, conventional one sometimes presented. He has ideas which bring unusual intensity of expression to many of the passages. There was a certain freshness to the old score which made it a fitting close for this interesting program. The musicians were given an ovation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,193

JAN 30 1963

Music In Review

Charles Munch Wins Ovation After Directing Orchestra

Charles Munch was given a standing ovation after directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor in a delightful program of the works of French composers last night Veterans Memorial Auditori Providence.

The orchestra gave a seemi ly special refinement to t works of Faure, Ravel and Ce Franck, three contrasting sty that enhanced the beauty ach other.

✦✦✦

THE OPENING "Pelleas Melisande" by Faure could ha been sickeningly sweet under t baton of someone less enrat tured of the work, but Dr Munch's affection for it was pro found and discreet. And the musicians responded with admirable finesse to all his demands. In the closing movement, molto adagio, "The Death of Malisande," the mood could have been mockery instead of genuine pathos had they not felt the devotion of Dr. Munch for the work. Therefore, there were no postures of profundity or simulated heartbreak.

✦✦✦

THE RAVEL — "Valse Nobles et Sentimentales" and La Valse — Choreographic poem — there were musical imagery and mystical vagaries, and many startling, wild outbursts of percussion and bass drums, but the lilting waltzes were brilliant gems among colorful tiles of this musical mosaic. Dr. Munch was recalled three times after the closing chord.

✦✦✦

IT WAS, however, the magnificent "Symphony in D-Minor" by Franck that gave strength and fire to the evening's program. The musicians all played with an edge-of-the-chair eagerness that vitalized this all-too-seldom heard classic. There was a delicacy in the woodwinds and string solos, and at times the low strings and high woodwinds sang lovingly together. Yet, the great surges of bass in the brasses that occasionally interupted the gentle flow of tone was never overstated. There was excitement and stimulation throughout and a feeling of regret when it ended.

The capacity audience arose to pay tribute with prolonged applause to the orchestra and to Dr. Munch.

C. H. L.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
DEC 9 1962

TUESDAY

RICHARD BURGIN will guest conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its third Providence concert at 8:15 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Featured soloist will be Virginia Babikian, soprano.

Tickets for the program may be obtained at Avery Piano Company.

The program:

Notturno for Strings ..... Fine
Divertimento, "Le Baiser de la Fee" Stravinsky
Sinfonia
Danses Suisses
Scherzo
Pas de deux
Adagio—Variation—Coda
Symphony No. 4, in G major (with soprano voice) ..... Mahler
Bedachtig (Deliberately)
In gemachlicher Bewegung (With leisurely motion)
Ruhevoll (Peacefully)
Sehr behaglich (Very easily)

WEDNESDAY

The Providence Sunday Journal, December 9, 1962

VIRGINIA BABIKIAN, soprano, will be featured soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
DEC 12 1962

Sounds Before the Concert

Musical Anarchy Better Than Order?

By G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Years ago, I heard of a Chinese gentleman who attended a symphony concert and found the preliminaries much more satisfying than the program.

Now, it is painful to adopt a strange point of view—the flat-earth people must have suffered years of torment while adjusting themselves to a world that had inexplicably become round. But a strange point of view is often instructive.

I tried, therefore, to approach last night's concert in Veterans Memorial Auditorium with Far-Eastern eyes and ears.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived early, but not much earlier than I. The auditorium was but dimly lighted. The backs of the seats looked like the petals of an enormous crimson lotus.

On the stage, amidst a hundred empty chairs, sat one man with a golden harp. He was in civilian attire, but he was evidently a harpist, for he was tuning the instrument, turning a key, standing and treading the pedals, sending out deep bass thrums, then ethereal treble tinkles, into the silence.

At 7:20, brighter lights enriched the stage. The harp uttered delightful little runs that led nowhere. At 7:25, the harpist left. Offstage, fiddles could be distantly heard. A man with a trumpet came out, then went off without a note. The harpist returned, in his uniform of tails this time. A tympanist tapped the skins with his fingers and adjusted the tension.

A bass viol appeared, a clarinet, an oboe, trombone, tuba. Others sauntered in and out, while, behind the scenes, the restless fiddles grieved and a flute, from nowhere, uttered a few plaintive tones and was silent. Cellos walked on.

Gradually, one became aware of an orchestral fabric like watered silk upon

Turn to Page 18, Col. 4

Music

97

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I
Circ. 191,55
DEC 9

EMBA T.M. Fur products labeled to show country of origin of imported furs

Manna

Island's Largest Exclusive Furrier
WESTMINSTER STREET
Years of Fine Fur Tradition

...NG 'TIL 9 'TIL CHRISTMAS
MONEY-BACK SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

...TENTION MEN

...S INCLUDE FEDERAL TAX

...ld and gift wrapped for you for Christ-
...be cheerfully exchanged within one week
...d gift counselors will assist you.

...rocessed lamb jackets—Mink Trimmed 444
...lian hair Seal Jacket 444
...ater and Mink Trimmed 444
...Jackets—Mink Trimmed 444
...n Lamb Jackets 444
...ank Coat—Mink Trimmed 444
...lumn Coats—Mink Trim 444
...n Lamb Coats* Mink Collar 444
...Jackets—Mink Trimmed Collared 444
...Mink Trimmed Collar 444

Music

Continued from Page One

which the instrumental colors came and went at random—sleigh bells, a French horn, the darting lights of the flute, the deep laugh of a bassoon, the twitter of a clarinet, the clear harmonics of a cello. Offstage, a trumpet called.

Everybody was playing whatever he chose, without regard to the fellow next to him; but there was no rudeness, only a gentlemanly anarchy in which each was welcome to express himself as he wished.

To close the eyes was to wander into an enchanted forest full of unseen birds and beasts, all charming gossips, with an underground river of string basses somewhere at hand.

Violins went up the scale and suddenly disappeared, like Jack climbing the beanstalk. A tuba musically belched. Everybody was having a fine time, like children in a classroom when the teacher hasn't yet appeared.

A violin talked to a drum, but whether he talked aesthetics or horse racing was hard to judge.

The audience was arriving, and its murmur mingled with the fiddles and flutes, yet did not interfere. There was an air of life rising before one's very ears out of the inscrutable depths of creation, without plan, without reason, pleased with itself dying every instant and born every instant.

As 8:15 approached, apprehension seemed to settle over the musicians. The school bell was about to ring. Many instruments became silent. Then they all tuned to the same note, and things quickly went from bad to worse. Richard Burgin, the conductor, appeared. The audience applauded, but the orchestra became absolutely mute.

When Mr. Burgin began to conduct, all the fiddle bows began to go in the same direction at the same time and play the same note. Flutes and oboes lost not only their spontaneity and initiative but their voices.

It was plain that Mr. Burgin knew what every single note was going to be before it was played. Not a person on the stage dared blow or bow a personal B-flat, without waiting for Mr. Burgin's permission; and Mr. Burgin himself was under the thumbs of persons not even present, named Fine, Stravinsky and Mahler.

The atmosphere of artistic abandon had quite vanished. It was intolerable. I was about to stalk out, when it occurred to me that no gentleman, Chinese or other, would do so when there was a lady, Virginia Babikian, yet to sing.

So I stayed, and after a time began to find it, while not up to the prologue, not half bad either.

98

SUNDAY 4t.

Fourth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, at 3:00 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

BERLIOZ ..... "Royal Hunt and Storm," Descriptive Symphony from "The Trojans"

DEBUSSY ..... *"La Mer" (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON 17.

99

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

LEES ..... Violin Concerto

I. Andante con moto
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giusto

(First performance)

KODÁLY ..... Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"

I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

FEB 1963

ORCHESTRAS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

On February 8 and 9, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will offer the world premiere of Benjamin Lees's new violin concerto in which Henryk Szeryng will be the soloist. At the same pair of concerts, Kodaly's "Peacock Variations" will have their first Boston performances, while a week later, Norman Dello Joio's "Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra" will also be heard for the first time in that city. Lorin Hollander, highly gifted and still in his teens, will be the piano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

FEB 3 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

FEB 1 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

FEB 7 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 50,144

FEB 3 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 551,529 S. 643,232

FEB 4 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

FEB 3 1963

World Premiere of Violin Concerto at Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the world premiere of Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in this performance of the concerto which will be the third world premiere performance by the orchestra in this season. The Friday-Saturday program will also include the Symphony No. 7 by Dvorak and Kodaly's Suite from "Hary Janos."

This afternoon at 3 p.m. Charles Munch will conclude his three-week engagement as guest conductor.

Today's program comprises Faure's Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande," Honegger's Symphony No. 2, the "Royal Hunt and Storm" from "The Trojans" by Berlioz, and Debussy's "LaMer."

Benjamin Lees was born in China of Russian parents, but was brought to this country at a young age. A naturalized citizen, Lees' musical training began in San Francisco in 1931. Following military service, he enrolled at the Univ. of Southern California where he continued his study of music, concentrating on composition. The award of a Guggenheim Fellowship enabled him to live in Europe for eight years and the Concerto was composed in France in 1958. Lees is currently on the faculty of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore.

Of the concerto the composer has wirtten: "It could be categorized as classic spirit. Unlike the classical concerti, wherein the outer movements are fast, this work has two slow movements. Furthur, wherein most slow movements contain two subjcts, the adagio of this concerto deals primarily with one basic theme, which undergoes permutations and several developments."

A native of Poland, violinist Szeryng gave his first public concerts at the age of 12 and later was a student of Carl Flesch and of Nadia Boulanger. He made has American debut in 1957 and has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in several concerts.

BOSTON 17.

59

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op.

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

LEES ..... Violin Concerto

I. Andante con moto
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giusto

(First performance)

KODÁLY ..... Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"

I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[3033]

SHOW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

FEB 1963

ORCHESTRAS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

On February 8 and 9, Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will offer the world premiere of Benjamin Lees's new violin concerto in which Henryk Szeryng will be the soloist. At the same pair of concerts, Kodaly's "Peacock Variations" will have their first Boston performances, while a week later, Norman Dello Joio's "Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra" will also be heard for the first time in that city. Lorin Hollander, highly gifted and still in his teens, will be the piano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

FEB 3 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

FEB 1 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

FEB 7 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 50,144

FEB 3 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 551,529 S. 843,232

FEB 4 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

FEB 3 1963

World Premiere of Violin Concerto at Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the world premiere of Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in this performance of the concerto which will be the third world premiere performance by the orchestra in this season. The Friday-Saturday program will also include the Symphony No. 7 by Dvorak and Kodaly's Suite from "Hary Janos."

This afternoon at 3 p.m. Charles Munch will conclude his three-week engagement as guest conductor.

Today's program comprises Faure's Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande," Honegger's Symphony No. 2, the "Royal Hunt and Storm" from "The Trojans" by Berlioz, and Debussy's "LaMer."

Benjamin Lees was born in China of Russian parents, but was brought to this country at a young age. A naturalized citizen, Lees' musical training began in San Francisco in 1931. Following military service, he enrolled at the Univ. of Southern California where he continued his study of music, concentrating on composition. The award of a Guggenheim Fellowship enabled him to live in Europe for eight years and the Concerto was composed in France in 1958. Lees is currently on the faculty of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore.

Of the concerto the composer has written: "It could be categorized as classic spirit. Unlike the classical concerti, wherein the outer movements are fast, this work has two slow movements. Furthur, wherein most slow movements contain two subjects, the adagio of this concerto deals primarily with one basic theme, which undergoes permutations and several developments."

A native of Poland, violinist Szeryng gave his first public concerts at the age of 12 and later was a student of Carl Flesch and of Nadia Boulanger. He made has American debut in 1957 and has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in several concerts.

100

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 9 1963

Lees

Violin Concerto in World Première

Henryk Szeryng Wins Acclaim as Soloist

By Harold Rogers

An analysis of Erich Leinsdorf's concerts is not easily come by, and perhaps it is yet too soon in his first season as music director of the Boston Symphony to attempt anything that could be considered definitive. Yet there is a persisting problem that is causing concern—at least some subscribers who have shared their feelings with me are concerned lest the problems be one they will have to learn to live with.

One might oversimplify by saying that the listener is here and the music is there, and the twain indeed seldom meet. Mr. Leinsdorf's concerts are more often an objective experience than subjective; the music does not get into the listener, perhaps because Mr. Leinsdorf does not permit the music to get into himself. He appears to stand before it and to observe it while he marshals it into a marvelous kind of order. For it is truly impressive the way he can manage balance, mold tone, shape a phrase, control dynamics. He has brought an order to the Boston Symphony that it has not known in many a year; it is truly an exquisite instrument.

But this is part of the problem. The listener is now more aware of the way the music is being played than he is of the music itself. One finds himself more intellectually aware of the performance than he is emotionally moved by it.

It is an established fact th[at] if the performing artist is [ob]jective about the music, the audience will share the same objective experience. The only way to bring an audience subjectively into the music is for the conductor to be the first to enter in. What he does, they will do. They cannot help themselves. But if he is incapable of doing this, his audience will be incapable of a wholehearted response.

♪ ♪ ♪

We hope that Mr. Leinsdorf is not incapable of subjectivity, that he is perhaps finding his way during this first season, or that he is about to take a giant step to a higher level of music making. For the Boston Symphony — however suave, however elegant, however polished the sounds it can be made to emit — is worthy of something more than mere sound, however beautiful it may be.

But in the concert hall beautiful sounds are not enough. Were this not true, music lovers could stay at home and be satisfied with their recordings. Yet they are not so easily satisfied. They come to the hall to get something more, to get that certain quality of music—call it poetry, call it soul, call it anything you like—that is more than the sum total of its sounds.

♪ ♪ ♪

This problem again prevailed at Mr. Leinsdorf's Symphony Hall concert on Friday afternoon; one could cheer his intellect with what Mr. Leinsdorf did with the Dvořák Seventh Symphony or the Suite from Kodály's "Háry János." Yet only when a piling up of decibels made something of a physical assault on the senses could I truly feel the music, and then not in any poetic sense.

Between these two works—the first rich in Bohemian color, the last scintillating in Hungarian tunes — was presented the world première of Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto, with Henryk Szeryng as the skillful soloist.

Here is a work of many lyrical melodic flights and of an interesting use of polyphony that at first tend to mark it as a major contemporary work of grace and appeal. Yet the total of its graces add up to something less than what is promised.

♪ ♪ ♪

The first two movements, for instance, are both slow, thus breaking the formula for concertos; and Mr. Lees has cast them both in the same pensive mood. But for the break between the two, they could have been cut from the same cloth.

Here we heard the violin in melancholic monologues, supported by an economical orchestra. These songful patches are broken rather regularly with agitato bowings and matching activity in the accompaniment.

♪ ♪ ♪

The final movement comes as a welcome change of pace, though the bow is kept sawing in a hiccoughing way that tends to be lacking in color as the figure is prolonged. Brief expostulations of the brass and winds inject a certain dash that is welcome.

Mr. Szeryng turned in a truly brilliant performance as he managed the technics with ease and flair. He won a salvo of bravos from the musicians, if not from the audience; and Mr. Lees came forward to accept his share of the applause.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
FEB 9 1963

Music Review

Leinsdorf Commands, Instant Magic in Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, gave the following program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70, Dvorak; Violin Concerto (World premiere), Lees, with Henryk Szeryng as soloist; and Kodaly's Suite from the Comic Opera, "Hary Janos".

By ROBERT DUMM

(This week's guest reviewer is the dean of the Boston Conservatory of Music.)

Yesterday at Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf returned to his podium to a standing greeting from the musicians of the Boston Symphony, after a three-week visit from his predecessor, Charles Munch. He conducted a highly satisfying program, articulated throughout by the distinctively Leinsdorf sound. That sound has an aristocratic polish, slicing precision, and electric excitement. It derives from Leinsdorf's overruling conception of the music, down to small details, a mind he signals in gestures.

No doubt about it, he is a miniature Mandrake who commands, and gets, instant magic.

The most uniform and luxurious sound came from Dvorak's rarely heard Seventh Symphony, once known as his Second. The composer owns his admiration for Brahms in one beneficent theme after another, and in his bank of throaty violas and celli, which Leinsdorf has placed well forward to one side. The score calls for and got a big sound that never lost its sheen and knife-edge clarity, either in climaxes, or in spreading chords that reached into deep pedal tones without blurring the dimensioned focus of each note.

For his second rarity, Leinsdorf then conducted Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto, with Henryk Szeryng as soloist. It first two movements are reflective and poetic, while the last percolates with Stravinsky-like cross accents. It is a tonal piece, though there is plenty of intervallic byplay to challenge the ear, and regular thrust to climax to slake the thirst for drama. Its continuity, in fact, is the striking feature of the piece. There seems to be no note of filler in its forward flood.

Szeryng played it straightforwardly, with pure pitch and warm but smallish tone quality. His cleanliness and vigorous projection of rhythms is something to marvel at, and he cut horsehair more than once. His slightly introspective beginning unwound in an ecstatic cadenza full of shimmering trills. Leinsdorf, director qua accompanist, pumped more precision with his upper arms flush against his body and his knees doing little half bends for excitement. This time, the 'bravo's' came from the stage.

The music turned to sound-fest with the final work, Kodaly's Suite for the Comic Opera, 'Hary Janos.' This gala spoof, geared to the doin[gs] of Hungary's Munchausen Johnny Appleseed, enlists [a] piano among the percussion and a cembalom, that exotic large zither that quivers beside any Hungarian band.

Leinsdorf's beat drew a shower of acoustic fireworks; in the chimes and cocky flute of the "musical clock", the viola solo and starlit shivers of "Song", and the fine-sounding clatter of Napoleon's defeat, complete with a bogus funeral march gargled by the saxophone to the comment of a big bathtub tuba.

It's wonderfully showy, funny, stimulating music, and it got both laughter and applause when the razzle-dazzle finally puffed out in a non-plussed drum clap.

Next week's Boston Symphony concert promises further novelty in The Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra by the American composer, Norman Dello Joio, together with Haydn's Symphony No. 52 in C Minor, and Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben" ('Hero's Life').

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
FEB 14 1963

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

B.S.O.: LEES' VIOLIN CONCERTO

Eclecticism in and of itself is something for which a composer need not apologize. Even when his musical materials on balance bear the unmistakable authority of his own personality and experience, they never arrive full blown. They almost invariably follow patient building on somebody else's experience. This is true whether we are talking of a composer at the beginning, the middle or the end of a period.

But when eclecticism overreaches itself and becomes appropriation, we have something else. The musical identity of the composer is never revealed. In its stead there is a montage of the echoes of his mentors.

And that is the fatal flaw in Benjamin Lees' violin concerto, which received its first performance at Symphony last weekend. The styles and idioms first of Prokofiev, then Bartok and then Stravinsky caromed throughout all three movements with the sharpness and angularity of a hard hit billiard ball. Prokofiev, Bartok and Stravinsky are all undeniably worthy models, and Mr. Lees certainly possesses the technique to make the most of them. His two slow movements soared, his passage work had real bite and the orchestral underpinnings were richly complex and absorbing. Nevertheless, the most pervasive quality of this work was that of contrivedness and for all the agreeable listening it provides, I cannot seriously think that it will become an established part of the all-to-spare violin concerto literature.

There was no fatal flaw in its performance by the soloist, Henryk Szeryng. As in his two previous engagements with the Orchestra, Mr. Szeryng demonstrated a command of his instrument that places him among the most formidable of contemporary violinists. He has a warm tone, unerring accuracy and a magnificent bow arm. He would be warmly welcomed in recital here.

A compelling example of how far unabashed eclecticism can be carried without metastasizing into appropriation is to be found in Dvorak's D-minor Symphony, which opened the program. Extremely popular around the turn of the century, this symphony has become a rarity over the past two generations (its last performance here was forty years ago.) The general influence of Brahms on Dvorak at this period of his life and the influence of Brahms' Third Symphony upon this particular piece is so strong as to disconcert a listener for whole lines at a time. Yet, Dvorak's very personal style, his own characteristic and strong inward utterance always manage to reassert themselves, and in the end — except for the lame finale — this symphony must be counted among the Czech master's finest.

Mr. Leinsdorf's reading had, as always, all the beautiful orchestral sounds, but interpretatively was rather on the metronomic side. I had hoped that he could somehow transcend the banalities of that unfortunate last movement, but unhappily that section remained dead weight.

The program closed with another exercise in national color and exuberance, Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite. Hary Janos is a sort of ha'penny Till Eulenspiegel, but we hear Till about every year and Hary almost never. The performance revealed that sheer virtuosity of which Mr. Leinsdorf, when the occasion requires, shows he is capable.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

FEB 9 1963

The Symphony

Violin Concerto Is Played in Style

"Hary Janos" suite, both unreasonably neglected here during four decades, and the world premiere of a genial violin concerto by Benjamin Lees, played stylishly by the Polish-born virtuoso, Henryk Szeryng.

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It was a beguiling program that Mr. Leinsorf assembled on his return from winter vacation: a wonderfully melodic Dvorak Seventh and exhilarating

Mr. Lees, a 39-year-old American born in Manchuria of Russian parents, has written a concerto notable for the grace of its melodic ideas amid the first two movements.

On a first hearing it seemed to me that the third and final section lacked the climactic vigor of a culminating outburst; but the fine grain of the workmanship, the vivid lyricism of the initial statements, are immediately accessible and disclose a significant talent.

Slow Movement

Although it is not uncommon for the contemporary composer to begin with a slow movement, Mr. Lees varies even further from classical procedure by producing two—andante and adagio. Nevertheless, the score is related to classic form.

The pulsing rhythms and tensions, the metrical inconstancy, the use of a single theme with variations (in the adagio), speak the syntax of today. The design, however, employs traditional contours, while there is a neat balance between showmanship and musical content in the role allotted the soloist.

The contemplative tenderness of the first two-thirds rises in a slow-arching curve, musing with a kind of Brahms-ian gentleness on grave songful material. One perceives the concerto as a modern extension of romanticism. The ultimate rondo raises high hopes, yet despite its cross-rhythms and brusque momentum, lacks driving power.

The instrumental colors, strangely enough, have an Oriental tint, especially in the exotic strokes of wood block, xylophone and tam-tam, though I may have been conditioned here by the consideration of the composer's origins. Mr. Lees has written an eminently expressive lyric score.

Ideal Exponent

Mr. Szeryng was an ideal exponent; there were half-gasped "bravos" at the close. His tone, sweet without blandness, and the clear, clean authority of his bowing, realized each subtle nuance. He gave us a delicately-turned phrasings remarkable for pristine brilliance. The quality of his stops, dynamic contrasts and supple bowings bespoke the first-rank international virtuoso. Mr. Lees joined him with Mr. Leinsdorf for stage bows, presenting a picture of touching awkardness and mingled pride.

What a pleasure it was to hear Dvorak's Seventh and the ebullient "Hary Janos" after a lapse of some four decades! The Seventh used to be offered here as the Second, until the renumbering of Dvorak's symphonies occurred to place them in proper chronology. It was one of the most popular of Dvorak's works, too. Twenty-two performances, indeed, took place until 1923 when the score went into musical exile.

The Seventh owes much to Brahms; the fresh, captivating development contains passage after passage in which one hears a distant felicity from the Brahms Third and Fourth, the horn calls in the finale of the First. Dvorak, it will be remembered, was severely criticized for sacrificing his alleged "Czech" character to imitate Brahms; but he was grateful to the master who brought him recognition; and he could not have chosen a better model for his own artistic temperament, which was akin.

Seldom has homage been more handsomely rendered. Dvorak may recall Brahms, but the symphony retains a blithe, open and sunny cheer that springs from himself. The flowing and delectable melodies emerge with spontaneous ease, and were lovingly modelled by Mr. Leinsdorf who was in magnificent fettle throughout.

And what exuberance, also, lay in "Hary Janos," with its strange timbres and robust Magyar picturesqueness. The glitter of the cembalom, the deep - voiced chimes and mournful alto saxophones lent a panoply of bright peasant hues to the fanciful suite. It was realized with a sweep providing an order of sheer fun that we have not experienced in Symphony Hall for some time.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf will present the first Boston performance of Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra, Lorin Hollander, soloist; Haydn's Symphony No. 52, in C minor; and Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben," Op. 40.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 17th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Henryk Szeryng, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70 ..... Dvorak
Violin Concerto ..... Lees
Suite from the comic opera, "Hary Janos" ..... Kodaly

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY & SUN.-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

FEB 26 1963

Paul Affelder's music notes:

Vibrant Concerto Is Premiered

For the second time this season, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have introduced a new and extremely worthwhile concerto by an American composer. The first was Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, which received its world premiere during the opening week festivities at Philharmonic Hall. The second is the Violin Concerto by Benjamin Lees, which premiered in Boston last week, and had its initial New York hearing at the Academy of Music, with Henryk Szeryng as soloist, on Thursday evening.

Composed in 1958 in France, where Lees was working under a Guggenheim Fellowship, the Violin Concerto is an unusually attractive work, attractive enough that it is likely to enjoy more than a single introductory round of performances.

The work is in the customary three movements, but one must disagree with the composer, who states that the first two of these are in a slow tempo. The marking for the first movement may be Andante con moto, yet it moves along at quite a moderate pace. Its mood, tempo and extremely lyrical style, in fact, kept reminding this listener of the opening movement of Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor.

What the concerto is missing, in fact, is a true slow movement. The middle one bears the indication Adagio, but it is considerably faster than that, or was, at Thursday's performance, and it has several rapid episodes in the middle. As a result, it is too similar in mood and style to what has come before.

The finale, on the other hand, is a spirited rondo, Allegro giusto, in which the soloist is called upon to perform all manner of rapid-fire technical feats. What it needs is a bit of the melodic relief that dominates the preceding movements.

Despite these shortcomings, however, this is a well-made concerto, written by one who understands thoroughly the technical and interpretative possibilities of the violin (there is even an extended and highly idiomatic cadenza in the first movement). Furthermore, Mr. Lees is a welcome phenomenon among present-day creative musicians: he isn't afraid to write a good melodic line and to back it up with thoroughly modern, but just as thoroughly palatable harmonies. His orchestral coloring, too, is imaginative and balances well with the solo instrument.

Mr. Szeryng, who has long been admired for his way with the concerti of the standard repertoire, showed that he could be equally convincing with a modern work. His performance, admirably seconded by Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra, was characterized by technical mastery, interpretative sensibility, even brilliance at times, and a ravishingly beautiful tone. He is surely one of the top violinists before the public today. the new concerto earned a warm response from the audience, with Mr. Lees present to share in the applause.

The remainder of the program was equally appealing. It began with Dvorak's Symphony in D Minor, usually known as his Second but actually his Seventh, if one counts four early symphonies which were discarded but which have recently been revived. Mr. Leinsdorf lavished loving care upon it, giving it a reading that was notable for its tonal warmth. If there was anything at which to cavil, it was the last movement, which would have benefited from greater incisiveness and rhythmic propulsion.

The concluding work was Zoltan Kodaly's colorful "Hary Janos" Suite, accorded a rousingly brilliant and properly humorous presentation by conductor and players. Its brightest moments were the "Vienese Musical Clock," with its clanging percussion, and the ensuing "Song," which featured a stunning solo on the Hungarian cimbalom, played by Janos Hosszu.

Throughout the concert, one thing was constantly evident: Mr. Leinsdorf has succeeded in restoring the Boston Symphony to its former stature as a glowingly polished musical instrument. Its tone quality is quite different from that produced by the French-oriented conductors, Monteux, Koussevitzky and Munch, who preceded him; but the playing is much more refined and mellow than it has been in some time.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

FEB 9 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

FEB 12 1963

with Dean Martin at the ... of her death.

Pianist, 19, in Debut With Hub Symphony

Lorin Hollander will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tuesday's 8:30 p. m. program in Symphony Hall. The 19-year-old pianist will also perform the Ravel Piano Concerto in G major at the Friday and Saturday concerts.

... FOR TUESDAY

SHOWTHROUGH

102 MONDAY 5. TUESDAY 8

Fifth Program

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace; Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

LEES ..... Violin Concerto

I. Andante con moto
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giusto

KODÁLY ..... Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"

I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Eighth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 12, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72

RAVEL ..... *Concerto for Piano and Orchestra

I. Allegramente
II. Adagio assai
III. Presto

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
LORIN HOLLANDER
Mr. HOLLANDER plays the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
FEB 8 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
FEB 10 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
FEB 10 1963

Concert Calendar

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be joined by soloists at each of its four concerts in Symphony Hall this week.

Tomorrow evening Henryk Szeryng will be soloist in Benjamin Lees' new Violin Concerto, that received its world premiere at the orchestra's concert last Friday.

Lorin Hollander will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tuesday's program. The 19-year-old pianist will perform the Ravel Piano Concerto in G major on Tuesday evening, and at the Friday-Saturday concerts he will be heard in the Dello Joio Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf will begin Monday's program with Dvorak's Symphony No. 7. The Lees Violin Concerto with Mr. Szeryng will be heard following the intermission, and the program will conclude with the Suite from the Comic Opera "Hary Janos," by Kodaly.

In addition to the Ravel Piano Concerto with Mr. Hollander, Tuesday's concert will consist of Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9.

The Dello Joio Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra which Mr. Hollander will play on Friday-Saturday will be the first Boston performances of this work. For the Friday - Saturday program Erich Leinsdorf has also chosen the Symphony No. 52 by Haydn, which will be heard for the first time at these concerts, and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

LORIN HOLLANDER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
FEB 13 1963

Music Review

Lorin Hollander Plays Ravel With the B.S.O.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave a concert last night in the Tuesday series at Symphony Hall. The program: Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72, Ravel's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, with Lorin Hollander as soloist, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D minor.

By MARGO MILLER

Lorin Hollander, the 18-year-old pianist who has performed here in recital and with a visiting orchestra, made his first appearance last night with the Boston Symphony.

In a workmanlike manner the young soloist sat down to the Ravel Piano Concerto and made music. His playing was clean, his tone large and full and he handled the pyrotechnics of the piece with great style.

He seemed equally at home in the catchy jazz portions of the piano part and in the sustained song of the second movement. Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra filled in the symphonic colors with flair.

Hollander returns for the Friday-Saturday concerts in the first local performance of Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra. Last March the pianist was soloist in the work's premiere.

Last night's program also included a tender reading of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, No. 3, and what has become a Leinsdorf specialty, Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor. One thinks particularly of the way in which the conductor builds the lengthy last movement so that each theme passes its glow onto the next. In performance the Bruckner has been one of the masterpieces of the season.

SHOWTHROUGH

102 MONDAY 5. TUESDAY 8

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Fifth Program

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace – Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

LEES . . . . . Violin Concerto

I. Andante con moto
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giusto

KODÁLY . . . . . Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"

I. Prelude – The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST
HENRYK SZERYNG

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Eighth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 12, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Op. 72

RAVEL . . . . . *Concerto for Piano and Orchestra

I. Allegramente
II. Adagio assai
III. Presto

INTERMISSION

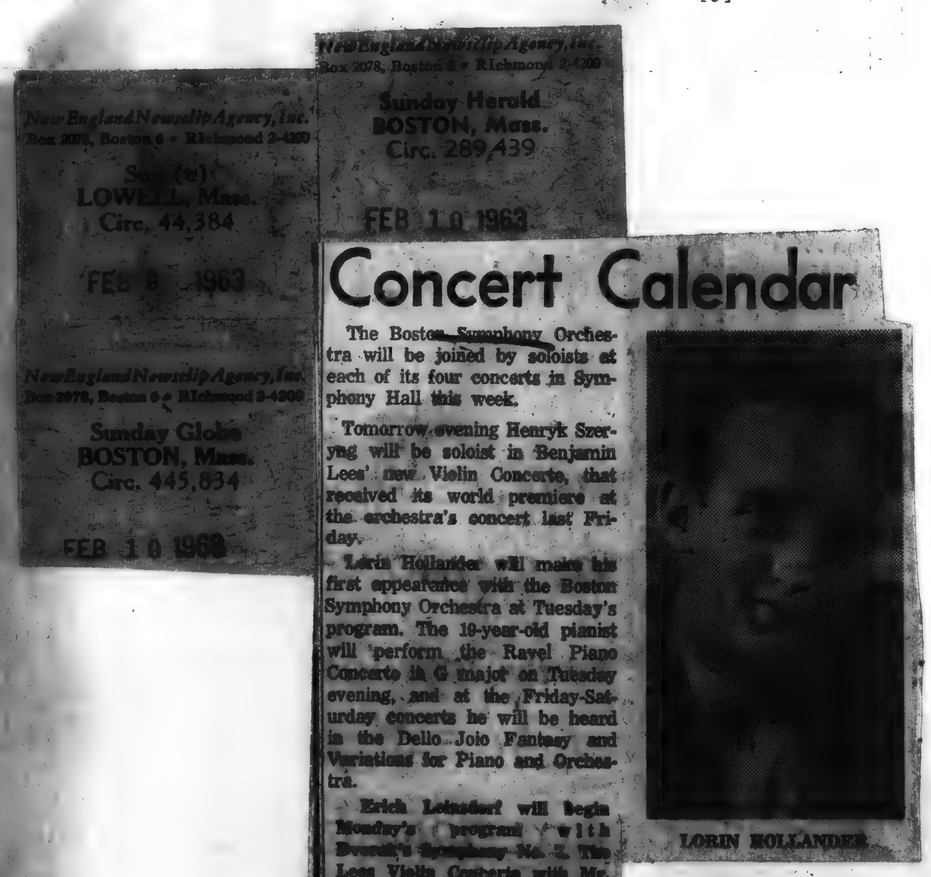
BRUCKNER . . . . . Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
LORIN HOLLANDER
Mr. HOLLANDER plays the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]



BOSTON 18.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 12 1963

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 15, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 16, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony No. 52, in C minor

I. Allegro assai
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Presto

(First performance at these concerts)

DELLO JOIO ..... Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra

I. Fantasy
Adagio; Allegro vivo; Adagio
II. Variations
Adagio
Allegro scherzando
Andante amabile
Spumante
Adagio mesto
Allegro gioioso

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS ..... "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40

SOLOIST
LORIN HOLLANDER
Mr. HOLLANDER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Lorin Hollander will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at its concerts in Symphony Hall tonight and Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
FEB 13 196

Hollander Excellent In Symphony Debut

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Lorin Hollander, the 18-year-old virtuoso who will introduce Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations at Friday Symphony next, last night made his BSO debut with a brilliant account of the outer two movements of Ravel's Concerto, and a less persuasive treatment of the Adagio.

"It is wonderful to see," wrote Emile Vuillermoz of the Ravel, "how this master has freshness of inspiration. . . . The work is very easy to understand and gives the impression of extreme youth." True enough. Nevertheless, it must also be remembered that the youthfulness was that of a 50-year-old genius whose delicate middle cantilena is developed here not with the urgency of burgeoning talent, but rather, on the sage and mellow model of Bach.

Superb Artist

Mr. Hollander must find critical commentary on these sections of his pianism, something of a cliche. He is a superb artist, undoubtedly the outstanding member of his generation which treads closely on the decade of Cliburn and Fleischer. His understanding of the Ravel as a showpiece is complete. It is perhaps patronizing with such a dazzling gift, to point out that time alone brings out those depths which are bracketed between the digital display of the first movement and the presto.

He gave us the opening allegramente with an imperious sweep, a compelling sonority. His prodigal use of the pedal was fully justified by his bravura conception. His markmanship is incredible and his tone modulated to the dimensions of youthful exuberance.

In the adagio, the line was slightly blurred, and though his correctness of style was in evidence, it lacked the identification he brought to those movements where he could play in the grand manner. This was a reading of the score that captured to a high degree the surface richness and texture, an important factor, but sacrificed the poetic core.

Time willing, I hope to have the privilege of hearing Mr. Hollander in the Ravel Concerto a decade hence. The evening commenced with a rousing performance of "Leonore" No. 3, and ended with a gorgeous Bruckner Ninth. The latter reveals so many facets under Mr. Leinsdorf that a second, third and fourth hearing scarcely fails to exhaust its felicities.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the eighth program of the Tuesday night series in Symphony Hall last night. Lorin Hollander, pianist, was the solo artist.

Overture to "Leonore," Op. 3, No. 72 ..... Beethoven
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra ..... Ravel
Symphony No. 9 in D minor ..... Bruckner

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 13 1963

Lorin Hollander at Symphony

Young Pianist Featured In Ravel Concerto

By Louis Chapin

Maurice Ravel's Piano Concerto in G asks three particular gifts of the soloist: a capacious and wiry technique; a sense of the light-hearted élan of its outer movements; and a wisdom for the simple depths between.

Loren Hollander, who played it Tuesday night with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, showed himself abundantly equipped to supply the first two needs, and satisfied a larger measure of the third than might be considered likely for his 18 years.

The brilliance of the first movement was indeed so powerfully incised that Mr. Hollander's piano, at least from my seat in Symphony Hall, sounded ungrateful at the treatment. A young player with his strength and accuracy of attack cannot be blamed for using it in this pungent music, and sometimes it was needed to cut through the orchestration.

♪ ♪ ♪

But Ravel's own reference to Mozart, in commenting on his concerto, points to an ideal compounded of wit and transparency. Even though he disclaims any desire for depth in the work, his epitomizing of this transparency in the melodic surfaces of the slow movement leads the listener below them—as is so often the case with Mozart.

Satie is another composer who comes to mind. In his best examples, as well as in some of Ravel, it isn't what you find to do with the music that counts, but how understandingly you leave it alone. Mr. Hollander sometimes ruffled his surfaces in this serene movement with interpretive effort, and thereby obscured Ravel's disowned and undoubted depths. Elsewhere, the steel-sprung pianism we heard was good for the concerto's urbane excitement.

♪ ♪ ♪

Except for Bernard Zighera's exquisite harp solo in the first movement, the orchestra did little to distinguish its part in the transaction, and a certain amount, here and there, to disarrange it.

No such trouble occurred in their well-ordered disposal of Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, or during the enormous reaches of Bruckner's uncompleted Ninth Symphony. His three movements were quite accurately aspiring and insistent, and in Mr. Leinsdorf's hands well-designed for eloquence.

Perhaps it was the memory of Ravel's utterly different dialect that kept Bruckner's, for all the effort, from arriving at its full potential.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
FEB 14 1963

Leinsdorf Conducts Haydn's C Minor

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Boston Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall. Programmed are Haydn's Symphony No. 52, in C minor; Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Della Joio, with Lorin Hollander soloist, and "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40, by Strauss.

BOSTON 18. 103

Boston Symphony Orch.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 12 1963

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 15, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 16, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony No. 52, in C minor

I. Allegro assai
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Presto

(First performance at these concerts)

DELLO JOIO . . . . . Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra

I. Fantasy
Adagio; Allegro vivo; Adagio
II. Variations
Adagio
Allegro scherzando
Andante amabile
Spumante
Adagio mesto
Allegro gioioso

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS . . . . . "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40

SOLOIST
LORIN HOLLANDER
Mr. HOLLANDER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 13 1963

Lorin Hollander at Symphony

Young Pianist Featured In Ravel Concerto

By Louis Chapin

Maurice Ravel's Piano Concerto in G asks three particular gifts of the soloist: a capacious and wiry technique; a sense of the light-hearted élan of its outer movements; and a wisdom for the simple depths between.

Loren Hollander, who played it Tuesday night with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, showed himself abundantly equipped to supply the first two needs, and satisfied a larger measure of the third than might be considered likely for his 18 years.

The brilliance of the first movement was indeed so powerfully incised that Mr. Hollander's piano, at least from my seat in Symphony Hall, sounded ungrateful at the treatment. A young player with his strength and accuracy of attack cannot be blamed for using it in this pungent music, and sometimes it was needed to cut through the orchestration.

But Ravel's own reference to Mozart, in commenting on his concerto, points to an ideal compounded of wit and transparency. Even though he disclaims any desire for depth in the work, his epitomizing of this transparency in the melodic surfaces of the slow movement leads the listener below them—as is so often the case with Mozart.

Satie is another composer who comes to mind. In his best examples, as well as in some of Ravel, it isn't what you find to do with the music that counts, but how understandingly you leave it alone. Mr. Hollander sometimes ruffled his surfaces in this serene movement with interpretive effort and thereby obscured Ravel's disowned . . . and . . . undoubted depths. Elsewhere, the steel-sprung pianism we heard was good for the concerto's urbane excitement.

Except for Bernard Zighera's exquisite harp solo in the first movement, the orchestra did little to distinguish its part in the transaction, and a certain amount, here and there, to disarrange it.

No such trouble occurred in their well-ordered disposal of Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, or during the enormous reaches of Bruckner's uncompleted Ninth Symphony. Its three movements were quite accurately aspiring and insistent, and in Mr. Leinsdorf's hands well-designed for eloquence.

Perhaps it was the memory of Ravel's utterly different dialect that kept Bruckner's, for all the effort, from arriving at its full potential.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
FEB 14 1963

Leinsdorf Conducts Haydn's C Minor

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Boston Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall. Programmed are Haydn's Symphony No. 52, in C minor; Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Dello Joio, with Lorin Hollander soloist, and "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40, by Strauss.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
FEB 13 196

Hollander Excellent In Symphony Debut

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Lorin Hollander, the 18-year-old virtuoso who will introduce Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations at Friday Symphony next, last night made his BSO debut with a brilliant account of the outer two movements of Ravel's Concerto, and a less persuasive treatment of the Adagio.

"It is wonderful to see," wrote Emile Vuillermoz of the Ravel, "how this master has freshness of inspiration. . . . The work is very easy to understand and gives the impression of extreme youth. True enough. Nevertheless, it must also be remembered that the youthfulness was that of a 50-year-old genius whose delicate middle cantilena is developed here not with the urgency of burgeoning talent, but rather, on the ripe and mellow model of Bach.

Superb Artist

Mr. Hollander must find critical commentary on these sections of his pianism, something of a quibble. He is a superb artist, undoubtedly the outstanding member of the generation which trails closely behind the decade of Ashkenazy and Fischer. His understanding of Ravel as a . . . piece is complete. It is perhaps patronizing with such a dazzling gift, to point out that time alone brings out those depths which are bracketed between the digital display of the first movement and the presto.

He gave us the opening allegramente with an imperious sweep, a compelling sonority. His prodigal use of the pedal was fully justified by his brilliant conception. His marksmanship is incredible, and his tone modulated by the dimensions of youthful exuberance.

In the adagio, the line was slightly blurred, and though his correctness of style was in evidence, it lacked the identification he brought to those movements where he could play in the grand manner. This was a reading of the score that captured to a high degree the surface richness and texture, an important factor, but sacrificed the poetic core.

Time willing, I hope to have the privilege of hearing Mr. Hollander in the Ravel Concerto a decade hence. The evening commenced with a rousing performance of "Leonore" No. 3, and ended with a gorgeous Bruckner Ninth. The latter reveals so many facets under Mr. Leinsdorf that a second . . . fourth hearing scarcely . . . exhaust its felicities.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . Symphony Hall . . . Leonore, No. 3, Op. 72 . . . Beethoven . . . Concerto for Piano and . . .

104

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
FEB 21 1963

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

HOLLANDER APPEARS WITH BSO

Last week-end's offerings included the first performance at these concerts of Haydn's Symphony No. 52 in C minor, the first performance in Boston of Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra, and Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben." The piano soloist was Lorin Hollander. These promised an amiable enough two hours and the promise was indeed fulfilled.

Mr. Leinsdorf led off with an incisive reading of the Haydn, which is something of a collector's item. It is the last of the five symphonies in the minor key characteristic of the master's "Sturm und Drang" period, an isolated romantic phase which anticipated the final great and prolonged flowering of his art. By no means top-drawer Haydn, still one can only shake his head that this symphony had never been exhumed for performance here until now. The work amply demonstrates that by the time Haydn had reached his early forties, his powers of invention and mastery of form and orchestral resources had already made him the towering figure that he was in musical composition.

To a very reduced orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf added a harpsichord. This bass continuo part, so the program notes read, was "not indicated in the published scores but undoubtedly used by Haydn." This calls for some comment. True, Haydn undoubtedly did employ a continuo, but when he had reached the level of maturation that this symphony embodies, he did so only from custom from the demands imposed upon him by his protector, or by his protector's guests. The need to fill in the middle harmonies, which is the purpose of a continuo, no longer existed in Haydn's work by the time of the C minor Symphony. To contemporary ears, the harpsichord, whose sound cuts through the rest of the orchestra with amazing pervasiveness, is a throwback to the baroque orchestra and style — curiously and incongruously atavistic in an essentially romantic composition.

The Dello Joio new work sounds like a combination of the Ravel two-handed concerto and particularly the Rachmaninoff of the Paganini Variations updated. The Baldwin Piano Company commissioned it in 1961, and Mr. Dello Joio, a confirmed romantic impressionist in an age that has gone to something else, exploits the piano's potential in a way which surely must warm his commissioner's corporate heart.

So too the soloist. Lorin Hollander is only 19, and even on the basis of what he displayed in this slick though highly effective exercise in fluffery, my guess is that in a very few years he is going to be quite a force to reckon with among the pianists of the world. He introduced the piece in Cincinnati last year and he performs it very much as though it is "his." The late William Kappel once made the Khatchatourian Piano Concerto his own and in doing so somehow added a dimension to the work that it never quite seemed to have with anyone else. The same phenomenon may well be in the making here with Mr. Hollander and the Dello Joio Fantasy and Variations. The collaboration between orchestra and pianist was a model of precision and verve.

Mr. Leinsdorf concluded with the "Ein Heldenleben" and once again proved that there can be no doubt whatsoever of his very special affinity for Strauss. I cannot recall ever having heard the lines of this sprawling apostrophe to egoism drawn with such tautness and clarity. However, we needn't belabor the question of the programatic content — the music will stand or fall on its own. If Strauss never exactly reached his finest hour in "Ein Heldenleben," he certainly reached his noisiest one in the battle scene. This tone poem has the virtues and faults of a three-ring circus and that leaves the listener pretty much in accordance with his premises about such shows. If you do not try to concentrate on everything that is going on at one time but dilate upon selected episodes, there is an astonishingly large amount of gorgeous sound and some wondrous manipulation of striking thematic materials that can be yielded up from this fading old period piece.

In fact it is worth playing for the violin solo work alone. "Ein Heldenleben" has virtually a self-contained concerto within it and Mr. Silverstein performed it as well as I ever hope to hear it. It looks, incidentally, as though this is as close as we will come this season to a formal introduction to Mr. Silverstein as a soloist and so much the worst for the Boston audiences.

This week the orchestra is on tour. It returns next week for an all-Prokofiev program consisting of the "Classical" Symphony, the first performance of the 'Cello Concerto and the Symphony No. 6. The soloist will be Samuel Mayes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
FEB 17 1963

Boston Symphony on Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on tour this week visiting Hartford, Philadelphia and New York. Erich Leinsdorf will be making his first appearance in Philadelphia as music director of the orchestra.

Lorin Hollander will be piano soloist with the orchestra at its concert in Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Henryk Szeryng will be violin soloist at its concerts in Brooklyn Thursday and at Philharmonic Hall Friday. Leinsdorf will conduct all three concerts.

The orchestra's next concert in Boston will be next Sunday at 3 p.m. in Symphony Hall, with Leinsdorf conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
FEB 16 1963

Music Review

Leinsdorf, Symphony Glory in 'Heldenleben'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, presented the following program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: Symphony No. 52, in C minor, Haydn (first performance at the concerts); Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra, Dello Joio (first performance here), with Lorin Hollander as soloist; and "Ein Heldenleben" Tone Poem, Op. 40, Strauss.

By ROBERT DUMM

When Erich Leinsdorf stepped out for Strauss' Heldenleben ('Hero's Life'), the final piece of the concert he conducted with the Boston Symphony at Smyphony Hall yesterday, he just stood there and smiled. Then he lifted his right hand and unplugged the sea of sound that tells this symphonic life-story.

The musicians returned that smile by revealing each fine detail of the lengthy score, like a good story you don't want to end at all. This is the way one always suspected this piece could sound, yet conductor after conductor falls into the deadly trap of wielding its great weight as if its heroism were all in its size.

Strauss worked his musical biography two ways. First, there are the facts—the swaggering themes, the trumpet calls to colors, the Don Juan strand, and the final resignation of the Old Soldier fading away. But he also worked deep into the spirit of his story, the dream and fulfillment of Glory, the thing Leinsdorf caught that many conductors miss.

The conductor had given us Haydn's C Minor Symphony with the clean-shaven clarity, balance, and unperturbed flow of the 18th-Century. And even as his circling upbeats described the letter of this 'gallan style,' he whirled us again to the spirit behind it. He presented to us each slur and tiny jewel of the score, but supplied also the essential grace that explains small things, to that or any age. It was good to hear the harpsichord back at its rightful place in the center of Haydn's orchestra. The carefully subdued strings let us hear it very well, playing its paradox of lightening and reinforcing the structure all at once.

The new work of the concert was Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra, with Lorin Hollander at the piano, a work not heard here before. This music clearly knows its own mind, and draws a whole train of conclusions from the sparse halfsteps on which it opens. This developed logic, and the sense of contrast that keeps converting brittle uproars into dim nocturnes, contributes to its effectiveness. But its distinction lies in its fresh combinations of sounds that snugly encloses the piano part inside its orchestral frame, rather than leave it raucously to fend for itself.

The Baldwin piano people caused all this to be written, and they're fortunate in having red-headed Hollander to challenge the lungs and metal of their mile-long grand. This very young man, coltish and confident at the same time, already bears the bright seal of Twentieth-Century pianism; a super-charged technic, factuality about notes and moods, and the brilliance of high tension, a tension which exploded in the audience with a bomb of applause.

After its tour next week, The Boston Symphony will return to Symphony Hall for its Mar. 1, 2, all-Prokofieff programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 16 1963

Dello Joio Première

By Harold Rogers

Lorin Hollander—19, personable, and remarkably gifted—has been entertaining Boston Symphony audiences by his winning pianism, first last Tuesday in the Ravel Concerto, again at the weekend concerts in the Boston première of Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations.

Composed in 1961, the Dello Joio is eminently attractive music, neoimpressionistic and very European in mood. The Fantasy section consists of a thoughtful Adagio, an Allegro vivo fashioned as a stunning toccata, and another Adagio. The whole piece evolves out of a four-note cell—G, F-sharp, B, and C. The six variations comprising the second section then run engagingly through a series of contrasting moods, some of which the composer describes as scherzando, amabile, spumante (indeed a new one, musically speaking!), and giocoso.

The work offers Mr. Hollander an ideal vehicle through which to show his wares, his ability to send notes flying with a hard brilliance or to caress them into a sweet tenderness. His ear is extremely sensitive to tonal subtleties. Small wonder he has come so far so soon; his listeners showered him with their ecstatic applause.

Erich Leinsdorf opened with the first performance at these concerts of Haydn's Symphony No. 52 in C minor and gave it a tidy, subdued reading, graceful, elegant, courtly. He closed with a glowing account of Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben," in which the orchestra surged and sighed with the hero's tears and triumphs, rising to militaristic heights, subsiding into the serenity of success when his carping critics are silenced.

Joseph Silverstein's violin, representing the voice of the beloved consort, sang with a poised and radiant beauty.

The Strauss, indeed, has provided Mr. Leinsdorf with some of his most resplendent moments of the season.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
FEB 16 1963

105

The Symphony

Lorin Hollander In Blazing Display

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The frustrations of moderate artistic success probably exceed those of the outright fiasco. Yesterday's Symphony program inspired the sentiments of a near miss. Brilliantly selected and executed, everything in it, save for the young pianist, Lorin Hollander, promised more than its achievement.

There were two premieres, both erhaps first Boston performnces, although we may assume ocumentary evidence is lacking or the Haydn Symphony. In any ase, Mr. Leinsdorf broke the old of Haydn performance which nds symphony audiences continully hearing only the last dozen--so scores of the master.

Then, the Dello Joio Fantasy nd Variations for Piano held he aura of excitement that resides in a new work by a well-established American contemporary; and for an epilogue the esplendent "Ein Heldenleben," or the first time in over five ears.

Relatively Bland

The late middle-period Haydn mphony No. 52 has a historical gnificance as a precursor of usical romanticism; but while contains many polished and armingphrases, by comparion with the immense treasury f neglected Haydn literature it relatively bland. True, the mior key, unusual for its time, upplies a gravity not associated ith the gallant style. On the ther hand, the treatment of the rchestra generally, reflects the utiful professionalism of a cour musician of Haydn's era, and sel lom discloses the inventiveness of ay, No. 31, with its striking batery of hunter's horns.

This brings up the inevitable ilemma of historical fidelity. Vould Haydn today observe the limensions of his orchestra as crupulously as the modern conductor? Mr. Leinsdorf positioned is men with the violas in the enter and three basses at stage eft separated by a harpsichord ontinuo admirably realized by uise Vosgerchian.

The bass continuo addition eems curious indeed, despite the rogram's statement that Haydn undoubtedly" used it. The symhony is dated around 1773, and he practice had been abandoned y the European composer at id-century.

Vast Stretches

Haydn was an innovator. It is reasonable to assume that given abundant orchestral resource the unexplored that remain in Still, it is pleasant to be reminded of the vast stretches of unexplored that remain in his his output, too.

The 18-year-old virtuoso, Lorin Hollander, reinforced the favorable impression of his debut with he orchestra Tuesday night in he Ravel Concerto. His performnce of the Fantasy and Variaons was a blazing digital display hat blened exhuberant dazzle ith a sensitive lyric touch.

Commissioned by the Baldwin iano people, Mr. Dello Joio's core not unnaturally places bold emphasis on the technical resource of the performer. He uilds the structure around a fourote relationship developed, reersed and skillfully manipulated; showpiece of the late romantic radition, bombastic and obvious in its ideas, yet undeniably effective theater. Mr. Hollander played the score for all its virtuosic worth; his deftly articulated trills, crashing crescendos and neat melodic line declared an appropriate but controlled bravura.

Cordial Response

The accompaniment of Mr. Leinsdorf defined the variations with exceeding clarity and the response of the audience was cordial. Norman Dello Joio has written a swashing display that fulfills the demand for surface without substance.

The idiomatic performance of "Ein Heldenleben" exhibited sing-

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 18th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Lorin Hollander, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony No. 52, in C minor.....Haydn
Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra.....Dello Joio
"Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40.....Strauss

ular proportion and control. This was a very good reading, yet the efficient and straightforward phrasings clipped the cumulative tensions of a hero's life. Not for many years have we had so accurate a rendition. One hoped, however, for more of the explosive energy of the protagonist's triumph of the will. Mr. Leinsdorf is particularly noteworthy for his approach to the contemplative themes, and, I think, a more relaxed, emotive dramatic sweep and color ought to place his version, eventually, among the definitive interpretations.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, returning March 1-2 in an all-Prokofiev program: the "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, Symphony-Concerto for 'Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125, and the Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111. Samuel Mayes will be the soloist.

10b NEW YORK TOUR 4.

HARTFORD.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WEST HARTFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 7,335
FEB 14 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
FEB 18 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
FEB 18 1963

Boston Symphony At Bushnell Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf will arrive in Hartford today to perform at 8:15 p.m. the final concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series. A limited number of tickets remain, and will go on sale at 10 a.m. in the Bushnell box office.

Dr. Leinsdorf has selected for tonight's program: Haydn's Symphony No. 52 in C minor Zoltan Kodaly's Suite from the comic opera "Hary Janos"; Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor.

This season's Bushnell series has presented: The French National Orchestra with Lorin Maazel conducting; the Detroit Symphony with Paul Paray conducting and Lorin Hollander as guest pianist; the Boston Symphony in a November concert; the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell with Judith Raskin as soprano soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 114,108
FEB 19 1963

Symphony Brilliant At Bushnell

The Courant's drama and music critic, T. H. Parker, was unable, due to illness, to review the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Monday night at Bushnell Memorial.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the final concert of this year's Bushnell Symphony Series Monday night with a brilliant performance under director Erich Leinsdorf.

A near - capacity audience warmly applauded Mr. Leinsdorf in his second appearance at Bushnell Memorial Hall as the new conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony.

The concert opened with Joseph Haydn's C Minor Symphony, N. 52, a quiet yet delightful piece. The subdued strings and woodwinds playing somewhat slower than is usual in Haydn's symphonies, emphasized the symphony's somber character.

Fast-Paced

The explosive sneeze that opened the second number, Zoltan Kodaly's Suite from the comic opera Jary Janos, set the theme for a fast - paced folk tale. The opening movement, an evocation of wondrous and mysterious things, called the listener to the fireside, to the chair and the bright eyes of the story teller. Then brassy trumpets and saucy tambourines and tolling chimes marched toy soldiers and kings and queens and fabulous sights across the stage. The firm skill of Mr.Leinsdorf's hands drew wide swaths of bright colors and sounds, calling to mind the exuberant folk melodies of Hungary.

For the third and final piece, Mr. Leinsdorf chose a number mid-way between the classic and the modern: Antonin Dvorak's D minor Symphony, No. 7. The alternate swelling and subsiding strings in this symphony built a smooth and flowing splendor of sound. The vigorous last movement, full and rich like the tolling of a great bell — was a fitting end to a wonderful night of music.

ROBERT L. PISOR

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
FEB 19 1963

Eric Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony at Bushnell

By DON O. NOEL Jr.

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony concluded this season's Bushnell Symphony Series Monday night with a brilliant concert before a near-capacity audience.

The program:

Haydn, Symphony No. 52
Kodaly, Hary Janos Suite
Dvorak, Symphony No. 7 (2)

This listener was unable to hear Maestro Leinsdorf's first performance with the Boston here last Fall. But it certainly cannot have been any better than last night's.

Mr. Leinsdorf has taken an orchestra famous for its French quality and turned it into an instrument which reflects with perfect responsiveness his own crisp, lucid style.

Or perhaps one should says, styles. For each of Monday night's offerings was perfectly suited to the work.

* * *

IN THE OPENING movement of the Haydn, Mr. Leinsdorf produced a solid, almost monolithic quality from the small orchestra called for in the score. The andante movement was much more expressive—indeed, it is so in the score—but the entire reading was rather restrained, as is appropriate to one of the early precursors of the more lush and romantic works which followed from Haydn's pen and others'.

Turning to the much more lush Kodaly work—with an orchestra that seemed to grow and grow, as more players trooped on stage, until they threatened to spill over the edges—Mr. Leinsdorf's reading was much more romantic.

Hary Janos is a sort of Magyar cousin to Till Eulenspiegel, much more melodic, but with much of the same humor. Mr. Leinsdorf underlined the humorous passages, spun out the gypsy melodies with a lilting air, and demonstrated by a crash of sound in the final measures that he enjoys turning up the volume of this marvelous orchestra just as much as did his predecessor, Charles Munch.

* * *

ONE WAS impressed by the detail Maestro Leinsdorf drew out of the Dvorak. Without tearing the fabric apart, he nonetheless succeeded in bringing solo passages slightly to the fore, creating a delightful interweaving of melody and theme.

Here, too, he set a brisk pace, but a remarkable unhurried briskness. One realized how superb an orchestra it is that can charge through an allegro movement without stumbling, missing notes, or even seeming hurried. But Maestro Leinsdorf did not hesitate to discipline the orchestra as he went along, insisting that a section diminish its sound to his diminuendo gesture, or else turning to repeat the gesture to them until they complied.

One supposes we will all become accustomed to calling Dvorak's Second Symphony his Seventh (recognizing the earlier works which were at first not numbered) but how will we ever learn to call the New World Symphony the Ninth instead of the Fifth?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
FEB 1 1963

Leinsdorf And 'Boston' Here Feb. 18

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting will perform the final concert of this season's popular Bushnell Symphony Series at 8:15 p.m. Monday, Feb. 18. For his upcoming program, the second to be played here this season by the big Boston ensemble, Dr. Leinsdorf has selected works by Haydn, Kodaly and Dvorak.

A limited number of tickets for the concert is now available at the Bushnell box office.

Opening the program will be Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 52. Composed about the year 1773 while Haydn was at Eisenstadt, this is the last of a series of symphonies written during what has been called the "Storm and Stress" period of the musician's life.

A suite from Zoltan Kodaly's comic opera "Hary Janos" will follow. Janos is a national figure in Hungarian folklore, who holds a high place in the childlike imagination of the peasantry. Kodaly's opera, from which a series of excerpts are taken, describes mighty doings of the braggart Janos, including his capture of the heart of a queen, and his complete victory over Napoleon's army. Under a mask of gayety the music is sometimes of poignant sadness. It relies heavily on Hungarian folk melodies.

Dvorak's Symphony in D minor, No. 7, is the final work on the Boston program. Although one of the greatest of Dvorak's creations, this work has been heard only infrequently in the Bushnell series.

PHILADELPHIA BULLETIN
D. 718,173
FEB 17

PHILADELPHIA.

107

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
D. 7'8 '73 S. 698,358

FEB 17 1963

Leinsdorf on His First Visit Here as Boston Conductor

By JAMES FELTON

THE FIRST performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of its new permanent musical director, Erich Leinsdorf, will take place this Tuesday evening at the Academy of Music.

Sponsored by the Philadelphia Forum, the concert will consist of two works selected by Mr. Leinsdorf—Dvorak's Seventh Symphony, and the autobiographical tone-poem by Richard Strauss, "A Hero's Life" ("Ein Heldenleben").

"I think you'll have to cast about quite a bit to find out when the Dvorak Seventh was last played in Philadelphia," said Leinsdorf during a discussion the other day of his new career with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"You might compare the matter of programming to the three legs of a stool. The standard works, such as 'Ein Heldenleben,' must be maintained. Then, of course, there are always the new works. However, the Dvorak belongs to the third leg—neglected works which are worth hearing every so often."

Since assuming command of the venerable Boston Symphony last fall, the wiry, energetic maestro has made changes and taken more than one important musical stride forward. He has filled four vacancies among the players and placed the Orchestra on risers for better sound-effect. There has been no drastic deviation from the polices of his predecessor, Charles Munch. The players replaced were due to be pensioned. As for the Orchestra, "I simply adore it!" Leinsdorf exclaimed.

• • •

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY gave its first concert in 1881 and since then has flourished under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, Pierre Monteux and Munch, among many podium luminaries. Fifty-one-year-old Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, is losing no time furthering the tradition. He already has presented the world premiere of a piano concerto by Samuel Barber and a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees. The Orchestra has made six recordings under his direction (including the Mahler First Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra). Five additional recordings are to be made this season.

"I am happy to say that our subscription concerts are sold out completely," Leinsdorf reported. He sees no reason why the repertoire should now take on a tinge more Viennese than French. "After all, the only consideration is good music, regardless of nationality," he said. Nor has he abandoned his well-known enthusiasm for using every moment of available rehearsal time for shaping selected works toward perfection.

ERICH LEINSDORF
He conducts the Boston Symphony at the Academy of Music on Tuesday night.

Leinsdorf's career dates from a 150-mile hike he once took to Salzburg to regale the late Bruno Walter with his budding talents. Walter not only welcomed him but sent him to Arturo Toscanini for additional experience at conducting operas. Later, until 1943, Leinsdorf solidified his career as leader of the Wagnerian wing of the Metropolitan in New York.

• • •

ALTHOUGH he directed the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras in the interim, Leinsdorf returned sporadically to the New York City Opera and the Metropolitan (where he served again from 1957 to 1961).

"I've often been asked whether I intend to continue doing opera in concert version, now that I'm in Boston," he said, "but I don't see any need for that. Opera has its place on the stage, while there's plenty of good instrumental music reserved for the orchestra."

As for super-sized works, Leinsdorf is reserving them for performance at Tanglewood, where he will begin his first season this summer as permanent director. Recently he has been living in Brookline, Mass., with his wife and five children, but he will probably vacation in the Berkshires, where Eugene Ormandy is a neighbor. "We will live close by," said Leinsdorf. "Of course, I admire Mr. Ormandy and his work with your marvelous orchestra."

Mr. Leinsdorf's admirers will recall his incandescent reading of Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan" last summer at the Robin Hood Dell.

"Ein Heldenleben" has been considered to be the German composer's supreme expression in this particular musical form, calling for the utmost of Leinsdorf's fiery zest for precision mixed with energy. The Dvorak Seventh Symphony represents the dynamic maestro's penchant for airing works of which he himself said, "Perhaps a work not of the highest calibre but certainly deserving a performance from time to time." One of those times will be this Tuesday evening.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 283,195 SAT. 106,930

FEB 9 1963

Boston Symphony At Academy Feb. 19

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its only Philadelphia concert of the season Tuesday, Feb. 19, at the Academy of Music.

The Forum-sponsored program will mark the first time the Boston Symphony has appeared here under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

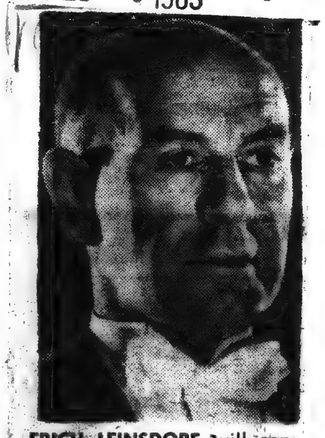
THE INQUIRER
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.
FEB 17 1963

W E D
CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApitol 6-4044

Erich Leinsdorf conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philadelphia Forum concert at the Academy of Music Tuesday evening.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 283,195 SAT. 106,930

FEB 16 1963



ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in Philadelphia Tuesday night at the Academy.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
D. 283,195 SAT. 106,930

FEB 8 1963

Boston Symphony At Academy Feb. 19

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a concert Tuesday, Feb. 19, at the Academy of Music under auspices of the Philadelphia Forum.

It will be the group's first appearance here under the baton of its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf. He has programmed Dvorka's Symphony No. 7 in D Minor and Strauss' Ein Heldenleben.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 611,942 S. 1,004,122

FEB 3 1963

Leinsdorf conducts Bostonians here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its annual concert at the Academy of Music on Feb. 19, presented by the Philadelphia Forum.

The date marks the Bostonians' first appearance here under the baton of its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, who has programmed Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor, and Strauss' Ein Heldenleben.

106

Pennsylvania GUARDIAN, March 1, 1963

ON MUSIC

The Boston Symphony—Memorable Performance

by Charles Wesley Evers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at the Academy, Thursday evening, February 19. This single appearance of the season was a presentation of Emma Feldman's Philadelphia Forum Series. The weather on that Thursday evening was vile — cold and blustery. Snow that had begun falling that afternoon had changed to rain. Prospective listeners from suburban areas stayed at home; they unfortunately missed a significant performance by a distinguished musical organization.

NOT A BRICKLAYER

In assuming the post of musical director in 1962, Erich Leinsdorf said, "I am particularly happy in coming here not as a bricklayer. I don't have to build. I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization. This enables me to make music without having to go and collect the materials." Leinsdorf, as does his orchestra, has a long and honored tradition. That he is equal to the task before him is indisputable. He is a master musician who gives deep thought to the music he performs. He wants perfection in music; "This is no problem in Boston", Leinsdorf told me.

The orchestra performed only two works, the Symphony in D minor of Dvorak and Richard Strauss' Ein Heldenleben. These are not the best works of either composer. The Dvorak symphony is loosely joined, especially in the first two movements. The material Dvorak used is almost trivial, although he does wonders with it orchestrally. The Strauss tone poem is a long-winded work. It putters about and loses momentum in the middle sections. The length does not justify the amount of material with which Strauss had to work. Ein Heldenleben is, therefore, frequently redundant and underdeveloped.

MET THE CHALLENGE

Because of the inherent weaknesses of both works, a skillful conductor is needed to perform them effectively. Discontinuities must be made continuous. Uninteresting passages must sparkle. The total effect must be one of which the listener would say: "My, what a wonderful work this is."

Erich Leinsdorf met the challenge of both works masterfully. The first movement of the Dvorak symphony (Allegro Maestoso) was taken a little quicker than customary, but with no loss of majesty. The faster tempo helped preserve continuity and gave tremendous rhythmic pulse. The Scherzo was given a broad and spacious treatment, not rushed. Every detail was present. Cross rhythms were illuminated by decisive accents and were never blurred nor muddled. The final Allegro drove incessantly to the maestoso ending. The total effect of this performance was near breathtaking.

Ein Heldenleben was all but sung by Mr. Leinsdorf. And the orchestra performed a little slower than usual perhaps, but heroically. The demoniac solo violin part was admirably handled by Joseph Silverstein. The performance was wholly colorful. Technical difficulties of this work, a formidable challenge for any orchestra, were telling near the end with several dropped notes by the horns. In a great performance, however, a few missed notes are unimportant.

KEPT AT THE ZENITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who assumed the directorship in 1924, remained for twenty-five years. Under Dr. Koussevitzky the Boston Symphony flourished. In 1934 he and his orchestra were invited to Tanglewood to partake in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Two years later Tanglewood was offered to Koussevitzky and the orchestra as a gift. In 1940 Koussevitzky established the Berkshire Music Center — the fulfillment of a long ambition. The Center now offers young musicians from all over the world summers of unique musical experiences.

Charles Munch succeeded Koussevitzky in 1949. Munch followed admirably the traditions which the great conductors before him had built. He did much to keep the orchestra's musical perfection at the zenith. In addition, Munch expanded the orchestra's touring facilities. Under his direction, the Boston Symphony gave the first concerts of any American orchestra in the Soviet Union in 1956.

The venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra, established by Henry Lee Higginson in 1881, gave its first concert in October of that year in Boston Music Hall. Concerts continued in this hall until 1900 when the orchestra moved to the newly completed Symphony Hall, now its permanent home, owned and operated by the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony has had a succession of great conductors. George Henschel conducted its first concert in 1881 and remained as music director until 1884. Wilhelm Gericke, who had "no friends" in the orchestra while conducting, had two tenures — the last ending in 1906. He was succeeded by Karl Muck, who also had two tenures. Under Muck the orchestra made its first successful acoustical recordings — poor by today's standards but worthy of preservation. Unfortunately, these recordings do not reproduce qualities of Muck's orchestra which those who heard it testify it had. Muck retired in 1918 and was replaced by Henri Rabaud for one year. Pierre Monteux then took the post until 1924.

Boston Symphony Shows Rare Talent in Concert

B 25

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA
Wednesday, Feb. 20, 1963

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

Presented by the Philadelphia Forum, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared in concert at the Academy of Music, last night. The distinguished symphonic group sported a new-look since it was last here, for it now finds itself under the persuasive and dynamic baton of Erich Leinsdorf, its new permanent conductor.

Philadelphia has been familiar with the Boston Symphony for many years and has unreservedly admired its refined and precise playing. Last night found no reason to alter this attitude. The Boston players are a superb lot and in Mr. Leinsdorf they possess one of the most vital and well balanced musicians of our day.

During the intermission one heard several comparisons made between this orchestra and that orchestra. Such comparisons are of little value. Every major orchestra has its characteristics and its own particular assets. It should suffice to state that the Boston Symphony is one of today's elite orchestral groups.

Mr. Leinsdorf offered only two compositions last night, works of considerable length and contrast. These were Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D Minor, and Richard Strauss' tone-poem, "Ein Heldenleben."

The Dvorak symphony is very rarely played and while it is not a very subtle or sensitive work —certainly not comparable to the famous "New World"—there is no reason why it should not be heard oftener.

The Dvorak 7th is a headlong nationalistic expression as well as music very much of its period. It is tuneful and forthright with alternating dramatic and lyric passages of considerable expansion. The poco meno mosso of the Scherzo seems like the most evocative section of the symphony which also boasts a strong and rhythmical finale. Mr. Leinsdorf played the symphony for all it was worth and it proved a likeable experience.

The conductor's account of Strauss' autobiographical tone-poem was an altogether superb manifestation of symphonic power and finish. Mr. Leinsdorf kept it moving, nor did he allow the fundamentally beautiful last measures to become cloying. Here he was aided by the very fine solo violin of concertmaster Siverstein. "Ein Heldenleben," which can on occasion sound thick, massive, and pretentious, on this occasion received a virtuoso performance fully in keeping with the reputation of this great orchestra.

In Mr. Leinsdorf the Boston Symphony possesses a conductor of uncanny discernment, a man whose temperament is the outgrowth of both heart and intellect.

PHILA. INQUIRER
FEBRUARY 20, 1963
27

At the Academy

Ovation Is Given Boston Visitors, New Conductor

By SAMUEL L. SINGER

Just two masterworks comprised the program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Tuesday evening under its new permanent conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. The playing of these two—Dvorak's Symphony in D minor and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" — earned a rare ovation from the Philadelphia Forum audience in the Academy of Music.

Leinsdorf, already admired here from previous appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra, at Robin Hood Dell, and with the Metropolitan Opera, is the 13th conductor of the Bostonians. He succeeded Charles Munch, who conducted for 13 seasons following the quarter-century reign of Serge Koussevitzky.

LEAVES LITTLE DOUBT

The concert left no doubt that the Boston is one of the very finest orchestras in the land. It used to be that Koussevitzky's ensemble vied with the Philadelphians for the title of No. 1 orchestra; Leinsdorf may re-establish a closer rivalry. His is a group well balanced in all choirs, disciplined, responsive, technically superb. It plays with tonal splendor.

The Dvorak Symphony came as a distinct novelty; it had not been heard here within memory. A victim of the numbers game, it is generally known as No. 2; as it was the second of Dvorak's nine symphonies to be published, but it was the seventh in point of composition (including two unpublished ones).

No. 5 — the famous "New World"—is actually No. 9. And the D-minor deserves to be bracketed with it as to merit. It is written with a sure hand, bursting with melody, solidly constructed. Lasting just a bit more than half an hour, it is not overwritten in the least.

BACKGROUND REFLECTED

While Dvorak probably used no folk themes here, the brightly melodic work reflects the composer's Bohemian background. The lilting, buoyant scherzo is notable for its folk feeling. The other movements have many deeply moving passages of emotional intensity.

Like the Dvorak, Strauss' autobiographical tone poem was played to the hilt. This work, which demands a virtuoso orchestra, in half a dozen connected episodes details the hero's youthful vigor, his critics, his Beloved (voiced by the concertmaster's violin), his battles, works of peace and life's fulfillment. Written in the composer's early thirties, it quotes from numerous previous Strauss tone poems, notablyy "Don Juan."

Young Joseph Silverstein, who succeeded Richard Burgin as concertmaster this season (Burgin continues as associate conductor), eloquently played the Hero's Beloved, although there have been more tonally seductive interpretations. The entire orchestra conveyed the turbulence and final calm of this many-splendored score.

NEW YORK

109

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

APR 1963

Erich Leinsdorf came to town in February with two new American works in his pocket for the Boston Symphony's concerts at Philharmonic Hall on February 20 and 22: Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra (Lorin Hollander, soloist) and Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto (Henryk Szeryng, soloist).

The Dello Joio was commissioned by the Baldwin Piano Company and has just been recorded by Messrs. Leinsdorf and Hollander. It seemed to make an immediate hit with the audience, and it is a splendid pianistic vehicle. Though uneven in style and construction, the piece is nonetheless very much alive. The beginning of the Fantasy, with its noncommittal tonality and disjunct lines, makes one expect something adventurous from Mr. Dello Joio. But after the opening passages the piece settles into a comfortable neoromanticism, broken only by some Gershwinesque stretches in the Variations. Despite some very familiar sounds, the piece is tightly made; it does not lack profile and should appeal to virtuoso-minded pianists. Certainly, Lorin Hollander seemed to enjoy playing it, and his bravura performance brought roars of approval from the audience.

The Lees Concerto impressed me as an important new work. It is characterized by a wonderfully unfettered and businesslike realization of its formal schemes through virile melodic material. The piece has enormous drive, and, in addition to solid musical substance, it provides a field day for a virtuoso like Henryk Szeryng. The first movement is a broad Andante, with some fresh, unexpected dynamic surprises, and the final movement bristles with equally fresh rhythmic ideas.

The second-movement Adagio is something of a puzzler. On first hearing, it did not seem to have as natural and logical a flow as the neighboring movements, and Mr. Lees' thinking at times seemed a bit uncertain. But the section must be accorded a strong benefit of the doubt, for this knotty movement might well clarify itself on repeated hearings.

The performance must have warmed the composer's heart. Szeryng, certainly one of today's great instrumentalists, threw himself bodily and spiritually into the piece, eliciting an ovation from the audience after the brilliant finale.

On February 20, the Bostonians opened with Haydn's remarkable Symphony No. 52 and closed with Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben." The brooding Haydn Symphony was incisively played; and, if you happen to like "Ein Heldenleben," Leinsdorf's sweeping performance left little to be desired. The remaining fare on February 22 included a beautiful performance of the Dvorak Seventh or if you will, Second Symphony, and a no-holds-barred one of Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite, which for pure bravura was the orchestra's finest playing of the week.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 432,953

MAR 30 1963

ON Friday evening I went to Philharmonic Hall to hear the Boston Symphony, under Erich Leinsdorf, and was rewarded with some very crisp and precise performances. That of Richard Strauss's Ein Heldenleben was, in fact, a bit too crisp for my taste, since it lacked the pliancy and fervor that are the composition's due. But Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony got a reading of great elegance and polish, and so did William Schuman's Third Symphony, which was cheered from the gallery. This Third Symphony is, in my opinion, by far the finest that Mr. Schuman has written. It shows evidences of that rare ingredient of contemporary symphonic music—talent—and it has the virtues of clarity and coherence, which are possibly the result of a preoccupation with classical forms, like the passacaglia and fugue. I did not exactly throw my hat in the air at its conclusion—that would have been going too far—but I endured it happily, and found in it many episodes of technical invention that were stimulating to the mind.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 1 1963

Hollander Premieres Dello Joio 'Fantasy'

Erich Leinsdorf conducted a new American work for the Boston Symphony's concert at Philharmonic Hall, February 20: Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for piano and orchestra (Lorin Hollander, soloist). The work was commissioned by the Baldwin Piano Company and has just been recorded by Messrs. Leinsdorf and Hollander. It seemed to make an immediate hit with the audience, and it is a splendid pianistic vehicle.

The piece, though uneven in style and construction, is nonetheless very much alive. The beginning of the Fantasy, with its noncommital tonality and disjunct lines, makes one expect something adventurous from Mr. Dello Joio. But after the opening passages, the piece settles into a comfortable neoromanticism, broken only by some Gershwinesque stretches in the Variations. Despite the many very familiar sounds in this piece, it is tightly made, does not lack profile, and should appeal to virtuoso-minded pianists. Certainly Lorin Hollander seemed to enjoy playing it, and his bravura performance brought roars of approval from the audience.

The program opened with Haydn's remarkable Symphony No. 52, and closed with Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben." The brooding Haydn Symphony was incisively played, and if you happen to like "Ein Heldenleben," Mr. Leinsdorf's sweeping performance left little to be desired. —J.A.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

MAR 1 1963

Boston Symphony Plays Works By Lees, Dvorak and Kodaly

Of the three works on the Boston Symphony program, at Philharmonic Hall, on Feb. 22, one was new to New York. That was the Violin Concerto by Benjamin Lees. It was played by Henryk Szeryng. Otherwise, Erich Leinsdorf conducted Dvorak's Seventh Symphony—or Second, depending on which numbering you use; but anyway, it was the familiar D minor—and the "Háry János" Suite by Kodaly.

Mr. Lees is an American who currently teaches at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. He is 39 years old and only recently has his music started making headway. The times may be right for his style of composition. For basically, he's a romantic, and there are indications that romanticism is coming back.

A traditionalist, Mr. Lees belongs to no school as such. His Violin Concerto, composed about five years ago, belongs in the spirit of such twentieth century concertos as the Sibelius, the Walton and the Prokofieff G minor. That is, it reflects a personality without throwing the nineteenth century overboard, and it is traditional without being imitative or derivative.

The concerto has three movements and runs about 25 minutes. All that is orthodox, and so is the composer's treatment of the solo violin, which has a good deal of old-fashioned virtuoso display, especially in the last movement. The first two movements appear to be the best. There is a good deal of honest lyric impulse, and the thematic material is worked out with skill and conviction. Mr. Lees has a very strong feeling for melody. The last movement whizzes along, and also gives the violinist a complicated series of rhythms and bowings, but here the music has less to say.

In any case, this is a dignified, honest piece of music with a profile of its own. It received a fine performance. One did not have to be familiar with the work to realize that Mr. Szeryng was playing with obvious control, strength, purity of sound and a lyric approach. He's a magnificent instrumentalist. Both he and the composer took several bows.

Mr. Leinsdorf is following the latest vogue in his numbering of the Dvorak symphonies. Five were published during the composer's lifetime. In recent years four manuscript symphonies came to light and have been published in Czechoslovakia. Hence the new series of numbers.

The D minor received a superbly disciplined performance — clear in ensemble, rich in sound, idiomatic in approach. Mr. Leinsdorf inclined toward the dramatic impulses of the music, underlining them with sharp thrusts. The only place one could quibble was in the third movement, where the violins overly dominated the enchanting counter theme in the winds. Or could this have been the result of the famous acoustics in Philharmonic Hall? Elsewhere though, things sounded normal. Can Mr. Leinsdorf ever be prevailed upon to program the D major Dvorak, a lovely work that is seldom heard?

Harold C. Schonberg
Music Critic, The N.Y. Times

NEW YORK

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
APR 1963

Erich Leinsdorf came to town in February with two new American works in his pocket for the Boston Symphony's concerts at Philharmonic Hall on February 20 and 22: Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for Piano and Orchestra (Lorin Hollander, soloist) and Benjamin Lees' Violin Concerto (Henryk Szeryng, soloist).

The Dello Joio was commissioned by the Baldwin Piano Company and has just been recorded by Messrs. Leinsdorf and Hollander. It seemed to make an immediate hit with the audience, and it is a splendid pianistic vehicle. Though uneven in style and construction, the piece is nonetheless very much alive. The beginning of the Fantasy, with its noncommittal tonality and disjunct lines, makes one expect something adventurous from Mr. Dello Joio. But after the opening passages the piece settles into a comfortable neoromanticism, broken only by some Gershwinesque stretches in the Variations. Despite some very familiar sounds, the piece is tightly made; it does not lack profile and should appeal to virtuoso-minded pianists. Certainly, Lorin Hollander seemed to enjoy playing it, and his bravura performance brought roars of approval from the audience.

The Lees Concerto impressed me as an important new work. It is characterized by a wonderfully unfettered and businesslike realization of its formal schemes through virile melodic material. The piece has enormous drive, and, in addition to solid musical substance, it provides a field day for a virtuoso like Henryk Szeryng. The first movement is a broad Andante, with some fresh, unexpected dynamic surprises, and the final movement bristles with equally fresh rhythmic ideas.

The second-movement Adagio is something of a puzzler. On first hearing, it did not seem to have as natural and logical a flow as the neighboring movements, and Mr. Lees' thinking at times seemed a bit uncertain. But the section must be accorded a strong benefit of the doubt, for this knotty movement might well clarify itself on repeated hearings.

The performance must have warmed the composer's heart. Szeryng, certainly one of today's great instrumentalists, threw himself bodily and spiritually into the piece, eliciting an ovation from the audience after the brilliant finale.

On February 20, the Bostonians opened with Haydn's remarkable Symphony No. 52 and closed with Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben." The brooding Haydn Symphony was incisively played; and, if you happen to like "Ein Heldenleben," Leinsdorf's sweeping performance left little to be desired. The remaining date on February 22 included a beautiful performance of the Dvorak Seventh or if you will, Second Symphony, and a no-holds-barred one of Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite, which for pure bravura was the orchestra's finest playing of the week.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 432,853
MAR 30 1963

On Friday evening, I went to Philharmonic Hall to hear the Boston Symphony, under E[illegible], and was rewarded with some precise performances. Strauss's [illegible] was, in fact, a bit too cas[illegible] lacked the pliancy and [illegible] the composition's due. But Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony got a reading of great elegance and polish, and so did William Schuman's Third Symphony, which was cheered from the gallery. This Third Symphony is, in my opinion, by far the finest that Mr. Schuman has written. It shows evidences of that rare ingredient of contemporary symphonic music—talent—and it has the virtues of clarity and coherence, which are possibly the result of a preoccupation with classical forms like the passacaglia and fugue. I did not exactly throw my hat in the air at its conclusion—that would have been going too far—but I endured it happily, and found in it many episodes of technical invention that were stimulating to the mind.

—Winthrop Sargeant

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAR 1 1963

Hollander Premieres Dello Joio 'Fantasy'

Erich Leinsdorf conducted a new American work for the Boston Symphony's concert at Philharmonic Hall, February 20: Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy and Variations for piano and orchestra (Lorin Hollander, soloist). The work was commissioned by the Baldwin Piano Company and has just been recorded by Messrs. Leinsdorf and Hollander. It seemed to make an immediate hit with the audience, and it is a splendid pianistic vehicle.

The piece, though uneven in style and construction, is nonetheless very much alive. The beginning of the Fantasy, with its noncommittal tonality and disjunct lines, makes one expect something adventurous from Mr. Dello Joio. But after the opening passages, the piece settles into a comfortable neoromanticism, broken only by some Gershwinesque stretches in the Variations. Despite the many very familiar sounds in this piece, it is tightly made, does not lack profile, and should appeal to virtuoso-minded pianists. Certainly Lorin Hollander seemed to enjoy playing it, and his bravura performance brought roars of approval from the audience.

The program opened with Haydn's remarkable Symphony No. 52, and closed with Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben." The brooding Haydn Symphony was incisively played, and if you happen to like "Ein Heldenleben," Mr. Leinsdorf's sweeping performance left little to be desired. —J.A.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
MAR 1 1963

Boston Symphony Plays Works By Lees, Dvorak and Kodaly

Of the three works on the Boston Symphony program, at Philharmonic Hall, on Feb. 22, one was new to New York. That was the Violin Concerto by Benjamin Lees. It was played by Henryk Szeryng. Otherwise, Erich Leinsdorf conducted Dvorak's Seventh Symphony—or Second, depending on which numbering one uses; but anyway, it was the familiar D minor—and the "Háry János" Suite by Kodaly.

Mr. Lees is an American who currently teaches at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. He is 39 years old and only recently has his music started making headway. The times may be right for his style of composition. For basically, he's a romantic, and there are indications that romanticism is coming back.

A traditionalist, Mr. Lees belongs to no school as such. His Violin Concerto, composed about five years ago, belongs in the spirit of such twentieth century concertos as the Sibelius, the Walton and the Prokofieff G minor. That is, it reflects a personality without throwing the nineteenth century overboard, and it is traditional without being imitative or derivative.

The concerto has three movements and runs about 25 minutes. All that is orthodox, and so is the composer's treatment of the solo violin, which has a good deal of old-fashioned virtuoso display, especially in the last movement. The first two movements appear to be the best. There is a good deal of honest lyric impulse, and the thematic material is worked out with skill and conviction. Mr. Lees has a very strong feeling for melody. The last movement whizzes along, and also gives the violinist a complicated series of rhythms and bowings, but here the music has less to say.

In any case, this is a dignified, honest piece of music with a profile of its own. It received a fine performance. One did not have to be familiar with the work to realize that Mr. Szeryng was playing with obvious control, strength, purity of sound and a lyric approach. He's a magnificent instrumentalist. Both he and the composer took several bows.

Mr. Leinsdorf is following the latest vogue in his numbering of the Dvorak symphonies. Five were published during the composer's lifetime. In recent years four manuscript symphonies came to light and have been published in Czechoslovakia. Hence the new series of numbers.

The D minor received a superbly disciplined performance, clear in ensemble, rich in sound, idiomatic in approach. Mr. Leinsdorf inclined toward the dramatic impulses of the music, underlining them with fiery fervor. The only place one could quibble was in the third movement, where the violins overly dominated the enchanting counter theme in the winds. Or could this have been the result of the famous acoustics in Philharmonic Hall? Elsewhere, though, things sounded normal. Can Mr. Leinsdorf ever be prevailed upon to program the D major Dvorak, a lovely work that is seldom heard?

Harold C. Schonberg
Music Critic, The N.Y. Times

110 BROOKLYN

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900

FEB 14 1963

Erich Leinsdorf

Boston Symphony Orchestra Here Next Thursday Eve

In the fourth of its five Brooklyn appearances this season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Thursday evening, Feb. 21.

With Erich Leinsdorf conducting the orchestra, guest soloist Henryk Szeryng will perform Benjamin Lees' Concerto for Violin. It will be the first time the Lees work will have been performed in New York.

Also on the program are the "Hary Janos Suite" by Kodaly and Dvorak's Symphonic work, Opus 70.

The Dvorak Symphony is commonly known as the Second. However, a recent recodification of his symphonies, by musicologists, has renumbered it No. 7.

Composer Lees, whose concerto will be performed here for the first time, is on the faculty of the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore. The concerto dates from 1958, during a period when Mr. Lees spent eight years in Europe on a Guggenheim fellowship.

Violinist Szeryng has appeared with the Boston Symphony on several occasions. The Polish-born artist made his American debut in 1957.

The concert begins at 8:30 in the Academy's music hall, 30 Lafayette Ave. Tickets range from $3 to $4.50. Mail orders are being accepted. A stamped, self addressed envelope must accompany a check or money order.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 1963

Boston Symphony Orchestra

In the fourth concert of its Brooklyn Academy of Music season, Feb. 21, the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf offered Dvorak's Seventh Symphony in D minor, (which used to be called the Second and still is in many places). The accurate but strait-laced reading invited comparisons with Leonard Bernstein's dramatically free-wheeling version some weeks earlier; one vote here for the best of both worlds! Violinist Henryk Szeryng then presented a concerto by Benjamin Lees, exhibiting stunning mastery in the highly idiomatic vehicle which allowed him scarcely a moment's respite throughout its three movements. On first hearing the conservative, well-wrought opus appeared somewhat too homogeneous in texture and material. A rather un-Hungarian "Hary Janos" Suite (Kodaly) concluded this refreshingly unconventional program.—H.F.

NOTES: Since mid-February the Berkshire Music Center has been holding auditions for admission in various cities, following a nationwide schedule running through April 27. Established in 1940 by the Boston Symphony as a center where young musicians could continue their professional training under the guidance of eminent artists from all parts of the world, the Center will be under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf this summer. For this twenty-first session, to be held at Tanglewood from June 30 to Aug. 25, Mr. Leinsdorf has broadened the scope of several departments to enhance the training of the individual performer.

27

At the Academy

Ovation Is Given Boston Visitors, New Conductor

By SAMUEL L. SINGER

Just two masterworks comprised the program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Tuesday evening under its new permanent conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. The playing of these two—Dvorak's Symphony in D minor and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" — earned a rare ovation from the Philadelphia Forum audience in the Academy of Music.

Leinsdorf, already admired here from previous appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra, at Robin Hood Dell, and with the Metropolitan Opera, is the 13th conductor of the Bostonians. He succeeded Charles Munch, who conducted for 13 seasons following the quarter-century reign of Serge Koussevitzky.

LEAVES LITTLE DOUBT

The concert left no doubt that the Boston is one of the very finest orchestras in the land. It used to be that Koussevitzky's ensemble vied with the Philadelphians for the title of No. 1 orchestra; Leinsdorf may re-establish a closer rivalry. His is a group well balanced in all choirs, disciplined, responsive, technically superb. It plays with tonal splendor.

The Dvorak Symphony came as a distinct novelty; it had not been heard here within memory. A victim of the numbers game, it is generally known as No. 2; as it was the second of Dvorak's nine symphonies to be published, but it was the seventh in point of composition (including two unpublished ones).

No. 5 — the famous "New World"—is actually No. 9. And the D-minor deserves to be bracketed with it as to merit. It is written with a sure hand, bursting with melody, solidly constructed. Lasting just a bit more than half an hour, it is not overwritten in the least.

BACKGROUND REFLECTED

While Dvorak probably used no folk themes here, the brightly melodic work reflects the composer's Bohemian background. The jilting, buoyant scherzo is notable for its folk feeling. The other movements have many deeply moving passages of emotional intensity.

Like the Dvorak, Strauss' autobiographical tone poem was played to the hilt. This work, which demands a virtuoso orchestra, in half a dozen connected episodes details the hero's youthful vigor, his critics, his Beloved (voiced by the concertmaster's violin), his battles, works of peace and life's fulfillment. Written in the composer's early thirties, it quotes from numerous previous Strauss tone poems, notablyy "Don Juan."

Young Joseph Silverstein, who succeeded Richard Burgin as concertmaster this season (Burgin continues as associate conductor), eloquently played the Hero's Beloved, although there have been more tonally seductive interpretations. The entire orchestra conveyed the turbulence and final calm of this many-splendored score.

110 BROOKLYN

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,900

FEB 14 1963

Erich Leinsdorf

Boston Symphony Orchestra Here Next Thursday Eve

In the fourth of its five Brooklyn appearances this season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Thursday evening, Feb. 21.

With Erich Leinsdorf conducting the orchestra, guest soloist Henryk Szeryng will perform Benjamin Lees' Concerto for Violin. It will be the first time the Lees work will have been performed in New York.

Also on the program are the "Hary Janos Suite" by Kodaly and Dvorak's Symphonic work, Opus 70.

The Dvorak Symphony is commonly known as the Second. However, a recent recodification of his symphonies, by musicologists, has renumbered it No. 7.

Composer Lees, whose concerto will be performed here for the first time, is on the faculty of the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore. The concerto dates from 1958, during a period when Mr. Lees spent eight years in Europe on a Guggenheim fellowship.

Violinist Szeryng has appeared with the Boston Symphony on several occasions. The Polish-born artist made his American debut in 1957.

The concert begins at 8:30 in the Academy's music hall, 30 Lafayette Ave. Tickets range from $3 to $4.50. Mail orders are being accepted. A stamped, self addressed envelope must accompany a check or money order.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 1963

Boston Symphony Orchestra

In the fourth concert of its Brooklyn Academy of Music season, Feb. 21, the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf offered Dvorak's Seventh Symphony in D minor, (which used to be called the Second and still is in many places). The accurate but strait-laced reading invited comparisons with Leonard Bernstein's dramatically free-wheeling version some weeks earlier; one vote here for the best of both worlds! Violinist Henryk Szeryng then presented a concerto by Benjamin Lees, exhibiting stunning mastery in the highly idiomatic vehicle which allowed him scarcely a moment's respite throughout its three movements. On first hearing the conservative, well-wrought opus appeared somewhat too homogeneous in texture and material. A rather un-Hungarian "Hary Janos" Suite (Kodaly) concluded this refreshingly unconventional program.—H.F. "New York"

NOTES: Since mid-February the Berkshire Music Center has been holding auditions for admission in various cities, following a nationwide schedule running through April 27. Established in 1940 by the Boston Symphony as a center where young musicians could continue their professional training under the guidance of eminent artists from all parts of the world, the Center will be under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf this summer. For this twenty-first session, to be held at Tanglewood from June 30 to Aug. 25, Mr. Leinsdorf has broadened the scope of several departments to enhance the training of the individual performer.

27

At the Academy

Ovation Is Given Boston Visitors, New Conductor

By SAMUEL L. SINGER

Just two masterworks comprised the program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Tuesday evening under its new permanent conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. The playing of these two—Dvorak's Symphony in D minor and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben"—earned a rare ovation from the Philadelphia Forum audience in the Academy of Music.

Leinsdorf, already admired here from previous appearances with the Philadelphia Orchestra at Robin Hood Dell, and with the Metropolitan Opera, is the 13th conductor of the Bostonians. He succeeded Charles Munch, who conducted for 13 seasons following the quarter-century reign of Serge Koussevitsky.

LEAVES LITTLE DOUBT

The concert left no doubt that the Boston is one of the very finest orchestras in the land. It used to be that Koussevitzky's ensemble vied with the Philadelphians for the title of No. 1 orchestra; Leinsdorf may re-establish a closer rivalry. His is a group well balanced in all choirs, disciplined, responsive, technically superb. It plays with tonal splendor.

The Dvorak Symphony came as a distinct novelty; it had not been heard here within memory. A victim of the numbers game, it is generally known as No. 2, as it was the second of Dvorak's nine symphonies to be published, but it was the seventh in point of composition (including two unpublished ones).

No. 5 — the famous "New World"—is actually No. 9. And the D-minor deserves to be bracketed with it as to merit. It is written with a sure hand, bursting with melody, solidly constructed. Lasting just a bit more than half an hour, it is not overwritten in the least.

BACKGROUND REFLECTED

While Dvorak probably used no folk themes here, the brightly melodic work reflects the composer's Bohemian background. The lilting, buoyant scherzo is notable for its folk feeling. The other movements have many deeply moving passages of emotional intensity.

Like the Dvorak, Strauss' autobiographical tone poem was played to the hilt. This work, which demands a virtuoso orchestra, in half a dozen connected episodes details the hero's youthful vigor, his critics, his Beloved (voiced by the concertmaster's violin), his battles, works of peace and life's fulfillment. Written in the composer's early thirties, it quotes from numerous previous Strauss tone poems, notably "Don Juan."

Young Joseph Silverstein, who succeeded Richard Burgin as concertmaster this season (Burgin continues as associate conductor), eloquently played the Hero's Beloved, although there have been more tonally seductive interpretations. The entire orchestra conveyed the turbulence and final calm of this many-splendored score.

SHOWTHROUGH

SUNDAY 5

111

Fifth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, at 3:00 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7 in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS ..... "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
FEB 23 1963

At Symphony Hall

Boston Symphony Schedules Prokofiev Program Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this Friday-Saturday (March 1 at 2:15, March 2 at 8:30) in Symphony Hall will consist of three compositions by Prokofiev, performed in observance of the tenth anniversary of the composer's death. The program will open with the "Classical" Symphony, which will be followed by the first Boston performance of the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra with Samuel Mayes, Principal Cello of the Orchestra, as soloist. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the program with the Symphony No. 6.

Tuesday evening (Feb. 26, 8:30) the Orchestra was in Sanders Theatre for the fifth Cambridge concert of the season. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program consisting of Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 and "Ein Heldenleben" by Strauss. This concert will be telecast live to the Boston area by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

The fifth rehearsal of the sold out Open Rehearsals will be held tonight at 7:30 in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Next Sunday (Mar. 3) afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its annual Pension Fund concert.

Continued on Page Three

Symphony Hall

Continued from Page One

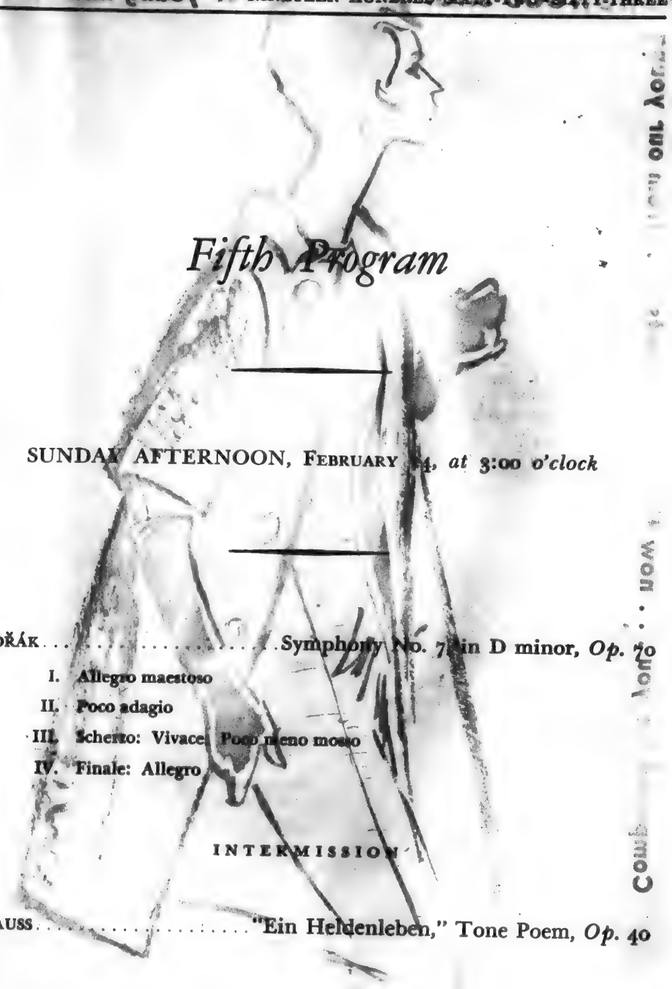
Arthur Rubinstein will be guest artist. All tickets for this special concert have been sold.

At 6 p.m. next Sunday (Mar. 3) Joseph Miranda will present their recital in the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series.

SHOWTHROUGH

SUNDAY 5

EIGHTY-SEVENTH SEASON · NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO-SIXTY-THREE



Fifth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, at 3:00 o'clock

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 7 in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace — Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS . . . . . "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2070, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Leader-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2070, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
FEB 23 1963

At Symphony Hall

Boston Symphony Schedules Prokofiev Program Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this [illegible] Saturday (March [illegible] March 7 at 8:30) in Symphony Hall will consist of three compositions by Prokofiev performed in observance of the tenth anniversary of the composer's death. The program will open with the "Classical" Symphony, which will be followed by the first Boston performance of the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra with Samuel Mayes, Principal Cello of the Orchestra, as soloist. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the program with the Symphony No. 6.

Tuesday evening (Feb. 23, [illegible] the Orchestra was in Sanders Theatre for the fifth Cambridge concert of the season. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program consisting of Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 and "Ein Heldenleben" by Strauss. This concert will be telecast live to the Boston area by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

The fifth rehearsal of the sold out Open Rehearsals will be held tonight at 7:30 in Symphony Hall. These rehearsals are for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Next Sunday (Mar. 3) afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its annual Pension Fund concert.

Continued on Page Three

Symphony Hall

Continued from Page One

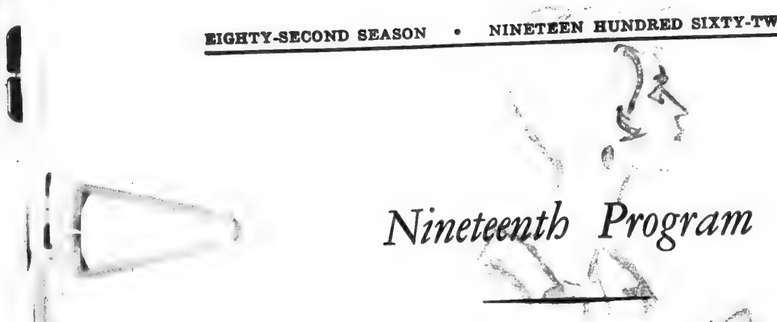
Arthur Rubinstein will be guest artist. All tickets for this special concert have been sold.

At 6 p.m. next Sunday (Mar. 3) Joseph Mirenda will present their recital in the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series.

SHOWTHROUGH

112 BOSTON 19

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE



Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 2, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV . . . . . "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25

I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale

PROKOFIEV . . . . Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125

I. Andante
II. Allegro giusto
III. Andante con moto; Allegretto; Allegro marcato
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111

I. Allegro moderato
II. Largo
III. Vivace

SOLOIST
SAMUEL MAYES

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1161]

SHOW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

MAR 1963 Buffalo

ORCHESTRA

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

On March 1 and 2, there will be a double first for Boston, when two Prokofiev works have their premieres: the Overture to War and Peace and the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra with Samuel Mayes as soloist. Later in the month, on March 15 and 16, William Schuman's "Undertow," a balletic journey into the Freudian deep, will also receive its first Boston performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

MAR 2 1963

Music Review

Brilliant Prokofiev By Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Erich Leinsdorf conducting, played an all-Prokofiev program Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall and will repeat it tonight at 8:30. The works: "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25; Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125, with Samuel Mayes as soloist; Symphony No. 6 in E-flat minor, Op. 111.

By MARGO MILLER

Serge Prokofiev who died 10 years ago this coming Tuesday was treated to a commemorative concert Friday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Russian composer had been piano soloist, guest conductor in Boston and had delivered his Fourth Symphony on commission for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra. But it was not these "family ties" that prompted programming of an all-Prokofiev concert: it was his glorious music. Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the cello soloist, Samuel Mayes, joined for a brilliant afternoon.

Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra received its first Boston performance, and long overdue it was. It is a leisurely work, the long melodies lovingly presented, varied, restated, interrupted by others rushing from the composer's pen and paraded again. There are pockets of solemnity, as in the opening four-note figure deep down in the orchestra, and playful bits among winds, or plucked strings.

But the work is a true concerto in the weight it gives to the solo part. Prokofiev did not rely on cadenzas spotted here and there. A long passage of scales, double and triple stopping is provided for the soloist in the second movement.

The cello is seldom silent as its voice glides over the orchestra. Samuel Mayes moved from the first cello desk to the apron of the stage as soloist. Wrapped around his instrument, he brought forth great warmth of tone. One hopes that the concerto will be repeated with Mayes in other years.

Symphonies opened and closed the program. How kind Prokofiev was to strings and the Boston's section to him. Their sheen was given full play in the slow movements of both the "Classical" and the Sixth symphonies. Yet Prkofiev injects astringent sounds often enough so that the sonorities can never be dismissed as merely pretty or light. The frothy gallops of both symphonies' final movements are undercut by the relentless motion forward. The music doesn't float, it moves.

The succinct (some 11 minutes) "Classical" Symphony demands and got an elegance of performance. There were some Mannheimesque fortes and pianissimos from the plucked strings in the incredibly taut second movement. Nowhere was Leinsdorf's control over the orchestra and theirs over the music more apparent than in this enchanting work.

The Sixth Symphony was a marked contrast in orchestral color and texture to the opening piece, being considerably darker and thicker, but is as songful as the cello concerto in its long melodic lines. The principal song falls to the woodwinds in the first movement, sharing it with the strings in the last.

Altogether an afternoon of melodic musings, wit (not to mention foolery: the musicbox harp motif in the Sixth), and luscious sounds.

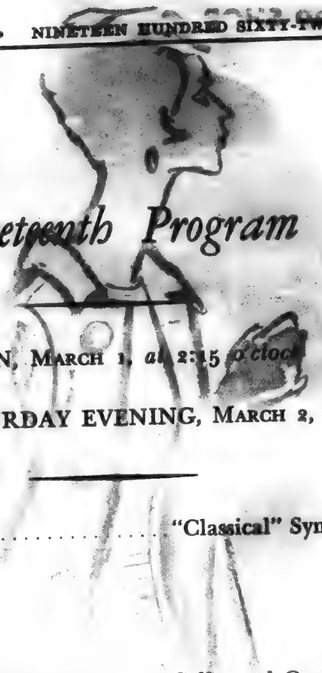
Next week the program will consist of Brahms' German Requiem with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Joan Carlyle, soprano, and Herman Prey, baritone, and "Faust's Death" from Schumann's "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" with Prey, Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, and small chorus.

STAGE IN TOWN

SHOWTHROUGH

112 BOSTON Jan 19 V

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE



Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 2, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV . . . . . "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25

I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125

I. Andante
II. Allegro giusto
III. Andante con moto; Allegretto; Allegro marcato

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111

I. Allegro moderato
II. Largo
III. Vivace

SOLOIST
SAMUEL MAYES

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 100,000

MAR 1963

ORCHESTRA

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Symphony Hall

On March 1 and 2, there will be a double first for Boston, when two Prokofiev works have their premieres: the Overture to War and Peace and the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra with Samuel Mayes. Later in the month, on March 15 and 16, William Schuman's "Undertow," a balletic journey into the Freudian deep, will also receive its first Boston performance.

Evening
BOSTON
Circ. 141,000

MAR 2 1963

Music Review

Brilliant Prokofiev By Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Erich Leinsdorf conducting, played an all-Prokofiev program Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall and will repeat it tonight at 8:30. The works: "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25; Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125, with Samuel Mayes as soloist; Symphony No. 6 in E-flat minor, Op. 111.

By MARGO MILLER

Serge Prokofiev who died 10 years ago this coming Tuesday was treated to a commemorative concert Friday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Russian composer had been piano soloist, guest conductor in Boston and had delivered his Fourth Symphony on commission for the 50th anniversary of the orchestra. But it was not these "family ties" that prompted programming of an all-Prokofiev concert: it was his glorious music. Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra and the cello soloist, Samuel Mayes, joined for a brilliant afternoon.

Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra received its first Boston performance, and long overdue it was. It is a leisurely work, the long melodies lovingly presented, varied, restated, interrupted by others rushing from the composer's pen and paraded again. There are pockets of solemnity, as in the opening four-note figure deep down in the orchestra, and playful bits among winds, or plucked strings.

But the work is a true concerto in the weight it gives to the solo part. Prokofiev did not rely on cadenzas spotted here and there. A long passage of scales, double and triple stopping is provided for the soloist in the second movement.

The cello is seldom silent as its voice glides over the orchestra. Samuel Mayes moved from the first cello desk to the apron of the stage as soloist. Wrapped around his instrument, he brought forth great warmth of tone. One hopes that the concerto will be repeated with Mayes in other years.

Symphonies opened and closed the program. How kind Prokofiev was to strings and the Boston's section to him. Their sheen was given full play in the slow movements of both the "Classical" and the Sixth symphonies. Yet Prkofiev injects astringent sounds often enough so that the sonorities can never be dismissed as merely pretty or light. The frothy gallops of both symphonies' final movements are undercut by the relentless motion forward. The music doesn't float, it moves.

The succinct (some 11 minutes) "Classical" Symphony demands and got an elegance of performance. There were some Mannheimesque fortes and pianissimos from the plucked strings in the incredibly taut second movement. Nowhere was Leinsdorf's control over the orchestra and theirs over the music more apparent than in this enchanting work.

The Sixth Symphony was a marked contrast in orchestral color and texture to the opening piece, being considerably darker and thicker, but is as songful as the cello concerto in its long melodic lines. The principal song falls to the woodwinds in the first movement, sharing it with the strings in the last.

Altogether an afternoon of melodic musings, wit (not to mention foolery: the musicbox harp motif in the Sixth), and luscious sounds.

Next week the program will consist of Brahms' German Requiem with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Joan Carlyle, soprano, and Herman Prey, baritone, and "Faust's Death" from Schumann's "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" with Prey, Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, and small chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
MAR 7 196

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: ALL-PROKOFIEV PROGRAM

Mr. Leinsdorf's programs for his debut season, with fairly negligible exceptions, have featured stalwart works in the great Central European tradition, with frequent sandwichings of a contemporary piece. Last week-end he made a radical departure and presented an all-Prokofiev concert. The occasion was the tenth anniversary of the composer's death and the works played included the "Classical" Symphony, the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, with Samuel Mayes as soloist, and the Symphony No. 6.

Mr. Leinsdorf should have stuck to the mettlesome formula that has served him so well for the first three quarters of the season. There are precious few composers whose music reflects that universality of experience and maintains that level of interest sufficient to carry the burden imposed by a whole program of their works and Sergei Prokofiev is not one of them. Hence, although the conducting and orchestral execution were admirable and Mr. Mayes' playing nothing short of sensational, I am constrained to report that the results amounted to rather a bore.

The piece-de-resistance was the Symphony-Concerto. This work has an interesting history. In its first evocation it was a straight cello concerto whose first American performance was given in 1940 by Piatagorsky with the orchestra here. Years later Prokofiev reworked it, in consultation with the celebrated Russian cellist Rostropovich, and called it the Second Concerto, with the dedication to Rostropovich. After Prokofiev's death, it was published as the "Symphony-Concerto." It probably served as a show case for the formidable talents of Rostropovich for a long while.

The piece is very long and occasionally there shows up in it patches of the bite and savagery and transparent orchestral scoring which were Prokofiev's hallmark. On the whole, though, it is a paste job of turn-of-the-century coffee-house music and a very badly organized paste job at that. Indeed, the last movement is completely superfluous, and many members of the audience applauded, quite logically, at the end of the middle movement. The Kabalevsky Concerto, another contemporary Russian work, which Mr. Mayes introduced here in 1953 and repeated in 1959, was likewise as banal as they come, but it at least had no pretense to being of the twentieth century and had the virtue of taut construction.

Mr. Mayes certainly played his heart out and I doubt if Rostropovich himself or any other cellist, alive or departed, could have done better. His tone was large and warm and sang out over the orchestra in all registers in a way cellos seldom succeed in doing. The display of technical virtuosity will give even Symphony Hall audiences something to remember for many, many a concert to come.

The Sixth Symphony, written a few years before the recast Symphony-Concerto suffers from much of the same incurable disease. That in it which is simple and forceful quickly disintegrates into the dull and trivial, and before many measures the listener, as with so many Russian scores, ancient or modern, is oppressed with the weight of heavy orchestration and plodding rhythm. Somewhere about the middle of the Fifth Symphony Prokofiev's jauntiness, adventurousness, wit and intensity forsook him — the rare patches always excepted — and his output grew to be indistinguishable from that of Shostakovitch.

Mr. Leinsdorf in his first visit here two years ago gave a memorable performance of that very Fifth, and with the Sixth again proved his mastery of this composer's idiom. The conception was as cohesive, clean-limbed and interesting as the uneven and sprawling score permitted, the orchestra very much alive. Impressive credentials, yes, but even these cannot confer viability upon the lifeless.

This week we are very much back to Central Europe and will hear the first performances at these concerts both of Schumann's "Faust's Death" from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" and Brahms' Requiem. The soloists will be Joan Carlyle, soprano, and Hermann Prey, baritone, assisted by the Harvard and Radcliffe Choral forces, Elliott Forbes, conductor. Mr. Leinsdorf presides.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
MAR 2 196

The Symphony

Brilliant Concert Honors Prokofiev

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Prokofiev, which falls on Tuesday next, was honored at Symphony yesterday: a memorial in the most profound sense, the living testament of genius, an occasion for rejoicing.

We have not heard much Prokofiev literature at Symphony Hall during the posthumous decade. He is a composer presumably uncongenial to the outlook of Dr. Munch. Restoring him to the program in this manner, Erich Leinsdorf fills a gap and reasserts the importance of a towering figure who, with Stravinsky, constitutes the summit of Russian music in this century.

Rich and Varied

Indeed, so rich, varied and brilliant was yesterday's musical experience, that one cannot emphasize a single aspect without distorting the pattern. The 'cellist, Samuel Mayes, once again emerging from the orchestra to assume the soloist's role, delivered a transcendent virtuoso performance of the incredibly imposing Symphony-Concerto, the last of the master's completed scores in the concerto form.

The "Classical" Symphony requires no innate description, and as a familiar work, balanced the others while declaring the originality of Mr. Leinsdorf's design. Then the Sixth Symphony conveyed the shock of recognition of a neglected masterpiece.

The music was played here in 1951; but that it should not have been revived since is astonishing. This, of course, was the Symphony that loosed on Prokofiev the dialectical wrath of the Communist Party's Central Committee, forcing him to recant his formalistic ways.

Equally Strange

The political fury is equally strange, for the work is easily accessible, melodic, open, in fact, all the things Communist art professes to admire.

But it is not trite. Perhaps that is its besetting sin. One can only conclude that Prokofiev, using the disguise of simplicity, transformed his personal tragedy under a system inimical to musical freedom, into the symbols of art. Perhaps Communist officials were not deaf to the somber and sullen thread through the lyrical invention of the symphony.

In any case, the first movement is exceedingly dark, shaded by the English horn, and rich in brooding melancholy. The largo, following on an andante molto, increases the emotional intensity. As a slow movement, however, it also contains a broad, flowing melodic impetus from trombones, bassoons and 'cellos, which create one of the most seraphic pages since Bruckner.

The final Vivace has the rhythmic athleticism and pungent turn of phrase of Prokofiev asserting his dazzling full powers.

Brevity of Idiom

The brevity of the idiom is at a distant remove, yet the comparison with Bruckner is not inaccurate. The Sixth breathes the mood of Prospero's farewell to his magic that we encounter in the ultimate passages of the Bruckner Ninth. Afterward Prokofiev could only make depleted gestures of affirmation. If it is not an inopportune suggestion, a Boston Symphony recording would be welcome, for the playing, Mr. Leinsdorf and Prokofiev are on the same splendid level.

And Mr. Mayes, too. His capacities as a soloist have been illustrated many times, never as authoritatively. The Concerto is a remarkable piece, and its exploitation of the 'cello is an absolute test.

Leaps on the fingerboard, from the lowest tones to the highest harmonics of the A string were accomplished by Mr. Mayes with a nimble accuracy. Strumming pizziccati, arco, the bouncing bow, lightning-fast passagework and stops received the treatment of a superlative technician.

Wholly Musical

The result, though, was wholly musical, noble in tone and conception, the kind of vital, robust statement that derives from an artist whose means are subordinate to a musical end.

The brusque, rhapsodic and soaring score holds continual freshness; and the shouts of the audience as Mr. Mayes appeared amid his standing colleagues, amply testified to the tremendous sweep of his interpretation.

There is scant space to comment on the "Classical" in such a resplendent program, but Mr. Leinsdorf's wonderfully proportioned and deftly-paced traversal captured the clear and crystalline order of the traditional elements without sacrificing the brisk modernity of the line.

It was an exhilarating homage; and recalled that the Soviets suppressed the news of Prokofiev's death, a day after Stalin's, so that the event would not overshadow the departure of the tyrant.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf presents Schumann's "Faust's Death," and Brahms's German Requiem, Op. 45, with The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society under the direction of Elliot Forbes.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 19th program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Samuel Mayes, 'cello, the soloist. The all-Prokofiev program will be repeated tonight at 8:30. Classical" Symphony, Op. 25; Symphony Concerto, for 'Cello and Orchestra, Op. 5; Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 1.

114

PENSION FUND CONCERT.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
MAR 3 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
MAR 3 1963

HUB BENEFIT TODAY

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform its 129th Pension Fund concert today before a sellout audience. Pianist Arthur Rubinstein will be soloist in concertos by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 3 1963

Rubinstein

Artur Rubinstein will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon at 3 for the orchestra's 129th Pension Fund Concert. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Beethovan's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, to open the program. Rubinstein will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1. All tickets for the concert have been sold.

OZONE PARK, N.Y.
QUEENS CO. POST
W. 4,000
MAR 27 1963

RUBINSTEIN PERFORMS WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY By Tommy Lomax

The great pianist, Arthur Rubinstein, performing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard over WQXR on Saturday, March 30, from 8:05 to 10 p.m. The guest appearance of Mr. Rubinstein with the Boston, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will include performances of the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 5, known as the Emperor Concerto. WQXR's broadcast of the concert as performed in Boston's Symphony Hall will be in FM Stereo. Martin Bookspan will be the commentator.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
FEB 28 1963

Society: Symphony Hall All Sold Ou For Sunday's Pension Concer

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Exemplifying all the remarkable traditions that make the Boston Symphony Orchestra one of the most wonderful in the world, the 129th Pension Fund Concert will be played by the orchestra on Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Boston's most distinguished audience will join the orchestra in welcoming back a longtime friend famed pianist Artur Rubinstein who was first soloist with the orchestra in 1921 and has played with Pierre Monteux, Dr. Koussevitzky and Dr. Munch.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
MAR 4 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
MAR 4 1963

Music Review

Rubinstein, Orchestra Win Ovation at Concert

By MARGO MILLER

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave its 129th Pension Fund Concert Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program: Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Op. 72, and Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 5 in E-flat major Op. 73, "Emperor," and Tchaikovsky's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 1 in B-flat minor, Op. 23. Artur Rubinstein was soloist in both concerts.

Artur Rubinstein, pulsing with music, sat down to the piano Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, and poured forth two concertos that earned him an ovation from the capacity audience come to benefit the Boston Symphony's Pension Fund.

As Rubinstein took his bows with Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, he mentioned time and time again to the orchestra to share in the applause, for it had been an afternoon of the closest cooperation between ensemble and soloist.

Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto received the grand treatment from Rubinstein. The elan which he gave to its tricky rhythms, the limpid quality he imparted to the second movement's andantino, and the fire evident in the sweep of the last—these things are what turn a familiar concerto into something, if not new, certainly fresh and altogether marvelous.

Of Beethoven's Concerto No. 5, the crystalline notes Rubenstein can produce were eminently suited to the rondo; and a lovely game between piano and orchestra it was. But of all parts of the concerto the adagio was the most satisfying.

Here, and in parts of the first movement, Rubenstein lingered ever so slightly on notes that shape the mood, creating a kind of yearning that was poignancy itself.

The bridge between the second and last movements, which makes one wonder if the piano will ever launch itself from the orchestra's sustaining note into the romp of the rondo, was, however, not done with the tension the situation should have.

Leinsdorf opened the concert with Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3. It has been played many times this season, but never so far has there been a performance so tender and so warm.

To list the ingredients of this performance would be to blunt the enjoyment. Suffice to say that Leinsdorf's conception and the orchestra's playing were sublime.

Rubinstein Soloist With Symphony

Pianist at Ease in Two Concertos

By Louis Chapin

Artur Rubinstein spent much of Sunday afternoon in the company of Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony playing two mammoth piano concertos—Beethoven's "Emperor" and the popular Tchaikovsky—for the orchestra's 129th Pension Fund Concert. The occasion, marking Mr. Rubinstein's first appearance with the orchestra since 1958, was a dazzling and sold-out success.

Either one of the major works might be considered plenty of concerto for one pianist, and programmatically they do elbow each other. But neither these Pension Fund programs nor this pianist are prone to small plans. Indeed, Mr. Rubinstein and his jubilant Symphony Hall audience seemed quite ready, if invited, to carry on with an extra concerto or two.

Beethoven's, which followed a shining realization of the same composer's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, is a vehicle for Rubinstein mastery on almost every level, and it is unlikely that any other pianist brings to it such suave and exquisite calculations—as in the lightly rocking chords of the first movement.

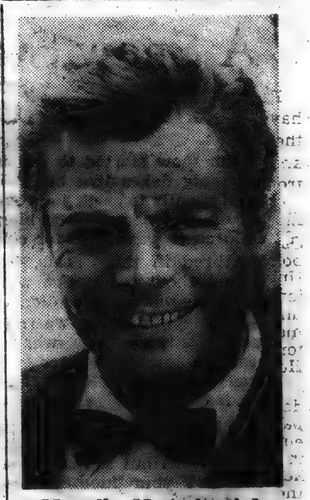
At certain points Mr. Rubinstein, with his magical insight, transcends calculation; but there are one or two consequential places where he does not. His handling of the introductory arpeggios, for instance, is characteristically brilliant, yet the cadential propositions into which each leads do not use the power given to them. As a result, we pass into the work through an arch less big than it can be.

Yet in general the nuances, the control, the coloration of this pianist flow into his music as abundantly as ever. And in the Tchaikovsky piece, which has drawn I wonder how many people into other and better-wearing music, Mr. Rubinstein's sense of proportionate strengths and melodic shapes—and above all his elegant rubato—seems practically definitive. It is strange, incidentally, not to find his name in the Schwann catalogue's list of 30 extant Tchaikovsky recordings.

No report on this concert would be complete without giving credit to Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra for quite matching Mr. Rubinstein, throughout the afternoon, in precision and brilliance. Beethoven's "Leonore," actually, was the dramatic equal of anything else that happened; and Mr. Rubinstein's gratitude for the accompaniment he received later was plainly much more than routine.

It is hard to imagine any more gracious invitation being given a pianist than that of Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute, tendering him Tchaikovsky's second-movement melody. And it is hard to imagine a more gracious acceptance.

This was, after all, an afternoon of magnanimous give and take.



Marcello Mastroianni has been nominated for an Academy Award for his performance in 'Divorce — Italian Style,' currently on the screen at the Park Square Cinema.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

MAR 4 1963

115

Artur Rubenstein, Boston Symphony; a Fine Combo

By MCLAREN HARRIS

[illegible] Pension Fund Concert [illegible] Boston Symphony yesterday at Symphony Hall saw the return of pianist Artur Rubinstein, making his first appearance in over a decade with the orchestra. A warm welcome was extended by all present.

Two others in absentia—Beethoven and Tchaikovsky—would surely have done the same.

FUST COMBINED

This was the first combined effort of three of the most powerful forces in today's musical world—Mr. Rubinstein, Mr. Leinsdorf, and the Symphony—and it should not be the last.

There was no hints of an experiment or of a venture toward common grounds of expression; they were totally unnecessary. With a single purpose, both piano and orchestra matched, supported and complemented each other in continuously high degrees of congeniality.

The artistic union was sustained through two works of comparatively uncongenial outlooks. Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto is an edifice of distinct form, a work that is soloistic yet symphonic. The outlines were deftly preserved, through Mr. Leinsdorf's care not to let his ensemble overshadow his partner, and by Mr. Rubinstein's expert pianism, weaving a path in and out of the orchestral substance.

BEETHOVEN'S FINEST

The Adagio is one of Beethoven's finest examples of broad tranquillity, providing a perfect contrast to the drive of the flanking movements. With the orchestra's statements and the piano's answers, phrases were heightened, spread and tapered into an expression of noble feeling.

Then came the abrupt downward slip of a half-step, the furtive anticipations of the Rondo, and with the pianist's lead the music leapt forward in the rollicking motion of the finale.

From the bounding bass lines to the lilting treble notes, Mr. Rubinstein gave pointed emphasis to the rhythmic elements of the movements, motives which do not yield for a moment, even echoed in a whisper by the timpani before the last rushing climax.

RHAPSODIC

From a different standpoint derives Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1. It is truly rhapsodic, even enigmatic in its melodic profusion. Melody was a device with Tchaikovsky; the formalistic ways of thematic development were not for him, by his own indirect admission: he thought Brahms meaningless and dry.

So this concerto, especially the first movement, consists of a series of lyric miniatures, broken by numerous tempo changes. Only the finale achieves the unity of theme and tempo that characterizes the technique of Tchaikovsky's capable predecessors.

But Melody has its definite merits, and wherever it appeared (everywhere), it was kindled to greater warmth by poetic readings from the pianist and his company.

OPENER

The program's opener, Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, was no less resplendent in sound than its followers. Mr. Leinsdorf's direction brought forth the darkness of the beginning, a mood of impatience in the allegro and its final joyous release, thoroughly renewing the pleasures in an oft-played overture.

The effect of this concert was nearly electric; on the final chord of the Tchaikovsky the ovation began, and soon everyone stood cheering in an awesome tribute before a formidable array of music masters: Messrs. Rubinstein and Leinsdorf, the Symphony, Beethoven—oh, well, and Tchaikovsky too.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at Symphony Hall yesterday in its 129th Pension Fund Concert. Artur Rubinstein was piano soloist. The program:

"Leonore" Overture No. 3, Op. 72 — Beethoven
Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat, Op. 73, "Emperor" — Beethoven
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B♭ flat, Op. 23 — Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4202
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 3 1963

Pension Fund Concert

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A tradition within a tradition—today's Pension Fund Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—dates back 129 Boston years and is still attended by the most distinguished audience in the city.

Many of today's patrons represent the third generation in one family to enjoy the privilege of hearing, and helping support, one of the world's greatest orchestras.

Like the orchestra's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and the renowned season at Tanglewood, this afternoon's concert is "sold out" and will be one more memorable occasion in a music history that began with the founding of the Boston Symphony by Henry Lee Higginson in 1881.

SYMPHONY TRUSTEE Henry Laughlin of Concord attends the Friday concert.

Globe Photos by Ollie Noonan Jr.

TALKING MUSIC at Symphony intermission—Mrs. Arthur Brooks Jr. of Cambridge, and Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Pelfrey Perkins of Chestnut St.

FAMILIAR PROFILES at Friday Symphony—Mrs. Allan Forbes and Maxim Karolik of Boston.

FRIDAY SUBSCRIBER Mrs. William T. Aldrich greets friends as she arrives for the concert.

BOSTON 20.

17

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON · NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . "Faust's Death," from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust"

Faust: HERMANN PREY, Baritone
Mephistopheles: JOSHUA HECHT, Bass-Baritone
Chorus of Lemures
(First performance at these concerts)

BRAHMS . . . . . A German Requiem, for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 45

I. Chorus
II. Chorus
III. Baritone Solo and Chorus

INTERMISSION

IV. Chorus
V. Soprano Solo and Chorus
VI. Baritone Solo and Chorus
VII. Chorus
(First performance in this series)

JOAN CARLYLE, Soprano HERMANN PREY, Baritone
HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1225]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAR 1 1963

Symphony Schedule

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform works by Schumann and Brahms on its Friday-Saturday program March 8 and 9.

Erich Leinsdorf will follow Robert Schumann's "Faust's Death" with Brahms' "A German Requiem" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

Soprano Joan Carlyle will make her American debut at the concerts in the "German Requiem." She is singing here at Mr. Leinsdorf's invitation. She sang the "requiem" in 1959 for the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Soloists in the performance of "Faust's Death" will be baritone Hermann Prey, as Faust, and bass-baritone Joshua Hecht as Mephistopheles. The Chorus of Lemures will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of Elliot Forbes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
MAR 2 1963

Joan Carlyle, soprano, will make her United States debut with the Boston Symphony in the Brahms Requiem at the weekend concerts of March 8 and 9, with an open rehearsal Thursday night, March 7, at 7:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 3 1963

Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present two works not previously heard at these concerts on Friday and Saturday: Robert Schumann's "Faust's Death," from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust," and "A German Requiem" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

Soloists in the performance of "Faust's Death" will be Hermann Prey, baritone, as Faust, and Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, as Mephistopheles. The Chorus of Lemures will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliott Forbes, conductor.

Joan Carlyle, soprano, and Hermann Prey will be soloists in the "German Requiem" by Brahms. The Harvard and Radcliffe singers will again provide the chorus.

On Thursday evening at 7:30 Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra at the sixth Open Rehearsal. This series, which has been sold out by season subscription, is for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Other concerts this week include:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 9 1963

Music Review
Brahms' Requiem Sung By Harvard-Radcliffe

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave a concert Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall and will repeat it tonight at 8:30 p.m. The program: "Faust's Death" from Schumann's "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" with Hermann Prey, baritone, as Faust; Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, as Mephistopheles; a chorus from the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society singing the Chorus of Lemures; and Brahms's German Requiem, Op. 45, with the full HGC–RCS, Prey and Joan Carlyle, soprano.

By MARGO MILLER

Two choral works on death and salavation made up the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The "Faust's Death" portion of Schumann's "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" depicts a man betrayed by the forces of evil. Brahmn's German Requiem is an affirmative of God's triumph over death and man's salvation through Him.

In programming these two works, one over the other, as it were, Erich Leinsdorf set up a kind of medieval tympanum — those sculpted scenes over church doors which show the damned writhing, the living in attitudes of prayer and the saved gathered to the Heavenly Host. And the conductor had craftsmen every bit as good as the music with which to work.

The massed forces of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society sang the Requiem with fervor. At other times, perhaps, their voices have sounded fresher, but their spirit is always willing.

The full choral sound, in the few passages in which Brahms unleashed the voices, is solid and handsome. The chorus is agile enough to produce those throbbing one note, loud-soft swells in the second movement. And they are generally carefull to phrase properly. Diction and attack were first rate, sure signs that the chorus is secure in the music.

And what music it is! Brahms' Requiem, on Biblical texts from his Lutheran Bible, pulses with life. Its effects are made quietly but nonetheless profoundly. Tempos are generally in the andante range, but the music moves relentlessly forward often in triple meter, at other times carried by the sweep of a melody or the excitement of a fugue. The solo parts, weaving in and other of choral comment, have moments of great beauty and were well sung by baritone Hermann Prey and soprano Joan Carlyle.

Leinsdorf was in fine form. His was a masterful variation of those gentle tempos, enlivened by his detail to musical accents which propel the work.

Schumann's "Faust's Death," receiving its first performance (as did the Brahms) in the Friday-Saturday series, is a pleasant piece. A moment of goulish humor comes when the Chorus of Lemures digs Faust's grave. The Harvard and Radcliffe voices were unbearably cheerful here. Prey sang Faust's aria on his projected meadowlands with great warmth, and the bearded bass-baritone Joshua Hecht was nicely villanous as Mephisopheles.

BOSTON 20.

17

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON · NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO · SIXTY-THREE

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . . "Faust's Death," from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust"

Faust: HERMANN PREY, Baritone
Mephistopheles: JOSHUA HECHT, Bass-Baritone
Chorus of Lemures
(First performance at these concerts)

BRAHMS . . . . . A German Requiem, for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 45

I. Chorus
II. Chorus
III. Baritone Solo and Chorus

INTERMISSION

IV. Chorus
V. Soprano Solo and Chorus
VI. Baritone Solo and Chorus
VII. Chorus
(First performance in this series)

JOAN CARLYLE, Soprano HERMANN PREY, Baritone
HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1225]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAR 1 1963

Symphony Schedule

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform works by Schumann and Brahms on its Friday-Saturday program March 8 and 9.

Erich Leinsdorf will follow Robert Schumann's "Faust's Death" with Brahms' "German Requiem" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

Soprano Joan Carlyle will make her American debut at the concerts in the "German Requiem." She is singing here at Mr. Leinsdorf's invitation. She sang the "requiem" in 1959 for the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Soloists in the performance of "Faust's Death" will be baritone Hermann Prey as Faust, and bass-baritone Joshua Hecht as Mephistopheles. The Chorus of Lemures will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of Elliot Forbes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
MAR 2 1963

Joan Carlyle, soprano, will make her United States debut with the Boston Symphony in the Friday afternoon at the weekend concerts of March 8 and 9, with an open rehearsal Thursday night, March 7, at 7:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 3 1963

Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present two works not previously heard at these concerts on Friday and Saturday: Robert Schumann's "Faust's Death," from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust," and "A German Requiem" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

Soloists in the performance of "Faust's Death" will be Hermann Prey, baritone, as Faust, and Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, as Mephistopheles. The Chorus of Lemures will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor.

Joan Carlyle, soprano, and Hermann Prey will be soloists in the "German Requiem" by Brahms. The Harvard and Radcliffe singers will again provide the chorus.

On Thursday evening at 7:30 Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra at the sixth Open Rehearsal. This series, which has been sold out by season subscription, is for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Other concerts this week include:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 9 1963

Music Review

Brahms' Requiem Sung By Harvard-Radcliffe

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave a concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall and will repeat it tonight at 8:30 p.m. The program included "Faust's Death" from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" by Schumann, with Hermann Prey, baritone, as Faust, Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, as Mephistopheles, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society singing the chorus of Lemures; and Brahms' German Requiem, Op. 45, with the HGC-RCS, Prey and Joan Carlyle, soprano.

By MARGO MILLER

Two choral works on death and salavation made up the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The "Faust's Death" portion of Schumann's "Scenes from Goethe's Faust" depicts a man betrayed by the forces of evil. Brahmn's German Requiem is an affirmative of God's triumph over death and man's salvation through Him.

In programming these two works, one over the other, as it were, Erich Leinsdorf set up a kind of medieval tympanum — those sculpted scenes over church doors which show the damned writhing, the living in attitudes of prayer and the saved gathered to the Heavenly Host. And the conductor had craftsmen every bit as good as the music with which to work.

The massed forces of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society sang the Requiem with fervor. At other times, perhaps, their voices have sounded fresher, but their spirit is always willing.

The full choral sound, in the few passages in which Brahms unleashed the voices, is solid and handsome. The chorus is agile enough to produce those throbbing one note, loud-soft swells in the second movement. And they are generally careful to phrase properly. Diction [illegible] were first rate, [illegible] that the chorus is [illegible] music.

And [illegible] is! Brahms' Requiem, on Biblical texts from his Lutheran Bible, pulses with life. Its effects are made quietly but nonetheless profoundly. Tempos are generally in the andante range, but the music moves relentlessly forward often in triple meter, at other times carried by the sweep of a melody or the excitement of a fugue. The solo parts, weaving in and out of choral comment, have moments of great beauty and were well sung by baritone Hermann Prey and soprano Joan Carlyle.

Leinsdorf was in fine form. His was a masterful variation of those gentle tempos, enlivened by his detail to musical accents which propel the work.

Schumann's "Faust's Death," receiving its first performance (as did the Brahms) in the Friday-Saturday series, is a pleasant piece. A moment of goulish humor comes when the Chorus of Lemures digs Faust's grave. The Harvard and Radcliffe voices were unbearably cheerful here. Prey sang Faust's aria on his projected meadowlands with great warmth, and the bearded bass-baritone Joshua Hecht was nicely villanous as Mephistopheles.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
MAR 14 1968

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
MAR 9 1968

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BRAHMS' REQUIEM AT BSO

A mass is the most solemn service of the Roman Catholic rites. It represents the commemoration and mystical repetition of the sacrifice of that religion's Saviour.

A requiem by definition is the text of the mass for the dead. Traditionally it includes the Requiem, Kyrie, several stanzas of Dies Irae, and the other words of the Latin liturgical text, with a solo quartet joining the chorus and instrumental forces.

Brahms' "German Requiem" is certainly not a mass, nor, in its basic affirmation of the eternity of life, is it really a requiem. What Brahms did was to compile a number of Biblical quotations in his own language and set them to music as a deeply personal, almost wholly non-liturgical statement of his own bereavement arising out of his mother's and Schumann's deaths. The work is in seven movements denominated only by their Italian or German tempo markings, and instead of the usual quartet a solo soprano joins one and a solo baritone joins two movements respectively.

The German Requiem is not only unique in its conception but in terms of sheer musical value certainly must rank among Brahms' noblest creations. Yet, too secular for ordinary concert purposes, it is apt to be performed only in comparatively off-beat circumstances. At Symphony here, for example, its only previous renditions had been at several Pension Fund concerts. The mounting of this masterpiece with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Hermann Prey, baritone, and Joan Carlyle, soprano, constituted a very special occasion.

There are so many notable moments in it. One especially recalls the restrained coloring yet warmth and gentleness of the "Blessed are they that mourn" first movement; the opening theme of the second movement, which comes from the unpublished symphony Brahms wrote during Schumann's final illness; the surprise and freshness of the "rains" motif that comes after the grave beginnings of "For all flesh is as grass," the broad and simple choral melodies running throughout against the intricate instrumental figurations; the tenderness, subtlety and airiness of the "Ye now are sorrowful" movement with the soprano solo. One could catalogue the beauties of the score far beyond what can be encompassed in a short review. This is not a work with the immediate and hot dramatic quality of the Berlioz and Verdi Requiems, but it possesses an emotional range, a power of understatement and consummately skillful contrapuntal writing wholly free of self-conscious archaism that place it very much in the greatest tradition of this ancient form.

The quality of performance did justice to the greatness of the work. This was the first piece which the Harvard-Radcliffe group ever performed with the orchestra, way back in the early days of Dr. Koussevitsky and Professor Davidson, and the present concert was a credit to the distinguished tradition of colloboration that has continued ever since. A listener could easily catch that air of unmistakable excitement, snap and projection among singers and orchestra which marks a performance which has caught fire. This was so even though the young sopranos were having their troubles in making the high leaps fairly consistently throughout the first, second and final movements. As for the soloists, Mr. Prey brought sureness and competence to his task, and Miss Carlyle's voice was distilled and pure.

I might add that while Mr. Leinsdorf had the Harvard-Radcliffe people on stage he decided to mount the first performance at these concerts of Schumann's "Faust's Death" from "Scenes from Goethe's Faust." Mr. Prey sang Faust and was joined by Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone, in the role of Mephistopheles. To date I have yet to encounter anybody who had ever heard of, let alone knew, this work — Grove's doesn't even list it as having been composed—and Mr. Leisdorf certainly deserves kudos for his archaeological skills. But that's about all, for after the arresting trumpet figure that initially summons the spirits of the dead to dig a ditch for Faust, the work grows ever more dreary, and by the time it has run its short course it would take a most devoted Schumann admirer not to regret its undoubted return to its sarcophagus.

This week's sofferings include Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4 "Orpheus," William Schuman's Symphony No. 3 and the Schubert C major Symphony (Posthumous).

The Symphony

Harvard, Radcliffe Join Leinsdorf

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A healthy sense of damnation strikes one as an asset for the composer of a choral requiem. This, Brahms, with his serene and optimistic temperament, conspicuously lacked. Nevertheless, The German Requiem as performed yesterday by The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, achieved a solemn Lenten radiance.

Excellent Balance

The collaboration between Erich Leinsdorf and the student ensemble associated closely with Symphony for generations, showed every sign of extending an admirable tradition.

The choral balance was excellent, the discipline and preparation under Elliot Forbes reflected enviable standards. Textures at diverse dynamic levels held a clarity where, even at pianissimo, the enunciation of the German was crisp, attacks and releases clean, and volume commendable.

Moreover, the Requiem afforded not only an opportunity to hear a strong, well-drilled young group, but Mr. Leinsdorf as choral conductor. No doubt his experience at the Metropolitan stands him in good stead, for the technic constitutes a separate art from the baton procedures of the orchestra.

Shaping and moulding seraphic sounds, the choral conductor faces problems that assert the basic techniques in a different way. He is, after all, dealing directly with the most sensitive of instruments: the human voice. Singers require more warming than instrumentalists. The conducting movements must stress flow rather than the inflexible beat of time.

Full Articulation

Hence there is often a temptation on the part of the choral maestro to revel in nuance, in the production of sensuous phrase. But Mr. Leinsdorf's approach yesterday dealt with the full, clear articulation of The Requiem without long-breathed fermatas, indulgent rubatos and exaggerated tonal contrasts.

It was an account on the slow side—as, indeed the tempi of any score marked with so many "langsams" should be—accenting the majestic curve and grave eloquence of the design.

Save for Mr. Hecht, the baritone, I was far more impressed by the chorus than by the solo work of The Requiem and Schumann's Scenes from "Faust." Joshua Hecht possesses a dramatic baritone of ample size and tonal opulance. His handling of the role of Faust and the baritone passages of The Requiem had ringing power and scrupulous projection and focus.

Mr. Prey should have conveyed more dynamic and ryhthmic subtlety in his Mephistophelas, although he gave a brisk and businesslike performance. His bass-baritone is competently handled, but in the top notes inclined to edginess.

English Soprano

Miss Carlyle, the English soprano, brought an attractive, fluent, small voice to the "Ihr habt nun Traurigkeit," and, in consequence, the passage, one of the cornerstones of The Requiem attained delicacy, consolation, and, alas, inaudibility, too. She was stylishly gowned in a manner I had not associated with Requiem before, but since she is an exceedingly handsome lady, one prefers it to sackcloth.

The German Requiem itself is one of those curious works in which sublimity and dullness intermingle. I would not side with Shaw who believed the only audience who could listen with any equanimity to the full affair was the corpse. (Shaw later recanted the view.) Yet there is no question either that the listener must be willing to endure longeurs as the price of a transcendent experience.

The lengthy years of revision devoted to the score accounts for this, in part; and, I also suspect, Brahms's innate tranquility. The Latin requiem, threatened by the terrors of The Last Judgment, supplies an aesthetic drama not evident here; but one would not willingly sacrifice the tenderness, resignation and calm of Brahms's genius either.

For First Time

Schumann's Scenes are a rarity, and one is glad to hear this music for the first time. Yet it contains only the simalcrum of his powers, which were lyric not theatrical. The dialogue between Faust and the Devil intermittently flashes into epic; however poor, Schumann chose a theme scarcely calculated to the abilities of his then-unstable condition. The Radcliffe Choral Society was lustrous in the guise of Lemures, or nocturnal spirits.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled William Schuman's Symphony No. 3; Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus," and Schubert's posthumous Symphony in C Major.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 20[illegible] program of the 82nd season at Symphony . . . The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society was prepared by Elliot Forbes. Soloists were Hermann Prey, baritone; Joshua Hecht, bass-baritone; and Joan Carlyle, soprano. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

'Faust's Death' from "Scenes From Goethe's Faust" . . . Schumann
A German Requiem, Op. 45, for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra . . . Brahms

SHOWTHROUGH

MONDAY
PROVIDENCE 5

19

Sixth Program

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV.....Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111

I. Allegro moderato
II. Largo
III. Vivace

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS.....“Ein Heldenleben,” Tone Poem, Op. 40

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
MAR 13 1963

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Presents Final Concert of R.I. Series

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf conducted the final concert of the season in the Boston Symphony Orchestra series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the orchestra was soloist in the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra by Prokofiev. His performance was a triumph of virtuosity controlled by musicianship and he was recalled several times.

A colorful and sensitive performance of Dvorak's Seventh Symphony and Beethoven's dynamic "Lenore" Overture No. 3 made up the balance of the program.

Prokofiev's often revised Cello Concerto, in its final form, as we heard it, is an amazing test of technigue for the soloist. Everything in the book is required, not once or twice, but throughout the entire three movements. The few spots when a beautiful singing phrase appeared provided a measuring stick against which to evaluate the brilliance of technical display. Perhaps the cadenza was the most astonishing feat. That is, unless you were to put in first place the beauty of the matching tones from other solo instruments as they set forth their special fragments to supplement the whole beautiful texture of orchestral sound.

You could become completely absorbed in comparing rhythms in the several choirs and suddenly there would be another passage for the cellist which rivalled the preceding one. The orchestra gave most artistic collaboration and of all the enthusiastic applauders, at the close of the performance, its members were in the forefront. It was very impressive to see Erich Leinsdorf put his hand on Samuel Mayes shoulder as they took one of the bows, together. It spoke volumes.

The Dvorak score was full of warmth and melody as well as reminiscent phrases. The musicians were in full accord with Dvorak's ideas and we heard some of the most entrancing orchestral sounds imaginable. Delicacy of shading in all areas of the orchestra and rhythms which were the very essence of youth and the spring of the year left the listener's regretful that this concert closes the season. One's thoughts turned back to recall the many fresh additions Erich Leinsdorf has made to the repertoire of the orchestra; Then in fairness to Beethoven's "Lenore" you had to become enthusiastic about the amazing freshness which this conductor brings to the well worn and familiar works in the repertoire. Even the off-stage trumpet sounded more interesting and as a reward for his fine playing, there was a special bow. This, I have never seen happen before.

It was another indication of the concern for the finest of details which we are coming to learn about as the years progress under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. His first season in Providence has won him many admirers and when the good weather comes and the lawns are green once more we'll all be making plans for Tanglewood. There is really something magnetic about this orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,193
MAR 13 1963

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Cellist Wins Acclaim At Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded its series of concerts in Providence for this season with a superb performance that merited an ovation, prolonged and clamorous, last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Samuel Mayes, cello soloist, was recalled five times after his dazzling performance of Prokofiev's "Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra," and was given a standing ovation by his fellow musicians.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted with the hand of an artist that was discernable in his delicate balance of impulse and restraint. The opening work was Beethoven's "Overture to 'Leonore'" that was played with a perfection of expressive eloquence, lovingly savored and warmly recreated. The off-stage trumpet calls were thrilling.

+++

MR. MAYES SHOWED an amazing facility, precision and tonality in the many challenging technical demands that makes the work hardly tuneful buf sharply exciting. It seems as though Prokofiev strove to exploit to the utmost the extremes of the instrument and the skill of the performer. From the droning bass tones on the low strings, to the eerie soprano of the top tones, the bow unfailingly played them all, now bouncing, now rocking, then racing in high, curving strokes, Mr. Mayes neither missed any nor added one extra. Whenever he had the opportunity to sound a pure tone he uttered it with rich sonority.

+++

IT WAS MUSIC hard to retain — nothing that you could take home with you. There were passages of exquisite melody, but all too few and too brief. They would cease abruptly and then were smothered with tonal and instrumental gymnastics as though the beauty should be erased with the darting, bouncing, rocking bow, pizzacatos with the thumb, and double stops of disharmony. But throughout, Mr. Leinsdorf with a delicate hand and gentle gesture kept the accompaniment muted and subdued. It was perfect integration of soloist, conductor and orchestra.

The concluding work was Dvorak's sublime "Symphony in D-Minor" in which it seems that each choir in the orchestra tries to out-sing the other in harmonious tonality. Mr. Leinsdorf's feeling for the pure sonority was reflected by an orchestra that was beautifully responsive.

C. H. L.

SHOWTHROUGH

MONDAY 16 PROVIDENCE 5 19

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Sixth Program

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111

I. Allegro moderato
II. Largo
III. Vivace

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS ..... "Ein Heldenleben," Tone Poem, Op. 40

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
MAR 13 1963

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Presents Final Concert of R.I. Series

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf conducted the a beautiful singing phrase ap- final concert of the season in peared provided a measuring the Boston Symphony Orches- stick against which to evaluate tra series last evening at Vet- the brilliance of technical dis- erans Memorial Auditorium. play. Perhaps the cadenza was Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the most astonishing feat. That the orchestra was soloist in the is, unless you were to put in Symphony-Concerto for Cello first place the beauty of the and Orchestra by Prokofiev. matching tones from other solo His performance was a triumph instruments as they set forth of virtuosity controlled by musi- their special fragments to sup- cianship and he was recalled plement the whole beautiful several times. texture of orchestral sound.

A colorful and sensitive per- You could become completely formance of Dvorak's Seventh absorbed in comparing rhythms Symphony and Beethoven's dy- in the several choirs and sud- namic "Lenore" Overture No. denly there would be another 3 made up the balance of the passage for the cellist which program. rivalled the preceding one. The Prokofiev's often revised Cel- orchestra gave most artistic lo Concerto, in its final form, as collaboration and of all the en- we heard it, is an amazing test thusiastic applauders, at the of technigue for the soloist. close of the performance, its Everything in the book is re- members were in the forefront. quired, not once or twice, but It was very impressive to see throughout the entire three Erich Leinsdorf put his hand on movements. The few spots when Samuel Mayes shoulder as they took one of the bows, together. It spoke volumes.

The Dvorak score was full of warmth and melody as well as reminiscent phrases. The musicians were in full accord with Dvorak's ideas and we heard some of the most en- trancing orchestral sounds imaginable. Delicacy of shad- ing in all areas of the orches- tra and rhythms which were the very essence of youth and the spring of the year left the listeners regretful that this concert closes the season. One's thoughts turned back to recall the many fresh addi- tions Erich Leinsdorf has made to the repertoire of the or- chestra. Then in fairness to Beethoven's "Lenore" you had to become enthusiastic about the amazing freshness which this conductor brings to the well worn and familiar work in the repertoire. Even the off-stage trumpet sounded more interesting and as a re- ward for his fine playing, there was a special bow. This I have never seen happen before.

It was another indication of the concern for the finest of details which we are coming to learn about as the year progress under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. His first sea- son in Providence has won him many admirers and when the good weather comes and the lawns are green once more we'll all be making plans for Tanglewood. There is really something magnetic about the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,193
MAR 13 1963

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Cellist Wins Acclaim At Concert

The Boston Symphony Or- chestra concluded its series of concerts in Providence for this season with a superb performance that merited an ovation, prolonged and clamorous, last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Samuel Mayes, cello soloist, was recalled five times after his dazzling performance of Prokofiev's "Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra," and was given a standing ovation by his fellow musicians.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted with the hand of an artist that was discernable in his delicate balance of impulse and restraint. The opening work was Beethoven's "Overture to 'Leonore'" that was played with a perfection of expressive eloquence, lovingly savored and warmly recreated. The off-stage trumpet calls were thrilling.

+++

MR. MAYES SHOWED an amazing facility, precision and tonality in the many challenging technical demands that makes the work hardly tuneful but sharply exciting. It seems as though Prokofiev strove to exploit to the utmost the extremes of the instrument and the skill of the performer. From the droning bass tones on the low strings, to the eerie soprano of the top tones, the bow nafsil- ingly played them all, now bouncing, now rocking, then arcing in high, curving strokes. Mr. Mayes neither missed any and added one extra. Whenever a pure tone he uttered it with rich sonority.

+++

IT WAS MUSIC hard to re- tain — nothing that you could take home with you. There were passages of exquisite melody, but all too few and too brief. They would cease abruptly and then were smothered with tonal and instrumental gymnastics as though the beauty should be erased with the darting, bouncing, rocking bow, pizzacatos with the thumb, and double stops of disharmony. But throughout, Mr. Leinsdorf with a delicate hand and gentle gesture kept the ac- companiment muted and sub- dued. It was perfect integration of soloist, conductor and or- chestra.

The concluding work was Dvorak's sublime "Symphony in E minor" in which it seems that to out-sing the other in har- monious tonality. Mr. Leins- dorf's feeling for the pure so- nority was reflected by an or- chestra that was beautifully re- sponsive.

C. H. L.

BALTIMORE. IV

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 16 1963

The Boston Symphony will be in Baltimore, Md., tomorrow evening. On Monday and Tuesday nights, concerts will be presented in Constitution hall, Washington, D. C. These concerts continue a tradition that was established in 1886. The concerts will mark the debut of Mr. Leinsdorf in the series.

While in Washington the music director will be entertained by the Austrian ambassador and vice president of the United States. Following these concerts the orchestra will make its final appearance of the season in New York city and in Brooklyn. The New York concerts will be given Wednesday evening in Philharmonic hall. The Brooklyn concert is scheduled for Thursday. At these concerts, Samuel Mayes, cellist, will be the soloist in performances of Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 191,090 S. 318,537
MAR 19 1963

Music Notes

Boston Symphony

(Reprinted from yesterday's late edition)

By ELLIOTT W. GALKIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its newly appointed conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at the Lyric Theater last evening in a program which revealed that already this latest of collaborations between a symphonic ensemble and its director has produced dramatic technical and interpretive results.

Hugo Wolf once observed that the assumption of control of an orchestra may be compared to that of riding a horse not fully tamed. While it is of no concern to a piano or a violin as to who played on it last, an orchestra reflects the personality of its most recent rider; place it in the hands of an inexperienced personality and it may rebel.

In French Tradition

The orchestra of which Mr. Leinsdorf has assumed control is one which has for the last 40 years, been trained and developed in the French tradition. Under Koussevitzky and Munch, its two previous conductors, its diet has been one of "Daphnis et Chloe," "La Valse," "La Mer" and other French works. (It must be added that Koussevitzky also had a penchant for Russian music.)

Both Koussevitzky and Munch were sophisticated and aristocratic interpreters. Their concept of sound was transparent, and their phrasing reserved and elegant. Under them the Boston was a light-sounding and fervently flexible organization.

In Vienna Mode

Erich Leinsdorf is of a different tradition. His is a point of view reflective of the Viennese opera conductor: attention to the cantabile aspect of a phrase, to polyphonic detail and a penchant for massed mixed sound.

And the Boston Symphony Orestra, in less than a year under his leadership, already reflects these characteristics.

Gone are the shimmering effects of strings, floating woodwinds and sharply focused, almost shrill brass. While in the past, this orchestra has often been compared to L'Orchestra National of Paris, yesterday evening it sounded like a marvelous, powerful and goldren Concertgebow of Amsterdam.

Has Calm Technique

From a technical point of view, Mr. Leinsdorf is of course, an aristocrat among aristocrats. His technique is one in which he disdains histrionics of the podium. His gestures are the epitome of economy; his is, in fact, a technique which is almost disdainful in the apparent nonchalance of its control.

Leinsdorf can accomplish with a shrug of his shoulders what other conductors attempt to obtain with paroxysms of frenzied gestures. He is thus in a class with Reiner and Szell, and like them, he presents a similar impression of calm reserve and aloofness.

Interpretatively his is a large, raw-boned, virile approach. His reading of the Prokofief "Classical" symphony was majestic in scope, brisk in tempo, and at the same time brilliantly ample in phrase. For Leinsdorf, classical does not mean fragile or delicate.

Tone Poem Opulent

Similarly, his reading of Liszt's tone poem "Orpheus" was appropriately massive of texture and opulent of declamation. Leinsdorf's concept of romanticism is, however, a lean and sinewy one. Thus, he eschewed the opulent tone filled with vibrato and the rubato so characteristic of the performance of this Hungarian master.

Another work by a Hungarian composer, the suite from "Hary Janos," of Kodaly, received a similarly powerful reading. Here again the approach was straightforward almost to the point of metronomical stiffness. The program concluded with a direct and yet dramatic reading of Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben."

Humor Lacking

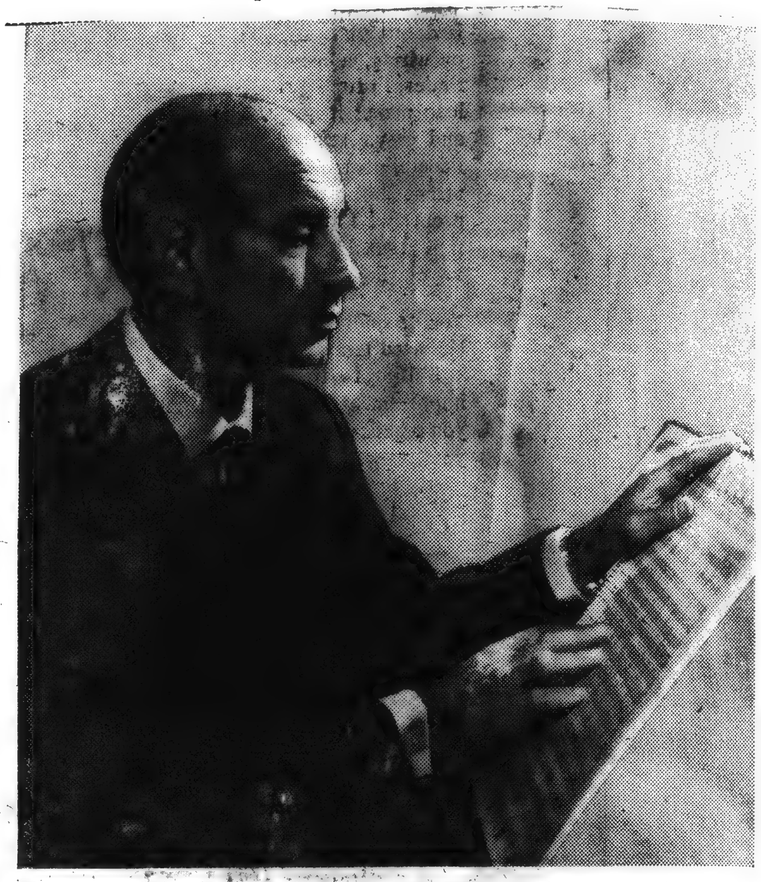
If there were criticisms to be leveled at the performances they must be within the realm of the subjective and the personal. What seemed to be missing was a sense of humor and a feeling of flexibility and spontaneity.

Thus, the "Hary Janos," a marvelously earthy and satirical work filled with braggadocio, emerged rigid and unyielding, even in its most Hungarian evocation. In short, Mr. Leinsdorf was able to ladle out the portions of piquant Hungarian sauce with geometric accuracy.

Throughout the evening, there was in fact, in spite of the majesty of performance, a frequent impression that while the works were each elegantly groomed, there was a slickness of phrase which seemed to detract from the intensity of spirit.

Yet there were undeniable moments of poetry, but it was a poetry which was steel-like in its resilience, and in its carefully controlled emotion, a reflection of the infallibility of technique.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 191,090 S. 318,537
MAR 15 1963



The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Eric Leinsdorf will appear at the Lyric Theater, Sunday evening, 8.30 o'clock, under the auspices of the Baltimore Symphony's mid-concert series for the Tuesday subscribers.

WASHINGTON. 1a 2

121

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

MAR 15 1963

Postlude

Boston Symphony Coming

By Paul Hume

NATIONAL SYMPHONY Wednesday night subscribers go to the Boston Symphony on Monday, March 18. Tuesday ticket holders hear the BSO on Tuesday. Erich Leinsdorf is bringing Prokofieff, Kodaly and Schubert for his first Washington program as regular conductor of the Bostonians.

THIS WEEK IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. -- CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 17 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's only performance in Washington this season will be Monday and Tuesday evenings, March 18

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston orchestra, will conduct for these concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf appeared here with the Boston Symphony two years ago as guest conductor.

Observing the eightieth birthday anniversary of the Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kodaly, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform a suite from his opera "Hary Janos." For this performance the orchestra will be augmented by a cimbalom, a Hungarian gypsy instrument which consists of a small box over which are stretched wire strings which are struck with wooden hammers. This unusual instrument will be played by Janos Hosszu. Mr. Hosszu regularly appears in Washington with a gypsy ensemble at Michel's restaurant. He performed with the orchestra in Boston last month when this composition was played there.

The Classical Symphony of Prokofieff and the Schubert C Major Symphony complete the program. Remaining tickets, priced from $2 to $4 are on sale at all National Symphony box offices, 1108 G Street N.W., all Peoples Drug Stores and at The Disc Shop.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NEWS
D. 267,283 S. 313,407

MAR 19 1963

Now the Leinsdorf Sound

The Boston Symphony, always a great orchestra, seems destined for even greater heights under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who took charge last fall, brought the Boston to Constitution Hall last night for the first of a pair of concerts, and it was immediately apparent his influence upon the orchestra has already been pronounced.

The Prokofieff Classical Symphony, which opened the program, was a marvel of disciplined playing, with the orchestra achieving jewel-like precision in the phrasing and conveying to the full the charm and gentle humor of the piece.

Scores of late-comers should have learned their lessons since they had to stay outside the hall until the symphony ended, thereby missing an incomparable performance.

There was equal excitement in the colorful and thoroly delightful "Hary Janos" suite of Kodaly's featuring the cimbalon playing of Janos Hosszu. Mr. Leinsdorf displayed the same authoritatives here as in the Prokofieff.

And his reading of the magnificent Schubert Symphony No. 7 in C major was a truly inspired one. The orchestra has never sounded better. The program will be repeated tonight.

MILTON BERLINER

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407

MAR 17 1963

VICE PRESIDENT JOHNSON has a special connection with the new conductor of the Boston Symphony, Eric Leinsdorf. Because of it he and Lady Bird will entertain for him Tuesday night after the orchestra's second concert at Constitution Hall. The first will be tomorrow night.

Lyndon and Mr. Leinsdorf first met in May, 1938, when the latter was conducting the Metropolitan Opera orchestra for the Met's Washington performances. At that time Mr. Leinsdorf, a native of Austria, was in this country on a temporary visa that was soon to expire. When it did he would have to return to Austria, which Hitler had invaded.

Lyndon, then a freshman Congressman — he came to the House in 1937—set about to help the conductor get his permit extended, which he did. Later he helped him get his citizenship papers.

When this country entered the war Eric Leinsdorf joined the Army and Lyndon still has the letters he wrote him when he was a corporal at Camp Lee, Va. They have continued their correspondence through the years so that Tuesday, when the Johnsons have invited some 50 friends to come in after the concert, will be quite a reunion for the former freshman Congressman and corporal, now the Vice President and musical director of the great Boston Symphony.

* * * *

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
MAR 9 1963

LBJ, Leinsdorf To Mark 25-Yr. Tie at Reunion

Washington, March 12.

Two old friends named Lyndon B. Johnson and Erich Leinsdorf, who went through a crisis together 25 years ago and have kept in touch since, will have a reunion in Washington next Tuesday (19).

Today, Johnson is Vice President of the U.S., and Leinsdorf is conductor of the Boston Symphony. But if they hadn't met by chance in 1938, Leinsdorf might not be in the U.S. now.

Occasion of their reunion will be a concert the Boston Symphony will play in Constitution Hall here March 19. Vice President and Mrs. Johnson will give a buffet in their home in honor of the conductor following the concert.

Back in 1938, Johnson was a young Congressman from Texas just starting his second year as a member of the U.S. House. The Metropolitan Opera was on tour, playing Washington. Conductor for the opera was Leinsdorf.

Johnson took his wife to the opera, and after it was over, a friend introduced the Texan to Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf mentioned that he had a serious problem. An Austrian, his visa was expiring soon and he had been unable to get it renewed. Unless he succeeded, he would be sent back to Austria, where Hitler's troops were marching in.

Johnson volunteered to help. He recalls he met considerable difficulty but was determined that a man with Leinsdorf's talent be allowed to stay in this country if he wanted to do so. Finally, Johnson obtained an extension of the visa.

Later it was possible for Leinsdorf to become a U.S. citizen. During World War II, the conductor served as a U.S. Army corporal. He and Johnson have corresponded through the 25 years, carefully following one another's achievements.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 13 1963

LBJ, Leinsdorf To Mark 25-Yr. Tie at Reunion

Washington, March 12.

Two old friends named Lyndon B. Johnson and Erich Leinsdorf, who went through a crisis together 25 years ago and have kept in touch since, will have a reunion in Washington next Tuesday (19).

Today, Johnson is Vice President of the U.S., and Leinsdorf is conductor of the Boston Symphony. But if they hadn't met by chance in 1938, Leinsdorf might not be in the U.S. now.

Occasion of their reunion will be a concert the Boston Symphony will play in Constitution Hall here March 19. Vice President and Mrs. Johnson will give a buffet in their home in honor of the conductor following the concert.

Back in 1938, Johnson was a young Congressman from Texas just starting his second year as a member of the U.S. House. The Metropolitan Opera was on tour, playing Washington. Conductor for the opera was Leinsdorf.

Johnson took his wife to the opera, and after it was over, a friend introduced the Texan to Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf mentioned that he had a serious problem. An Austrian, his visa was expiring soon and he had been unable to get it renewed. Unless he succeeded, he would be sent back to Austria, where Hitler's troops were marching in.

Johnson volunteered to help. He recalls he met considerable difficulty but was determined that a man with Leinsdorf's talent be allowed to stay in this country if he wanted to do so. Finally, Johnson obtained an extension of the visa.

Later it was possible for Leinsdorf to become a U.S. citizen. During World War II, the conductor served as a U.S. Army corporal. He and Johnson have corresponded through the 25 years, carefully following one another's achievements.

in Encore

Daily Post 8/20/63

LBJ Presents Maestro

A LONGTIME friendship got another encore last night as the Vice President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson entertained at an after-concert party honoring Eric Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mme. Leinsdorf.

Vice President Johnson, at the time he was a freshman congressman, first met Leinsdorf, who was wielding the baton at the Metropolitan Opera.

Austrian-born Leinsdorf was forced out of his native land when Hitler came into power and it was his Texas friend who later helped him win American citizenship and an American career.

The Johnsons' daughter, Lucy Baines, got to stay up late for the party which followed the orchestra's appearance at Constitution Hall. On hand to meet Lucy were the Leinsdorfs' sons, Joshua, a student in Brookline, Mass., and Gregor, who is studying at the University of Chicago.

WASHINGTON. 1a 2

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073
MAR 15 1963

Postlude

Boston Symphony Coming

By Paul Hume

NATIONAL SYMPHONY Wednesday night subscribers go to the Boston Symphony on Monday, March 18. Tuesday ticket holders hear the BSO on Tuesday. Erich Leinsdorf is bringing Prokofieff, Kodaly and Schubert for his first Washington program as regular conductor of the Bostonians.

THIS WEEK IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAR 17 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's only performance in Washington this season will be Monday and Tuesday evenings, March 18

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston orchestra, will conduct for these concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf appeared here with the Boston Symphony two years ago as guest conductor.

Observing the eightieth birthday anniversary of the Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kodaly, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform a suite from his opera "Hary Janos." For this performance the orchestra will be augmented by a cimbalom, a Hungarian gypsy instrument which consists of a small box over which are stretched wire strings which are struck with wooden hammers. This unusual instrument will be played by Janos Hosszu. Mr. Hosszu regularly appears in Washington with a gypsy ensemble at Michel's restaurant. He performed with the orchestra in Boston last month when this composition was played there.

The Classical Symphony of Prokofieff and the Schubert C Major Symphony complete the program. Remaining tickets, priced from $2 to $4 are on sale at all National Symphony box offices, 1108 G Street N.W., all Peoples Drug Stores and at The Disc Shop.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
MAR 9 1963

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAR 13 1963

LBJ, Leinsdorf To Mark 25-Yr. Tie at Reunion

Washington, March 12.

Two old friends named Lyndon B. Johnson and Erich Leinsdorf, who went through a crisis together 25 years ago and have kept in touch since, will have a reunion in Washington next Tuesday (19).

Today, Johnson is Vice President of the U.S., and Leinsdorf is conductor of the Boston Symphony. But if they hadn't met by chance in 1938, Leinsdorf might not be in the U.S. now.

Occasion of their reunion will be a concert the Boston Symphony will play in Constitution Hall here March 19. Vice President and Mrs. Johnson will give a buffet in their home in honor of the conductor following the concert.

Back in 1938, Johnson was a young Congressman from Texas just starting his second year as a member of the U.S. House. The Metropolitan Opera was on tour, playing Washington. Conductor for the opera was Leinsdorf.

Johnson took his wife to the opera, and after it was over, a friend introduced the Texan to Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf mentioned that he had a serious problem. An Austrian, his visa was expiring soon and he had been unable to get it renewed. Unless he succeeded, he would be sent back to Austria, where Hitler's troops were marching in.

Johnson volunteered to help. He recalls he met considerable difficulty but was determined that a man with Leinsdorf's talent be allowed to stay in this country if he wanted to do so. Finally, Johnson obtained an extension of the visa.

Later it was possible for Leinsdorf to become a U.S. citizen. During World War II, the conductor served as a U.S. Army corporal. He and Johnson have corresponded through the 25 years, carefully following one another's achievements.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NEWS
D. 267,283 S. 313,407
MAR 19 1963

Now the Leinsdorf Sound in Encore

The Boston Symphony, always a great orchestra, seems destined for even greater heights under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who took charge last fall, brought the Boston to Constitution Hall last night for the first of a pair of concerts, and it was immediately apparent his influence upon the orchestra has already been pronounced.

The Prokofieff Classical Symphony, which opened the program, was a marvel of disciplined playing, with the orchestra achieving jewel-like precision in the phrasing and conveying to the full the charm and gentle humor of the piece.

Scores of late-comers should have learned their lessons since they had to stay outside the hall until the symphony ended, thereby missing an incomparable performance.

There was equal excitement in the colorful and thoroly delightful "Hary Janos" suite of Kodaly's featuring the cimbalon playing of Janos Hosszu. Mr. Leinsdorf displayed the same authoritatives here as in the Prokofieff.

And his reading of the magnificent Schubert Symphony No. 7 in C major was a truly inspired one. The orchestra has never sounded better. The program will be repeated tonight.

MILTON BERLINER

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407
MAR 17 1963

VICE PRESIDENT JOHNSON has a special connection with the new conductor of the Boston Symphony, Eric Leinsdorf. Because of it he and Lady Bird will entertain for him Tuesday night after the orchestra's second concert at Constitution Hall. The first will be tomorrow night.

Lyndon and Mr. Leinsdorf first met in May, 1938, when the latter was conducting the Metropolitan Opera orchestra for the Met's Washington performances. At that time Mr. Leinsdorf, a native of Austria, was in this country on a temporary visa that was soon to expire. When it did he would have to return to Austria, which Hitler had invaded.

Lyndon, then a freshman Congressman — he came to the House in 1937—set about to help the conductor get his permit extended, which he did. Later he helped him get his citizenship papers.

When this country entered the war Eric Leinsdorf joined the Army and Lyndon still has the letters he wrote him when he was a corporal at Camp Lee, Va. They have continued their correspondence through the years so that Tuesday, when the Johnsons have invited some 50 friends to come in after the concert, will be quite a reunion for the former freshman Congressman and corporal, now the Vice President and musical director of the great Boston Symphony.

LBJ Presents Maestro

A LONGTIME friendship got another encore last night as the Vice President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson entertained at an after-concert party honoring Eric Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mme. Leinsdorf.

Vice President Johnson, at the time he was a freshman congressman, first met Leinsdorf, who was wielding the baton at the Metropolitan Opera.

Austrian-born Leinsdorf was forced out of his native land when Hitler came into power and it was his Texas friend who later helped him win American citizenship and an American career.

The Johnsons' daughter, Lucy Baines, got to stay up late for the party which followed the orchestra's appearance at Constitution Hall. On hand to meet Lucy were the Leinsdorfs' sons, Joshua, a student in Brookline, Mass., and Gregor, who is studying at the University of Chicago.

WASHINGTON. 1 & 2

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073
MAR 15 1963

Postlude

Boston Symphony Coming

By Paul Hume

NATIONAL SYMPHONY Wednesday night subscribers go to the Boston Symphony on Monday, March 18. Tuesday ticket holders hear the BSO on Tuesday. Erich Leinsdorf is bringing Prokofieff, Kodaly and Schubert for his first Washington program as regular conductor of the Bostonians.

THIS WEEK IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL
WASHINGTON, D.C.

and 19 in Constitution Hall. These are the seventeenth pair of concerts on the National Symphony subscription series.

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston orchestra, will conduct for these concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf appeared here with the Boston Symphony two years ago as guest conductor.

Observing the eightieth birthday anniversary of the Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kodaly, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform a suite from his opera "Hary Janos." For this performance the orchestra will be augmented by a cimbalom, a Hungarian gypey instrument which consists of a small box over which are stretched wire strings which are struck with wooden hammers. This unusual instrument will be played by Janos Hosszu. Mr. Hosszu regularly appears in Washington with a gypsy ensemble at Michel's restaurant. He performed with the orchestra in Boston last month when this composition was played there.

The Classical Symphony of Prokofieff and the Schubert C Major Symphony complete the program. Remaining tickets, priced from $2 to $4 are on sale at all National Symphony box offices, 1108 G Street N.W., all Peoples Drug Stores and at The Disc Shop.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
MAR 9 1963

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAR 13 1963

LBJ, Leinsdorf To Mark 25-Yr. Tie at Reunion

Washington, March 12.

Two old friends named Lyndon B. Johnson and Erich Leinsdorf who went through a crisis together 25 years ago and have kept in touch since, will have a reunion in Washington next Tuesday (19).

Today, Johnson is Vice President of the U.S., and Leinsdorf is conductor of the Boston Symphony. But if they hadn't met by chance in 1938, Leinsdorf might not be in the U.S. now.

Occasion of their reunion will be a concert the Boston Symphony will play in Constitution Hall here March 19. Vice President and Mrs. Johnson will give a buffet in their home in honor of the conductor following the concert.

Back in 1938, Johnson was a young Congressman from Texas just starting his second year as a member of the U.S. House. The Metropolitan Opera was on tour, playing Washington. Conductor for the opera was Leinsdorf.

Johnson took his wife to the opera, and after it was over, a friend introduced the Texan to Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf mentioned that he had a serious problem. An Austrian, his visa was expiring soon and he had been unable to get it renewed. Unless he succeeded, he would be sent back to Austria, where Hitler's troops were marching in.

Johnson volunteered to help. He recalls he met considerable difficulty but was determined that a man with Leinsdorf's talent be allowed to stay in this country if he wanted to do so. Finally, Johnson obtained an extension of the visa.

Later it was possible for Leinsdorf to become a U.S. citizen. During World War II, the conductor served as a U.S. Army corporal. He and Johnson have corresponded through the 25 years, carefully following one another's achievements.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NEWS
D. 267,283 S. 313,407
MAR 19 1963

Now the Leinsdorf Sound

The Boston Symphony, always a great orchestra, seems destined for even greater heights under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who took charge last fall, brought the Boston to Constitution Hall last night for the first of a pair of concerts, and it was immediately apparent his influence upon the orchestra has already been pronounced.

The Prokofieff Classical Symphony, which opened the program, was a marvel of disciplined playing, with the orchestra achieving jewel-like precision in the phrasing and conveying to the full the charm and gentle humor of the piece.

Scores of late-comers should have learned their lessons since they had to stay outside the hall until the symphony ended, thereby missing an incomparable performance.

There was equal excitement in the colorful and thoroly delightful "Hary Janos" suite of Kodaly's featuring the cimbalon playing of Janos Hosszu. Mr. Leinsdorf displayed the same authoritatives here as in the Prokofieff.

And his reading of the magnificent Schubert Symphony No. 7 in C major was a truly inspired one. The orchestra has never sounded better. The program will be repeated tonight.

MILTON BERLINER

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407
MAR 17 1963

VICE PRESIDENT JOHNSON has a special connection with the new conductor of the Boston Symphony, Eric Leinsdorf. Because of it he and Lady Bird will entertain for him Tuesday night after the orchestra's second concert at Constitution Hall. The first will be tomorrow night.

Lyndon and Mr. Leinsdorf first met in May, 1938, when the latter was conducting the Metropolitan Opera orchestra for the Met's Washington performances. At that time Mr. Leinsdorf, a native of Austria, was in this country on a temporary visa that was soon to expire. When it did he would have to return to Austria, which Hitler had invaded.

Lyndon, then a freshman Congressman — he came to the House in 1937—set about to help the conductor get his permit extended, which he did. Later he helped him get his citizenship papers.

When this country entered the war Eric Leinsdorf joined the Army and Lyndon still has the letters he wrote him when he was a corporal at Camp Lee, Va. They have continued their correspondence through the years so that Tuesday, when the Johnsons have invited some 50 friends to come in after the concert, will be quite a reunion for the former freshman Congressman and corporal, now the Vice President and musical director of the great Boston Symphony.

in Encore

LBJ Presents Maestro

A LONGTIME friendship got another encore last night as the Vice President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson entertained at an after-concert party honoring Eric Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mme. Leinsdorf.

Vice President Johnson, at the time he was a freshman congressman, first met Leinsdorf, who was wielding the baton at the Metropolitan Opera.

Austrian-born Leinsdorf was forced out of his native land when Hitler came into power and it was his Texas friend who later helped him win American citizenship and an American career.

The Johnsons' daughter, Lucy Baines, got to stay up late for the party which followed the orchestra's appearance at Constitution Hall. On hand to meet Lucy were the Leinsdorfs' sons, Joshua, a student in Brookline, Mass., and Gregor, who is studying at the Univer[illegible] of Chicago.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

MAR 19 1963

Postlude

Erich Leinsdorf Leads Orchestra in Transition

By Paul Hume

The third conductor of the Boston Symphony within easy memory conducted last night in Constitution Hall, leading an orchestra in transition.

Hume

He is of course Erich Leinsdorf, who is now enjoying his first season as music director of the famed orchestra. He took over last summer from the retiring Charles Munch. For his very first offering in Washington Leinsdorf chose a work made famous in this country by one of his greatest predecessors, Serge Koussevitsky. It was the Classical Symphony of Prokofieff.

This was a work which Koussevitsky used to take outrageously fast for the sheer delight of letting everyone hear how immaculately and how fabulously his magnificent orchestra could play. It was wrong but it was marvelous.

This is the kind of thing Erich Leinsdorf will not do though he stay in Boston a quarter of a century as did the great Russian leader. Last night's performance was paced with a judicious eye on Prokofieff's clear directions—moderately, sprightly, with gusto.

Amusing Fluff

There followed the amusing fluff which Zoltan Kodaly gathered from his opera, "Hary Janos," to make one of the popular suites of the times. With its exotic coloring, highlighted by the cembalom in the flashing hands of Janos Hosszu, and the full battery of percussion instruments raised on high, the music brought the house down twice. Once before it was over and once after.

For the evening's masterpiece—and Leinsdorf has gone on record as being interested in conducting nothing but masterpieces and contemporary music—there was the Schubert Symphony No. 9 in C Major. Here is one of the test pieces for any orchestra, any conductor.

Last night we heard an account that was completely predictable from start to finish. Everything was in place, not a tempo was debatable, not a dynamic expression could be questioned. The sound was beautifully balanced, never forced, often attractively mellow. The playing of every famous passage was molded and unexceptionable.

Yet something was not wholly there. Often during the concert it seemed as if Leinsdorf was making absolutely sure first of all that there could be no question of his intent. This is vastly different from his immediate predecessor.

Making Over an Orchestra

Erich Leinsdorf is in the process, which every new conductor goes through, of making over an orchestra in his image and likeness, speaking now of tonal and technical response. Not for him the violent passions of Munch, the irrepressible urgencies of Koussevitsky.

After another season or two we shall know more precisely the sound he wants from the brasses, the exact character of the string texture he has in mind. At present he plays, as he long has in the opera house and in concerts, for precision, for exactitude, for the notes as the composer wrote them down. In the first movement of the Prokofieff, the first violins showed that there was still some work to be done in this department.

For Prokofieff this is enough. For Kodaly it is sometimes enough though the Intermezzo lacked the grand manner it so vibrantly mimics. For Schubert and for many others, it is not enough, since it gives us the body but not the spirit.

At 50 conductors who have had the long training in the broader repertoire, as Leinsdorf has often seem to take on great ease. It may be appropriate to note that this is precisely the age at which Koussevitsky began his tenure in Boston and, as one well-known Bostonian lady once commented, "We did not think he was so hot for about ten years." We shall see.

Eminently worth hearing, as always, the Boston Symphony repeats the concert tonight.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Ellsworth 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 28 1963

WHEN ERIC LEINSDORF, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was feted by Vice President Lyndon Johnson in Washington the other day, a silent, absent figure watched over the ceremonies. He was Charlie Marsh, publisher of the Marsh newspapers, now ill in Virginia.

Marsh had gone to bat for young Leinsdorf twenty-five years ago, when the latter was a refugee from Hitler in Austria. Leinsdorf had no visa for permanent residence in the United States, but Marsh appealed to a young congressman from Texas named Johnson, who helped arrange the visa.

Marsh lived in Washington during the New Deal and was a picker of young men. He picked young Congressman Johnson as a comer; also picked a young man from Iowa named Henry Wallace. Both became vice president of the United States. Finally, Marsh picked Eric Leinsdorf who became conductor of the Boston Symphony.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 287,282 S. 313,407

MAR 19 1963

NEWS OF MUSIC

'New' Bostonians Heard in D. C. Debut

By IRVING LOWENS
Star Music Critic

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. At Constitution Hall. Program: Classical Symphony, Op. 25, Prokofieff; Suite from Hary Janos, Kodaly; Symphony No. 7 in C, Schubert.

Last night at Constitution Hall, Erich Leinsdorf made his first Washington appearance with the Boston Symphony since his appointment as its music director and regular conductor last year.

If the program was somewhat lacking in novelty, it was certainly not lacking in solid musical substance. Furthermore, it was admirably chosen to demonstrate that the men from the Athens of America, although sounding quite different under Mr. Leinsdorf than they did under Mr. Munch, are still a surpassingly brilliant, virtuoso ensemble.

Enough time has passed since Mr. Leinsdorf took over for him to mould this magnificent orchestra to his will—but not completely. The drive and excitement Mr. Munch generated at his best has not disappeared, and I, for one, hope that it will not be dissipated.

This curious combination of the neat and precise purity for which Mr. Leinsdorf is noted with the fury and verve of a Munch was most evident in the Schubert C major Symphony. This received a reading or remarkable splendor and vitality. In the hands of a lesser conductor and orchestra, it tends to drag interminably; last night, its great length was as inevitable and as beautifully balanced as anything in music.

The last movement, taken at a fast, Toscanini-like pace, was especially effective, bringing the work to a close in a blaze of glorious sound.

Before the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf paid tribute to the Hungarian composer Zoltan Kodaly (who celebrated his 80th birthday just a few months ago), by performing the entertaining suite from the comic opera, "Hary Janos." In his work, the local cimbalom-player, Janos Hosszu (who appears regularly with a gypsy ensemble at Michel's Restaurant), had a wonderful opportunity to shine with the exotic instrument, and he made the most of it, with Mr. Leinsdorf's co-operation.

The "Hary Janos" Suite has been delighting audiences for more than 35 years now, and yesterday was no exception.

The evening began with the Prokofieff "Classical" Symphony, the first three movements of which were taken at a much more relaxed tempo than another illustrious predecessor of Mr. Leinsdorf, Serge Koussevitzky, used in his famed recording of the piece. The orchestra showed the slightest hint of raggedness in the strings, but this was dissipated in the sparkle of the molto vivace finale.

It is quite plain that the Boston is in good hands with Mr. Leinsdorf, and since he is a mere child among conductors at the age of 50, one can look forward to many years of his regime.

The concert will be repeated tonight.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367

MAR 24 1963

Leinsdorf and Johnson—Reunion of Two Old Friends

Some 25 years ago, Vice-President Lyndon B. Johnson and Boston Symphony conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, went through a crisis together—a crisis that cemented a friendship that has continued ever since.

The first meeting between the two men occurred in 1938 when Johnson was a young congressman from Texas and Leinsdorf was on tour as a conductor with the Metropolitan Opera. Johnson and his wife attended a Washington performance of the opera and was introduced to Leinsdorf by a friend.

At the time, Leinsdorf had a serious problem. An Austrian, his visa was soon to expire and he had been unable to get it renewed. Unless his visa was renewed, Leinsdorf would be sent back to Austria, where Hitler's troops were marching in.

The amiable Johnson volunteered to help. He recalls that he met with considerable difficulty but that he was determined to keep a man of Leinsdorf's talent in this country. Finally, Johnson obtained an extension of the visa.

Later, it was possible for Leinsdorf to become an American citizen; in fact, he served during World War II as a U. S. Army corporal. He and Johnson have corresponded through the ensuing years, carefully following each other's achievements.

Last Tuesday night in the nation's capital, the two old friends had a sentimental reunion. After a concert by the Boston Symphony in Constitution Hall, Vice-President and Mrs. Johnson gave a buffet in their home in honor of Mr. Leinsdorf.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
GARDNER, Mass.
Circ. 7,406

MAR 21 963

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,282 S. 313,407

MAR 20 1963

JOHNSONS ENTERTAIN ERICH LEINSDORF

Erich Leinsdorf (center), new music director of the Boston Symphony, is the center of attraction at a very "unstuffy" party given him last night by Vice President and Mrs. Johnson. The Vice President is at right. At left is Senator Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts. (Story on Page C-3.)
—City News Bureau Photo.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 206,663 S. 243,876

MAR 25 1963

TEXANS IN WASHINGTON

Johnson's Kindness To Refugee Bared

Chronicle Washington Bureau

Washington — Vice-President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson revealed a long friendship with conductor Eric Leinsdorf, when he brought his Boston Symphony Orchestra here last week.

It turns out Johnson, as a freshman congressman, helped Leinsdorf renew his visa, saving him from deportation. At that time, Leinsdorf, who had fled Hitler's control of his native Austria, was conductor at the Metropolitan Opera. Later Johnson helped Leinsdorf gain American citizenship.

After the Boston Symphony concert the Johnsons honored the conductor with a gay party at their home.

* * *

LEINSDORF LYNDON JOHNSO

PASTE OVER TIGHT BINDING

124

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE
D. 172,280 S. 186,756

MAR 31 1963 Buffalo

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
D. 356,355 S. 730,398

MAR 31 1963 Buffalo

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 128,713 S. 191,399

MAR 31 1963 Buffalo

SUNDAY STAR LEDGER
NEWARK, N.J.

MAR 31 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

MAR 31 1963

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 193,118

APR 3 1963 Buffalo

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,529,440

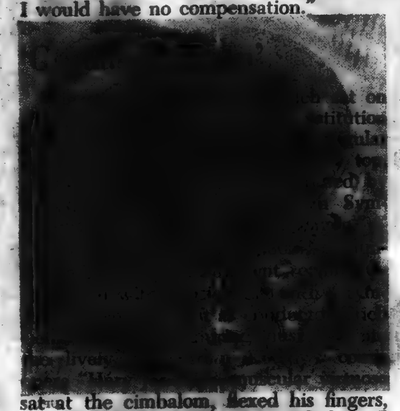
APR 1 1963 Buffalo

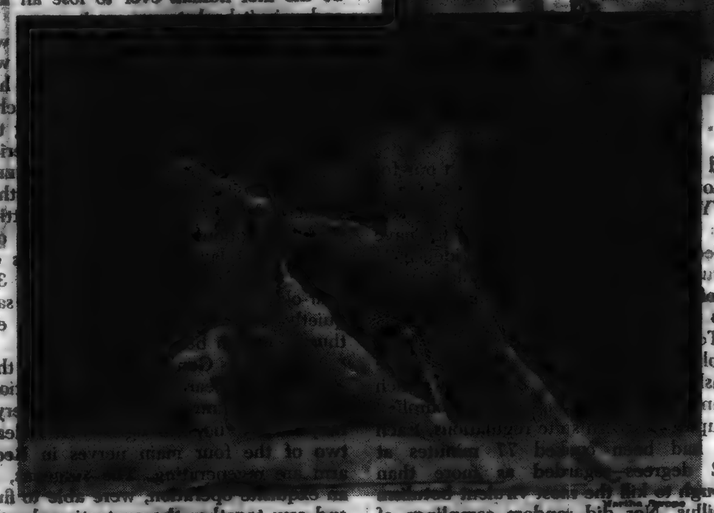
MUSIC

Sweet Lillian Kho

"When [illegible] says Georgia Brown, [illegible] singing on the coattails of [illegible] bandleader fred [illegible] and [illegible] on a bill with [illegible] springs [illegible] Georgia saw it and [illegible] As Georgia [illegible] New York night club debut last week she was at her [illegible] leading power [illegible] with an electric stage [illegible]. Currently starring as the lusty Nancy in "Oliver!" Miss Brown took her [illegible] tain call at Broadway, hustled across town to the Blue Angel and, for 40 minutes, before a full house, soured and [illegible] ballads by Mary Martin, Weill, Porter and Rodgers. Long as [illegible] Needs Me," she ended with a rousing "Bill." Barely [illegible] Please Come Home," [illegible] Oh all the [illegible] Broadway sports to the American artistic scene, Georgia Brown [illegible] into the limelight with two catalogs: the chicken soup (her family still calls her "The Soup Queen") and for Billie Holiday records. She has [illegible] can rhythm and blues since she was a teen-ager and [illegible] jazz clubs [illegible] would say, "Little girl, you [illegible] day" she stalked and sang "Lover Man," "Stormy Weather," and always Georgia Brown's [illegible] dances later introduced her as Sweet Georgia Brown, and the name stuck although she [illegible] before the [illegible] Georgia [illegible] be the first person ever to lose an [illegible]

By 1957 Georgia Brown was on the brink of [illegible]. She bolted Britain, and spent the next few years on the Continent, mostly in German cabarets where she polished her [illegible] singing Kurt Weill songs. "I learned to use the hand mike as a weapon. I found I could still audiences with my stillness." [illegible] 1959, she returned to England, starred in "Threepenny Opera," and then [illegible]. Now Miss Brown, who has [illegible] recent [illegible], is busier than ever, but [illegible] no [illegible] about her [illegible] age. Why do you give them so much of yourself? I [illegible] Lenya once asked her. "Otherwise I would have no compensation," she answered.





Fred Ward—Black Star

Hosszu: Play, gypsy, play

Washington Post reporter said his name "Sounds like President Kennedy trying to say 'horseshoe'"—an expatriate Hungarian who studied at the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest, played under Toscanini, and then in 1956, after the abortive revolution, fled Hungary with his wife and two children. Many Hungarians considered him his country's finest cimbalom player, which is high praise, since most Hungarians consider themselves the world's greatest cimbalom players. He got his first U.S. job, however, in an iron factory, then found work in Chicago, New York, and Washington, where he is currently performing everything from jazz to gypsy music at a restaurant called Michel's.

The Search: The Boston Symphony discovered the 53-year-old Hosszu in Washington after Rosario Mazzeo, the orchestra's personnel manager, made a thorough search for a cimbalom player who could handle the "Háry János" suite. "There are many who play the instrument, but very few who can read music and subscribe to the discipline of an orchestra," Mazzeo explained last week. Hosszu played beautifully—and under Leinsdorf's direction, blended perfectly with the Boston.

The brilliance of his instrument, Hosszu explains, depends upon the amount of cotton padding he puts on the ends of the [illegible] wooden mallets. "If I put very little padding, it sounds like a harp," says Hosszu, who holds the mallets between his middle finger and forefinger. "If I put more, it's like a piano. It [illegible] a zither when it's plucked [illegible] fingers."

As the Post [illegible] Symphony left Washington last [illegible] went back to Minneapolis. "I cannot afford to lose [illegible]," he said.

POTOMAC SCENE By Betty Be[illegible]

Musicians in Spotlight At Concerts and Parties

Special to Buffalo Evening News

WASHINGTON, April 3—Lyndon B. Johnson, master politician, gave an after-concert party the other night for master musician Eric Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony's new conductor. His friendship for Leinsdorf goes back close to 30 years.

The then freshman congressman from Texas got the visiting young Austrian conductor's visa extended so he wouldn't have to return to a Hitler-invaded country. Later he helped him get his citizenship papers and the musician joined the U. S. Army. LBJ still has letters from Cpl. Leinsdorf.

Although most after-concert parties are apt to be deadly, not so the Johnsons'. As guests sallied in to the late supper after the highbrow symphonic performance, they were greeted by the peppy music of a four-piece dance orchestra, and trays of champagne.

Lady Bird seated Leinsdorf on her right and Teddy Kennedy on her left during supper and heard them launch into talk about the so-called little-known science of acoustics. Joan Kennedy, by the way, was not at the party. She is taking things quietly in anticipation of the arrival of their third child.

• • •

OVER AT THE NEXT table FCC Chairman Newton Minow was showing off the unique St. Christopher medal given to him by the Catholic sponsors of a recent telecast with Bishop Sheen.

On one side the silver disc looked like the typical Catholic medal dedicated to the patron saint of travel. On the other side, in tribute to Mr. Minow's appearance with the Catholic prelate was the six-pointed Star of David, symbol of the Jewish faith.

Postmaster General Day was telling friends at the Spanish Embassy party following Segovia's concert about the great guitarist's enormous sensitivity to the slightest sound. The Cabinet member was host at one of the State Department cultural evenings featuring the world's greatest guitarist.

Copyright 1963

NEW YORK
STANDARD
D. 400,00[illegible]

MAR 2[illegible]

Music

Erich L[illegible]
Symphony
monic [illegible]
rescue [illegible]
by Liszt fr[illegible]

The piece[illegible] phonic poem
the compo[illegible]
It opens melody ruptedly ment. The to a powe[illegible] quickly [illegible] ethereal
while no[illegible]
extremel[illegible]

Mr. showed work's [illegible] grew na[illegible]
ing one.
The [illegible]

NEW YORK
TIMES
WESTERN
D. 100,00[illegible]

MAR

Mus[illegible]

Leinsdor[illegible]
Well-Pl[illegible]

By HAROL[illegible]
Special to

It was well-playe[illegible]
Erich Leir[illegible] ton Symp[illegible] town on [illegible]
The first [illegible]
tle-known
Liszt's sy[illegible]
pheus" is[illegible]
And Pro[illegible]
Concerto [illegible]
chestra is[illegible]
not yet [illegible]
a repertor[illegible]
may. Schu[illegible] jor Symph[illegible] familiar. [illegible]
gram.

The Pro[illegible]
strange ca[illegible]
a full-fled[illegible]
1933 and [illegible]
by Gregor [illegible] others. Th[illegible] second th[illegible] series of [illegible]
with the [illegible]
Mspiflad [illegible]
the time [illegible]
the concert[illegible]
Symphony-[illegible]
ously the t[illegible] work is as[illegible]
as concerto.[illegible]
sical and or[illegible] dominate th[illegible]
ments.

It is a re[illegible] movement w[illegible]
the prime P[illegible]
Massive, m[illegible]
ly dissonant[illegible]
ism here [illegible] touches of[illegible] score reflect[illegible]
sardonic hum[illegible]

NEW YORK 5.

125

NEW YORK

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000 S. 400,000

MAR 24 1963 Byfkettes

Music Review

Orpheus Ascending?

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony returned to Philharmonic Hall Wednesday night to rescue a little-known composition by Liszt from undeserved neglect.

The piece in question, the symphonic poem "Orpheus," is one of the composer's most poetic works. It opens with a slow, flowing melody which continues uninterruptedly throughout the movement. The music gradually builds to a powerful climax, which then quickly subsides into a series of ethereal chords. The harmonies, while not particularly daring, are extremely interesting.

Mr. Leinsdorf's performance showed a complete grasp of the work's overall design. Each phrase grew naturally out of the preceding one.

The orchestra played with considerable lyricism. Yet, the music never degenerated into cheap sentimentality.

Mr. Leinsdorf was then joined by Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's first cellist. Mr. Mayes served as soloist in Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra.

The Symphony-Concerto is a reworking of the composer's Cello Concerto No. 1. In expanding the Concerto to symphonic proportions, Prokofiev seems to have lost control of his material. The second movement, especially, is an overlong series of disjointed orchestral fragments.

Mr. Mayes struggled valiantly to make some sense out of the meandering cello part. But in spite of his sensitive phrasing and rich tone, the music seemed devoid of meaning.

The program closed with a superb performance of Schubert's Symphony in C major. Mr. Leinsdorf chose rather leisurely tempi, but managed to sustain them beautifully. Judging from the look of contentment on his face, this is music he enjoys enormously. His identification with it was evident in the performance.

—Mark F. Starr

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 00 000

MAR 22 1963 Byfkettes

Music: The Boston Symphony in N.Y.

Leinsdorf Conducts a Well-Played Program

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times.

NEW YORK.

It was an interesting and well-played program that Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony brought to town on Wednesday evening. The first half consisted of little-known music. Franz Liszt's symphonic poem "Orpheus" is almost never heard. And Prokofieff's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra is a work that has not yet established itself as a repertory item, although it may. Schubert's great C Major Symphony was the only familiar score on the program.

The Prokofieff has had a strange career. It started as a full-fledged concerto in 1933 and was played as such by Gregor Piatigorsky, among others. Then Prokofieff had second thoughts and began a series of revisions. He worked with the Russian cellist, Mspiflad Rostropovitch. By the time they were through, the concerto turned into this Symphony-Concerto. Obviously the title means that the work is as much symphony as concerto, and that the musical and orchestral elements dominate the virtuoso elements.

•

It is a rather long, three-movement work, very much in the prime Prokofieff manner. Massive, melodic, occasionally dissonant, using nationalism here and there, with touches of caricature, the score reflects the fertile and sardonic mind of the composer. And, like so many of his concerted works, it poses the solo performer some real problems.

Samuel Mayes, the first cellist of the Boston Symphony, was the soloist. He gave a clear and volatile performance, and one that was intensely musical. Like most first-desk men, he is not a strongly assertive player. And, in spots — especially in the high positions — there was an occasional flaw in intonation. But his tone, though not large, was remarkably penetrating. And while Mr. Mayes was playing, the listener was always conscious of a keen mind, of a fine rhythmic sweep and of an instrumentalist who was above all a musician.

The Liszt tone poem went very nicely. This score is intensely Lisztian, and those who are allergic to his mannerisms will call the music cheap and sentimental. Liszt admirers will point to the harmonic imagination of the writing, and to a conception that was years ahead of its time. This writer is one of the admirers.

•

In Schubert's C Major Symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra in a large-scale and even strenuous performance. It also was a very tidy performance, in that everything was cleaned and burnished, with no loose ends anywhere. It could be contended, with some justice, that the conducting was a little too rigid. Tempos marched with rhythmic exactitude, leading to a metronomic effect. This was especially true in the climax of the second movement.

But that is the modern style. Conductors today do not take the liberty that, say, Bruno Walter used to take.

Mr. Leinsdorf is representative of the direct-translation school, where notes and patterns are transferred directly into sound as faithfully as possible to the ground-plan of the score. It is a somewhat objective process, and the conductor of the modern school keeps his own personality as far in the background as possible. At any rate, nobody can deny Mr. Leinsdorf his success as an exponent of this school. And he does have the technique and the ear to impress his will securely on the orchestra.

Schubert, Prokofieff and Liszt Are Performed

New York Post
D. 372,679 S. 255,557

MAR 21 1963 Byfkettes

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Leinsdorf Leads Mayes in Prokofiev

Prokofiev's "Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra," Op. 125, performed last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting and principal cellist Samuel Mayes as soloist, could be described in the words Thomas Craven used in writing about Rembrandt's great 1659 "Portrait of Himself:" "it seems to be scooped out of an unfathomable mixture of radiance and shadow."

Just as this Rembrandt represents a summit—a work of his final period after a lifetime of painting studies of himself—so this concerto, obviously by its title far more symphonically integrated with instrumental texture than concertos normally are, is, to this listener, a high point in Prokofiev's long, turbulent creative life.

And as played last night in Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center, the music's tremendous range of imagination from the lyrically impassioned theme of the second movement to the powerful, sometimes grotesque, dramatic development which follows it, was superbly projected.

Prokofiev's Instinctive Genius

The "Symphony-Concerto" in its present form, still little known, in this country, was long in coming to full creative fruition. Initially sketched in 1933, the first draft was completed in 1938. At its Russian premiere shortly after, it bore the title, Cello Concerto, No. 1. Minor revisions followed and many subsequent performances followed here and elsewhere.

But with the instinct of true genius, Prokofiev, pursued by an ever-expanding horizon, revised the work between 1950 and '52 to the point where it became an inspired transformation of familiar musical ideas freshly illumined and identified as a new piece: Concerto No. 2, first played in the United States by the Russian cellist Mstislav Rostropovich during April, 1956, with Dimitri Mitropoulos leading the N. Y. Philharmonic.

Bristling with Difficulties

Nestyev, however, in his biography of Prokofiev identifies it as "Sinfonia-Concertante," and it was published in 1959, six years after Prokofiev's death as "Symphony-Concerto."

Bristling with technical difficulties, there doesn't seem to be a note that lives for its virtuosity alone. In short, a composition with a provocative and complex history that came through in triumph.

While Mayes had a few understandable lapses from intonation in the higher positions, his performance was, on the whole, masterly, and at its conclusion he was rendered one of the biggest ovations I remember a soloist with orchestra receiving. Mayes will repeat his performance tonight with the Bostonians at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Leinsdorf opened the program with Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus," and closed with a glowing though classically conceived interpretation of Schubert's Symphony in C Major (Posthumous,) usually identified as No. 7. The conductor's meticulous attention to details of line and section took precedence over the sweep of romantic ardor.

The BROOKLYN

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN DAILY
Tuesday, March 12, 1963

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
SERVICE

RIDGEWOOD TIMES
[illegible] 1963

NEW YORK, N.Y.
STANDARD
D. 400,000 S. 400,000

MAR 13 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS
PRESS
W. 4,226

MAR 14 1963

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050

MAR 14 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY & SUN.- CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 24 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN EAGLE
DAILY & SUN. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 12 1963

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
NEW YORK AND
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 40,130

MAR 12 1963

Boston Symphony at Brooklyn Academy Thurs., March 21st

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fifth and final concert of its 75th anniversary season in Brooklyn on Thursday evening, March 21st, at 8:30 p.m. in the Opera House of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Erich Leinsdorf, who is ending his first season as the Music Director of "the aristocrat of orchestras" will conduct, and he has invited Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's first cellist, to be soloist in the Brooklyn premiere of Serge Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto, for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last Brooklyn performance during its 75th season are priced at $3, $3.50, $4, and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail through sending a check or money order with stamped, self-addressed envelope.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
TABLET
W. 139,611 (C)

JUL 11 1963

Getting to Know Music

By KEN MESSER

'LET'S KEEP BOSTON IN BROOKLYN

AT the close of its regular series of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that it would drop Brooklyn from its itinerary unless public support improved. At the time, several reasons for the decision were enumerated and they are outlined in a letter sent to subscribers along with the customary subscription renewal notice. Loyal Brooklyn patrons feel such action would be unjustified without a few defensive remarks in their behalf.

To the comment that the B.S.O. has no attendance problem at the newly constructed Philharmonic Hall, we might add that neither does anyone else. Much of the hall's drawing power can be attributed to its being a novelty on the New York scene, even offering an added touch of elegance to that little breed of concert-goer—the junior sophisticate.

Have you ever tried to get a ticket for anything at Philharmonic Hall? Practically all major events are sold out well in advance and most likely largely through subscription. Although guaranteeing an organization a given attendance and income, subscriptions limit an entire series to the same select few, eliminating the masses and those individuals whose taste may incline only toward specific programs.

In view of this fact, perhaps it is all the more reason why the orchestra should continue coming to Brooklyn. One also wonders if emphasis on this type of ticket sale really is a good criterion for measuring public interest. (The N. Y. Philharmonic has added six non-subscription concerts to its schedule next season.)

The next item is the shift from Friday to Thursday evening. Admittedly a possible factor in the attendance drop, it isn't necessarily so. Thursday or Friday should make no difference.

With all due respect to conductor Erich Leinsdorf, last season's programs did not maintain the over-all interest as those of the Munch-Monteux era. Usually only one piece, or on occasion two, per program aroused any great enthusiasm.

In spite of critic's praise of Benjamin Lees' "Violin Concerto," balcony chatter strongly implied its incomprehensibility to the average listener and a similar reaction followed an earlier performance of Bartok's "Piano Concerto."

Perhaps it would be wiser if more discretion is used in the selection of contemporary works keeping in mind that audiences are not equipped with doctorates in musical theory and are more likely to respond to works maintaining a happy alliance between the heart and the cerebrum. If they leave humming a melody from something they have just heard, then you know the concert was a success.

In the past Brooklynites heard such things as Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale." And they responded far more appreciatively to it than to the Lees' offering.

Brooklyn may not be the garden spot of the world nor see the culture of Philharmonic Hall. But to more than 1,000,000 people it's a warm little place they call home. Let's keep it that way and let's keep the B.S.O. right where it has been for many years—at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BOSTON 21

127

ECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twenty-first Program

AFTERNOON, MARCH 15, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, at 8:30 o'clock

.....Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus"

W... SCHUMAN.....Symphony No. 3

a. Passacaglia b. Fugue
a. Chorale b. Toccata

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT.....Symphony in C major (Posthumous)

I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1289]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 10 1963

Boston Symphony Programs

For the 20th pair of Friday-Saturday concerts Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform music of Liszt, William Schuman and Schubert.

The concerts will open with the Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus," by Liszt. The work last appeared on a B.S.O. program in 1921 during Pierre Monteux's tenure as conductor. Also prior to intermission will be William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, which received its premiere performance by this orchestra in 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky to whom the work is dedicated. The programs will conclude with Schubert's Symphony in C major (Op. posthumous as No. 7, also listed as No. 9).

The sixth program of the Monday Evening Series will take place tomorrow at 8:30 at Symphony Hall, Leinsdorf conducting. Continuing the observance of the 10th. anniversary of Prokofiev's death (Mar. 5, 1953), the concert will begin with that composer's Symphony No. 6. The concluding work will be Strauss' Tone Poem "Ein Heldenleben" with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, performing the violin solo.

Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra's final appearance of the season in Providence on Tuesday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
MAR 21 1963

At the BSO

Leinsdorf Presents Varied Program

By PETER DAVISON

Last weekend's concerts at Symphony Hall were an excellent demonstration of Mr. Leinsdorf's pattern in programming. First, he gave us a neglected piece (Liszt's "Orpheus" Symphonic Poem, last performed at these concerts in 1921); then a modern work of real stature (William Schuman's Symphony No. 3); and finally a major work from the central orchestral repertoire (Schubert's posthumous C Major Symphony). It was an evening of the kind we are coming to expect from Mr. Leinsdorf: one full of surprises.

The Liszt, briefly, was a surprise, but a soggy one, like a package that has been left out in the rain. This piece, inspired by Liszt's vast admiration for Gluck's "Orfeo," might pass for one of the unhappier examples of what happens when one musical style is imitated in the language of another. Gluck's consonance, his transparency, his lofty lyricism, turn into banality when translated into the accents of nineteenth-century romanticism, without the powerful lead of the classical bass line. Liszt, adapting his passionate style to the surface qualities of classicism, piles up inversion after inversion of the tonic chord, with the result that the underlying melancholy of Gluck, turns into a sort of mock-heroic classical pose: picture the long-haired Hungarian wearing a toga and presenting his profile.

It is an implicit criticism of Dr. Munch's lack of imagination in programming that the last performance of William Shuman's Symphony No. 3 was over a decade ago; and that it was then conducted by Pierre Monteux. As played by Mr. Leinsdorf this ebullient piece of music brought the audience to its feet, particularly with the gallop of its final Toccata. This listener, who is ashamed to admit that it was his first hearing, came away with enormous respect for the structure of the piece; for the powerful orchestration; for the rich brass fanfares and the powerful effects of Schuman's use of the orchestral choirs throughout; for the excitement in the bravura passages for tympani, bass clarinet and the brasses generally.

The symphony is divided into two two-part movements: the first, a Passacaglia and Fugue; the second, a Chorale and Toccata. In each movement the opening section is slower than what follows it, and the first part has close harmonic and thematic relationship with the second. It is, perhaps, the final Toccata that is most attractive. The Chorale that precedes it has a contrapuntal, almost sixteenth-century flavor and its simplicity is meeting; but the Chorale section goes on too long to keep its simplicity sublime. The Toccata is a horse race all the way. It begins with a chuckling dialogue between bass clarinet (Mr. Mazzeo's annual solo) and snare drum, develops into an energetic canon between the strings in parallel movement; and lengthens into an all-out gallop. It is one of the most amusing, sprightly, energetic movements I have heard in a long time; and Mr. Leinsdorf gave it its head.

The great Schubert C Major Symphony is the first "old warhorse" that I have heard Mr. Leinsdorf conduct and I can express only admiration for the freshness that he brought to it. Here was a man in charge at every moment, listening with surpassing discrimination to the sounds, the balance, the intonations of his orchestra. It is only through such meticulous attention to detail that the true dimensions of this symphony can reveal themselves; only through a virile exercise of control that Schubert can emerge in all his fine excess. Two examples will perhaps suffice to illustrate Mr. Leinsdorf's freshness: the restatement of the first theme of the first movement, where Mr. Leinsdorf gave free play to the delicate tracery of the violins in obbligato, and the peasant twang which he gave the woodwinds in the scherzo, which endowed the movement with an unusual and highly effective acid touch. The symphony as a whole came through to me with an identity I had never heard in it, and this was achieved not by any over-interpretation, but by a meticulous attention to accents, sforzandi, balance and pace. Only once, when Mr. Stagliano showed bad taste in overemphasizing a horn solo in the slow movement, was the spell shattered.

The orchestra will be on tour this week, but they will return under the direction of the venerable Pierre Monteux on March 29-30, to play Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen" and his Pastorale Symphony, Debussy's Instrumental Excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastian" and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
MAR 14 1963

At Symphony Hall

Symphony Orchestra To Perform Works by Liszt and Schuman

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its 20th pair of concerts this season tomorrow (March 15, 2:15) and Saturday (March 16, 8:30) at Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, conducting. The program will begin with a performance of the Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus", by Liszt, which was last performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1921 during Pierre Monteux' tenure as Music Director of the Orchestra. Also prior to the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, which received a premiere performance by this Orchestra in 1941 under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The Symphony is inscribed, "This Work is for Serge Koussevitzky." The program will conclude with a performance of Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous), which has been designated as the Symphony No. 7 and also as the Symphony No. 9.

William Schuman is President of Lincoln Center in New York City and has accepted the invitation of Mr. Leinsdorf to serve on the Advisory Board of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music at Tanglewood.

Pierre Monteux, the 88-year-old former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has accepted the invitation of the Orchestra's Trustees to conduct the Symphony Hall concerts of March 29, 30 and April 2. Charles Munch was scheduled to conduct these concerts, but he has since found it will be impossible for him to make his second guest appearance in Boston this season.

Out of his personal admiration for Doctor Munch and the members of the Orchestra, Mr. Monteux has agreed to delay his return to Europe. Mr. Monteux's program will include the Overture to "King Stephen" by Beethoven; the Symphony No. 6 of Beethoven; Debussy's Prelude and Dance of Ecstasy from the "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian"; and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione".

BOSTON 21

127

...-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twenty-first Program

...DAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 15, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, at 8:30 o'clock

LISZT ..... Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus"

WILLIAM SCHUMAN ..... Symphony No. 3

I. a. Passacaglia b. Fugue
II. a. Chorale b. Toccata

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in C major (Posthumous)

I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1289]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 10 1963

Boston Symphony Programs

For the 20th pair of Friday-Saturday concerts Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform music of Liszt, William Schuman and Schubert.

The concerts will open with the Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus," by Liszt. The work last appeared on a B.S.O. program in 1921 during Pierre Monteux's tenure as conductor. Also prior to intermission will be William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, which received its premiere performance by this orchestra in 1941 under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky to whom the work is dedicated. The program will conclude with Schubert's Symphony in C major (Op. posthumous as No. 7, also listed as No. 9).

The sixth program of the Monday Evening Series will take place tomorrow at 8:30 at Symphony Hall, Leinsdorf conducting. Continuing the observance of the 10th anniversary of Prokofiev's death (Mar. 5, 1953), the concert will begin with that composer's Symphony No. 6. The concluding work will be Strauss' Tone Poem "Ein Heldenleben" with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, performing the violin solo.

Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra's final appearance of the season in Providence on Tuesday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
MAR 21 1963

At the BSO

Leinsdorf Presents Varied Program

By PETER DAVISON

Last weekend's concerts at Symphony Hall were an excellent demonstration of Mr. Leinsdorf's pattern in programming. First, he gave us a neglected piece (Liszt's "Orpheus" Symphonic Poem, last performed at these concerts in 1921); then a modern work of real stature (William Schuman's Symphony No. 3); and finally a major work from the central orchestral repertoire (Schubert's posthumous C Major Symphony). It was an evening of the kind we are coming to expect from Mr. Leinsdorf: one full of surprises.

The Liszt, briefly, was a surprise, but a soggy one, like a package that has been left out in the rain. This piece, inspired by Liszt's vast admiration for Gluck's "Orfeo," might pass for one of the unhappier examples of what happens when one musical style is imitated in the language of another. Gluck's consonance, his transparency, his lofty lyricism, turn into banality when translated into the accents of nineteenth-century romanticism, without the powerful lead of the classical bass line. Liszt, adapting his passionate style to the surface qualities of classicism, piled up inversion after inversion of the tonic chord, with the result that the underlying melancholy of Gluck, turns into a sort of mock-heroic classical pose: picture the long-haired Hungarian wearing a toga and presenting his profile.

It is an implicit criticism of Dr. Munch's lack of imagination in programming that the last performance of William Shuman's Symphony No. 3 was over a decade ago; and that it was then conducted by Pierre Monteux. As played by Mr. Leinsdorf this ebullient piece of music brought the audience to its feet, particularly with the gallop of its final Toccata. This listener, who is ashamed to admit that it was his first hearing, came away with enormous respect for the structure of the piece; for the powerful orchestration; for the rich brass fanfares and the powerful effects of Schuman's use of the orchestral choirs throughout; for the excitement in the bravura passages for tympani, bass clarinet and the brasses generally.

The symphony is divided into two two-part movements: the first, a Passacaglia and Fugue; the second, a Chorale and Toccata. In each movement the opening section is slower than what follows it, and the first ... thematic relationship with the second. It is, perhaps, the final Toccata that is most attractive. The Chorale that precedes it has a contrapuntal, almost sixteenth-century flavor and its simplicity is meeting; but the Chorale section goes on too long to keep its simplicity sublime. The Toccata is a horse of all the way. It begins with a chuckling dialogue between bass clarinet (Mr. Mazzeo's annual solo) and snare drum, develops into an energetic canon between the strings in parallel movement; and lengthens into an all-out gallop. It is one of the most amusing, sprightly, energetic movements I have heard in a long time; and Mr. Leinsdorf gave it its head.

The great Schubert C Major Symphony is the first "old warhorse" that I have heard Mr. Leinsdorf conduct, and I can express only admiration for the freshness that he brought to it. Here was a man in charge at every moment, listening with surpassing discrimination to the sounds, the balance, the intonations of his orchestra. It is only through such meticulous attention to detail that the true dimensions of this symphony can reveal themselves; only through a virile exercise of control that Schubert can emerge in all his fine excess. Two examples will perhaps suffice to illustrate Mr. Leinsdorf's freshness: the ... of the first theme ... first movement, ... Leinsdorf gave free play to the delicate tracery of the violins in obbligato ... the peasant twang ... gave the woodwinds in the scherzo, which endowed the movement with an unusual and highly effective acid touch. The symphony as a whole came through to me with an identity I had never heard in it, and this was achieved not by any over-interpretation, but by a meticulous attention to accents, sforzandi, balance and pace. Only once, when Mr. Stagliano showed bad taste in overemphasizing a horn solo in the ... movement, was the spell ... shattered.

... orchestra will be on tour ... week, but will return ... under the direction of the venerable Pierre Monteux on March 28 ... to play Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen" and his Pastorale Symphony, Debussy's Instrumental Excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastian" and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
MAR 14 1963

At Symphony Hall

Symphony Orchestra To Perform Works by Liszt and Schuman

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present its 20th pair of concerts ... season tomorrow (March 15, 2:15) and Saturday (March 16, 8:30) at Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, conducting. The program will begin with a performance of the Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus", by Liszt, which was last performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1921 during Pierre Monteux' tenure as Music Director of the Orchestra. Also prior to the intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, which received its premiere performance by this Orchestra in 1941 under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The Symphony is inscribed, "This Work is for Serge Koussevitzky." The program will conclude with a performance of Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous), which has been designated as the Symphony No. 7 and also as the Symphony No. 9.

William Schuman is President of Lincoln Center in New York City and has accepted the invitation of Mr. Leinsdorf to serve on the Advisory Board of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music at Tanglewood.

Pierre Monteux, the 88-year-old former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has accepted the invitation of the Orchestra's Trustees to conduct the Symphony Hall concerts of March 29, 30 and April 2. Charles Munch was scheduled to conduct these concerts but he has since found it will be impossible for him to make his second guest appearance in Boston this season.

Out of his personal admiration for Doctor Munch and the members of the Orchestra, Mr. Monteux has agreed to delay his return to Europe. Mr. Monteux's program will include the Overture to "King Stephen" by Beethoven; the Symphony No. 6 of Beethoven; Debussy's Prelude and Dance of Ecstasy from the "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian"; and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione".

178

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 16 1960

Music Review

Boston Symphony Plays Schuman and Schubert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting, played the following program in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and will repeat it tonight at 8:30: Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus," William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, and Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous).

By MARGO MILLER

Some metaphors are too persuasive and get the better of a writer's judgment. Perhaps because of Lent, a traditionally abstemious season, visions of the dessert course intrude themselves to describe the program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Liszt's Symphonic Poem, "Orpheus," is a fruitcake of sweetmeats and light orchestral batter. The Schuman Third Symphony is as involved in its musical voices as a piece of puff paste, and the C major Schubert Symphony should be as luminous as a melon. But enough of that.

William Schuman's Symphony is scored for a large orchestra but it carries the instrumentation as lightly as a Mozart symphony.

In sonority there seems to be little blend; the orchestral choirs do not melt one into anohter. Rather, each voice goes its own way with great energy. Predominant are the trumpets and the violins, the highest voices of their respective families.

Another reason why this Symphony appears to be of many layers is Schuman's interest in form. In four movements he knits together a passacaglia, a chorale, a fugue and a toccata. Far from being academic exercises in each form, the work's vitality of line is exuberance itself.

Under Erich Leinsdorf's direction, the orchestra performed with brilliance. Each part was nicely in place. The trumpet section deserves special mention; in the last few concerts this season their sound has mellowed into something altogether marvelous: sweet without being cloying. For the Schuman, this new sound was an oasis in the sheen of the upper strings.

What worked brilliantly for the Schuman Symphony ruined the Schubert for me. Perhaps it should not have been on the program at all as being too similar to the textures of the modern work. Like the Schuman it is light on its feet, energetic and bright in sound.

Leinsdorf's tempos were considerably on the brisk side; the symphony had little chance to breathe. Because of this the momentum of finale was not as effective as it might have been. And while the slow movement is marked "con moto," or with motion, it seemed a little too quick, to follow the allegro.

But what was the more unsettling was the clarity of the parts. Too many things were emphasized. Each passage was so important that there were no peaks, no valleys. The music emerged febrile.

From Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony's recent performances of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 (which have been a revelation to me, at least), I had expected music like the Schubert to be infused with the same tenderness and warmth. Friday's conception, for all its shine, was unripe.

Liszt's Symphonic Poem, "Orpheus," not heard at these concerts since 1921, probably benefitted from clarity and restraint. The program notes warn that the composer preferred his Poem to express the symbolism of the myth rather than the events of the god winning back his love from the underworld.

But it's a little too easy to ignore Liszt's intentions. The piece is chockablock with suggestions of Orpheus' lyre (the constant harp punctuation), the yearning of the long lines for cellos and violas (Orpheus), and the elusive motifs in the violins and woodwinds (Eurydice). Then there's the solemn music for brass and strings which can only be "The Establishment" of death (Charron, Lethe, Erebus, et al.). The whole is pittoresque, and not without charm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
MAR 16 1960

The Sympony

Liszt Tone Poem Lacks Contrast

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A seldom-heard tone poem by Liszt revived for the first time in four decades; a well-wrought modern homage to the 17th century by William Schuman; and, not least, radiant reading of Schubert's posthumously-published C Major Symphony—these were the delights of yesterday's felicitous Symphony concert.

Indeed, the program revealed an almost topiary grace in Mr. Leinsdorf's artful balance of the familiar and unfamiliar, the classical and romantic, the lyric and narrative. Liszt's "Orpheus," obviously springs from the source of his genius, the literary powers now considered an obstacle to "pure" music, but which, in his case, awoke the tonal imagination and evoked images appropriate to sound.

Melodic Subjects

It commences with the glittering chords of two harps, the enchanted lyre of Orpheus: a promising beginning. Two engaging melodic subjects are then developed in terms of orchestral timbres and colors. The final English horn solo concludes the poem with a dying fall as evanescent as a sigh.

The workmanship and ideas are from Liszt's top drawer, but one can readily understand why the piece does not occupy a strong position in the repertoire; for it lacks contrast.

The sweet pastoral texture is never roiled by those melodramatic outbursts so commonly associated with the composer. Liszt, who has been unjustly required to bear the onus of a reputation tarnished by vulgarity, here conveys the fastidious delicacy that characterizes his finest writing.

Nevertheless, the music, for all its lack of blood-and-thunder, its bland beauty, serves to remind us how seldom the inventor of the tone poem is heard in the eloquent and extraordinary medium he did so much to advance.

William Schuman's Third was the work that first brought him public recognition; and it survives the rigorous test of 22 years since its premiere. Employing baroque forms, the passacaglia and fugue, the chorale and toccata (the latter now universally applied by composers to instrumental scores rather than the keyboard implied by the word root, meaning "touch"), the symphony is entirely contemporary in language and mood.

Less Important

The polyphonic writing has the intricacy of the terrace dynamics of Vivaldian design. Yet it never devolves into arid technical exercise. A melodic and rhythmic impulse propels the symphony, and harmonic considerations are less important. One immediately understands Schuman's explanation of his methods: "I write by singing, not by sitting at the piano."

The violas state the passacaglia's theme is low register, and the theme is then altered in melodic rhythmic inventions, passing without break into a splendid fugue, whose four-bar theme is given by the horns. The Chorale is distinguished by a sturdy yet flowing serenity, related to the passacaglia; and the score ends in a dazzling display of brusque rhyths between the tympani, woodwinds and strings.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 21st program of the 82nd season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus" ..... Liszt
Symphony No. 3 ..... Schuman
Symphony in C Major (Posthumous) ..... Schubert

The extreme complexity of the contrapuntal variations is never allowed to dominate the boldness and warmth of the linear structure. In Schuman's Third the composer's virtuosity is expressive and the cerebral element the basis for a more profound emotionalism than experiment affords.

Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Mazzeo received bows for their handsome solo contributions, and in the Schubert C Major the orchestra and Mr. Leinsdorf achieved transcendent glories. Here was a performance superbly modelled, each phrase and tempo vibrant with a long-breathed line.

Every Detail

The shining clarity of Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation suits the Symphony in every detail. A mud dy rhapsodic fervor or a passionate intensity is invalid; the persuasion that derives from simplicity lends the work (probably No. 9, since the "Gastein" seems apocryphal), the spontaneity and heartbreaking transparency of the art of song. We can add another to the roster of remarkable interpretations that Erich Leinsdorf has given Boston this season.

Incidentally, last week's notice of The Brahms Requiem carried an inadvertant transposition of names between Hermann Prey, the German baritone, who was first-rate in his solo work, and another singer of lesser ability. Bad reviews can effect an artist's career; the fault was mine; and I herewith apologize heartily to Mr. Prey.

Next week the orchestra tours, and returns March 29-30, when Pierre Monteux, as guest conductor, has scheduled Debussy's Instrumental Excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien," Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, No. 6, in F Major, and Overture to "King Stephen," in E-flat; and Hindemith's "Noblissima Visione" Suite from the ballet "Saint Francis."

BOSTON 22

129

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 30, at 8:30 o'clock

PIERRE MONTEUX, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Overture to "King Stephen" in E-flat major, Op. 117

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastorale," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest; Allegro
IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY . . . . . Excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien" (Mystery Play by Gabriele d'Annunzio)

I. Prelude: The Court of the Lilies
II. Dance of Ecstasy and Finale from Act I
III. The Passion (Act III, Scene 4)
IV. The Good Shepherd (Prelude to Act IV)

HINDEMITH . . . . . "Nobilissima Visione," Concert Suite from the Ballet "Saint Francis"

I. Introduction and Rondo
II. March and Pastorale
III. Passacaglia

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 2 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 54,472
MAR 1 1963

New England
Box 2078, Boston 6
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAR 21 1963

Monteux To Lead Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony's "conductor emeritus," Pierre Monteux, and its current director, Erich Leinsdorf, will lead the orchestra in Cambridge and Boston concerts next week.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct next Tuesday's concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, leading the orchestra in Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra (Samuel Mayes, soloist) and Schubert's Symphony in C major. The concert will be televised live over WGBH, Channel 2.

Mr. Monteux will lead next Thursday's open rehearsal and the Friday-Saturday concerts at Symphony Hall. The program will include Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen" and Symphony No. 6, excerpts from Debussy's "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien" and the ballet suite from Hindemith's ballet, "Saint Francis."

BOSTON 22

129

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 30, at 8:30 o'clock

PIERRE MONTEUX, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN.....Overture to "King Stephen" in E-flat major, Op. 117

BEETHOVEN.....Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastorale," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest; Allegro
IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY.....Excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien" (Mystery Play by Gabriele d'Annunzio)

I. Prelude: The Court of the Lilies
II. Dance of Ecstasy and Finale from Act I
III. The Passion (Act III, Scene 4)
IV. The Good Shepherd (Prelude to Act IV)

HINDEMITH.....'Nobilissima Visione," Concert Suite from the Ballet "Saint Francis"

I. Introduction and Rondo
II. March and Pastorale
III. Passacaglia

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 2 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
FEB 28 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 54,472
MAR 1 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAR 2 1 1963

Monteux To Lead Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony's "conductor emeritus," Pierre Monteux, and its current director, Erich Leinsdorf, will lead the orchestra in Cambridge and Boston concerts next week.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct next Tuesday's concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, leading the orchestra in Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra (Samuel Mayes, soloist) and Schubert's Symphony in C major. The concert will be televised live over WGBH, Channel 2.

Mr. Monteux will lead next Thursday's open rehearsal and the Friday-Saturday concerts at Symphony Hall. The program will include Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen" and Symphony No. 6, excerpts from Debussy's "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien" and the ballet suite from Hindemith's ballet, "Saint Francis."

130

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 30 1963

Music Review

Monteux at Symphony Lights a Few Candles

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under guest conductor Pierre Monteux, gave the following program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall: Beethoven, Overture to "King Stephen," Op. 117; Beethoven Symphony No. 6, in F Major ("Pastorale"); Debussy, Excerpts from "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian"; Hindemith, "Nobilissima Visione" from the ballet "St. Francis."

By ROBERT DUMM

Anyone over eight-years-old suspects that the best sort of birthday present is the one you give someone else. Pierre Monteux is 88 next Thursday, and from the generous concert he conducted yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, he is sure of it.

The little man with his walrus moustache and Legion d'Honneur red ribbon traced his way to the podium to a standing ovation. He wore the same benign smile he had during 1920-24, the years he served as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony.

He began with Beethoven's "King Stephen" Overture, a curtain-raiser that shows the composer in his Eighteenth-Century manner, and a rather heavy approximation of good clean theatrical fun.

But people were eyeing Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, (the "Pastorale"), and soon settled back for something altogether proven: the music, the conductor, and the eternal bliss of Summer in the open. Monteux conceived his musical landscape objectively, like one of those tinted idylls of Poussin. He let it have its way, in a sense, the fluid sounds of clarinets and flutes. Even the burbles and double exposures carried a deliberate charm. His left hand stayed ready to check unruliness in the passage work, and dampen any swelling before the bursting point.

Even the famous thunderstorm of the Third Movement happened on a painted canvas, without a threat or crackle. Sometimes the crescendos and diminuendos semed left to drift under the flexibly waving hands. Only at the last, came a gleaming breakthrough of vivid expression.

Then came excerpts from Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian" and totally turned the tables. No one can be objective about his youth, and Monteux had played his own role in Debussy's Paris of 1911, the year this piece was first produced.

Where the Beethoven had seemed Impressionistic, Debussy came out all Realist, on a first-name basis of understanding. Monteux became all hawkeye and energy. The waving hands took on vigor with decision, and the left index finger began to point commands. The total sound was kept restrained, befitting the mystery of the text, but here and there, the conductor would unfold a held chord, or coax the strings to a height of colorful appeal.

His exalted command held firm for Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione," from his "Saint Francis" ballet. This score is vintage Hindemith; cast in traditional forms with untraditional sounds that promise to break the limits of counterpoint, but never do. It is duly crafted, with themes and counterthemes, leadings and counterleadings, idea after busy idea, till the mind fairly blacks out with so much cleverness.

The score concluded with a labored Passacaglia, which Monteux converted from bigness into magnificence, which as birthday presents go, takes the cake.

Next week's Boston Symphony concert includes: Weber's Overture to "Der Freischutz," Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No 5 in E Minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
APR 4 1963

With the BSO

Monteux is Guest Conductor

By ALLAN SLY

One could let Pierre Monteux's magnificent BSO performance last week carry many meanings. One might wonder whether he had indeed ever left Boston — in 1924 or since — except intermittently. One could rediscover a Beethoven that sang, inwardly, and whose proportions strove for classic perfection while the driving impulse was to reach beyond. One could not but reflect on youth and age — and on what we in our time have done to Beethoven that he has to be redisclosed for us today by a man not far short of ninety.

Then note the choice of program: After the Beethoven King Stephen Overture (first time in 44 years) and Symphony No. 6, two works followed that elected to go along with religion's quest for ultimate meaning — the French one in terms of the dance (Debussy's Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien), the German one in terms of the dance (Hindemith's Saint Francis Suite, "Nobilissima Visione").

And the evening with Monteux had still other facets — the consummate ease of communication he possesses — so that the audience can tell what is coming even before the orchestra gets to it; and the total absorption, the utter self-identification with what he is doing, which seems reflected in an unusually integrated orchestral sound — not so brilliant as brightly compelling, not so overwhelming as warmly convincing, not so shattering as suitably emphatic.

All in all, this program leaves a listener with an impression of complete rectitude — aptness to the season, to the occasion, honoring the art of music, dealing fairly with each composer presented, ensuring handsomely the collaboration of the performers. Incidentally the whole percussion section typified this — the timpani and cymbals in particular — but the evening glowed with such successes. One will measure oneself and one's insights, retrospectively, in terms of such revealment. Of such an order, then, is the meaning of Monteux's program to this observer.

As for other reflections, a not-too-familiar work of Debussy should be a natural for Boston these days; and by what an oblique approach did this genius contain his commitment to subject matter drawn from the chronicles of the Christian faith. It would seem, from the evidence, that his supreme artistic instinct led him where his intellect alone could not have.

The Hindemith performance was timely, in view of the reported scarity of these lately. Surely the Visione and other works of this master ought to be available to us often. They stand as a monument to that aspect of the German genius that seems most akin to ourselves, most in line from our common inheritance.

And one can revisit Beethoven and find him nearer than ever, with Monteux on the podium. This is the marvel, that everything sounded so right. And after London, Osaka, Amsterdam, Vienna, Geneva and Paris, Monteux is to be with us again at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 54,472
APR 3 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
BANGOR, Me.
Circ. 78,016
APR 4 1963

Pierre Monteux

London Symphony 'Ices' Monteux 88th Cake

By JOHN F. McDONOUGH

BOSTON (UPI) — "You don't celebrate odd numbers like 88. The real celebration should be on the 90th."

This was Pierre Monteux's jovial reply Tuesday when a newsman asked the world famous symphony conductor how he planned to observe his birthday Thursday.

Monteux was born in Paris and still has a French accent. But he came to this country early in life and for many years has proudly described himself as "a voting American citizen of Hancock, Maine." His home there is the family homestead of his wife, the former Doris Hodgkins.

A short, stout, genial fellow with a white walrus mustache, Monteux is utterly indefatigable despite his great age.

"Thursday, my birthday," he said, "I arrive in London from Boston by air at 7 a.m. I will sleep five hours. Then I will rehearse the London Symphony (of which he is music director) in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Then I will work with the soloists, then have dinner, and then go to bed."

When, at 86, he signed as music director of the London Symphony, he insisted on a 25-year option. Monteux Tuesday night completed a series of concerts as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, of which he was regular conductor way back in 1919.

On April 6, 8 and 9 he will conduct the London Symphony. And on April 10 he conducts the first of four concerts in Osaka, Japan. On April 25 he will be back in Europe—for the 75th anniversary of the famous Concertgebouw orchestra in Amsterdam.

In May he will complete the regular season of the London Symphony and travel with it June 1 to Vienna for the Festival there. He also will conduct this orchestra in Salzburg, Munich, Stuttgart, Zurich, Geneva, Basle, Lyons and Paris.

Then he will return to America to be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

Asked when he planned to retire, Monteux smilingly replied: "Retire seems to be an English word I have not yet learned."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
APR 1 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910
MAR 30 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
MAR 30 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
MAR 30 1963

Hub Audience Gives Pierre Monteux Big 88th Birthday Wish

BOSTON (AP)—Decorous Boston Symphony Hall was a scene of wild, tumultuous applause and cheering Friday as more than 2600 symphony patrons rose to their feet in a tremendous ovation for the conducting of an 88-year-old French-born director.

Pierre Monteux came to the famous Boston orchestra in 1919 and continued as musical director until 1925, after which he directed the San Francisco orchestra for 17 years and later conducted other symphony organizations.

Hailed in Boston now as the dean of active symphony conductors, he returned Friday with his 88th birthday, April 4, only five days distant. Orchestra and audience rose in applause.

132 TUESDAY 9 & 10. SUNDAY 6.

Sixth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 7, at 3:00 o'clock

PROKOFIEV.....“Classical” Symphony, Op. 25

I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale

LISZT.....Symphonic Poem No. 4, “Orpheus”

KODÁLY.....Suite from the Comic Opera, “Háry János”

I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT.....Symphony in C major (Posthumous)

I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 2, at 8:30 o'clock

PIERRE MONTEUX, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN.....Overture to “King Stephen” in E-flat major, Op. 117

BEETHOVEN.....Symphony No. 6, in F major, “Pastorale,” Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro; Thunderstorm; Tempest; Allegro
IV. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY.....Excerpts from “Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien” (Mystery Play by Gabriele d'Annunzio)

I. Prelude: The Court of the Lilies
II. Dance of Ecstasy and Finale from Act I
III. The Passion (Act III, Scene 4)
IV. The Good Shepherd (Prelude to Act IV)

HINDEMITH.....“Nobilissima Visione,” Concert Suite from the Ballet “Saint Francis”

I. Introduction and Rondo
II. March and Pastorale
III. Passacaglia

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

Tenth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 9, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV.....“Classical” Symphony, Op. 25

I. Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Gavotte
IV. Finale

LISZT.....Symphonic Poem No. 4, “Orpheus”

KODÁLY.....Suite from the Comic Opera, “Háry János”

I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
II. Viennese Musical Clock
III. Song
IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
V. Intermezzo
VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT.....Symphony in C major (Posthumous)

I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON 23.

133

...SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twenty-third Program

...AFTERNOON, APRIL 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 6, at 8:30 o'clock

WE...BER ..... Overture to "Der Freischütz"

STR...INSKY ..... Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

I. Toccata
II. Aria I
III. Aria II
IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Andante; Allegro con anima
II. Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza
III. Valse: Allegro moderato
IV. Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1417]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
APR 6 1962

Silverstein Symphony Soloist

Concertmaster Heard In Stravinsky Concerto

By Harold Rogers

For his penultimate brace of concerts this season Erich Leinsdorf has chosen the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony as the pièce de résistance. This was the first time that Boston Symphony subscribers had heard their new conductor in Tchaikovsky, and he gave them a surprise or two.

His pacing at times was decidedly different, and in the finale he put the orchestra through a test that doubtless left his musicians gasping for air. Neat and brilliant, no matter how fast the music there was always a place for everything and everything in its place. This combination of speed and accuracy is truly an achievement.

Once I asked Koussevitzky to tell me how fast that presto should go, and he said that it should be no faster than the musicians could play without loss of clean articulation.

Under Munch the players, when whipped to a frenzy, played what notes they could and let the others go hang. Under Leinsdorf they have had a season of careful drilling; we have known they were in training, but to what degree we had no idea until the finale of the Fifth. When Leinsdorf lays on the lash, they play everything, but fast.

But in the first movement he took a favorite impassioned melody a little too spaciously, thus desentimentalizing it more than some of us would have preferred. Many sophisticated listeners, of course, have complained that Tchaikovsky is too sentimental anyway; yet take away his sentiment, and you've got little left. A little sob here and a little sigh there are all to the good.

Certain of Mr. Leindorf's rubatos broke the tension; the Valse, without the usual touch of schmalz, smiled a little too sweetly; the delicate interlacing of melodies in the Andante was traced with great delicacy; and in the Finale he handled that sustained dominant chord so well that no one could have felt that the end had come when it had not.

The Friday afternoon concert was further enhanced by the soloistic graces of Joseph Silverstein, the concertmaster, who was featured in the Stravinsky Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra. Economical not only in the length of each of the four movements but also in its scoring, the piece is a masterwork of precision, put together like a Swiss watch; and Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Silverstein elucidated the whole thing with a marvelous clarity and amiability.

Mr. Silverstein shares Mr. Leinsdorf's love of accuracy, beauty of tone, eloquence of phrase. The two make a team. May they be heard together more often.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened with a pleasing reading of Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," in which the horns shone forth in a lovely mellow light. Now that Mr. Leinsdorf is completing his first season in Symphony Hall, one is also keenly aware of the change in the string tone that he has made in the Boston Symphony. No longer dry and brilliant in Munch's French style, the strings are now melting, mellow, suave, reminiscent perhaps of Koussevitzky's, yet somehow different. Koussevitzky's had more iridescence, more fire.

Let us hope that Mr. Leinsdorf is headed in this direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
APR 4 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 31 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 30 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 31 1963
Section ...

ROBERT FOUNTAIN, conducting the 64-voice Oberlin College Choir in Old South Church next Sunday night at 7.

Concert Calendar For Week

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be soloist in a performance of the Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra by Stravinsky at the orchestra concerts on Friday and Saturday this week. For this program Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Overture to "Der Freischutz" by Weber and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

Tuesday's concert in Symphony Hall will be conducted by Pierre Monteux. With this concert Mr. Monteux concludes a week as guest conductor of the orchestra. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "King Stephen" and the Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"; excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien" by Debussy and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" Concert Suite from the Ballet "Saint Francis."

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the final Open Rehearsal of the season on Thursday evening.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon series are reminded that because of Good Friday next week's concert will be presented on Thursday, April 11.

BOSTON 23. 133

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE

Twenty-third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 6, at 8:30 o'clock

WEBER ..... Overture to "Der Freischütz"

STRAVINSKY ..... Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

I. Toccata
II. Aria I
III. Aria II
IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64

I. Andante; Allegro con anima
II. Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza
III. Valse: Allegro moderato
IV. Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1417]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
APR 6 1962

Silverstein Symphony Soloist

Concertmaster Heard In Stravinsky Concerto

By Harold Rogers

For his penultimate brace of concerts this season Erich Leinsdorf has chosen the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony as the piece de resistance. This was the first time that Boston Symphony subscribers have heard their new conductor in Tchaikovsky, and he gave them a surprise or two.

His pacing at times was decidedly different, and in the finale he put the orchestra through a test that doubtless left his musicians gasping for air. Neat and brilliant as it is for how fast the music can go, was always a place for everything and everything in its place. This combination of speed and accuracy is truly an achievement.

Once I asked Koussevitzky to tell me how fast that passage should go, and he said that it should be no faster than the musicians could play without loss of clean articulation.

Under [illegible] when whipped to a frenzy played what notes they could and let the others go hang. Under Leinsdorf they have had a season of careful drilling; we have known they were in training, but to what degree we had no idea until the finale of the Fifth. When Leinsdorf lays on the lash, they play everything, but fast.

But in the first movement he took a favorite impassioned melody a little too seriously, thus [illegible] more than some of us would dicated listeners of course, have complained that Tchaikovsky is too sentimental anyway; yet take away his sentiment, and you've got little left. A little sob here and a little sigh there are all to the good.

Certain of Mr. Leindorf's rubatos broke the tension; the Valse, without the usual touch of schmalz, smiled a little too sweetly; the delicate interlacing of melodies in the Andante was traced with great delicacy, and in the Finale he handled that sustained dominant chord so well that no one could have felt that the end had come when it had not.

The Friday afternoon concert was further enhanced by the soloistic graces of Joseph Silverstein, the concertmaster, who was featured in the Stravinsky Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra. Economical not only in the length of each of the four movements but also in its scoring, the piece is a masterwork of precision, put together like a Swiss watch, and Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Silverstein elucidated the whole thing with a marvelous clarity and amiability.

Mr. Silverstein shares Mr. Leinsdorf's love of accuracy, beauty of tone, eloquence of phrase. The two make a team. May they be heard together more often.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened with a pleasing reading of Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," in which the horns shone forth in a lovely mellow light. Now that Mr. Leinsdorf is completing his first season in Symphony Hall, one is also keenly aware of the change in the string tone that he has made in the Boston Symphony. No longer dry and brilliant in Munch's French style, the strings are now melting, mellow, suave, reminiscent perhaps of Koussevitzky's, yet somehow different. Koussevitzky's had [illegible] iridescence,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
APR 4 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
MAR 31 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
MAR 30 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 31 196[illegible]

ROBERT FOUNTAIN conducting the 64-voice Oberlin College Choir in Old South Church, next Sunday night at 7.

Concert Calendar For Week

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be soloist in a performance of the Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra by Stravinsky at the orchestra concerts on Friday and Saturday this week. For this program Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the Overture to "Der Freischuts" by Weber and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

Tuesday's concert in Symphony Hall will be conducted by Pierre Monteux. With this concert Mr. Monteux concludes a week as guest conductor of the orchestra. The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "King Stephen" and the Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale"; excerpts from "Le Martyre de Saint Sebastien" by Debussy and Hindemith's "Nobilissima Visione" Concert Suite from the Ballet "Saint Francis."

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the final Open Rehearsal of the season on Thursday morning.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon series are reminded that because of Good Friday next week's concert will be presented

134

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
APR 6 1963

Music Review

Boston Symphony Plays The Tchaikovsky Fifth

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave its 23d Friday concert in Symphony Hall. The program, to be repeated tonight at 8:30 consisted of Weber's Overture to "Der Freischuetz," Stravinsky's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein, soloist), and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64.

By MARGO MILLER

Mastery of program making is said to result from one part inspiration to nine parts perspiration. So the coupling of a Stravinsky piece with a Tchaikovsky symphony on Friday's Boston Symphony Orchestra program looked, at first glance, to be simply an easy way of including Russian composers in this season's concerts. But their music together made interesting listening.

Tchaikovsky, for all the times he slips in his own bathos, was writing in 1888 (the year of Friday's symphony, the Fifth) music still in the classical spirit. The deep sonorities which open and barrel through the music must not be mistaken for heavy or involved writing.

Under Erich Leinsdorf's direction the performance underlined the clarity of parts. And the accuracy of the wind playing (horns full, trumpets crisp, bassoons mellow) served his end further. It was the resonance of massed cellos, particularly in the finale but elsewhere too, which unleashed that melancholy with which most people identify Tchaikovsky.

Leinsdorf certainly didn't deny the passion of the second movement. The general instructions for tempo are marked "with a little license." Where the conductor inserted his authority I won't pretend to say, but the whole movement, with its explosive climax and chaste ending, was glorious. And the orchestra's well-known agility, plus Leinsdorf's way of keeping unmuddied all voices, gave the vivace of the final movement thrusting momentum.

Stravinsky, on the other hand, looked back consciously to the classical idiom for his Violin Concerto in D. The instrumental accompaniment is very light, mostly winds or a block of strings. The sound is high, with little color against which dances the solo fiddle. The concerto's economy was a delightful contrast to the massive Tchaikovsky Fifth, even a contrast to those "30-minute" Mozart concertos in which Stravinsky thought the composer perhaps overstated his ideas.

However succinct the Stravinsky concerto is, it gives the soloist a great deal to do. And gracefully. Joseph Silverstein, the orchestra's concertmaster, lent his sweet-toned fiddle to the first aria and his sure technique to the shifting rhythms and effects throughout.

As a concerto, the Stravinsky is probably less gratifying to a soloist's vanity than those of Beethoven, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky. By featuring the solo violin nearly all the time, the composer robs the soloist of the moments when, out of nowhere, his instrument bursts through the orchestral tangle.

Perhaps this is Stravinsky's little joke. Elsewhere his humor is engaged in the last movement's capriccio, reminiscent of "L'Histoire du Soldat." And here the rapport between Silverstein and Stravinsky was at its best, elegantly turned cadenzas of witty music.

Weber's Overture to "Der Freischuetz" opened the program. I wish I could whip up more enthusiasm for the piece. It's exciting, to be sure. It shows off the orchestra and the Boston Symphony horns were secure in the music Friday. But the overture seems like so much pit-music, the kind played at musical comedies as the audience rustles in. Themes from the opera dip one into another, and on a program otherwise noted for its cohesion the Weber was a poor curtain raiser.

The Boston Symphony concludes its 82d season next Thursday and Saturday with Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" (Prelude to Act I; Transformation Scene, Act I; Prelude to Act II; and Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale, Act III).

AMUSEMENTS AMUSEMENTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
APR 6 1963

The Symphony

Tchaikovsky 5th As Fiery Dialogue

By ROBERT TAYLOR

This weekend's program at Symphony, amiable and melodic, sparkles like a shaft of spring sunlight: Weber's opulent overture, the unpretentious Stravinsky Violin Concerto and an unorthodox but captivating account of the Tchaikovsky Fifth, emphasizing the composer's classical logic.

Although Joseph Silverstein's playing of the Stravinsky deserves praise, the E minor Symphony was in many ways the most exciting musical experience of the afternoon. It is a score that incessant repetition has tarnished; its themes and melodies have been vulgarized, popularized, mechanized; even the tone deaf, no doubt know it inside out.

To take music so familiar and restore the pristine freshness of the original artistic impulse is an achievement — and Mr. Leinsdorf may be credited with a brilliant conception.

Slavic Manner

Through Dr. Koussevitzky we have approached Tchaikovsky's Fifth in the Slavic manner, a darkly-colored, dreaming, romantic statement [illegible] by the glow of the French horn among veils of brooding introspection. Mr. Leinsdorf has the courage to dispense with the cantabile sadness. Instead he presents the Fifth Symphony as a fiery dialogue that sounds forcefully and gathers its thunders into a sustained power worthy of Beethoven.

In short, the symphony holds together through means essentially dramatic rather than lyrical. The meticulous attention to phrasing and dynamics has the effect of emphasizing the structure; and if any symphony shows internal evidence of having been written to a programmatic narrative, it is Tchaikovsky's.

The thematic repetition, the motto of the first subject of the allegro which appears in the finale, the emotional pattern, declare the work as firmly blocked-out as the orderly edifices of classicism. So that Mr. Leinsdorf's reading, which traces a distinct curve from the andante opening, loses the aimless textural sweetness in a bold evolution of vigor.

Does Not Linger

He does not linger over the clarinet and bassoon melancholia of the first movement, but briskly proceeds to develop the score; the poignant horn and sinister strings are momentary episodes. While the tempos are slow enough, the tread of lamentation is averted by sheer understatement. The waltz has a spare, touching outline. The last movement surges at tempestuous speed, yet with clarity. Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony emerges, thanks to Mr. Leinsdorf, divested of fustian sentiment. One can spin out the maerial, linger over it, but his is a statement whose directness attains its own songful poetry and is, I suspect, more in conformity with modern taste than overblown rhetoric.

Stravinsky's Concerto in D has not been offered at Symphony since 1941, and Mr. Silverstein, the concertmaster, playing from notes, presented a lambent traversal. The Concerto does not reach the level of those of Prokofieff, Piston or Walton for the contemporary violin, but is a perky and congenial affair all the same. Stravinsky's pages propel the soloist into relatively calm technical displays. This reticence may perhaps be attributed to the composer's wary concern toward an instrument then—unfamiliar to him. But Stravinsky is too able a craftsman not to possess a thorough intellectual comprehension of violinistic capacity; and he has managed a subtle, neat and decorative piece that works exceedingly well within self-imposed limitations.

Spacious Style

Mr. Silverstein played with a warm tone and a spacious style. His bowing was deft and he conveyed the sprightly essence of the concerto without mannerism. The idiom calls for a rhapsodic grasp and a broad melodic treatment with occasional astringent asides, and the soloist met every challenge of the fingerboard or the spiccato bow with easy authority.

The delight of this minor music was preceded by a major neglected pleasure: the overture to "Der Freichutz." Of its kind, it is well-nigh perfect. The material, drawn from the opera, does not have the effect of carpentering, and when one considers how colorful, revolutionary and exotic this must have seemed in 1821, respect for von Weber's accomplishment mount. Its still a magnificently listenable score, and received a stirring performance.

Owing to Good Friday, the final concerts of the season next week fall on Thursday afternoon and Saturday night. Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Brahm's Symphony No. 3, in F major, Op. 90, and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal."

BOSTON 24

135

Twenty-fourth Program

...AY AFTERNOON, APRIL 11, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 13, at 8:30 o'clock

B... ..... Symphony No. 3, in F major, Op. 90

I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante
III. Poco allegretto
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

WAGNER ..... Excerpts from "Parsifal"

Prelude to Act I
Transformation Scene, Act I
Prelude to Act II
Prelude, Good Friday Music, and Finale, Act III

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
APR 9 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 10 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
APR 7 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 50,144
APR 7 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 450,303
APR 7 1963

Electronic Bells Used For Wagner

Symphony-goers tomorrow nd Saturday will be the first American audiences (and perhaps the first in the world) to hear bells sound in Wagner's "Parsifal," in the deep tones he composer wanted.

When Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, selected orchestral excerpts from the opera as the final work of his first season in Boston, the problem of this "Parsifal" bells once more presented itself. As originally written by Wagner, the bell tones went down to 40 cycles per second (middle C is 211.6 cycles per second). To produce this sound, a bell would have to be colossal, weighing nearly 600 tons. Numerous experiments have been conducted in an attempt to reproduce Wagner's tone as it appeared in his score, but none have been completely successful. On most occasions bell tones, an octave higher than Wagner's score indicated, have been used.

The orchestra's librarian, Victor Alpert, and Leinsdorf began a search for an instrument which would duplicate the bell tone as written by Wagner. Alpert with Charles Smith, percussionist in the orchestra, visited the Schulmerich Carillons, Inc., of Sellersville, Pa., where company engineers agreed to attempt the reproduction of the "Parsifal" bell tones. Following extensive experimentation, the conductor felt that the sound produced by the Schulmerich engineers could be tried at Symphony Hall.

Tomorrow and Saturday Symphony Hall audiences will hear a tone created by the carillon company from miniature bronze bells whose sound has been magnified up to 600,000 times, thus reproducing the tone of bells weighing 1,280,000 pounds. And unlike regular bells the intensity of the electronic bells can be completely controlled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
APR 6 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
APR 11 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
APR 7 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
APR 7 1963

B.S.O. to Close Season With Brahms and Wagner

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its Winter season in Symphony Hall with four concerts this week.

On Monday, Apr. 15 the orchestra departs for a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 cities in this country and Canada. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct all the concerts on the tour, which is the first the orchestra has taken across the continent since 1963.

The four remaining concerts will be given today at 3 p.m., Tuesday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Because of Good Friday, the regular Friday concert will be given Thursday at 2:15 p.m.

For the Thursday-Saturday programs Leinsdorf will conduct Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal." Included in the "Parsifal" excerpts are the Prelude to Act I; Transformation Scene, Act I; the Prelude to Act II, and the Prelude, Good Friday Music, and finale from Act III.

This afternoon's program, which will be repeated on Tuesday evening, will consist of Prokofiev's Classical Symphony; Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus"; Suite from the Comic Opera, "Hary Janos" by Kodaly; and Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous).

Berj Zamkochian will give the final recital in the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series today at 6 p.m. Music director at St. Theresa's Church, West Roxbury, he has performed on many occasions with the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops. His program will begin with Antonio Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor (organ transcription by Bach) and will include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor; Three Chorale Preludes by Brahms; Julius Reubke's Sonata on the 94th Psalm; DeMaleingreau's "Le Tumulte au Pretoire"; Scherzo by Litaize; and Toccata (dedicated to Berj Zamkochian) by Peloquin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
APR 4 1963

Symphony End... Winter Schedule

The Boston Symphony Orchestra wi... conclude its winter Symphony Hall sched... ule next week with four concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Brahms... Symphony No. 3 and excerpts from Wag... ner's "Parsifal" Thursday, April 11, a... :15 p.m. and Saturday, April 13, 8:30 p.m.

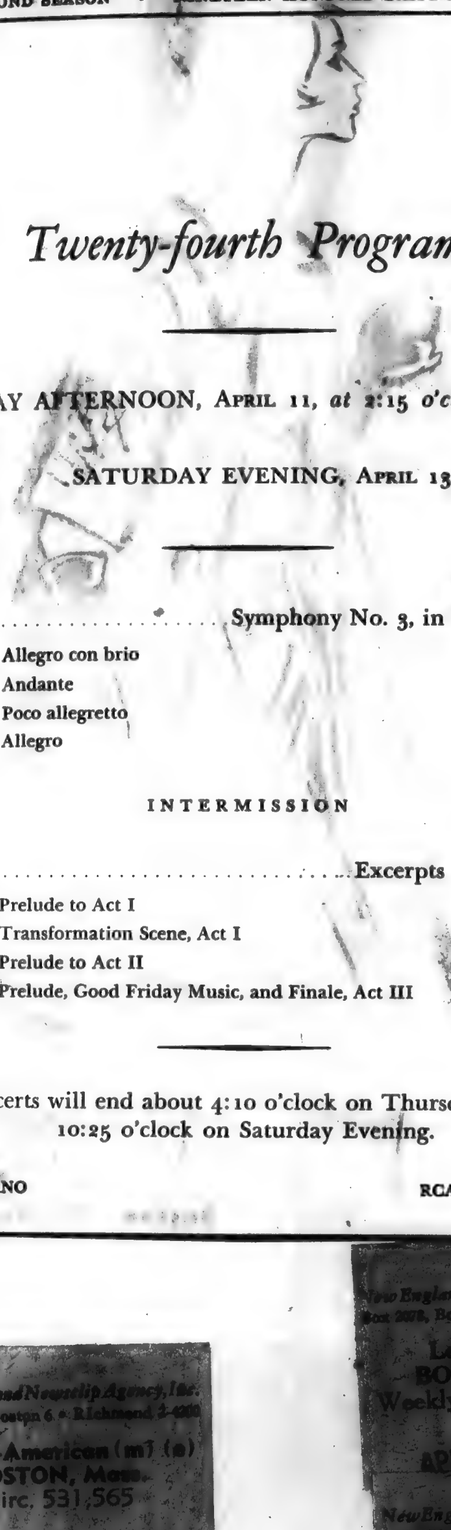
On Sunday, April 7, at 3 p.m. and Tuesday, April 9, at 8:30 p.m., the orchestra will perform Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, "Liszt's Symphonic Poem "Orpheus," Kodaly's suite from the comic opera "Hary Janos" and Schubert's Symphony in C major.

On April 15, the orchestra will leave Boston for a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 American and Canadian cities. It is the first such trip the group has taken in 10 years.

BOSTON 24

135

EIGHTY-SECOND SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-TWO–SIXTY-THREE



Twenty-fourth Program

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 11, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 13, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... Symphony No. 3, in F major, Op. 90

I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante
III. Poco allegretto
IV. Allegro

INTERMISSION

WAGNER ..... Excerpts from "Parsifal"

Prelude to Act I
Transformation Scene, Act I
Prelude to Act II
Prelude, Good Friday Music, and Finale, Act III

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc. Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m) BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 177,889 APR 9 1963
Sunday Standard-Times NEW BEDFORD, Mass. Circ. 51,367 APR 7 1963
Sunday Republican WATERBURY, Conn. Circ. 50,144 APR 7 1963
Sunday Advertiser BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 450,303 APR 7 1963
Evening Globe BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 141,660 APR 10 1963

Electronic Bells Used For Wagner

Symphony-goers tomorrow and Saturday will be the first American audiences (and perhaps the first in the world) to hear bells sound in Wagner's "Parsifal," in the deep tones the composer wanted.

When Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, selected orchestral excerpts from the opera as the final work of his first season in Boston, the problem of this "Parsifal" bells once more presented itself. As originally written by Wagner, the bell tones went down to 40 cycles per second (middle C is 511.6 cycles per second). To produce this sound, a bell would have to be colossal, weighing nearly 600 tons. Numerous experiments have been conducted in an attempt to reproduce Wagner's tone as it appeared in his score, but none have been completely successful. On most occasions bell tones, an octave higher than Wagner's score indicated, have been used.

The orchestra's librarian, Victor Alpert, and Leinsdorf began a search for an instrument which would duplicate the bell tone as written by Wagner. Alpert with Charles Smith, percussionist in the orchestra, visited the Schulmerich Carillons, Inc., of Sellersville, Pa., where company engineers agreed to attempt the reproduction of the "Parsifal" bell tones. Following extensive experimentation, the conductor felt that the sound produced by the Schulmerich engineers could be tried at Symphony Hall.

Tomorrow and Saturday Symphony Hall audiences will hear a tone created by the carillon company from miniature bronze bells whose sound has been magnified up to 600,000 times, thus reproducing the tone of bells weighing 1,280,000 pounds. And unlike regular bells, the intensity of the electronic bells can be completely controlled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc. Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (a) BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 531,565 APR 6 1963
Sunday Herald BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 289,439 APR 7 1963
Patriot-Ledger (e) QUINCY, Mass. Circ. 48,500 APR 4 1963
Ledger-Times BOSTON, Mass. Weekly Circ. 14,000 APR 11 1963
Sunday Globe BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 445,834 APR 7 1963

Symphony End... Winter Schedule

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its Winter Symphony Hall series the next week with four concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" Thursday, April 11, at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday, April 13, at 8:30 p.m.

On Sunday, April 7, at 3 p.m. and Tuesday, April 9, at 8:30 p.m., the orchestra will perform Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, "List's Symphonic Poem "Orpheus" Kodaly's suite from the comic opera "Hary Janos" and Schubert's Symphony in C major.

On April 15, the orchestra will leave Boston for a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 American and Canadian cities. It is the first such trip the group has taken in 10 years.

B.S.O. to Close Season With Brahms and Wagner

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its Winter season in Symphony Hall with four concerts this week.

On Monday, Apr. 15 the orchestra departs for a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 cities in this country and Canada. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct all the concerts on the tour, which is the first the orchestra has taken across the continent since 1963.

The four remaining concerts will be given today at 3 p.m., Tuesday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Because of Good Friday, the regular Friday concert will be given Thursday at 2:15 p.m.

For the Thursday-Saturday programs Leinsdorf will conduct Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal." Included in the "Parsifal" excerpts are the Prelude to Act I; Transformation Scene, Act I; the Prelude to Act II; and the Prelude, Good Friday Music, and finale from Act III.

This afternoon's program, which will be repeated on Tuesday evening, will consist of Prokofiev's Classical Symphony; Liszt's Symphonic Poem No. 4, "Orpheus"; Suite from the Comic Opera, "Hary Janos" by Kodaly; and Schubert's Symphony in C major (Posthumous).

Berj Zamkochian will give the final recital in the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series today at 6 p.m. Music director at St. Theresa's Church, West Roxbury, he has performed on many occasions with the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops. His program will begin with Antonio Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor (organ transcription by Bach) and will include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor; Three Chorale Preludes by Brahms; Julius Reubke's Sonata on the 94th Psalm; DeMaleingreau's "Le Tumulte au Pretoire"; Scherzo by Litaize; and Toccata (dedicated to Berj Zamkochian) by Peloquin.

53 2
Tel. WOrth 2-3797
AMERICAN
Press Clipping Service
Inc.
119 Nassau Street
New York 38, N. Y.
From
MUSICAL AMERICA

MASSACHUSETTS

Balancing Accounts

Boston.—Now that Erich Leinsdorf is completing his first season as music director of the Boston Symphony, some balancing of accounts might be made—an analysis, perhaps, of his shortcomings; the crediting of his successes.

Leinsdorf's underlying problem, over which he rises from time to time, is his noninvolvement with the music. One might oversimplify by saying that the music is there and the listener here; the twain seldom meet.

His concerts, more often than not, are an objective experience; subjectivity, the essential quality of music making in its highest sense, is too seldom on hand. Mr. Leinsdorf appears to stand before the music and to observe it, while marshalling it into a marvelous sense of order.

It is truly impressive the way he can manage the various elements, balancing this choir against that, evoking a tone, molding a phrase, controlling dynamics. He has brought an order to the Boston Symphony that has not been heard in many a year. Under his guidance, even in these few months, it has become truly an exquisite instrument.

But the restoration of discipline solves only a part of the problem. The listener is now more aware of the way the music is played than he is of the music itself. An intellectual awareness is one thing; being emotionally moved is something far more important.

It has long been established that if the performing artist is objective about his music making, his listeners will share the same experience. If a conductor wishes to bring his audience subjectively into the music, then he must be the first to enter in. What he does, his listeners will do also. They cannot help themselves.

Music is more than the correct ordering of beautiful sounds. In its highest expression it must provide something that goes beyond the sound itself—call it poetry, call it soul, call it the inner meaning or the substance. It is this extra quality that true music lovers are seeking; when they find it not, they are cheated and they know it.

The Boston Symphony, however suave, however polished, however elegant, is capable of expressing the most recondite of musical moods. The production of ordered sound is not its ultimate goal; it is merely the means to this desired end.

Let us hope in the long run that Mr. Leinsdorf is not incapable of subjectivity; that his shortcomings are merely part of a period of adjustment during which he has assumed many added responsibilities; and that he will soon take a giant step to a higher level of musicianship.

Leinsdorf's programs have ranged rather widely through the Central European and Russian repertoire. Beethoven, Schumann, and Brahms have been there, of course; the Austrians have figured more heavily by helpings of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Schoenberg, Mahler, Bruckner, and Richard Strauss. Dvorak and Kodaly have come in for a share; even Sibelius put in an appearance after a drought during the Munchian period. Stravinsky, Shostakovich and Prokofieff have had their due. There is no question that Mr. Leinsdorf has been building programs of considerable imagination.

Memorable among Mr. Leinsdorf's recent concerts was a Prokofieff program in which he opened with the "Classical" Symphony (had the first three movements been taken faster, it would have sparkled more); the Concerto for Cello (with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, as the masterful soloist); and the Sixth Symphony.

Though there are greater emotional depths in the Sixth than Mr. Leinsdorf was able to plumb, the final Vivace raced along winningly, the broad melodies spinning out like banners over galloping rhythms, and with climaxes enough to win a salvo of bravos.

When Mr. Leinsdorf finds himself before a chorus, something magical happens. He comes into his own. Here his years in the opera house stand him in good stead.

His way with the Brahms "Requiem" provided the listener with a truly moving experience. With the forces of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society under his control, he drew forth a performance that shone with radiant light, that rang with an ecstatic rapture. —HAROLD ROGERS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
APR 18 1963

End of Season

Leinsdorf Conducts Final BSO Concert

By ALLAN SLY

Mr. Leinsdorf closed this symphony season with Brahms III and a generous succession of Parsifal excerpts. Time was when such a program would have been inconceivable, as containing the ideological equivalent of fissionable elements in critical proportions. But in these latter days we are experts at synthesis and flatter ourselves that we are not as our grandsires were. In calm detachment, then, we afforded Mr. Leinsdorf the opportunity to display this sumptuous tapestry, these echoes of former ecstasies, and we warmly and gratefully endorsed the proceedings by sustained, end-of-another-season and please-give-us-more-in-the-future applause.

This listener, having heard the orchestra under two guest conductors recently, and indeed having heard Mr. Leinsdorf in action but rarely, was quite startled at the new, unfamiliar, tightly focused sound and the close-hauled manner of going in the Brahms. But it had him sitting on the edge of his seat with eagerness to catch every remarkable detail of balance, each nicety of inner adjustment, each felicity of phrase-articulation.

If ever Brahms sounded Apollonian this was the time; and yet a warm tenderness was present too. It was a performance that etched itself on the memory, that set a new standard of precision. If it warmed the heart it was by way of one's judgment, one's alertness to style, one's sense of the appropriate. There are many whose hearts are stirred in these ways.

When we had caught our breath again we had perforce a different role to play: we had to superimpose what we heard upon a not-too-clearly-recalled web of suffering, redemption through grace, immolation and the like. Mr. Leinsdorf is better at this than some of us; we are no longer very good Wagnerites, but we tried hard and we at least realized what we were missing. Boston has managed without some of Parsifal for 20 years and without some other parts of it for 30 years. Not a very good record: perhaps we need more of it next year, though I for one would prefer some of the Parsifal progeny, such as Elgar's Dream of Gerontius.

The B.S.O. seemed as apt in the dramatic catharsis as it had in the Hellenic transports of the Brahms. Its reflection of its new conductor's individuality is reassuring and evidently genuine. We can look forward to next season. Meantime Tanglewood beckons — and thereby hangs another tale or two.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
APR 12 1963

Music Review

Brahms, Wagner Close Leinsdorf's 1st Year

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave its 24th and final program of the Winter season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The concert, to be repeated Saturday night at 8:30, was comprised of Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90, and orchestral excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal": Prelude to Act I; Transformation Scene, Act I; Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale, Act III.

By MARGO MILLER

Two profoundly personal works, for composer and conductor alike, were played with extraordinary commitment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the program concluding its 82d season. For Erich Leinsdorf, until this season the Metropolitan Opera's Wagner conductor, it was an occasion to flood Symphony Hall with the stately light of "Parsifal," in four orchestra excerpts. And opening the program was Brahms' Third Symphony, which however much it reflected an introspective composer must be taken as a Leinsdorf credo. It sums up what he wants in music and what he has achieved from the orchestra at the end of his first year.

The Brahms performance was incredible in the rightness of the conductor's shaping and the balance of orchestral sound he demanded. How many textures — rhythmic, chromatic and sonic—were woven. A tautness made the work firm over-all, but so pliable were the various parts (not just the four movements) that it emerged a kind of sculpture in motion.

Leinsdorf is sympathetic to rhythmic accents, but the subtleness with which he distributed these emphases in the first movement was pure slight-of-hand.

Encouraging the double bass section throughout the symphony gave an accent both in rhythm and in color. With this underlying beat laid down the conductor was free to build in other materials. There was the matter of tempos in the middle two movements, an andante followed by a poco allegretto. The delicate quickening Leinsdorf selected for the latter was just right.

Then there was the clarity of orchestral parts. "Transparent," would be too sharp a word and "translucent," too bright to describe the blend.

The brasses, for example, were a mite shriller than in recent Prokofiev programs; their acerbic quality yesterday was a nice contrast to the pervading darkness of the work. And in planning the whole symphony Leinsdorf observed Brahms' progression from the tensions of the opening passages through the final supple, but never easy, finale.

Wagner's "Parsifal" music almost seems to carry itself in those soaring melismata. The orchestral excerpts Leinsdorf chose the Prelude to Act I, the Transformation Scene in the same act, the Prelude to Act II, and the Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale of Act III. His approach was less architectonic than it had been in the Brahms.

The Wagner was dignified, without being overly dramatic (for all its Christian message, it has a certain pagan impetus in the music). Seamless, but not dull, the excerpts under Leinsdorf's hands, built in intensity through string resonance and solid brass to that awesome moment when the bells clamor forth the Finale.

Symphony audiences are hearing the bell notes Wagner wrote but never heard. A bell large enough to encompass the lowest note has yet to be cast. For the Boston Symphony performance a carillon company devised a set of electronic instruments to reproduce the four bell tones used in the "Parsifal" grail scenes.

The timbre of the softer sounds strikes this listener's ear as not quite true (imagination may have something to do with this reflection), but when amplified in the finale the sound is superb.

Beside leaving no doubt of Leinsdorf's inspired care of the music in his hands, the program reminds us how delicious a luxury hindsight is. When Symphony Hall opened in 1900 the fire doors were dubbed by some, "This way in case of Brahms." Doubtless, the anti-Wagnerites eyed a convenient accredited egress. But time has put out the fire of this controversy. And yesterday's use of electronic music made the bete noir of some listeners a stable pet.

53 2
Tel. WOrth 2-3797
AMERICAN
Press Clipping Service
Inc.
119 Nassau Street
New York 38, N. Y.
From
APR - - 1963
MUSICAL AMERICA

MASSACHUSETTS

Balancing Accounts

Boston.—Now that Erich Leinsdorf is completing his first season as music director of the Boston Symphony, some balancing of accounts might be made—an analysis, perhaps, of his shortcomings; the crediting of his successes.

Leinsdorf's underlying problem, over which he rises from time to time, is his noninvolvement with the music. One might oversimplify by saying that the music is there and the listener here; the twain seldom meet.

His concerts, more often than not, are an objective experience; subjectivity, the essential quality of music making in its highest sense, is too seldom on hand. Mr. Leinsdorf appears to stand before the music and to observe it, while marshalling it into a marvelous sense of order.

It is truly impressive the way he can manage the various elements, balancing this choir against that, evoking a tone, molding a phrase, controlling dynamics. He has brought an order to the Boston Symphony that has not been heard in many a year. Under his guidance, even in these few months, it has become truly an exquisite instrument.

But the restoration of discipline solves only a part of the problem. The listener is now more aware of the way the music is played than he is of the music itself. An intellectual awareness is one thing; being emotionally moved is something far more important.

It has long been established that if the performing artist is objective about his music making, his listeners will share the same experience. If a conductor wishes to bring his audience subjectively into the music, then he must be the first to enter in. What he does, his listeners will do also. They cannot help themselves.

Music is more than the correct ordering of beautiful sounds. In its highest expression it must provide something that goes beyond the sound itself—call it poetry, call it soul, call it the inner meaning or the substance. It is this extra quality that true music lovers are seeking; when they find it not, they are cheated and they know it.

The Boston Symphony, however suave, however polished, however elegant, is capable of expressing the most recondite of musical moods. The production of ordered sound is not its ultimate goal; it is merely the means to this desired end.

Let us hope in the long run that Mr. Leinsdorf is not incapable of subjectivity; that his shortcomings are merely part of a period of adjustment during which he has assumed many added responsibilities; and that he will soon take a giant step to a higher level of musicianship.

Leinsdorf's programs have ranged rather widely through the Central European and Russian repertoire. Beethoven, Schumann, and Brahms have been there, of course; the Austrians have figured more heavily by helpings of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Schoenberg, Mahler, Bruckner, and Richard Strauss. Dvorak and Kodaly have come in for a share; even Sibelius put in an appearance after a drought during the Munchian period. Stravinsky, Shostakovich and Prokofieff have had their due.

There is no question that Mr. Leinsdorf has been building programs of considerable imagination.

Memorable among Mr. Leinsdorf's recent concerts was a Prokofieff program in which he opened with the "Classical" Symphony (had the first three movements been taken faster, it would have sparkled more); the Concerto for Cello (with Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, as the masterful soloist); and the Sixth Symphony.

Though there are greater emotional depths in the Sixth than Mr. Leinsdorf was able to plumb, the final Vivace raced along winningly, the broad melodies spinning out like banners over galloping rhythms, and with climaxes enough to win a salvo of bravos.

When Mr. Leinsdorf finds himself before a chorus, something magical happens. He comes into his own. Here his years in the opera house stand him in good stead.

His way with the Brahms "Requiem" provided the listener with a truly moving experience. With the forces of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society under his control, he drew forth a performance that shone with radiant light, that rang with an ecstatic rapture. —HAROLD ROGERS

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490
APR 18 1963

End of Season

Leinsdorf Conducts Final BSO Concert

By ALLAN SLY

Mr. Leinsdorf closed this symphony season with Brahms III and a generous succession of Parsifal excerpts. Time was when such a program would have been inconceivable, as containing the ideological equivalent of fissionable elements in critical proportions. But in these latter days we are experts at synthesis and flatter ourselves that we are not as our grandsires were. In calm detachment, then, we afforded Mr. Leinsdorf the opportunity to display this sumptuous tapestry, these echoes of former ecstasies, and we warmly and gratefully endorsed the proceedings by sustained, end-of-another-season and please-give-us-more-in-the-future applause.

This listener, having heard the orchestra under two guest conductors recently, and indeed having heard Mr. Leinsdorf in action but rarely, was quite startled at the new, unfamiliar, tightly focused sound and the close-hauled manner of going in the Brahms. But it had him sitting on the edge of his seat with eagerness to catch every remarkable detail of balance, each nicety of inner adjustment, each felicity of phrase-articulation.

If ever Brahms sounded Apollonian this was the time; and yet a warm tenderness was present too. It was a performance that etched itself on the memory that set a new standard of precision. If it warmed the heart it was by way of one's judgment, one's alertness to style, one's sense of the appropriate. There are many whose hearts are stirred in these ways.

When we had caught our breath again we had perforce a different role to play: we had to superimpose what we heard upon a not-too-clearly-recalled web of suffering, redemption through grace, immolation and the like. Mr. Leinsdorf is better at this than some of us; we are no longer very good Wagnerites, but we tried hard and we at least realized what we were missing. Boston has managed without some of Parsifal for 20 years and without some other parts of it for 30 years. Not a very good record, perhaps we need more of it next year, though I for one would prefer some of the Parsifal progeny, such as Elgar's Dream of Gerontius.

The B.S.O. seemed as apt in the dramatic catharsis as it had in the Hellenic transports of the Brahms. Its reflection of its new conductor's individuality is reassuring and evidently genuine. We can look forward to next season. Meantime Tanglewood beckons — and thereby hangs another tale or two.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
APR 12 1963

Music Review

Brahms, Wagner Close Leinsdorf's 1st Year

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, gave its 24th and final program of the Winter season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The concert, to be repeated Saturday night at 8:30, was comprised of Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90, and orchestral excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal": Prelude to Act I; Transformation Scene, Act I; Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale, Act III.

By MARGO MILLER

Two profoundly personal works, for composer and conductor alike, were played with extraordinary commitment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the program concluding its 82d season. For Erich Leinsdorf, until this season the Metropolitan Opera's Wagner conductor, it was an occasion to flood Symphony Hall with the stately light of "Parsifal," in four orchestra excerpts. And opening the program was Brahms' Third Symphony, which however much it reflected an introspective composer must be taken as a Leinsdorf credo. It sums up what he wants in music and what he has achieved from the orchestra at the end of his first year.

The Brahms performance was incredible in the rightness of the conductor's shaping and the balance of orchestral sound he demanded. How many textures — rhythmic, chromatic and sonic—were woven. A tautness made the work firm over-all, but so pliable were the various parts (not just the four movements) that it emerged a kind of sculpture in motion.

Leinsdorf is sympathetic to rhythmic accents, but the subtleness with which he distributed these emphases in the first movement was pure slight-of-hand.

Encouraging the double bass section throughout the symphony gave an accent both in rhythm and in color. With this underlying beat laid down the conductor was free to build in other materials. There was the matter of tempos in the middle two movements, an andante followed by a poco allegretto. The delicate quickening Leinsdorf selected for the latter was just right.

Then there was the clarity of orchestral parts. "Transparent," would be too sharp a word and "translucent," too bright to describe the blend.

The brasses, for example, were a mite shriller than in recent Prokofiev programs; their acerbic quality yesterday was a nice contrast to the pervading darkness of the work. And in planning the whole symphony Leinsdorf observed Brahms' progression from the tensions of the opening passages through the final supple, but never easy, finale.

Wagner's "Parsifal" music almost speaks for itself in these sounds [illegible] the orchestral excerpts Leinsdorf chose the Prelude to Act I, the Transformation Scene in the same act, the Prelude to Act II, and the Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale of Act III. His approach was less architectonic than it had been in the Brahms.

The Wagner was dignified without being overly dramatic (for all its Christian message, it has a certain pagan impetus in the music). Seamless, but not dull, the excerpts under Leinsdorf's hands, built in intensity through string resonance and solid brass to that awesome moment when the bells clamor forth the Finale.

Symphony audiences are hearing the bell notes Wagner wrote but never heard. A bell large enough to encompass the lowest note has yet to be cast. For the Boston Symphony performance a carillon company devised a set of electronic instruments to reproduce the four [illegible] used in the "Parsifal" grail scenes.

The timbre of the softer sounds strikes this listener's ear as not quite true (imagination may have something to do with this reflection), but when amplified in the finale the sound is superb.

Aside leaving no doubt of Leinsdorf's inspired care of the music in his hands, the program reminds us how delicious a luxury hindsight is. When Symphony Hall opened in 1900 the fire doors were dubbed by some, "This way in case of Brahms." Doubtless, the anti-Wagnerites eyed a convenient accredited egress. But time has put out the fire of this controversy. And yesterday's use of electronic music made the bete [illegible] of some listeners a stable

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
APR 12 1963

137

Wagner's 'Parsifal' for Easter

12-62

Leinsdorf Presents Excerpts at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Brahms and Wagner are joining hands for the final concerts of Erich Leinsdorf's first season of Symphony Hall concerts—Brahms and Wagner, who once divided the music world up the middle, incredible as this may now seem. With the critic Eduard Hanslick as the umpire, music lovers were classified either as Brahmsians or Wagnerites—the absolutists vs. the programists—and the battle was a fiery one.

* * *

But there was little or no fire in Symphony Hall Thursday afternoon when Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the Brahms Symphony No. 3 and excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal," the latter in honor of the Easter season. The two composers sat cosily side by side and got on extremely well. Wagner, of course, used a great many words to say comparatively little, egotist that he is. Brahms, on the other hand, spoke less but said a great deal more, prolixity, he knew, was no sign of substance.

Yet their words were cloaked with the same romantic colors in richly woven textures of magnificent sound. As in Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, heard on last week's program, Mr. Leinsdorf pursued an individual way with the Brahms. Whereas he desentimentalized the waltz in the Tchaikovsky, he did quite the opposite in the waltz of the Brahms, slowing it down and souping it up.

One might have thought that it should have been the other way around, yet the Brahms gained in the exchange. Mr. Leinsdorf is not lavish in his display of musical emotion; all favors, however small, are worthy of gratitude.

* * *

The Wagner "Parsifal" excerpts beautifully unfolded their gorgeous length under Mr. Leinsdorf's operatic hands. Mystical and contemplative, the music pursues its shifting way from one chromatic modulation to the next, melodically arriving at a radiant Dresden Amen.

All was crystal clear in Mr. Leinsdorf's reading; the lines stood forth as if etched as they moved outward and downward, inward or upward. One was impressed by the somber moods that Wagner obtained by his unusual doublings, a device that Sibelius was later to use in his expression of the Finnish spirit.

* * *

Yet all was played by and large without verve. The production of beautiful sounds is an important thing, and no better instrument exists for this purpose than the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But music is more than the sum total of its sounds, and it is this "more" that we are seeking.

Serious fault may be found in the use of the electronic bells, even though this performance may have marked the first time an audience has heard the bell tone envisioned by Wagner, that of 40 cycles per second. The bells were obviously electronic in texture and often came in too loud, sounding as cheap as those that trouble the air of the Boston Common.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
APR 12 1963

The Symphony

Leinsdorf Closes Glorious Season

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf yesterday closed his first season as the regular conductor of The Boston Symphony Orchestra in the manner in which he began it: triumphantly.

Owing to Good Friday, the concert fell on Thursday afternoon, and—because of the orchestra's western tour starting next week—marked the earliest finis to a Boston Symphony season of recent memory. For the occasion Mr. Leinsdorf selected a concert not inappropriate to Lent, but also providing climax and emphasis as the period to a remarkable inaugural year.

Not Often Done

Brahm's Third, restored to the repertory, constituted a bold stroke of programing. It isn't done often, despite an unassailable classical position (the last performance here occurred nearly nine years ago under the guest conductorship of the late Guido Cantelli), and the reasons are obvious: we hear the First and Second frequently, the Fourth on occasion, but the nature of The Third represents a towering exaction on the talents of the maestro who would impress his audience.

Consider the restraints: the F major symphony commences with an allegro con brio of such radiant majesty that the tensions of the score flow away from the summit rather than mounting toward an optomistic culmination. Instead of the predictable design, Brahms traverses an emotional range from the three graphic chords of the first movement to darkling meditations of a hymn-like character, by strings and woodwinds during the Allegro. Yet the essence of the symphony is lyric, songful and rhapsodic; and the conductor must sustain it without a sense of diminishment.

Luminous Texture

And it was a tender treatment that Mr. Leinsdorf lavished on the Third yesterday. Last week he presented a classical interpretation of the Tchaikovsky Fifth; his approach here was wholly romantic. His tempi were not fast, his phrasings leisurely.

Sentiment, in fact, adorned his reading, not the kind of inflated feeling that comes from lingering over each passage with a resolute determination to squeeze the ultimate rapture dry; rather, a spacious and graceful awareness of the role that understated but perceptible sentiment assumes.

The subtle mingling of simplicity and sophistication here was much in evidence. The account was notable for a luminous texture of sound. One would single out the unfolding of that first movement, in which the contrasts of the tempestuous development, the motto theme, give way to the serene emergence of the same motif by horn. The felicities were indeed numerous, and the symphony, as it passed into the refrain motto colored by flute, achieved a peaceful and kindly coherence. I would call this an exceedingly civilized version distinguished by an emphasis on the emotional element. Such an emphasis does not wholly preserve the dramatic conflicts, but Mr. Leinsdorf's view of Brahms seems to me a miraculous resolution of those contending elements of Brahms interpretation—the intellectual conservatism guided by a warm sensibility.

The excerpts from "Parsifal," the Prelude to Act I, the Transformation Scene, the Prelude to Act II, Prelude, Good Friday Music and Finale, Act III, were rich in theatrical instinct compounded by the sublimity of mysticism.

Bels as Written

For the performance an electronic reproduction of the Easter bells prepared by the Schulmerich Carillon Company from miniature bronze bells whose sound was magnified 60,000 times, resolved the problem that Wagner set when he called for a bell tone that went down to 40 cycles per second.

Thus, undoubtedly for the first time, an American audience heard the bells as written. In most performances, obviously, Wagner's directions, which would demand a colossal carillon, a bell weighing about 600 tons, are not followed; and bells an octave higher are employed.

While I appreciated the fidelity of intent here, neither could I rid myself of the notion that I was listening to a skilled electronic mimicry, for the reverberations of the live article have a clarion authority that isn't quite obtainable.

A Minor Point

Nevertheless, this is a relatively minor acoustical point. More important was the exalted projection of the "Parsifal" atmosphere, the ecstatic, fervent long-spun line. Mr. Leinsdorf awoke this passionate and unique atmosphere, a mood disparate from any other in the range of opera or symphony.

It was a glorious ending to a glorious season, and as the men of the orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf take the new Boston Symphony Orchestra to the American heartland for the first time in a decade, we wish them godspeed.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 24th program of the 82nd season yesterday at Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated Saturday night at 8:30:
Symphony No. 3, in F major, Op. 90 ..... Brahms
Excerpts from "Parsifal" .... Wagner

Amusements

BLANK PAGE

TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR '63

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

JAN 20 1963

Boston Symphony Replaces Richter on 'U' Series

Sviatoslav Richter, Russian pianist scheduled for an April 4 concert in the Masterpiece series, will not appear, it was announced by James S. Lombard, director of the University Artists Course. His American tour has been canceled.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will replace Richter for the final concert of the series April 27. "Only two or three pianists were considered a satisfactory replacement but none was available," Lombard said. "So we sought, and found, a more than equivalent replacement."

Erich Leinsdorf, newly appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct the orchestra at its concert here. It was the Boston Symphony that played at Northrop Auditorium's dedication in 1929, and it has not returned since, or taken very many long tours in the last 30 years.

Patrons are asked to hold their tickets dated April 4 for the April 27 concert. Next event in the Masterpiece series will be a recital by Philippe Entremont, French pianist, in Northrop Auditorium Feb. 6.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059

DEC 1962

— The Boston Symphony will present concerts in twenty-four cities across the United States in addition to the home city. At the conclusion of the Boston season on April 13, it will embark on a two-week transcontinental tour presenting concerts in Chicago, Kansas City (Missouri), Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland (Oregon), Seattle, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis . . . San Antonio Symphony will make a month-long tour in January, blazing a musical trail up the Pacific Coast with stops in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland (Oregon), and Pullman (Washington). On its way home it will play for concert audiences in Idaho, Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 450,340 S. 571,997

MAY 23 1962

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,792 SAT. 526,176

MAY 18 1962

Boston Sending Symphony Here

The Boston Symphony, which has not performed in Chicago for many seasons, will appear April 15, 1963, at Orchestra Hall under the direction of its new musical director, Erich Leinsdorf, Allied Arts Corp. reports.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAY 13 1962

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS
By Clyde Neibarger

Boston Symphony to Play Here.

RUTH SEUFERT'S list of attractions for the 1962-63 season is an impressive one, including some big name artists and two or three orchestral highlights—such as the Boston Symphony in its Kansas City bow, the inimitable Leonard Bernstein heading a gala of 50 and orchestra, and a repeater, Mantovani.

No dates have been announced. But the Boston Symphony, an orchestra of 110, will share its first Kansas City appearance with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. He succeeds Charles Munch, who bid Boston an affectionate farewell this spring.

Erich Leinsdorf.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
D. 226,427 S. 257,927

FEB 24 1963

3. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, have been signed for a single performance April 24, at the Opera House. However, tickets are being offered first to season-ticket subscribers, so it's doubtful that any will be available to nonsubscribers. In fact, many subscribers may be disappointed; with a total of 5,800 subscribers and only 3,100 seats to be sold, the procrastinators will be the unlucky ones.

And Cornish's [illegible] A precedent-

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

MAY 2 1963

BON VOYAGE, MAESTRO — Photograph shows Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he departs in advance of the Orchestra on recently concluded tour across the country. Shown wishing Mr. Leinsdorf "Bon Voyage" is Bernard Garber, President of Garber's Travel Service.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGON JOURNAL
D. 147,305 SAT. 122,981

MAR 19 1963

Boston Symphony Billed For April 23

Erich Leinsdorf will bring the world - famous, 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra to The Auditorium for a single concert on Tuesday, April 23, under the aegis of the Portland Symphony Society.

The performance is not a part of the Portland Symphony's year-long 12-concert season, society president Fred M. Buchwalter points out. Tickets are on sale at J. K. Gill's, 408 SW Fifth Ave.

FOUNDED IN 1881, the Boston Orchestra has been described as "the greatest assembly of skilled musicians the world has even known." It has assured a place in musical history for such noteworthy conductors as Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, and its current musical director, Erich Leinsdorf — former assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini.

Leinsdorf came to the Boston orchestra last year, after having conducted for the Metropolitan Opera six years. His baton is familiar to audiences of the Cleveland, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Berlin, Vienna, and London symphonies, all of which he has conducted since leaving the Austrian State Academy of Music in 1933.

THE NATION'S richest, and perhaps its best, symphony aggregation, the Boston is also America's hardest working orchestra — playing 227 concerts this season alone. Its last transcontinental tour was in 1953. Portland is one of only 11 cities slated to hear the orchestra.

Since making its first phonograph record in 1917, under Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston and its "Pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, have produced on - wax performances which have sold 30 million copies to date. The orchestra's home concerts are broadcast nationally by 55 radio stations. Last year, the orchestra also appeared in 13 one-hour TV concerts.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 214,542 S. 249,352

FEB 27 1963

W. . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the concert the Seattle Symphony Orchestra is sponsoring, April 24 at the Opera House . . . However, the Symphony is giving its subscription ticket buyers first crack at reservations so its not very likely any tickets will be thrown on the open market . . . Milton Katims will conduct the Seattle Sym-

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 47,720 S. 67,920

JAN 20 1963

Boston Symphony Concert Tickets on Sale

Dr. Leroy J. Miller, president of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, and Ralph Berkowitz, Civic Symphony manager, are serving as co-chairmen of ticket sales for the forthcoming appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Since the announcement of the Boston Symphony's appearance in Albuquerque, April 18, there has been a steady stream of inquiries from all parts of the state, Dr. Miller said. When the tickets were first placed on sale, and suggested as Christmas gift items, they went at remarkable speed, he said, especially in view of the fact that the Boston Symphony's concert was four months away.

Tickets for the concert are availabe at Riedling Music Co. downtown and Winrock Center.

TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR 139

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

JAN 20 1963

Boston Symphony Replaces Richter on 'U' Series

Sviatoslav Richter, Russian pianist scheduled for an April 4 concert in the Masterpiece series, will not appear, it was announced by James S. Lombard, director of the University Artists Course. His American tour has been canceled.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will replace Richter for the final concert of the series April 27. "Only two or three pianists were considered a satisfactory replacement but none was available," Lombard said. "So we sought, and found, a more than equivalent replacement."

Erich Leinsdorf, newly appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct the orchestra at its concert here. It was the Boston Symphony that played at Northrop Auditorium's dedication in 1929, and it has not returned since, or taken very many long tours in the last 30 years.

Patrons are asked to hold their tickets dated April 4 for the April 27 concert. Next event in the Masterpiece series will be a recital by Philippe Entremont, French pianist, in Northrop Auditorium Feb. 6.

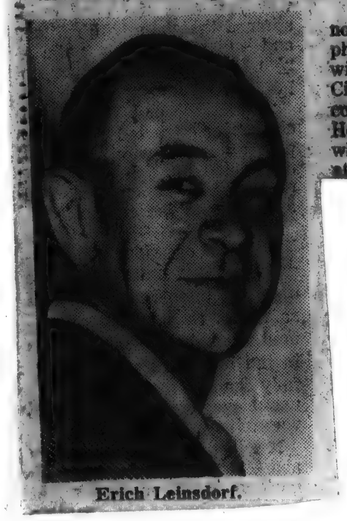
KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAY 13 1962

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS
By Clyde Neiburger

Boston Symphony to Play Here.

RUTH SEUFERT'S list of attractions for the 1962-63 season is an impressive one, including some big name artists and two or three orchestral highlights—such as the Boston Symphony in its Kansas City bow, the inimitable Leonard Bernstein heading a gala of 50 and orchestra, and a repeater, Mantovani.



Erich Leinsdorf.

No dates have been announced. But the Boston Symphony, an orchestra of 110, will share its first Kansas City appearance with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. He succeeds Charles Munch, who bid Boston an affectionate farewell this spring.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGON JOURNAL
D. 147,305 SAT. 122,981

MAR 19 1963

Boston Symphony Billed For April 23

Erich Leinsdorf will bring the world - famous, 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra to The Auditorium for a single concert on Tuesday, April 23, under the aegis of the Portland Symphony Society.

The performance is not a part of the Portland Symphony's year-long 12-concert season, society president Fred M. Buchwalter points out. Tickets are on sale at J. K. Gill's, 408 SW Fifth Ave.

FOUNDED IN 1881, the Boston Orchestra has been described as "the greatest assembly of skilled musicians the world has ever known." It has assured a place in musical history for such noteworthy conductors as Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, and its current musical director, Erich Leinsdorf — former assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini.

Leinsdorf came to the Boston orchestra last year, after having conducted for the Metropolitan Opera six years. His baton is familiar to audiences of the Cleveland, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Berlin, Vienna, and London symphonies, all of which he has conducted since leaving the Austrian State Academy of Music in 1933.

THE NATION'S richest, and perhaps its best, symphony aggregation, the Boston is also America's hardest working orchestra — playing 227 concerts this season alone. Its last transcontinental tour was in 1953. Portland is one of only 11 cities slated to hear the orchestra.

Since making its first phonograph record in 1917, under Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston and its "Pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, have produced on - wax performances which have sold 30 million copies to date. The orchestra's home concerts are broadcast nationally by 55 radio stations. Last year, the orchestra also appeared in 13 one-hour TV concerts.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,058

DEC 1962

. The Boston Symphony will present concerts in twenty-four cities across the United States in addition to the home city. At the conclusion of the Boston season on April 13, it will embark on a two-week transcontinental tour presenting concerts in Chicago, Kansas City (Missouri), Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland (Oregon), Seattle, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis. The San Antonio Symphony will make a month-long tour in January, blazing a musical trail up the Pacific Coast with stops in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland (Oregon), and Pullman (Washington). On its way home it will play for concert audiences in Idaho, Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
D. 226,427 S. 257,927

FEB 24 1963

3. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, have been signed for a single performance April 24, at the Opera House. However, tickets are being offered first to season-ticket subscribers, so it's doubtful that any will be available to nonsubscribers. In fact, many subscribers may be disappointed; with a total of 5,800 subscribers and only 3,100 seats to be sold, the procrastinators will be the unlucky ones.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 214,542 S. 249,352

FEB 27 1963

W. . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the concert the Seattle Symphony Orchestra is sponsoring, April 24 at the Opera House . . . However the Symphony is giving its subscription ticket buyers first crack at reservations so its not very likely any tickets will be thrown on the open market . . . Milton Katims conducts the Seattle Sym-

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 8-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

MAY 2 1963

BON VOYAGE, MAESTRO — Photograph shows Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as he departs in advance of the Orchestra on its tour—scheduled four across the country. Shown wishing Mr. Leinsdorf "Bon Voyage" is Bernard Garber, President of Garber's Travel Bureau.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 450,340 S. 571,997

MAY 23 1962

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,792 SAT. 526,178

MAY 18 1962

Boston Sending Symphony Here

The Boston Symphony, which has not performed in Chicago for many seasons, will appear April 15, 1963, at Orchestra Hall under the direction of its new musical director, Erich Leinsdorf, Allied Arts Corp. reports.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 47,720 S. 67,920

JAN 20 1963

Boston Symphony Concert Tickets on Sale

Dr. Leroy J. Miller, president of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, and Ralph Berkowitz, Civic Symphony manager, are serving as co-chairmen of ticket sales for the forthcoming appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Since the announcement of the Boston Symphony's appearance in Albuquerque, April 12, there has been a steady stream of inquiries from all parts of the state, Dr. Miller said. When the tickets were first placed on sale, and suggested as Christmas gift items, they went at remarkable speed, he said, especially in view of the fact that the Boston Symphony's concert was four months away.

Tickets for the concert are availabe at Riedling Music Co. downtown and Winrock Center.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059

APR 1963

TOURS At the conclusion of its Boston season, April 13, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will embark on a two-week transcontinental tour presenting concerts in Chicago, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis.

STRINGS In a recent press conference, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, discussed the shortage of strings. "This condition," he said, "has now gone on for a long time, I have learned with some interest. I was quite surprised, it is today the same thing in Europe. I read only a few weeks ago that there is an acute string shortage in Germany, which was quite new to me. I had thought that this was a sociological phenomenon in the United States but it isn't, it is general. I haven't quite the answer why. We may try to find an answer in Tanglewood; we are paying special attention to the string situation. I visited last year the String Congress at the Michigan State University, which is arranged yearly by the American Federation of Musicians. I was there for a few days. They have about a hundred very young people from all over the United States of varying standards and caliber, but a very interesting faculty, very lively people, and we had long discussions. It may be that the string crisis has something to do with the fact that string instruments on the earlier (elementary) level are still taught as if our music were written in the vein of 1763. It means that the young string player finds, say after a year or two of study, that he can play only diatonic music. A music dealer in New York told me that for the amateur orchestras he can supply only music which makes no chromatic demands on the strings. Now this is a rather startling thing and it must go back to the teaching being out of step. Now this is of course an enormously complicated thing and would have to be investigated very carefully. I do propose that these are some of the areas where Tanglewood comes in and will come in. I believe the Boston Symphony Orchestra will always be fortunate enough to get the best of the string supply when we have a vacancy; so will Philadelphia and the other major orchestras. But that does not take care of the dozens and dozens of other orchestras. If they cannot get good string players, what is going to happen to them?"

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059

MAR 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
APR 14 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
APR 11 1963

BSO Begins Crosscountry Tour Monday

BOSTON — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leave Logan Airport, Boston, Monday morning for Chicago, the first stop on an 11-city tour to the West Coast and back. This will be the first trip to the Far West by the orchestra since 1953 and will be the orchestra's first extensive tour under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct all concerts.

The orchestra will travel on two United Air Lines chartered planes throughout the trip, with a third aircraft used to transport 15 tons of baggage. This is the first time an orchestra has ever toured the country entirely by airplane. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's entire party will number 121.

Following the concert in Chicago on Monday evening, the orchestra will present concerts on successive days in Kansas City, Mo., Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, and San Diego. Next Saturday will be a free day in Los Angeles with the second half of the trip resuming after a concert on Sunday, April 21, in Los Angeles' Shrine Auditorium. The orchestra will then visit San Francisco, Portland and Seattle where there will be another free day. The homeward leg of the tour will include concerts in Winnipeg and Minneapolis. On Sunday, April 28, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Boston, having covered nearly 9,000 thousand miles by airplane, and having played 11 concerts in 13 days.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,553
APR 16 1963

Give and Take

This is a proud week for Boston musically. We're on both the sending and the receiving end of two of the Western Hemisphere's oldest and most impressive cultural ventures.

It is our good fortune that as the Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves home on a western tour—the first in 10 years—New York's Metropolitan Opera Company arrives in town for its traditional spring repertoire.

Perhaps, "traditional" isn't quite a proper description. Old favorites—including Traviata, Tosca and The Barber of Seville—will be offered, but Boston will also see new mountings of Otello and Meistersinger.

But in sending out the BSO, we're surely giving as much as we get. And San Diego, Portland, Ore., and Seattle will be getting something they never had before. Those cities are new on the orchestra's western circuit, which also includes Kansas City, Albuquerque, Oklahoma City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Winnipeg and Chicago.

Despite sellout audiences everywhere, BSO will lose $75,000 on the flying trip of Conductor Leinsdorf, 104 musicians and eight tons of equipment. Cost has been the main deterrent to a Pacific Coast tour for the past decade, but with the population boom there in the past 10 years, both the orchestra and westerners felt they shouldn't wait longer.

In satisfaction for the West, prestige for Boston and subsequent sales of BSO recordings, the journey should prove well worth the price.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 164,299
APR 17 1963

Symphony Out West

BETWEEN now and April 28, Boston's prestige will rise in 11 cities of the West. That's inevitable, for that's the number of concert stops the Boston Symphony Orchestra is making on its air-tour to the West Coast.

We can be sure that Boston's name will come in for fresh praise wherever Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his 104 musicians give one of their incomparable performances.

We're extremely proud of this "best in the world" organization, and equally appreciative of the great work it does as an instrument of Boston promotion.

May the tour meet nothing but success.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 452,333
APR 16 1963

BSO ON TOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra this week took off on a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 cities in the United States and Canada. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct all concerts on this tour, which is the first the orchestra has taken across the continent since 1953.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
APR 14 1963

Symphony Flies West Monday

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leave Logan Airport, tomorrow morning for Chicago, the first stop on an 11-city tour to the West Coast and back. This will be the first trip to the far west by the orchestra since 1953 and will be the Symphony's first extensive tour under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Th orchestra will return to Boston, Sunday, April 28.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
City Record
BOSTON, Mass.
Off. Boston Publication
Weekly Circ. 1,800
APR 20 1963

Boston's Symphony in Big Westward Trek

Carrying far more class and box office appeal than the tawdry "Biography of a Bookie Joint," Boston's great Symphony Orchestra headed West during the past week for concerts in Chicago and Pacific Coast cities. According to advance notices it was assured SRO bookings in Chicago, Seattle, Portland, and Los Angeles.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf has a company of 101 men and three women. The company must carry eight tons of equipment. It's an expensive trip but if the expected red ink runs even as high as $75,000, it is anticipated that the stimulation of the orchestra's recordings sales will overbalance the deficit.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059

APR 1963

TOURS At the conclusion of its Boston season, April 13, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will embark on a two-week transcontinental tour presenting concerts in Chicago, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis.

YOUNGS In a recent press conference, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, discussed the shortage of strings. "This condition," he said, "has now gone on for a long time. I have learned with some interest that I was quite surprised, it is today the same thing in Europe. I read only a few weeks ago that there is an acute string shortage in Germany, which was quite new to me. I had thought that this was a sociological phenomenon in the United States but it isn't, it is general. I haven't quite the answer why. We may try to find an answer in Tanglewood; we are paying special attention to the string situation. I visited last year the String Congress at the Michigan State University, which is arranged yearly by the American Federation of Musicians. I was there for a few days. They have about a hundred very young people from all over the United States of varying standards and caliber, but a very interesting faculty, very lively people, and we had long discussions. It may be that the string crisis has something to do with the fact that string instruments on the earlier (elementary) level are still taught as if our music were written in the vein of 1763. It means that the young string player finds, say after a year or two of study, that he can play only diatonic music. A music dealer in New York told me that for the amateur orchestras he can supply only music which makes no chromatic demands on the strings. Now this is a rather appalling thing and it must go back to the teaching being out of step. Now this is of course an enormously complicated thing and it would have to be investigated very carefully. I do propose that these are some of the areas where Tanglewood comes in and will come in. I believe the Boston Symphony Orchestra will always be fortunate enough to get the best of the string supply when we have a vacancy; so will Philadelphia and the other major orchestras. But that does not take care of the dozens and dozens of other orchestras. If they cannot get good string players, what is going to happen to them?"

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 245,059

MAR 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,367
APR 14 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
APR 11 1963

BSO Begins Crosscountry Tour Monday

BOSTON — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leave Logan Airport, Boston, Monday morning for Chicago, the first stop on an 11-city tour to the West Coast and back. This will be the first trip to the Far West by the orchestra since 1953 and will be the orchestra's first extensive tour under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct all concerts.

The orchestra will travel on two United Air Lines chartered planes throughout the trip, with a third aircraft used to transport 15 tons of baggage. This is the first time an orchestra has ever toured the country entirely by airplane. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's entire party will number 191.

Following the concert in Chicago on Monday evening, the orchestra will present concerts on successive days in Kansas City, Mo.; Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, and San Diego. Next Saturday will be a free day in Los Angeles with the second half of the trip resuming after a concert on Sunday, April 21, in Los Angeles' Shrine Auditorium. The orchestra will then visit San Francisco, Portland and Seattle where there will be another free day. The homeward leg of the tour will include concerts in Winnipeg and Minneapolis. On Sunday, April 28, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Boston, having covered nearly 9,000 thousand miles by airplane, and having played 11 concerts in 13 days.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,553
APR 16 1963

Give and Take

This is a proud week for Boston musically. We're on both the sending and the receiving end of two of the Western Hemisphere's oldest and most impressive cultural ventures.

It is our good fortune that as the Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves home on a western tour—the first in 10 years—New York's Metropolitan Opera Company arrives in town for its traditional spring repertoire.

Perhaps, "traditional" isn't quite a proper description. Old favorites—including Traviata, Tosca and The Barber of Seville—will be offered, but Boston will also see new mountings of Otello and Meistersinger.

But in sending out the BSO, we're surely giving as much as we get. And San Diego, Portland, Ore., and Seattle will be getting something they never had before. Those cities are new on the orchestra's western circuit, which also includes Kansas City, Albuquerque, Oklahoma City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Winnipeg and Chicago.

Despite sellout audiences everywhere, BSO will lose $75,000 on the flying trip of Conductor Leinsdorf, 104 musicians and eight tons of equipment. Cost has been the main deterrent to a Pacific Coast tour for the past decade, but with the population boom there in the past 10 years, both the orchestra and westerners felt they shouldn't wait longer.

In satisfaction for the West, prestige for Boston and subsequent sales of BSO recordings, the journey should prove well worth the price.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 164,299
APR 17 1963

Symphony Out West

BETWEEN now and April 28, Boston's prestige will rise in 11 cities of the West. That's inevitable, for that's the number of concert stops the Boston Symphony Orchestra is making on its air-tour to the West Coast.

We can be sure that Boston's name will come in for fresh praise wherever Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his 104 musicians give one of their incomparable performances.

We're extremely proud of this "best in the world" organization, and equally appreciative of the great work it does as an instrument of Boston promotion.

May the tour meet nothing but success.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 452,333
APR 16 1963

BSO ON TOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra this week took off on a 13-day transcontinental tour to 11 cities in the United States and Canada. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct all concerts on this tour, which is the first the orchestra has taken across the continent since 1953.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
APR 14 1963

Symphony Flies West Monday

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leave Logan Airport, tomorrow morning for Chicago, the first stop on an 11-city tour to the West Coast and back. This will be the first trip to the far west by the orchestra since 1953 and will be the Symphony's first extensive tour under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Th orchestra will return to Bos- Sunday, April 28.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
City Record
BOSTON, Mass.
Off. Boston Publication
Weekly Circ. 1,800
APR 20 1963

Boston's Symphony in Big Westward Trek

Carrying far more class and box office appeal than the tawdry "Biography of a Bookie Joint," Boston's great Symphony Orchestra headed West during the past week for concerts in Chicago and Pacific Coast cities. According to advance notices it was assured SRO bookings in Chicago, Seattle, Portland, and Los Angeles.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf has a company of 101 men, and three women. The company must carry eight tons of equipment. It's an expensive trip but if the expected red ink runs even as high as $75,000, it is anticipated that the stimulation of the orchestra's recordings sales will overbalance the deficit.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

11 Concerts In 13 Days For B.S.O.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave Logan Airport tomorrow morning for Chicago, the first stop on an 11-city tour to the West Coast and back. This will be the first trip to the far west by the orchestra since 1953 and will be the orchestra's first extensive tour under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct each of the concerts.

The orchestra will travel on two United Air Lines chartered planes throughout the trip with a third aircraft used to transport 15 tons of baggage, marking the first time an orchestra ever has toured the country entirely by airplane. The entire party will number 121.

Following the concert in Chicago tomorrow evening, the orchestra will present concerts on successive days in Kansas City, Mo., Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, and San Diego. Saturday will be a free day in Los Angeles with the second half of the trip resuming after a concert next Sunday in Los Angeles' Shrine Auditorium. The orchestra will then visit San Francisco, Portland and Seattle where there will be another free day. The homeward leg of the tour will include concerts in Winnipeg and Minneapolis. The B.S.O. will return to Boston Sunday, Apr. 28, having covered nearly 9000 miles by airplane, and having played 11 concerts in 13 days.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
APR 16 1963

Symphony To Visit 11 Cities in 13 Days

The Boston Symphony packed up 15 tons of musical instruments and left Logan Airport Monday on a transcontinental tour which will take the orchestra to 11 cities in 13 days.

The first stop was Chicago.

The party of 120 said goodbye to families while waiting for a violinist who went home to retrieve his fiddle. Larger instruments and the dressing trunks had been shipped earlier by cargo plane.

Just before take-off, Joseph Silverstein, the 31-year-old concertmaster, received a plaque citing him as one of The Outstanding Young Men of the Year.

Making the presentation were Thomas P. Carrigan, vice president of the Boston Junior Chamber of Commerce, and Walter Palmer, president.

Just that morning Silverstein had read of a similar award to Anshel Brusilow, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Seven other Boston men will be honored at a Jaycee banquet Apr. 24. An eighth, Frank Ramsey, will be in Los Angeles, playing for the Boston Celtics.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, preceded the orchestra to be with his son, a student at the University of Chicago.

The orchestra will play on successive days in Kansas City, Mo., Oklahoma City, Albuquerque and San Diego, and later in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis. It will return Apr. 28, having logged 9000 miles and completed the first American tour made entirely by airplane by any orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 452,333
APR 16 1963

Off on Coast-to-Coast Tour

FIRST IN DECADE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra waves goodbye before boarding plane at Logan Airport as they start a coast-to-coast tour, their first in 10 years. First stop is Chicago. On hand (below) were families to bid them adieu. Group will return here April 27. (UPI Telephoto)

OUNGSTERS BID GOODBYE TO MUSICIAN-DAD

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
APR 16 1963

BSO Expects $75,000 Loss From Tour

LOS ANGELES — One of the most important musical events in the West in years will get under way Thursday when the Boston Symphony Orchestra starts a tour of the Pacific Coast.

For San Diego, Portland and Seattle this will be the first visit by the world-famous orchestra, which is conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Western tour will begin in San Diego on Thursday. The orchestra will then go to Los Angeles on Saturday, to San Francisco on Sunday, to Portland on April 23, to Seattle on April 24, and to Winnipeg, Man., on April 26.

10 Long Years

A representative of the orchestra estimated that the flying trip by the 101 men and 3 women in the orchestra, with their 8 tons of equipment, would result in a loss of about $75,000.

Economics, it was explained, is a main reason why 10 years have passed since the Boston Symphony was last in this part of the country.

There are several reasons for making the trip despite the certainty of the financial loss:

Such a tour enhances the prestige of the organization in the West, where the population has boomed in 10 years and created an audience that did not exist the last time the Boston Symphony was here.

Exposure in the West is likely to stimulate purchases of the orchestra's recordings.

The orchestra, through an agreement with Seven Arts Productions, televised concerts that are sold to independent television stations throughout the country.

142

THE KANSAS CITY TIMES, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1963

MINNEAPOLIS MORNING TRIBUNE ★ Thur., April 25, 1963

April 14, 193

ALBUQUERQUE JOURNAL

KANSAS CITY WELCOMES THE BOSTON SYMPHONY
"THE ARISTOCRAT OF ORCHESTRAS"
UNDER ERICH LEINSDORF'S DIRECTION

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870
APR 16 1963

Westward Ho

The best wishes of its home city go with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its tour to the West Coast, following a concert last night in Chicago. For Seattle, Portland and San Diego it will be the orchestra's first visit; even Los Angeles has not heard it "live" for a decade.

Tickets are reported to have been sold out at all stops, but the trip is expected to lose about $75,000, though it will stimulate purchase of the orchestra's recordings. Yet far more is involved than money, or the eight tons of equipment that must accompany the 101 men and three women led by Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Even more than for its current rebirth, Boston is known for its orchestra, an instrument not merely "All-American," but tops in the world.

142 on back of Section A - Sonnabend

THE KANSAS CITY TIMES, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1963

MINNEAPOLIS MORNING TRIBUNE ★ Thur., April 25, 1963

April 14, 193

ALBUQUERQUE JOURNAL

KANSAS CITY WELCOMES THE BOSTON SYMPHONY
"THE ARISTOCRAT OF ORCHESTRAS"
UNDER ERICH LEINSDORF'S DIRECTION

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-6878

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

APR 18 1963

Westward Ho

The best wishes of its home city go with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its tour to the West Coast, following a concert last night in Chicago. For Seattle, Portland and San Diego it will be the orchestra's first visit; even Los Angeles has not heard it "live" for a decade.

Tickets are reported to have been sold out at all stops, but the trip is expected to lose about $75,000, though it will stimulate purchase of the orchestra's recordings. Yet far more is involved than money, or the eight tons of equipment that must accompany the 101 men and three women led by Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Even more than for its current rebirth, Boston is known for its orchestra, an instrument not merely "All-American," but tops in the world.

Traveler Scope . . . Where The News Comes Alive In Pictures

Symphony On Tour

FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA left Boston Airport April 15 for its first coast-to-coast tour in 10 years. It returns Sunday. Group played in eight states and in Canada. Above, Symphony players are serenaded in Albuquerque, N. M., by guitarists in La Placita restaurant. From left, Henry Portnoi, double bass; Reuben Green, viola; Jerome Lipson, viola, and Leslie (Tiny) Martin, double bass.

CHESS PROBLEM, above, is pondered by Alfred Schneider, violinist, left, and Vincent Mauricci, violist. Pocket-size chess set is great for killing time on those long flights. Most salesmen and travelers carry them or similar pocket games. Right, pilot explains intricacies of plane's gadgetry to George Zazofsky, left, violinist, and chairman of orchestra's committee, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 164,299
APR 26 1963

ORCHESTRA MEMBER has a little fun on plane en route to San Diego. Violist player Joseph de Pasquale drowses, as Louis Speyer, English horn player, is about to crown him. At right, also in dreamland, is Jerry Lipson. Orchestra chartered three commercial airline planes to carry players and their equipment. Observers on the trip said most of the veteran orchestra members are taking the long air trip in stride, but new and younger members are not enjoying it too much. It could be they miss that home cooking. When the orchestra returns Sunday they will rest until Tuesday when the Pops season opens.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
APR 27 1963

By George Humphrey

Susan Kline, United Air Lines hostess, awaits autographed program from Erich Leinsdorf while en route to San Diego on the current tour by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
MAY 4 1963

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, on its recent tour, took no chances on losing one whole section. The strings were split up among three chartered planes; and so were the brasses and the percussionists.

CHICAGO

. CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAY 4 1963

Leinsdorf In Chi

CHICAGO—Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently visited the Windy City for a sell-out concert in the city's Orchestra Hall. On the morning of his arrival Leinsdorf and local executives of RCA Victor hosted a press conference in the Sheraton-Blackstone Hotel. In the above picture Leinsdorf (right) is shown with music impressario Harry Zelzer.

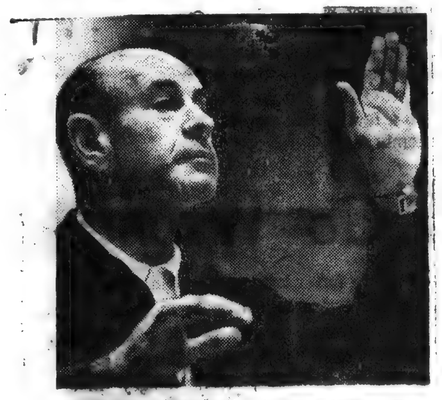
CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327

APR 14 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, absent from Chicago for some years, makes a return visit Monday with its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting. The event, at Orchestra Hall, features music of Brahms and Mahler.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 450,340 S. 571,997

APR 7 1963



CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf brings Boston Symphony orchestra to Orchestra hall the evening of April 15.

WHERE MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 15.000

APR 13 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, director, presents a concert at Orchestra Hall April 15 under the auspices of Allied Arts

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232

APR 14 1963

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA returns for the first time in a decade when it plays tomorrow night in Orchestra hall under the direction of its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, to benefit the Immigrants Service League. Founded in 1881 and long admired for many qualities, including its French subtleties, the orchestra played a memorable series of concerts here in the 1940s, when the late Serge Koussevitzky was its conductor. Its most recent visit was in the spring of 1953 when it gave three performances in Orchestra hall, two under the direction of its recently retired French conductor, Charles Munch, the third led by its French guest, Pierre Monteux.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 444,559 S. 554,928

APR 14 1963

MEANWHILE, BACK AT THE RANCH: Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who performs in Chicago for the first time in 10 years Monday at Orchestra Hall, will be reunited with his son, a U. of Chicago student. The Lei is a benefit for the Immigrants Service League. .

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327

APR 12 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 504,880 SAT. 502,274

APR 9 1963

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY'S Orchestra Hall concert on Monday night will be broadcast live in stereo by WFMT (98.7 FM).

The station, which is expanding its live coverage of events, also plans 20 Monday evening concerts in stereo by the Fine Arts Quartet, broadcast from WFMT's studios. Four of the 20 concerts will be in May, three in June, and 13 in the fall.

Boston Symphony Here Tomorrow

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra, just embarked on a cross-country tour [by air] under its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will play in Orchestra hall at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow evening. This will be the Bostonians' first local performance in almost exactly a decade.

Van Cliburn

Mr. Leinsdorf, as conductor, needs no local introduction. His appearances here as guest leader of the Chicago Symphony orchestra during the 1960-61 and 1961-62 seasons are testimony of his eminence among the middle-generation maestri.

For this single concert, Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen two German-school symphonies: Brahms' Third, in F, Op. 90, and Mahler's First, in D.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232

APR 14 1963

MISHAWAKA, IND.
TIMES
D. 5,471

APR 6 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327

APR 14 1963

The Boston Symphony orchestra comes to Orchestra hall tomorrow night at 8:15, making its first visit since Erich Leinsdorf was made music director. The program holds Brahms' Symphony No. 3, and Mahler's Symphony No. 1.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232

MAR 31 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 504,880 SAT. 502,274

MAR 27 1963

Program Changes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's program has been revised for its Orchestra Hall concert on Monday, April 15, at 8:15 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Brahms Symphony No. 3 in F Major and the Mahler Symphony No. 1 in D Major.

WHERE MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 15,000

MAR 23 1963

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Harry Zelzer, the incomparable impressario of Chicagoland brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor to Orchestra Hall, April 15. The performance to be held in the evening will benefit the Immigrant's Service League.

Tickets may be obtained through Allied Arts Corporation, 20 North Wacker Drive.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327

APR 1 1963

CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf, who will lead the Boston Symphony here April 15, has just been awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for his complete recording of Wagner's "Die Walkuere." The set was made in London in September, 1961.

CHICAGO

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAY 4 1963

Leinsdorf In Chi

CHICAGO—Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently visited the Windy City for a sell-out concert in the city's Orchestra Hall. On the morning of his arrival Leinsdorf and local executives of RCA Victor hosted a press conference in the Sheraton-Blackstone Hotel. In the above picture Leinsdorf (right) is shown with music impressario Harry Zelzer.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
APR 14 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, absent from Chicago for some years, makes a return visit Monday with its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting. The event, at Orchestra Hall, features music of Brahms and Mahler.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 450,340 S. 571,997
APR 7 1963

CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf brings Boston Symphony orchestra to Orchestra hall the evening of April 15.

WHERE MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 15,000
APR 13 1963

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, director, presents a concert at Orchestra Hall April 15 under the auspices of Allied Arts

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
APR 12 1963

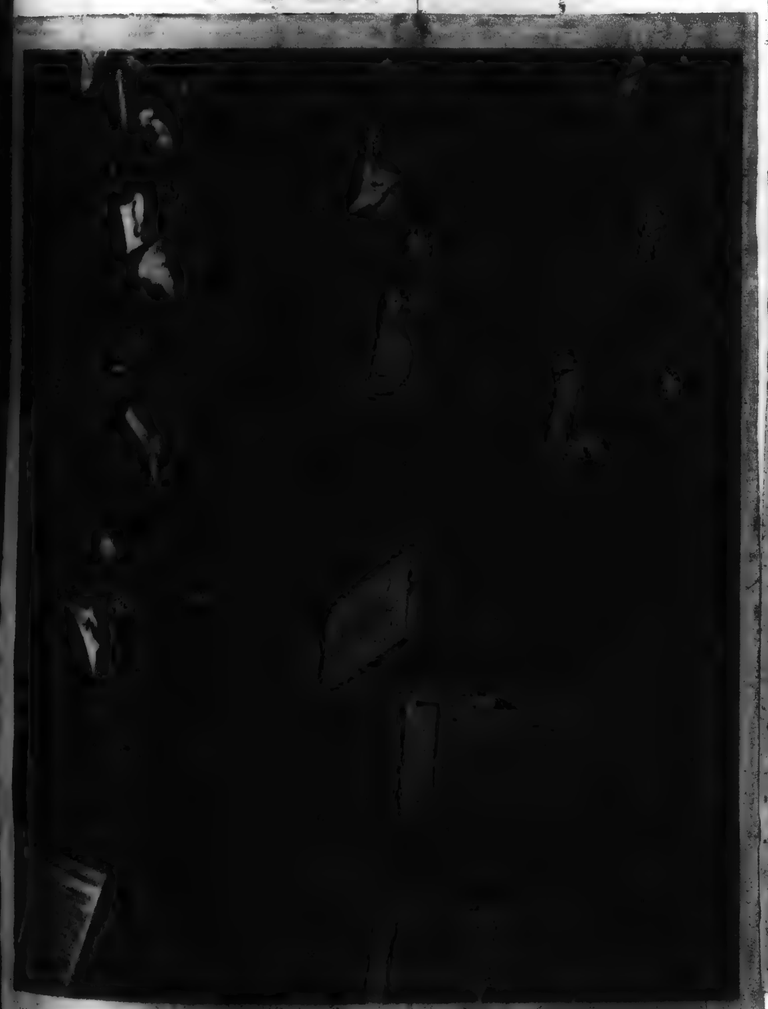
MEANWHILE, BACK AT THE RANCH: Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who performs in Chicago for the first time in 10 years Monday at Orchestra Hall, will be reunited with his son, a U. of Chicago student. The Le[in]s[dorf] is a benefit for the Immigrants Service League.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 504,880 SAT. 502,274
APR 9 1963

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY'S Orchestra Hall concert on Monday night will be broadcast live in stereo by WFMT (98.7 FM).

The station, which is expanding its live coverage of events, also plans 20 Monday evening concerts in stereo by the Fine Arts Quartet, broadcast from WFMT's studios. Four of the 20 concerts will be in May, three in June, and 13 in the fall.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
APR 14 1963



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA returns for the first time in a decade when it plays tomorrow night in Orchestra hall under the direction of its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, to benefit the Immigrants Service League. Founded in 1881 and long admired for many qualities, including its French subtleties, the orchestra played a memorable series of concerts here in the 1940s, when the late Serge Koussevitzky was its conductor. Its most recent visit was in the spring of 1953 when it gave three performances in Orchestra hall, two under the direction of its recently retired French conductor, Charles Munch, the third led by its French guest, Pierre Monteux.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 444,559 S. 554,928
APR 14 1963

Boston Symphony Here Tomorrow

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra, just embarked on a cross-country tour [by air] under its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will play in Orchestra hall at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow evening. This will be the Bostonians' first local performance in almost exactly a decade.

Van Cliburn

Mr. Leinsdorf, as conductor, needs no local introduction. His appearances here as guest leader of the Chicago Symphony orchestra during the 1960-61 and 1961-62 seasons are testimony of his eminence among the middle-generation maestri.

For this single concert, Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen two German-school symphonies: Brahms' Third, in F, Op. 90, and Mahler's First, in D.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
APR 14 1963

MISHAWAKA, IND.
TIMES
D. 5,471
APR 6 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
APR 14 1963

The Boston Symphony orchestra comes to Orchestra hall tomorrow night at 8:15, making its first visit since Erich Leinsdorf was made music director. The program will be Brahms' Symphony No. 2, and Mahler's Symphony No. 1.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
MAR 31 1963

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 504,880 SAT. 502,274
MAR 27 1963

Program Changes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's program has been revised for its Orchester Hall concert on Monday, April 15, at 8:15 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Brahms Symphony No. 3 in F Major and the Mahler Symphony No. 1 in D Major.

WHERE MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 15,000
MAR 23 1963

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Harry Zelzer, the incomparable impressario of Chicagoland brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor to Orchestra Hall, April 15. The performance to be held in the evening will benefit the Immigrant's Service League.

Tickets may be obtained through Allied Arts Corporation, 20 North Wacker Drive.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
APR 1 1963

CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf, who will lead the Boston Symphony here April 15, has just been awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for his complete recording of Wagner's "Die Walkuere." The set was made in London in September, 1961.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
APR 16 1963

On the Aisle

Either Boston and Leinsdorf Are Incompatible or They Need More Time to Make It Work

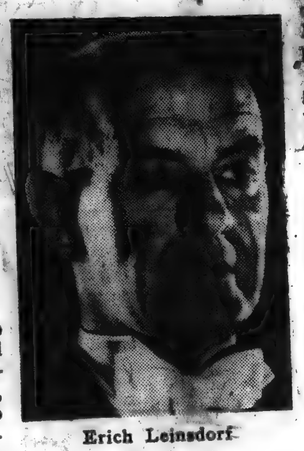
BY CLAUDIA CASSIDY

THOSE WHO remember the glorious days of the Boston orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky are as unreasonable about it as Enrico Caruso used to be about himself — that is, he said, "Other singers 100 per cent, Caruso 150." And the Boston was far less than 100 per cent last night when after a 10-year absence it returned with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, to Orchestra hall.

Mr. Leinsdorf took over his post last fall, and it really is too soon to come touring. Unless it is a mutual case of clairvoyant love at first sound, conductors and orchestras take time to know each other, and it seemed to me that either this combination is hopelessly incompatible, or it needs a lot more time to make things work. Mr. Leinsdorf is a competent man of wide experience, and Boston's orchestra has long been a magnificent instrument, even when somewhat jangled by circumstances beyond its control. But their concert displayed neither to advantage.

Concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Presented by Allied Arts corp. in Orchestra hall Monday evening, April 15, 1963. The program:
Symphony No. 3, in F major.....Brahms
Symphony No. 1, in D major.....Mahler

The orchestra in its great days was essentially French, a wonderfully flexible instrument of the most extraordinary subtlety both of color and sound.



Erich Leinsdorf

It may still be like that—there were signs of the old timbre when the strings played freely and in the French colors of winds and brass. But much of the time it was forced and coarsened until unrecognizable.

Nor was Mr. Leinsdorf especially fortunate as an interpreter. Neither in the Brahms Third nor in Mahler's First had he discovered the valid point of view, the penetration or the conviction to make two such symphonies from the standard repertory of particular interest to more than the casual listener out on a benefit night. They lapsed so often in their claim to attention as to seem almost interminable.

The Brahms was simply routine, with now and then the rich sound a big orchestra of superior players can produce. The Mahler was a serious misfortune. It is a great human drama of struggle and failure and mystical apotheosis. It is a fierce outcry of the heart, an outpouring of compassion, a blaze of apocalyptical splendors—if it is anything at all. Mr. Leinsdorf confused compassion with sentimentality, and the apocalyptical with a great noise. The orchestra did what it could in the melee.

Notes

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 543,420 S. 651,327
APR 16 1963

New Boston Symphony Sound Leaves No Doubt Of Stature

By Robert C. Marsh

After a 10-year absence, the Boston Symphony Orchestra visited Chicago Monday night as first stop in a transcontinental tour that will take it to 11 cities in 13 days.

Erich Leinsdorf, who is to direct all the programs, was on the podium. Orchestra Hall was sold out to greet him, and the concert was carried to an even larger audience by means of a stereophonic broadcast on WFMT.

For Chicago, the evening had special significance, not only as an opportunity to greet a great orchestra which we have had to respect in absentia, but also as an opportunity to observe it in a phase comparable to that which our resident ensemble will be duplicating a year from now.

THE BOSTON Symphony has just completed its first year of subscription concerts under a new and vigorous leadership. Maestro Leinsdorf had put his personal imprint on its playing as early as its first concerts, which I heard in September, but by now the process has had the opportunity to establish the principal lines of its development.

Leinsdorf's program might be taken by a critic as an illustration of principles, but the audience responded to it as the most stimulating sort of music making. It consisted of two symphonies from the conductor's Austrian homeland, the Third of Brahms and the First of Mahler. Both contain strongly expressive passages, which are easily emotionalized, and nobly heroic pages which can become bombastic.

ALWAYS AWARE of these possibilities for excess, Leinsdorf sought the means to expression and strength within a framework of artistic discipline. The Brahms was dominated by the first movement, which was given full stature by respecting the marked repeat. Its big, surging phrases rested on a solid pulse and carried the development of the material to a high level of impact.

It was only then that the gentler, more romantic aspect of the score was brought to the foreground.

The Mahler needed a few minutes to get warmed up, but when it hit its stride midway in the opening movement, it turned out to be a slightly superior performance than that of the recent Leinsdorf-Boston recording.

LIKE ALL of Mahler's scores, this abounds in contrasts and juxtapositions. It seemed to me that the dramatic quality of these effects had been carefully weighed, and that they were realized with just the sort of care needed to make their significance fully apparent. Leinsdorf does not regard the third movement as burlesque to the degree that other conductors do, and here, in particular, I thought he made a good case for his interpretive approach.

It was, however, the finale that swept everything before it and marched triumphantly to the sort of conclusion that brings audiences to their feet with a shout.

THE NEW Boston sound is one with a lot of tonal beef—more than I can recall even from the Koussevitzky era. It stresses clear, firm outlines and a secure rhythmic structure. And, although Leinsdorf has the perfect means to cultivate tonal gorgeousness should he desire, he is resisting all temptations to make slick and overpolished music. Communicative force obviously holds primacy over any other consideration. The orchestra has changed, is changing, but its stature has never been more apparent.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 444,559 S. 554,928
APR 16 1963

ROGER DETTMER

Boston Show Just Gleams

WHEN ALL'S BEEN SAID that can be said on the subject of "Dynagroove," there's nothing that remotely compares with the sound of a great orchestra, live.

Last evening, it was the Boston Symphony, back in Orchestra hall for their first local performance in almost exactly a decade—the first stop on an 11-city western swing, by chartered jet.

Erich Leinsdorf, who became music director last September, officiated on the podium, demonstrating both how basically strong Boston's orchestra has remained thru the years, and how quickly it responds to discipline. Especially discipline of the central European caliber.

If, in a program of late 19th century Viennese symphonies, one sometimes was more conscious of demonstration than the expressive ends to which great orchestras are dedicated, the performance fairly gleamed.

MR. LEINSDORF'S excellent original program—Wagner, Prokofiev, and Bartok—had been remade at the request of local management [after calls, according to one source, from the Chicago Symphony office]. We heard, instead, the Third Symphony of Brahms followed by the First of Mahler—epochal music in both cases, but rather much of a good thing at one sitting.

Apart from a rupture in mood and continuity between opening movements of the Brahms, to admit a horde of latecomers, the performance was lucid and lithe, much in the storied Koussevitzky tradition of high surface gloss. Mr. Leinsdorf, on the side of the angels, repeated the first movement exposition, coaxed beautiful playing [altho a little loud during the first quarter-hour], and persuaded the middle movements to sing. In the outer sections, however, he seemed to be exercising a certain caution, as if to become involved emotionally might somehow be considered unclean.

Perhaps, tho, he wanted not to spoil the Mahler, and if so, succeeded.

WHETHER ONE agrees or not with Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretive options, one dare not disrespect his uncommon control of orchestral performance. In the Mahler it was extraordinarily rich and poised.

Right down the line, solo playing was impeccable—contrabass, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, horn, and first violin. The music stayed constantly in motion, was rhythmically alert and tightly organized; not a moment sounded muddy or hysterical. Yet this order was achieved at the periodic cost of that same slight remoteness — possibly the lack of total temperamental affinity—noted in the Brahms.

In the finale, however, Mr. Leinsdorf finally unleashed the power and eloquence he had kept until then in check. The Mahler First may not be everyone's favorite specimen of sturm und drang, but invariably it stirs a storm of applause at the end. Again last evening this happened—in tribute not only to the composer's apocalyptic vision and mastery of method, but to the performance of Boston's mighty orchestra, back on the highroad to primacy under Mr. Leinsdorf's painstaking and purposeful direction.

NOTE: Herb Rogers, Highland Park's favorite summer producer, will hold auditions for the 1963 season this coming week-end in the Patricia Stevens agency, 22 W. Madison st. On Friday, he'll hear singers from 4-6 and 7-9 p. m.; on Saturdays, dancers from 4-6, singer from 7-9 p. m., and on Sunday singers from 1-3, dancers from 3-6 p. m. This is an open call for talent—no appointment is required.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 504,880 SAT. 502,274

APR 16 1963

'Perfection' By Leinsdorf

BY DONAL J. HENAHAN

"What makes a conductor great?" inquired the lady at intermission, after Erich Leinsdorf had led his Boston Symphony through the Brahms Third Symphony. After a moment of rejecting such glib answers as "publicity," or "divine back muscles," we decided that if it had to be summed up quickly the best reply would be "a great orchestra." That was the comment, at any rate, of Gustav Mahler, whose Symphony No. 1 constituted the program's second half.

The Bostonians returned to Orchestra Hall Monday evening after an absence of 10 years, this time under the direction of their newly appointed musical director, and amply justified their lofty standing in the world's orchestral elite. Leinsdorf, of course, is quite an artist in his own right, but this group could make the reputation of a lesser man.

Understandably, the evening was full of fascinations.

ALTHOUGH the Brahms was exemplary in its opulence of string tone and careful balance of sonorities, Leinsdorf's pacing of the work was ponderous, particularly in the Poco Allegretto, which ought to move moderately, but need not grind to a halt altogether.

But the BSO's new director seems not yet to be concerned with overall problems such as maintaining the impulse and movement of a Brahms symphony. He approaches a score as if it were a series of orchestral problems to resolve with an ear bent toward winning precisely the sound he wants from his new orchestra.

What this resulted in when the evening progressed to Mahler's First Symphony was worth cheering about, purely in aural terms. Seldom has one heard a Mahler score registered so beautifully, and rarely do the dozens of minor solo and concertante parts fall into the hands of virtuosos such as fill the Boston ranks: Joseph Silverstein, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Sherman Walt, Roger Voison, and the others.

WORKING like a watchmaker, Leinsdorf took Mahler's sprawling D Major Symphony apart and let one examine it in unending detail. The funeral march movement, with its droning variations on "Frere Jacques," was played with the legendary Boston tonal luster, but one waited continually for some indication that Leinsdorf was going to penetrate into the score and suggest some of its sardonic and grotesque meanings.

Thrillingly well performed as it was, the Mahler left one only with overwhelming orchestral impressions, and there is more to this work than that.

As we have noted about Leinsdorf's conducting in the past, both at Orchestra Hall with the Chicago Symphony, and at Lincoln Center with Boston, he is a master at putting a high polish on a score. And unlike his immediate predecessor, Charles Munch, Leinsdorf never seems to take chances. For this listener, he missed entirely the tortured neurotic expressionism that lies at the heart of any Mahler symphony.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 444,559 S. 554,928

APR 16 1963

MUSICALLY SPEAKING last night was a smashing success.

Happily surprised were board members of Immigrants' Service league who could have twice sold out boxes and main floor seats for the Orchestra hall concert last night with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Eric Leinsdorf conducting. Every seat was sold out weeks before the benefit. In fact, boxes were so scarce board members found themselves having to share these elite pews.

Among last night's enthusiastic crowd were the Edward Byron Smiths, the Solomon B. Smiths, the Leigh Blocks, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Writs, the Lloyd Yoders, and William Hunts, the Edward Ryersons and Mrs. Fred Poor.

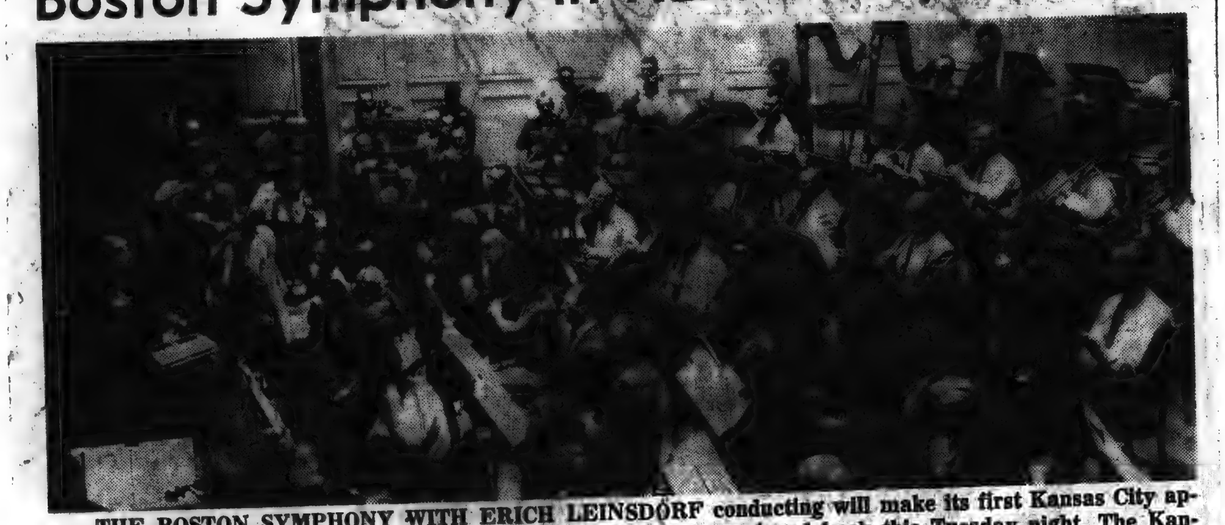
148 KANSAS CITY.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

APR 14 1963

Music and Musicians.

Boston Symphony in Kansas City Tuesday



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY WITH ERICH LEINSDORF conducting will make its first Kansas City appearance on its current tour of 11 cities enroute to the West coast and back this Tuesday night. The Kansas City date is between Chicago and Oklahoma City concerts. There are 110 in the orchestra. Leinsdorf is at the extreme left.

ERICH LEINSDORF, orchestra maestro whose career has been and continues to be a distinguished one, will be seen in action when he conducts the 110-member Boston Symphony at the Music Hall here Tuesday night. Leinsdorf, 51, one of the Metropolitan's greatest maestros, became conductor of the Boston orchestra last year.

Here the Boston will be heard in Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Time magazine, in its February 22 issue, featured a cover picture and story of George Szell, Cleveland orchestra conductor. The articles designates the five major American orchestras—Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland and Chicago. Pictures (in order) of Leonard Bernstein, New York Philharmonic; Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia, and Erich Leinsdorf, of the Boston, are part of the article.

Precision Is Regained.

Time magazine puts it this way:

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the supreme U. S. orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky from 1924 to 1949. Charles Munch, who led the orchestra from 1949 until last fall, allowed its standards to slip somewhat, sparing only the French repertory as Boston's private domain.

Boston Concertmaster Is a Key to Nuances.

Joseph Silverstein, 31-year-old concertmaster of the Boston Symphony orchestra, recently was awarded the Boston Junior Chamber of Commerce award as the chamber's outstanding young man for 1963. He is married and the father of two children.

Silverstein is referred to as the brilliant, hard-working young American violinist. He is an example of the dedicated, gifted, ambitious musician who keeps forging ahead. He is a living exemplification of hope for the violinist in America today.

In 1959, at age 28, he placed third in the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium international violin competition. In 1960, he won the coveted Walter W. Naumberg Foundation award, in competition with 37 other aspirants. This brought him a solo assignment with the New York Philharmonic and a national tour.

Then he accepted an offer to be concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, choosing the orchestral rather than the solo artist career.

Under Erich Leinsdorf, 51, one of the Metropolitan Opera's greatest conductors, the orchestra has already regained a degree of its lost precision of ensemble, and it retains its long reputation as the orchestra richest in virtuosos.

Leinsdorf uses no baton and conducts with a stiff and angular style. His dress coat reaches nearly to his ankles, and from the audience he looks like an aging seaman sending semaphore signals to some distant ship. The Boston has the longest season of all (50 weeks), including Tanglewood in the summer and—for the 92 members willing to play Viennese waltzes and champagne music—a stint with Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops.

Elsewhere in Time's article there is a discussion of cities where major progress in development of good orchestras has been made by conductors who have devoted several years to the buildup. They develop musical accomplishment "as Paul Paray did in ten years with Detroit, and as Robert Whitney is doing in Louisville, Izler Solomon in Indianapolis and Hans Schwieger in Kansas City."

A Seufert Attraction.

The Boston Symphony, making its first appearance in Kansas City in its 82 years of existence, is sponsored as part of the Ruth Seufert Celebrity series.

Leinsdorf's international career has included:

Salzburg festival, Austria; assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, 1934-1938.

Metropolitan Opera, New York; assistant conductor 1937-1939, chief conductor of German operas 1939-1943.

Cleveland orchestra; appointed music director and conductor, 1943.

Service in United States Army.

Rochester Philharmonic, Rochester, N. Y.; music director and conductor, 1947-1956.

New York City Opera, New York; director 1956.

Metropolitan Opera, New York; music consultant and conductor, 1957-1962.

Boston Symphony orchestra, Boston; music director and conductor, 1962; director, Berkshire Music Center and Berkshire festival, 1963.

Guest conductor Boston Symphony orchestra, Philadelphia orchestra, Chicago Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic, Chicago Opera, San Francisco Opera, Amsterdam Concertgebouw, Berlin Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonic, Vienna Opera, B. B. C. Symphony, London Symphony, London Philharmonic, Israel Philharmonic.

Charm and Aplomb.

In Boston, Leinsdorf needs all his considerable charm and aplomb, for he is re-establishing a German - Viennese tradition in a city that has become used to the Russian-French tradition among conductors since 1918. And he has only one personal trait in common with the last two conductors in Boston, the late Serge Koussevitzky, who reigned for 25 years, and Charles Munch, who just completed 13 years with the orchestra. Leinsdorf is always beautifully dressed and groomed.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
WEDNESDAY MAGAZINE
W. 19,500

APR 10 1963

THE Cultural Scene

The Boston Symphony, with Eric Leinsdorf conducting, will make its first appearance in Kansas City at the Music Hall next Tuesday, April 16th. The concert was booked through the Ruth Seufert Celebrity Attractions.

The Charm of Rural Ireland by Willis Butler will be the program on the Travel and Adventure Series of the Kansas City Town Hall Forum at the Music Hall, Municipal Auditorium, on April 15th at 4 p.m. and 8:15 p.m.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 31 1963

PROUD OF ITS RECORD.

Boston Symphony, Here April 16, Has Several Firsts.

Kansas City is on the transcontinental tour schedule of 11 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra the last two weeks of April, between the closing winter season and the first concert of the annual Pops in Boston.

Other cities on it itinerary are Chicago, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

The date here is Tuesday night, April 16, and will be the Boston Symphony's first Kansas City concert since it was organized in 1881. The orchestra's first coast-to-coast tour was in 1953, but this city was not included.

Sponsoring the Kansas City appearance of the Boston Symphony is the Ruth Seufert Celebrity attactions.

There are several reasons why the orchestra is proud of its record. It was the first Western orchestra to visit the Soviet Union, in 1956. It has visited New York City continuously for 77 years, and has owned, operated and presented concerts in its own auditorium, Symphony Hall, for 62 years. It is the only orchestra in the world conducting its own summer festival, the Berkshire, at Tanglewood, Mass.

The Boston Symphony points out that it earns the largest percentage of its budget of any other orchestra in the world.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 31 1963

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra maestro whose assignment currently is the Boston Symphony (which will be heard on the Ruth Seufert series in Kansas City Tuesday night, April 16), recently was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for a recording of Richard Wagner's "Die Walkure." It was for the Victor recording made in September, 1961, in London, with the London Symphony orchestra and singers Birgit Nillson, George London, Jon Vickers and Rita Gorr.

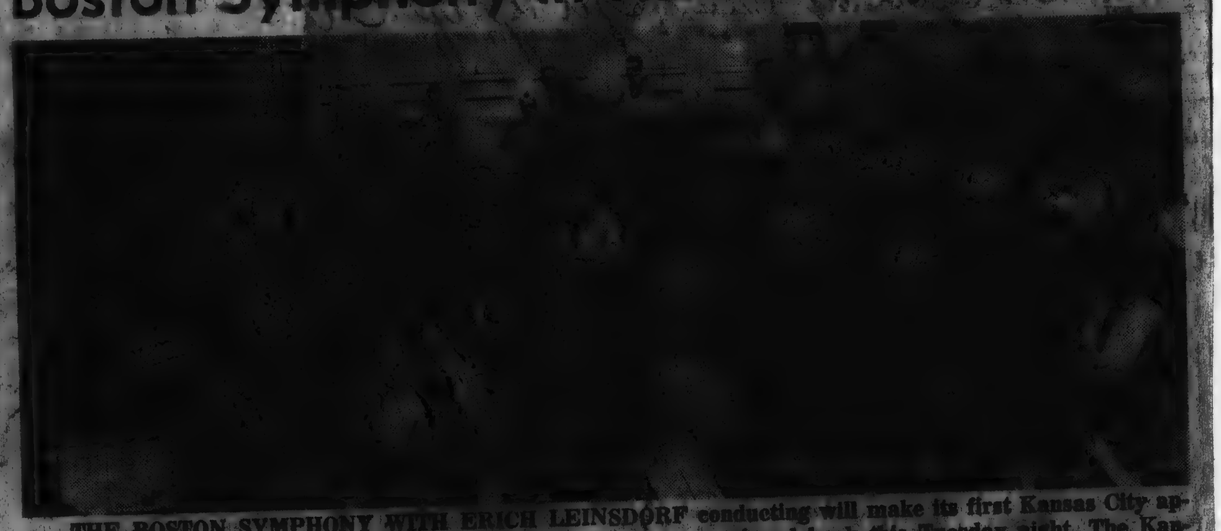
148 KANSAS CITY.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

APR 14 1963

Music and Musicians.

Boston Symphony in Kansas City Tuesday



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY WITH ERICH LEINSDORF conducting will make its first Kansas City appearance on its current tour of 11 cities enroute to the West coast and back this Tuesday night. The Kansas City date is between Chicago and Oklahoma City concerts. There are 110 in the orchestra. Leinsdorf is at the extreme left.

ERICH LEINSDORF, orchestral maestro whose career has been and continues to be a distinguished one, will be seen in action when he conducts the 110-member Boston Symphony at the Music Hall here Tuesday night. Leinsdorf, 51, one of the Metropolitan's greatest maestros, became conductor of the Boston orchestra last year.

Here the Boston will be heard in Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Time magazine, in its February 22 issue, featured a cover picture and story of George Szell, Cleveland orchestra conductor. The articles designates the five major American orchestras—Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland and Chicago. Pictures (in order) of Leonard Bernstein, New York Philharmonic; Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia, and Erich Leinsdorf, of the Boston, are part of the article.

Precision Is Regained.

Time magazine puts it this way:

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the supreme U. S. orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky from 1924 to 1949. Charles Munch, who led the orchestra from 1949 until last fall, allowed its standards to slip somewhat, sparing only the French repertory as Boston's private domain.

Boston Concertmaster Is a Key to Nuances.

Joseph Silverstein, 31-year-old concertmaster of the Boston Symphony orchestra, recently was awarded the Boston Junior Chamber of Commerce award as the chamber's outstanding young man for 1963. He is married and the father of two children.

Silverstein is referred to as the brilliant, hard-working young American violinist. He is an example of the dedicated, gifted, ambitious musician who keeps forging ahead. He is a living exemplification of hope for the violinist in America today.

In 1959, at age 29, he placed third in the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium international violin competition. In 1960, he won the coveted Walter W. Naumberg Foundation award, in competition with 37 other aspirants. This brought him a solo assignment with the New York Philharmonic and a national tour.

Then he accepted an offer to be concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, choosing the orchestral rather than the solo artist career.

Under Erich Leinsdorf, 51, one of the Metropolitan Opera's greatest conductors, the orchestra has already regained a degree of its lost precision of ensemble, and it retains its long reputation as the orchestra richest in virtuosos.

Leinsdorf uses no baton and conducts with a stiff and angular style. His dress coat reaches nearly to his ankles, and from the audience he looks like an aging spaceman sending semaphore

Boston has the longest season of all (50 weeks), including Tanglewood in the summer, and—for the 92 members willing to play Viennese waltzes and champagne music—a stint with Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops.

Elsewhere in Time's article there is a discussion of cities where major progress in development of good orchestras has been made by conductors who have devoted several years to the buildup. They develop musical accomplishment "as Paul Paray did in ten years with Detroit, and as Robert Whitney is doing in Louisville, Izler Solomon in Indianapolis and Hans Schwieger in Kansas City."

A Seufert Attraction.

The Boston Symphony, making its first appearance in Kansas City in its 82 years of existence, is sponsored as part of the Ruth Seufert Celebrity series.

Leinsdorf's international career has included:

Salzburg festival, Austria; assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, 1934-1938.

Metropolitan Opera, New York; assistant conductor, 1937-1939, chief conductor of German operas 1939-1943.

Cleveland orchestra; appointed music director and conductor, 1943.

Service in United States Army.

Rochester Philharmonic, Rochester, N. Y., music director and conductor, 1947-1956.

New York City Opera, New York; director 1956.

Metropolitan Opera, New York; music consultant and conductor 1957-1962.

Boston Symphony orchestra, Boston; music director and conductor, 1962; director, Berkshire Music Center and Berkshire festival, 1963.

Guest conductor Boston Symphony orchestra, Philadelphia orchestra, Chicago Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic, Chicago Opera, San Francisco Opera, Amsterdam Concertgebouw, Berlin Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonic, Vienna Opera, B. B. C. Symphony, London Symphony, London Philharmonic, Israel Philharmonic.

Charm and Aplomb.

In Boston, Leinsdorf needs all his considerable charm and aplomb, for he is re-establishing a German-Viennese tradition in a city that has become used to the Russian-French tradition among conductors since 1918. And he has only one personal trait in common with the last two conductors in Boston, the late Serge Koussevitzky, who reigned for 25 years, and Charles Munch, who just completed 13 years with the orchestra. Leinsdorf is always beautifully dressed and groomed.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
WEDNESDAY MAGAZINE
W. 19,500

APR 10 1963

The Cultural Scene

The Boston Symphony, with Eric Leinsdorf conducting, will make its first appearance in Kansas City at the Music Hall next Tuesday, April 16th. The concert was booked through the Ruth Seufert Celebrity Attractions.

The Charm of Rural Ireland by Willis Butler will be the program on the Travel and Adventure Series of the Kansas City Town Hall Forum at the Music Hall, Municipal Auditorium, on April 15th at 4 p.m. and 8:15 p.m.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 31 1963

PROUD OF ITS RECORD.

Boston Symphony, Here April 16, Has Several Firsts.

Kansas City is on the transcontinental tour schedule of 11 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra the last two weeks of April, between the closing winter season and the first concert of the annual Pops in Boston.

Other cities on it itinerary are Chicago, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

The date here is Tuesday night, April 16, and will be the Boston Symphony's first Kansas City concert since it was organized in 1881. The orchestra's first coast-to-coast tour was in 1953, but this city was not included.

Sponsoring the Kansas City appearance of the Boston Symphony is the Ruth Seufert Celebrity attractions.

There are several reasons why the orchestra is proud of its record. It was the first Western orchestra to visit the Soviet Union, in 1956. It has visited New York City continuously for 77 years, and has owned, operated and presented concerts in its own auditorium, Symphony Hall, for 82 years. It is the only orchestra in the world conducting its own summer festival, the Berkshire, at Tanglewood, Mass.

The Boston Symphony points out that it earns the largest percentage of its budget of any other orchestra in the world.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 31 1963

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra maestro whose assignment currently is the Boston Symphony (which will be heard on the Ruth Seufert series in Kansas City Tuesday night, April 16), recently was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque for a recording of Richard Wagner's "Die Walkure." It was for the Victor recording made in September, 1961, in London, with the London Symphony orchestra and singers Birgit Nillson, George London, Jon Vickers and Rita Gorr.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

MAR 17 1963

Music and Musicians.

Leinsdorf And Boston Orchestra Is Coming

Date Is April 16 At Music Hall— First Time Here For the Symphony.

OF special interest in the Ruth Seufert Celebrity series is the concert here by the famous and esteemed Boston Symphony orchestra, with its also highly regarded conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. The date is Tuesday night, April 16, at the Music Hall.

This will be the first Kansas City performance by the Boston Symphony since it was founded in 1881.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony last April 28 concluded the Boston orchestra's 81st season. Leinsdorf assumed the prestigious post of musical director of the Boston Symphony last year, at the age of 50, as Munch's successor.

At Cleveland Briefly.

His orchestra conducting career in this country has included a brief bit in the war year of 1942 with the Cleveland orchestra, later, nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic, then he returned to his first love, opera, for a season with the New York City Opera, then back to the Metropolitan, where he remained from 1957 until last year.

Erich Leinsdorf.

This second transcontinental tour of the Boston Symphony (the first was in 1953) is scheduled for the last two weeks in April, just before the annual Pops season starts in Boston.

The concerts are to be in Chicago, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

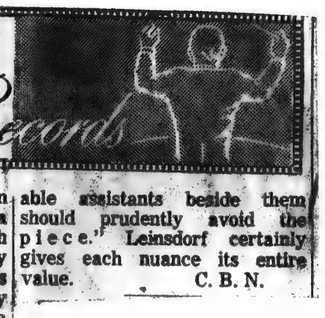
A Family of Seven.

With the Boston appointment Leinsdorf moved his family to Brookline, Mass. There he resides with his wife, the former Anne Frohnknecht of New York City, whom he married in 1939, and five children: David, 20; Gregor, 18; Joshua, 17; Deborah Hester, 14, and Jenny, 10.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

APR 14 1963

Classical Records



VICTOR, up to the minute in current musical events, has a new recording release which presents the Boston Symphony orchestra in one of the numbers to be performed in Kansas City at the Music Hall, Tuesday night. It is Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra (stereo LSC 2643), with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Erich Leinsdorf.

Paired neatly with the Leinsdorf maestro-ing of the Bartok is another platter (mono SP 33-181) presenting the Boston orchestra with his four predecessor conductors—Karl Muck, doing the prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin;" Pierre Monteux, the Debussy Nocturnes, Nuages and Fetes; Serge Koussevitzky, the Prokofiev Classical Symphony and Satie's "Gymnopedies Nos. 1 and 2;" Charles Munch, the Berlioz "Damnation of Faust" excerpts.

Bartok, we conclude after hearing this wonderful recording, was very ingenious in his scoring, exploiting the inner workings of the orchestra, as well as its fortissimo capacities. Special mention should be made of the top rank soloists in the first chairs. As one critic put it, "Ensembles with show-off soloists in their first chairs and with only serviceable assistants beside them should prudently avoid the piece." Leinsdorf certainly gives each nuance its entire value.

C. B. N.

KANSAS CITY PLAYS HOST TO BOSTON.

K.C. TIMES 4/10/63

FOR Kansas City and its surrounding territory, one of the major musical events of this—or any other recent—spring season is now in prospect. Next Tuesday night the Boston Symphony orchestra will perform at the Music Hall, under the direction of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. It will be, in fact, the first time that famous organization has ever played here.

Boston Symphony occupies a special place among American orchestras. Founded in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, from the start it set standards that have helped to make ours perhaps the pre-eminent orchestral country of the Western world. No other institution of its kind in the United States has had so continuously a distinguished record.

Higginson, himself a thoroughly trained musician, was a fanatic on excellence. Because he personally met all deficits for many years, he could be exacting in his requirements. The tradition Higginson established has persisted (with one brief interlude) to the present. The orchestra has been particularly fortunate in its conductors. The redoubtable Leinsdorf is merely the last in a great succession, which has included William Gericke, Emil Pauer, Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

Today the Boston Symphony ranks with the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Chicago Symphony and, possibly, Cleveland's Symphony in what might be called the "big league." The appearance of such an orchestra at this moment under the Ruth Seu-

From One Man's Vision, Boston's Great Symphony.

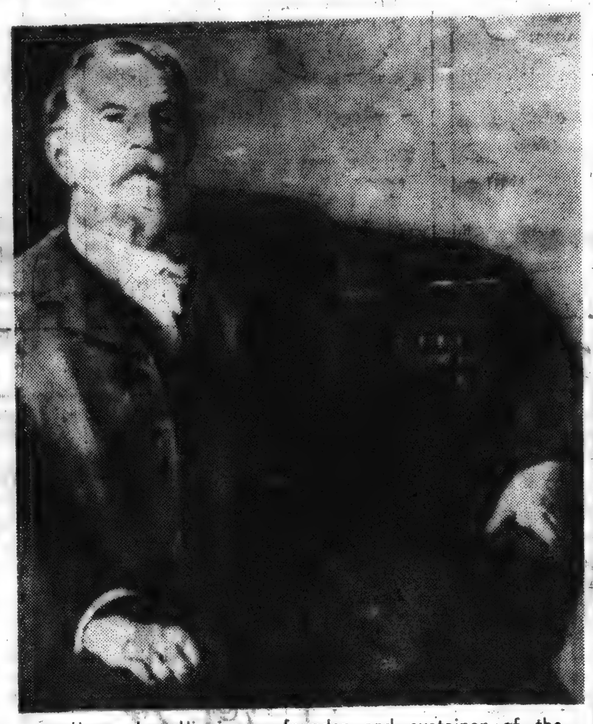
By Sandor Kallai.
(A Member of The Star's Staff.)

HIS own musical career frustrated by physical disability, a young man reached a painful decision that led to great opportunities for hundreds of musicians and delight for millions of listeners.

The time was the spring of 1860. Henry Lee Higginson had been studying music in Vienna four years. He was 26 years old. Though he was the scion of a wealthy Boston family and could have joined his father's banking firm long before, he had been unable to resist the lure of Europe and its musical heritage.

His diligence was his downfall. He practiced the piano too long, too soon after a severe illness and lost the ability to control his left arm. Thus handicapped he reluctantly returned to the United States and went into business.

Higginson's success as a financier was spectacular, and somewhere along the way a vision began to take shape. This dream was that Boston, which long had been content with loosely organized and transient musical organizations, should have a permanent, professional symphony orchestra patterned after the great ensembles of Europe.



Henry Lee Higginson, founder and sustainer of the Boston Symphony, from a portrait by John Singer Sargent.

On Firm Ground.

It was not until 1881, that the methodical Higginson was convinced that he was on firm enough ground financially to underwrite such an expense. Then he engaged Georg Henschel, a young man who had met with considerable public and critical acclaim, as the first conductor; then announced the formation of the Boston Symphony orchestra and his intention to be its sole support as long as he was able.

As orginally set up, the orchestra had 60 musicians who were paid about $1,500 each for a period of 24 weeks. The conductor received $3,000 for the season. In addition to weekly concerts (and all necessary rehearsals) in Boston, they played at Harvard university and in nearby Massachusetts cities.

Admittance prices were modest indeed. Season tickets were $5 and $10 according to position, and single tickets were 25 cents and 75 cents. Open dress rehearsals were held the day before each concert. It was common to see long lines of young people and students outside the old Boston Music hall, waiting for hours before these rehearsals to get the choice seats. The cost was 25 cents for everyone.

Ticket sales were (and have been ever since) very good. But the hard realities of orchestra existence have never changed. Deficits are unavoidable even with capacity crowds at every performance.

Higginson regularly and unflinchingly made up annual deficits of as much as $50,000. Though he was a well-trained musician, he never used his role as "angel" to interfere with the artistic direction of the orchestra. He was extremely careful in the selection of conductors, and once they were chosen they took over all matters pertinent to performance.

The orchestra was popular in Boston from the very beginning, but a cursory glance at the newspapers of the era might give the impression that it was doomed to failure on musical grounds. Critics soon started what seemed like a planned campaign to undermine it with consistent, irresponsible condemnation of virtually everything the orchestra did.

The Carping Critics.

Each of the early conductors came in for a large share of this castigation. Higginson himself was accused of being the orchestra's exclusive support because of some evil desire for autocratic power.

The steady improvement of the orchestra coupled with enthusiastic press reaction in cities it visited on its ever longer and wider tours gradually brought the carping Boston reviewers to the sensible realization that they had a musical organization that was fast becoming one of the world's greatest. Their writing began to reflect this awareness.

Each conductor in the early succession added something to the orchestra. Following the energetic and talented Henschel was Wilhelm Gericke, in 1884, a difficult taskmaster. Among his first actions was the dismissal of many of the older players whom he felt were inept, and the importation of replacements from Europe. These actions made him unpopular at the outset; but this was overcome as the ensemble soared to undeniably greater artistic heights under his stern command.

When Gericke left, after five years, Arthur Nikisch took over the podium. Boston Symphony chroniclers have called this the beginning of the orchestra's romantic era. Nikisch and his successor, Emil Paur, found a group superbly trained and sensitive to their musical wishes. Both were intensely subjective interpreters in sharp contrast to Gericke. They found the orchestra eager and responsive to their violent, fiery approach. Gericke returned in 1898 and in an 8-year term continued the process of dispassionate refinement he had begun earlier.

In 1900 the Boston Symphony moved to a new home, one which had been built especially for it, and which it has occupied ever since. Symphony hall is one of the few auditoriums in the world owned and operated by its resident orchestra.

With the advent of Karl Muck in 1906, the ensemble reached the threshold of world eminence. Muck went to Boston from what was one of the most envied conductoral posts anywhere, that of general music director of the Royal Opera house in Berlin.

Another Fiedler.

Muck stayed two years before his leave of absence was revoked in Berlin. Max Fiedler (no relation to Arthur Fiedler, present conductor of the Boston Pops) was a considerable success during the next four years, whereupon Muck returned to carry the orchestra through the first World war.

In September of 1917, Muck and his musicians traveled to Camden, N. J., to make the first phonograph recordings of an entire symphony orchestra. The experience was an uncomfortable one and would amuse musicians who play recording sessions under modern conditions. Leslie Rodgers, Boston Symphony librarian at that time, left notes on the event:

"They crammed us into a funny-shaped shell that looked like half of a ball open at one end . . . The first desk men sat outside [the ball] on high stools and played directly into horns of their own. But the others had to run out whenever they had a solo part, blow it into a horn, and run back and join the orchestra! Dr. Muck in full formal dress stood outside the shell . . . We were just finishing Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony when every factory whistle in Camden went off. . . ."

America's entry in the war brought about an increase in anti-German sentiment here, and this had a marked effect on the Boston Symphony. Its conductors had all been Germans; because Higginson's musical upbringing and orientation had been German he had naturally turned to that quarter for his leadership.

War Hysteria Hits Conductor.

Clamor for the removal of Muck from the orchestra's helm grew to hysterical proportions. He was finally arrested by the federal government as an enemy alien and interned for the duration.

The unfortunate affair shook the very foundations of the aging Higginson's reign, and with imperceptible grace the orchestra's control was transferred to a board of trustees. This marked the end of 37 years of one-man financial support, a record unparalleled in modern times.

The natural reaction after the war was for the orchestra, under its new leaders, to seek a new conductor in France. Henri Rabaud came from Paris for one season and he was succeeded by Pierre Monteux, who stayed for five.

Under French influence the orchestra's repertoire was significantly enlarged. The musicians took to the training they received under Monteux and a tradition of superlative performance of the French impressionistic literature was begun which still exists.

In 1924, Serge Koussevitzky was appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony. The association was to last 25 years and must be counted one of the most fruitful musical "marriages" of all time.

Under Koussevitzky, the orchestra became a great force for the encouragement of 20th century American composers. Though he had never been in America before his engagement by the Boston Symphony, the conductor felt it his duty to provide a vehicle for the performance of this country's indigenous music.

Composers now firmly established were given their first big boost by Koussevitzky. Aaron Copland, Samuel Barber, Lucas Foss, Roger Sessions, Leonard Bernstein, Roy Harris and Howard Hanson are just a few of those whose success is owed, in part at least, to the Boston Symphony.

Koussevitzky's tenure was important for so many reasons no comprehensive listing is possible here. But two accomplishments which must be noted are the inauguration of the famed Berkshire festival concerts in 1936 and the formation in 1940 of its companion institution, the Berkshire Music center, on land near Tanglewood, Mass., given to the orchestra by the descendants of William Aspinwall Tappan.

When Koussevitzky retired in 1949, the difficult job of taking his place was given to Charles Munch, thereby returning an outstanding interpreter of French music to the Boston podium.

Tours by the orchestra had steadily grown in scope since the early years when New York was considered a distant hop. Under Munch they were to virtually circle the globe. The Boston Symphony first visited Europe in 1952 and played in 11 cities, including Paris, London, Berlin, Amsterdam, Strasbourg and Frankfurt.

First to Soviets.

Then in 1956 it became the first Western orchestra to play in the Soviet Union, giving two concerts in Leningrad and three in Moscow. This trip also included performances in Vienna, Prague, Oslo, Helsinki and in Edinburgh as part of that city's International Music festival.

Four years later, the orchestra made an 8-week tour of the Far East. Munch and his musicians were heard in Formosa, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, playing 33 concerts altogether.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world, 227 concerts during the current season. Its musicians are busy on a year-round basis which makes it possible for it to attract, and hold the best orchestral talent available. Once employed by the orchestra, the players are covered by an excellent pension fund arrangement which was first instituted in 1900.

Last year it again became necessary to replace a retiring master conductor, and Erich Leinsdorf was chosen to succeed Munch. Leinsdorf is a cosmopolitan musician with a wide range of musical competence. He has conducted the Cleveland and Rochester symphonies, was music consultant and conductor at the Metropolitan Opera and has held important posts in Europe.

Three characteristic rehearsal shots of the late Serge Koussevitzky show the dynamic intensity which marked his interpretations. During his 25 years on the Boston Symphony podium, he conducted many world premieres, one of which was of the Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" which the group will play on its program here Tuesday. The composer dedicated the work to Koussevitzky and his musicians.

Some Achievements in Boston Symphony's 82 Years.

KANSAS CITY will have its first opportunity to hear the famous Boston Symphony here Tuesday night in Music Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will lead the orchestra in works by Beethoven, Brahms and Bartok.

The orchestra in its 82 years has marked up an impressive list of achievements:

- Ranked by virtually all authorities among the greatest orchestras in the world.
- Has owned, operated, and presented concerts in its own auditorium for 62 years.
- Made the first phonograph recordings of a full symphony orchestra.
- First Western orchestra to tour in the Soviet Union.
- The only orchestra in the world that operates its own school of music and conducts its own summer festival, both on its own property at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.
- Has the longest season and presents more concerts than any other privately supported orchestra in the world.
- Has produced a spring season of lighter music since 1885, played by the renowned Boston Pops orchestra.
- Offers a series of free outdoor summer concerts and has done so every year since 1929. Crowds at these concerts have numbered up to 20,000.

[151]

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
D. 334,790 S. 363,420

APR 11 1963

MAY SHAPE MUSIC CAREERS.

THE appearance here of the Boston Symphony orchestra Tuesday night at the Music Hall also will be the occasion for an important step in the careers of many aspiring young Kansas City musicians.

Members of the visiting orchestra will audition these students to determine if they meet the stiff entrance requirements of the Berkshire Music center, an institute for advanced music study operated for eight weeks each summer by the Boston Symphony on its own property at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Applicants have been instructed to be at the Municipal Auditorium at 7 o'clock the night of the concert. This year's session of the center will be from June 30 to August 25. As usual, this will coincide with the orchestra's Berkshire music festival, one of its annual events since 1936.

The 210 acres of lawn, meadow and magnificent trees which comprise Tanglewood were given to the orchestra in that year by the descendants of William Aspinwall Tappan, 19th century Boston banker and merchant whose estate it once had been. Its idyllic beauty had brought some of New England's great poets and authors to live and work there; Hawthorne, Longfellow, Holmes and Melville were sometime residents.

Just a week long at first, and attended only by music lovers of the immediate area, the Berkshire festival has grown over the years to its present 8-week length and last year drew about 250,000 visitors from everywhere in the world.

Weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony in the 6,037-seat music shed are the major attraction, but chamber music performances and lecture series also lure large crowds.

The Berkshire Music center was instituted as part of the festival in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, then conductor of the orchestra, to provide a place where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under eminent teachers.

Erich Leinsdorf, who took over the orchestra's podium and direction of the center this season, has promised the continuation and improvement of the center's work. He stresses the element of co-operation between the center and the great conservatories and universities, and feels that each fulfills a needed function.

The center has four departments: conducting, under Leinsdorf; composition, under Aaron Copland; instrumental music, led by Richard Burgin, and choral music, directed by Lorna Cooke deVaron. The orchestra itself provides the largest part of the instrumental faculty.

Auditions will be held in each of the 11 cities the orchestra is to visit on its transcontinental tour, on which Kansas City is the second stop.

MUSIC IN THE BEAUTIFUL BERKSHIRE HILLS of Massachusetts has been an annual event since the Boston Symphony orchestra played in its first Berkshire Music festival in 1963. The orchestra gives eight weeks of concerts each summer in the large music shed (left center) which seats more than 6,000. Additional hundreds of listeners can be seen lounging on the lawn near the open end of the shed.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
D. 330,412

APR 17 1963

BOSTON GROUP IN RARE FORM

Orchestra Performs at Music Hall in Memorable Musical Event for 2,200.

WORKS BY 3 MASTERS

Versatility of Legendary Ensemble Shown in Beethoven, Brahms, Bartok Pieces.

By Sandor Kallai.
(A Member of The Star's Staff.)

The Boston Symphony orchestra under its new permanent conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, played a concert last night at the Music Hall.

The players and conductor left about 2,200 listeners with the rare impression that they had heard something of true magnificence—something that would not soon fade from memory.

It was the first visit to Kansas City by this musical organiation, which has played in almost every quarter of the globe. We cannot help but wonder why it has taken so long, but are grateful it has happened at last. The concert was presented by Ruth Seufert Celebrity Attractions.

Play Three Works.

Three works formed the program. They showed, as it were, three faces of this versatile ensemble. First, there was the Beethoven Overture to "Leonore" No. 3.

When the allegro arrived it was plain that Leinsdorf was not going to play it the easy way, that is, fast. His tempo was reserved, measured, almost deliberate, giving the audience a chance to explore the subtleties within the work, to admire the inner workings of the fine group. He lay the expertness of his musicians on the line and, of course, he was not disappointed.

Again in the Brahms Symphony No. 3, we were allowed to enter and dwell within the composition. The conductor seemed to give cues not so much to his men but to denote clearly each musical signpost for the listeners' benefit. His gestures were like a sculptor's, firm yet gentle, incisive yet warm. Watching him did not distract the hearer from the music, it gave emphasis to its special beauties.

We heard something new in Brahms interpretation. Two separate levels of motion were set up. There were sections of virtual stasis, in which it felt as though nothing would ever happen; each moment was an end unto itself. The orchestral colors were pale. Time ceased.

Change Is Vivid.

Then, sometimes gradually, sometimes suddenly, we were propelled into sections of virile energy, where everything was motion. The colors became vibrant and piercing. They shifted and whirled. The impact of this contrast was total.

The Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" was written almost 20 years ago expressly for the Boston orchestra upon commission from its conductor at that time, Serge Koussevitzky.

We heard the New York premiere of this very important modern work under Koussevitzky in the spring of 1945. Though that performance has been remembered with particular fondness, last night's did no violence to the memory. It was superb. The piece clearly belongs to these players as to no other group.

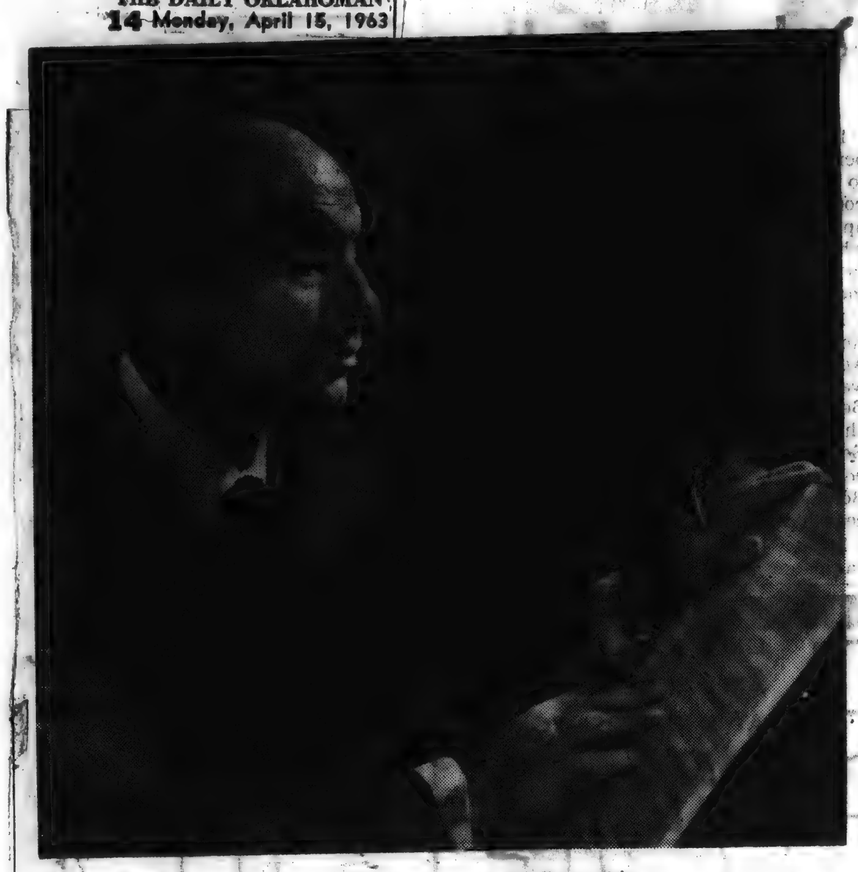
There were the delicate satire, frequent sardonic touches, purposely distorted fugues, quotations from vulgar sources, the snarling of strings played at the bridge, all done deftly and at tempos permitting listener meditation.

There were dazzling technical brilliance, the added dynamic dimension of a softer degree of soft, the pathetic, despairing wails of oboe and piccolo in the somber Elegy, in short, the Bartok played as a meaningful whole, a masterpiece.

The audience responded with warmth not often heard here. Even after an encore, Wagner's "Ride of the Walkure," they refused to be appeased. When the house lights were turned on, they persisted and earned still another curtain call.

152 OKLAHOMA CITY

THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN
14 Monday, April 15, 1963



Erich Leinsdorf . . . music interests wide.

Critics Praise Boston Music

What kind of a conductor is the Boston Symphony's new man at the helm, Erich Leinsdorf?

Musically, many critics feel he has finally found his niche in the sound "Boston" which makes one of its rare, transcontinental tour appearances here at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in Municipal Auditorium.

Leinsdorf had one orchestra practically disappear on him in the 1940's. Shortly after becoming music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, as Toscanini's best protege, he was drafted as one of this country's newer citizens.

Viennese-born, but now thoroughly Americanized, he has conducted in Rochester where he knew Oklahoma City's Guy Fraser Harrison. He was later at the New York City Opera and prior to going to the Boston was the conductor for the Metropolitan Opera Company.

One recognized critic said, "Leinsdorf proved the mettle of his personality by becoming the only first rank conductor with whom the Met's Rudolf Bing has ever been able to work with for any length of time."

Leinsdorf is partial to new music, with a wide taste for instance, he likes not only Bach, Haydn, Brahms, Schubert, and Tschaikovsky, but also Bartok and Prokofiev. Both the latter will be represented on the Wednesday program plus the Brahms Third.

Oklahoma State Music Lovers Look to City Event

April 15 Times

Oklahoma City will be the mecca of music lovers from over the state and region Wednesday when the Boston Symphony makes its only Oklahoma appearance at 8:30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium.

A chartered bus from Tulsa will bring oil capital symphony fans while another special bus will be enroute from Chickasha. In addition there have been numerous ticket requests from Dallas, says the Oklahoma City Symphony box-office.

The "Boston" will not be appearing in Texas and its concert here is one of only 11 on this transcontinental tour. The box-office also reports there have been numerous ticket requests from Wichita, Kan., although the "Boston" will be playing in Kansas City Tuesday.

The ticket holder traveling the greatest distance, however, will be a Cleveland, Ohio, woman.

State cities which will be represented by other special groups, include Muskogee, Ponca City, Enid, Wewoka, Sulphur, Ada, Shawnee, Stillwater, Chandler, Lindsay and Norman.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the 82-year-old Boston, has programmed Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," Brahms' "Third Symphony," and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

Japan Author Dies

TOKYO (AP) — Kodo Nomura, 80, a Japanese author who specialized in mystery stories in Samurai days, died Sunday of pneumonia.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,028 S. 150,442

MAR 31 1963

Berkshire Auditions in OC

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will hold auditions for admission in Oklahoma City April 17 in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert there.

The 21st session of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be held concurrently with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., June 30-Aug. 25. Leinsdorf has broadened the scope of several of the Music Center's departments to enhance the training of the individual performer.

Young musicians in the performing divisions of the music center, though not able to meet tuition charges at present are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund. A number of other scholarships and fellowships are also available.

Instrumentalists, singers and conductors who are interested in auditioning for admission to the 1963 session of the Berkshire Music Center should write to the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

ADA, OKLA.
NEWS
D. 9,845 S. 9,987

APR 1963

Boston Symphony plays in Oklahoma City on April 17. This evening concert brings one of America's greatest musical organizations to Oklahoma.

Sarber's Press
Clipping Service
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

CHAMBER OF COMM.
MAGAZINE
OKLA. CITY, OKLA.

Boston Symphony Featured

Several firsts will be registered when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays a concert April 17 at the Municipal Auditorium. The 8:30 p.m. event is the third Great Artist series program on the 1962-63 schedule sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony orchestra.

This will be the first time the 82-year-old orchestra, recently called by Time Magazine the "best in the country," has played in Oklahoma. Oklahoma City will be its only stop between Kansas City and Albuquerque, New Mexico, on a whirlwind spring tour following the close of its Boston season.

It also will be the first appearance here of the Boston's new conductor this year, Erich Leinsdorf, who took over the helm after Charles Munch's retirement in 1962.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 18 1963

Boston Symphony Scores Success

To admire a painting, a statue, or a building, you go look at it. To hear music, you must have the intercession of a performer.

This fact makes music the most evanescent, expensive, and exasperating of all the arts, because performers make it only sometimes.

Six thousand Oklahomans, somewhat diluted by an admixture of alert Texans and Kansans, crowded Municipal Auditorium Wednesday night because they hoped that Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony could be counted upon to be spectacular intermediaries.

Their hopes were fulfilled abundantly in Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony, Brahms's Third, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, for two very good reasons.

First, Leinsdorf meets the qualifications of a conductor, e.g., he must be a genius and he must be able to take thousands of assorted hoots, thuds, and squeaks and make them into a symphony just by waving his hands around according to a pattern that must be scientific and inspiring.

Second, his players meet the qualifications of symphonic players, e.g., they must have the technique of a soloist coupled with a willingness to put all their feelings about the music into the hands of the conductor.

Leinsdorf's gestures are virtually an analysis of the music (a musician gone deaf could hear the symphony just by watching). His players watch and obey. The result is a great experience in the most intricate of all arts.

Thanks, Boston. We knew we could count on you.

—James Boeringer

152 OKLAHOMA CITY

THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN
Monday, April 15, 1963

Erich Leinsdorf . . . music interests wide.

Critics Praise Boston Music

What kind of a conductor is the Boston Symphony's new man at the helm, Erich Leinsdorf?

Musically, many critics feel he has finally found his niche in the sound "Boston" which makes one of its rare transcontinental tour appearances here at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in Municipal Auditorium.

Leinsdorf had one orchestra practically disappear on him in the 1940's. Shortly after becoming music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, as Toscanini's best protege, he was drafted as one of this country's newest citizens.

Viennese-born, but now thoroughly Americanized, he has conducted in Rochester where he knew Oklahoma City's Guy Fraser Harrison. He was later at the New York City Opera and prior to going to the Boston was the conductor for the Metropolitan Opera Company.

One recognized critic said Leinsdorf proved the mettle of his personality by becoming the only first rank conductor with whom the Met's Rudolf Bing has ever been able to work with for any length of time.

Leinsdorf is partial to new music, with a wide taste for instance, he likes not only Bach, Haydn, Brahms, Schubert, and Tschaikowsky, but also Bartok and Prokofiev. Both the latter will be represented on the Wednesday program plus the Brahms Third.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,028 S. 150,442

MAR 31 1963

Berkshire Auditions in OC

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will hold auditions for admission in Oklahoma City April 17 in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert there.

The 21st session of the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be held concurrently with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., June 30-Aug. 25. Leinsdorf has broadened the scope of several of the Music Center's departments to enhance the training of the individual performer.

Young musicians in the performing divisions of the music center, though not able to meet tuition charges at present, are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund. A number of other scholarships and fellowships are also available.

Instrumentalists, singers and conductors who are interested in auditioning for admission to the 1963 session of the Berkshire Music Center should write to the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

ADA, OKLA.
NEWS
D. 9,845 S. 9,987

APR 7 1963

Boston Symphony plays in Oklahoma City on April 17. This evening concert brings one of America's greatest musical organizations to Oklahoma.

Oklahoma
State Music Lovers Look to City Event

April 15 Times

Oklahoma City will be the mecca of music lovers from over the state and region Wednesday when the Boston Symphony makes its only Oklahoma appearance at 8:30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium.

A chartered bus from Tulsa will bring oil capital symphony fans while another special bus will be enroute from Chickasha. In addition there have been numerous ticket requests from Dallas, says the Oklahoma City Symphony box-office.

The "Boston" will not be appearing in Texas and its concert here is one of only 11 on this transcontinental tour. The box-office also reports there have been numerous ticket requests from Wichita, Kan., although the "Boston" will be playing in Kansas City Tuesday.

The ticket holder traveling the greatest distance, however, will be a Cleveland, Ohio, woman.

State cities which will be represented by other special groups, include Muskogee, Ponca City, Enid, Wewoka, Sulphur, Ada, Shawnee, Stillwater, Chandler, Lindsay and Norman.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the 82-year-old Boston, has programmed Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, Brahms' "Third Symphony" and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

Japan Author Dies

TOKYO (AP) — Kodo Nomura, 80, a Japanese author who specialized in mystery stories in Samurai days, died Sunday of pneumonia.

Sarber's Press 35
Clipping Service
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

CHAMBER OF COMM. MAGAZINE
OKLA. CITY, OKLA. 63

Boston Symphony Featured

Several firsts will be registered when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays a concert April 17 at the Municipal Auditorium. The 8:30 p.m. event is the third Great Artist series program on the 1962-63 schedule sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony orchestra.

This will be the first time the 82-year-old orchestra, recently called by Time Magazine the "best in the country," has played in Oklahoma. Oklahoma City will be its only stop between Kansas City and Albuquerque, New Mexico, on a whirlwind spring tour following the close of its Boston season.

It also will be the first appearance here of the Boston's new conductor this year, Erich Leinsdorf, who took over the helm after Charles Munch's retirement in 1962.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 187,008 S. 250,270

APR 18 1963

Boston Symphony Scores Success

To admire a painting, a statue, or a building, you go look at it. To hear music, you must have the intercession of a performer.

This fact makes music the most evanescent, expensive, and exasperating of all the arts, because performers make it only sometimes.

Six thousand Oklahomans, somewhat diluted by an admixture of alert Texans and Kansans, crowded Municipal Auditorium Wednesday night because they hoped that Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony could be counted upon to be spectacular intermediaries.

Their hopes were fulfilled abundantly in Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony, Brahms's Third, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, for two very good reasons.

First, Leinsdorf meets the qualifications of a conductor, e.g., he must be a genius and he must be able to take thousands of assorted boots, thuds, and squeaks and make them into a symphony just by waving his hands around according to a pattern that must be scientific and inspiring.

Second, his players meet the qualifications of symphonic players, e.g., they must have the technique of a soloist coupled with a willingness to put all their feelings about the music into the hands of the conductor.

Leinsdorf's gestures are virtually an analysis of the music (a musician gone deaf could hear the symphony just by watching). His players watch and obey. The result is a great experience in the most intricate of all arts.

Thanks, Boston. We knew we could count on you.

—James Boeringer

Although the Boston Symphony, which will appear here Wednesday, may boast many things, it can boast only three women compared to several dozen in the Oklahoma City Symphony who wear skirts. From left, the tradition-breaking trio is Winfred Winograd Mayes, cello; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute, and Olivia Hall Luetcke, harp, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Trio Breaks Boston Tradition

News of the Times FOR Women

COMING TO Oklahoma City, where the local orchestra is nearly half composed of women players—oboeists and bassoonists among them—is an orchestra with only three women in the 104-strong personnel. It is the "Boston," to be here Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium.

Even this is a far cry from 1882, the year of the orchestra's founding, where among all the bearded musicians there was not a female — not even the harpist, traditionally a woman in the 20th century.

Now in 1963, the Boston harpist is a woman, Mrs. Olivia Hall Luetcke. She is a native of New York City, began studying the harp at the age of 6, was first harpist with the San Antonio, Texas, symphony before joining the Boston symphony in 1951. Like many musicians, she has a hobby—and it is raising and showing Chihuahuas.

MRS. WINIFRED WINOGRAD made musical history when in 1957 she became the first woman string player ever to play with the Boston. She is a 'cellist, a former student of Gregor Piatigorsky. Last summer she married principal 'cellist Samuel Mayes, who is of Cherokee ancestry and has many relatives in eastern Oklahoma, especially in Mayes county.

Youngest of the trio is Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flutist since 1951. She is from Streator, Ill., and played with the National Symphony in Washington, D. C., and the Los Angeles Philharmonic before coming to Boston. Married to a physician, she has a 3-year-old daughter.

However the Oklahoma City Symphony still goes the Boston one better; in addition to harpist Joyce Rosenfield, 21 string players, principal woodwind players and flutist Feodora Steward, we have Lois Hood playing the bass viol, much taller than she is, and K. Dean Walker as assistant percussionist.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

McALESTER, OKLA.
NEWS-CAPITAL
D. 8,545

APR 11 1963 APR 11 1963

Boston Symphony Visits City Soon

Three masterpieces from the Boston Symphony orchestra's repertoire will be played in concert next Wednesday when the 82 - year - old orchestra makes its first visit to Oklahoma.

The 8:30 p.m. program in Municipal Auditorium is the third event on the Great Artist series sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor with the Boston this season, will present first the Prokofieff Classical Symphony. Following it will be the Brahms' "Third Symphony."

After intermission the orchestra and conductor will return with the late Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," written especially for the Boston Symphony. Although most concerti are written for one or two solo instruments, this was composed with the thought that each section of the 104 member orchestra would perform in solo roles. Thus Bartok called it a "concerto for orchestra."

This [illegible] spring tour of the Bosto[illegible], which starts Sunday, is only the second transcontinental trip in the history of the orchestra and [illegible] its first tour since 1956.

The Oklahoma City tour date is numbered among the cities of Chicago, Albuquerque, Kansas City, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

Ticket information may be obtained from the symphony boxoffice, Municipal Auditorium.

JONES CITY, OKLA.
NEWS
W. 1,546

APR 11 1963

Oklahoma City Advertiser
4/14/63

Boston Symphony to Play Three Abstract Works

Three major works in abstract symphony form present an unusual program. But when it is the Boston Symphony performing, and conductor Erich Leinsdorf's choices so felicitous, it promises a rich and variegated evening. (Municipal Auditorium 8:30 p.m. April 17).

No three symphonies more diverse in their expressive content could have been chosen than the classic-modern No. 1 of Prokofiev, the romantic No. 3 of Brahms, and the ultra-modern Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

The Prokofiev is an early "cubist" work of a young and headstrong Bolshevik not yet troubled or tamed by the Commissars of Conservatism. It is an amusing takeoff in precise formal terms on Haydn and Mozart, expressed in harmonies and melodies flying off at sharp angles from the classic.

The Brahms Third is a delectable fruit of the fruitful autumn of Brahms' life, done in an interlude warmed and illumined by his attachment to the beautiful inspirer and singer of his Alto Rhapsody. It is Brahms at his excelsis, lyric and epic by turns, and always Germanic.

The Bartok may be interpreted as a last blast of defiance and triumph, uttered as the composer staved off death until it could be finished.

And so it was, in time for conductor (and commissioner) Serge Koussevitzky to premier it with the Boston Symphony on December 1, 1944. Its commissioning and its completion were a good omen for the dying composer. During the last few weeks of his life (he died in September, 1945) he heard of 48 performances of his major works, as many and perhaps more than he had known in his whole life before. War, illness, and the fate of his native Hungary had made his life a difficult one.

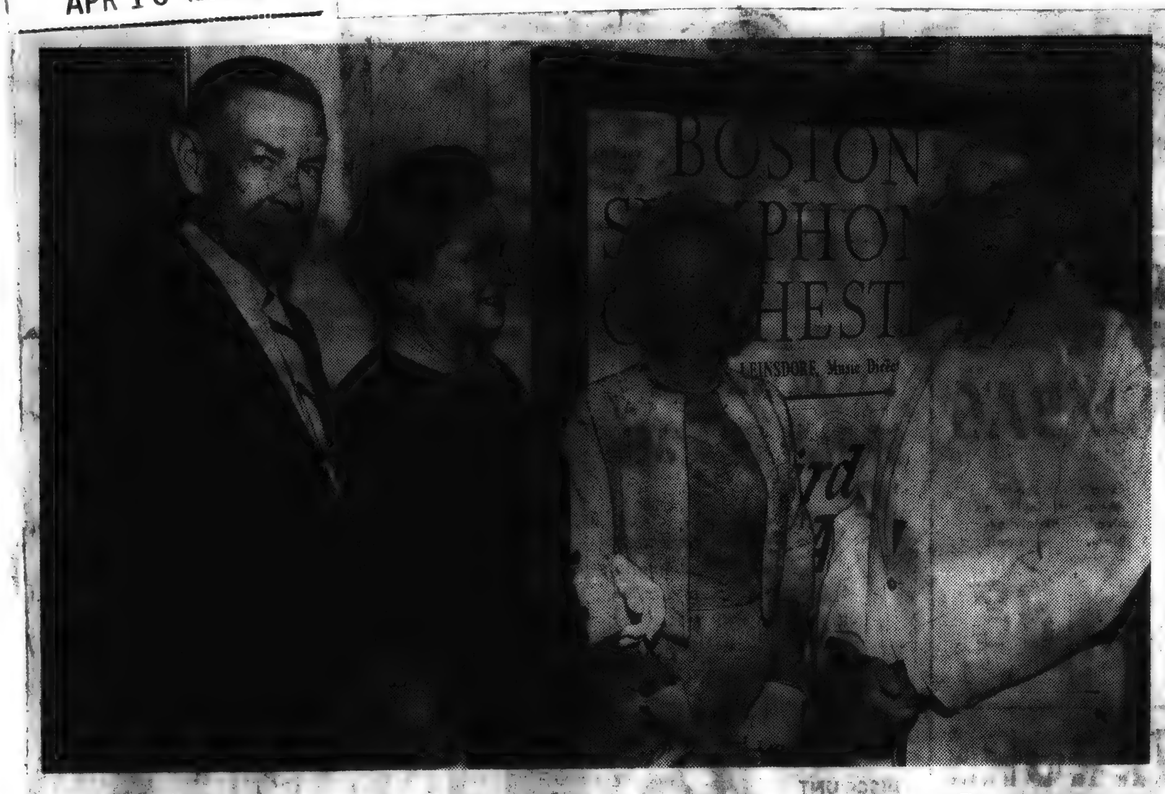
His own notes for the premiere performance say: "Apart from the jesting second movement, the general mood of the work represents a gradual transition from the sternness of the first movement and the lugubrious, deathsong of the third to the life-assertion of the last."

His biographer, Wilson Stevens, says it is harmonically and melodicaly a distillation of Bartok's maturest style; an intensification of his strongly affirmed tonality, lucid textures, plastic [illegible]

ERICH LEINSDORF, new music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will conduct a program of Brahms, Prokofieff and Bartok in concert at the Municipal Auditorium in Oklahoma City Apri 17, 8:30 p.m. Tom Gibson, a former Oklahoman, will play first trombonist with the famed "Boston."

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
D. 116,792

APR 18 1963



Mood Gala At Concert

A GALA MOOD prevailed Wednesday night at Municipal Auditorium when the Boston Symphony Orchestra took the stage for a concert. Final program on the Great Artist Series, under sponsorship of the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony Orchestra, included Prokofiev, Brahms and Bartok.

AMONG THE ENTHUSIASTIC audience were, left to right, above, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey P. Everest, Mrs. Dwight P. Ferguson and Mr. Ferguson, who came over from Woodward for the musical event. The Women's Committee had tables set up in the auditorium lobby for ticket renewals for the next season. Looking over the brochure describing next season's programs were, at left, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mager jr.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
D. 116,792

APR 4 1963

Auditions Planned

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony which will appear in Oklahoma City at 8:30 p.m. April 17, will hold auditions here on that date for the Boston's summer music program at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston's appearance will be in Municipal Auditorium and is the third and final program of the Great Artist Series sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

Instrumentalists, singers and other young musicians interested in conducting may audition for the 1963 session. Appointments for auditions may be made by writing the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Aaron Copland will be chairman of the music cneter faculty and head of the composition department. Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct the instrumental music and conducting department, assisted by 22 members of the Boston.

Tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, plus a number of other scholarships and fellowships, are available to the young musician who might not be able to meet tuition charges.

NORMAN, OKLA.
TRANSCRIPT
D. 8,139 S. 8,312

APR 15 1963

Boston Symphony Set for OC Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra will play its first concert in Oklahoma at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Municipal Auditorium, Oklahoma City.

Erich Leinsdorf, will conduct the orchestra in "Prokofieff Classical Symphony," "Brahms Third Symphony" and Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," written especially for the Boston Symphony.

The symphony's appearance is being sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 14 1963

CAUGHT IN REHEARSAL is Erich Leinsdorf and the 82-year-old Boston Symphony which appears here Wednesday. The major musical event marks only the second time in the history of the orchestra that it has made a transcontinental tour. Details of the Municipal Auditorium concert are on Page 11 this section.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
D. 116,792

APR 19 1963

1962

A Swirl of Violins

TRUMPETS and tubas may make bands, but violins are the key to a symphony.

The performance here of the Boston Symphony demonstrated that clearly. It also shows why even in the lean years of the Oklahoma City symphony, now happily past, that conductor Guy Fraser Harrison always pleaded for more violins.

Anyone who heard the swirl of rich violin tone in response to Boston conductor Eric Leinsdorf's fingertip command can understand why.

Caught in rehearsal, Erich Leinsdorf paints a vivid picture of a man on the musical move.

Banker's 'Scheme' Lasts

By Joe Broady
Fine Arts Reporter

In 1881 Henry Lee Higginson, possessor of an immense Boston banking fortune, thanked the public in the letters column of the old Boston Transcript saying he doubted whether the people would like it but "the scheme will stand."

Mr. Higginson's scheme was the Boston Symphony and the scheme did stand. When the Boston's new director Erich Leinsdorf brings his baton down on the final note of its April 13 concert in Symphony Hall it will be closing its 82nd season.

THE FOLLOWING Wednesday, April 17, the 104-member organization will be on stage in Oklahoma City's Muncipal Auditorium as the third and final attraction of the Great Artists Series sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

Just as 82 years is a figure not to go unnoticed, such too was the figure of Mr. Higginson who conducted the affairs of the orchestra until 1917 when a board of trustees was appointed.

"It is true I founded the orchestra and I support it, but you can't expect me to sell the tickets too," was his reply to an irate lady who attended a tour concert in Baltimore.

TOURING HAS always been an integral and well established part of the Boston's program. In 1886 it ventured westward to Chicago, visited New York the following year and in 1915 it was a prime attraction at San Francisco's Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Until 1953, however, it had never visited the southwest and, until April 17, it has never played in Oklahoma.

FOLLOWING the Boston's concluding concert at Symphony Hall, eight tons of equipment will be crated. Two chartered jet airliners will transport the orchestra Monday to Chicago for its first concert of this tour.

Two planes are used because contractual obligations state not more than 60 percent of the orchestra's members may be in one plane.

THE BOSTON'S touring itinerary includes Chicago, April 15; Kansas City, April 16; Oklahoma City, April 17; Albuquerque, April 18; San Diego, April 19; Los Angeles, April 21; San Francisco, April 22; Portland, April 23; Seattle, April 24; Winnipeg, April 26.

The orchestra returns to Boston on Sunday and April 30 the Boston Pops Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler opens its season. Of the Boston's 104 members, 85 play in the Pops.

This 1963 tour marks the first for the Boston since it toured eight weeks to Formosa, Japan, New Zealand and Australia in 1960 and only the second transcontinental tour in its history. In 1956 it was the first western orchestra to appear in Russia. In 1952 it made its first tour to Europe.

THE BOSTON has a budget of $2,620,000 which includes the Pops and the summer festival at Tanglewood. In many seasons the orchestra raises as much as 90 percent of its budget. The national average is 57 percent.

Its 227-concert schedule over 55 weeks is the longest season of any privately supported symphony in the world. Thirty-two weeks are presented in the 2,600-seat Symphony Hall, nine are devoted to the Pops, three are presented on the banks of the Charles River and eight are heard at Tanglewood. There is never a single ticket available during the winter season.

THUS IT IS obvious the Boston is impressive by the sheer weight of its statistics. Statistics, however, do not an orchestra make.

The Boston is an internationally acclaimed organization. A leading national magazine recently labeled it one of the nation's five best in a country which supports some 1,200. It might well have been rated the best had not the magazine been seeking a Midwestern orchestra. George Szell, in his 50th year of conducting, and the Cleveland Orchestra, were given the honor.

This has hardly tarnished the good name of the Boston, however. Leinsdorf, 50, Viennese born but internationally bred, extraordinary musician picked off from the Metropolitan Opera Company, is said to be bringing the orchestra into one of its most distinguished eras to date.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 17 1963

Guests

BEFORE THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert Wednesday evening, with an 8:30 "sharp" curtain, several Oklahoma City couples will be entertaining at dinner in their own homes or in clubs. Many will be in honor of out-of-town guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Handel, 1815 Wilshire, will have as their guests Mrs. Robert D. Stecker, Dallas; Dr. and Mrs. E. Gordon Ferguson and Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Edwards.

With Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Stuart, 7441 N County Club Dr., will be Mr. Stuart's brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Harold C. Stuart, Mr. and Mrs. Burch Mayo, all of Tulsa, and Dr. and Mrs. James Harlow, Norman. Mrs. Stuart is president of the Women's Committee for the Symphony sponsoring [illegible] Boston Symphony on the Great Artists Series.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
D. 116,792

APR 17 1963

Busy Time Her

Boston

A full Wednesday night will greet Oklahoma City theatergoers with the much hearlded appearance of the Boston Symphony, the Mummers first attempt at staging a mystery in "The Mousetrap" and the opening of "Carmen" at the University of Oklahoma.

The "Boston," ranked among the world's greatest orchestras, was scheduled to arrive in two chartered jet airliners from Kansas City early Wednesday afternoon. Following its 8:30 p.m. Municipal Auditorium concert, the 104-member organization will leave Thursday morning for Albuquerque.

LAWTON, OKLA.
CONSTITUTION
D. 15,694

APR 16 1963

SYMPHONY NOTE: Three masterpieces from the Boston Symphony orchestra's repertoire will be played in concert Wednesday when the 82-year-old orchestra makes its first visit to Oklahoma.

The 8:30 p.m. concert in Oklahoma's City's Municipal auditorium is the third event of the Great Artist Series sponsored by the women's committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor with the Boston this season, will present the Prokofieff Classical Symphony. The Brahms Third Symphony, despite its familiar second movement theme not programmed on tour as often as the First and Second, will follow.

The concert will be concluded with the late Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," written especially for the Boston Symphony. Single admission tickets are available for the program.

CLINTON, OKLA.
NEWS
D. 3,923 S. 3,923

APR 14 1963

OC Symphony Offers Boston Symphony Concert

OKLAHOMA CITY—(Special)—Two musicians with Oklahoma ties are returning to the state April 17 (Wednesday) when the Boston Symphony orchestra plays its first Oklahoma concert at 8:30 p.m. in the Municipal auditorium. Erich Leinsdorf, new music director, is conducting a program of Brahms, Prokofieff and Bartok.

One, Tora Gibson, is first trombonist with the famed "Boston." He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Gibson, 1525 W. 11th St., Stillwater, and received most of his musical education in Oklahoma.

Gibson studied with Louis Calavan and T. H. Patterson (later with Oklahoma City schools) in Stillwater, then with Bob Makovsky, Oakley Pittman and Frank Hladky at Oklahoma State University. After graduation, the young trombonist went to Dallas to audition with the Philadelphia Symphony and received a scholarship to the Curtis Institute of Music. His first orchestra job was with the Philadelphia orchestra. He then joined the Boston Symphony.

Although he himself has never lived in Oklahoma, Sammy Mayes, first 'cellest with the Boston, has many relatives in eastern Oklahoma, around Muskogee, Tahlequah and especially Pryor, in Mayes county.

An uncle, C. L. Samuel Sr., has tentatively planned to come to Oklahoma City for the April 17 concert. The Samuels and the Mayes are of Cherokee ancestry and the 'cellist is eager to find more family ties on his brief visit here.

Although the Boston's concert is on the Great Artist series of the Women's Committee for the Symphony, there are a number of good single seat locations still available by writing the Oklahoma City Symphony box - office, Municipal Auditorium, or calling CEntral 2 - 4292. Prices range from $5.50 for reserved orchestra and first mezzanine seats, to 4.50 and 3.50 for other reserved seats, plus unreserved upper balcony seats at only $2.00. The concert starts promptly at 8:30 p.m.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 14 1963

Symphony Visit Rare City Treat

By Joe Broady
Fine Arts Writer

With the appearance Wednesday of the 82-year-old Boston Symphony, Oklahoma City concertgoers will be hearing for the first time in 13 years a musical organization other than its own.

In 1951 the Israel Philharmonic appeared here under the baton of Leonard Bernstein. Two seasons ago the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, D. C., appeared at the University of Oklahoma.

While the musical merit has not been a varied one from the viewpoint of visiting symphony orchestras, it is indeed for the moment, a coup of the first order that the busy Boston is finding its way west.

The Boston, considered one of the musical world's most revered and respected institutions, will be appearing in its 8:15 p.m. Municipal Auditorium concert under its 10th conductor—Vienmese-born but thoroughly Americanized Erich Leinsdorf.

LEINSDORF, described as bringing a new era to the Boston, is in his first year as conductor. He follows the 1949-1962 reign of Charles Munch. Prior to Munch, the Boston was heard for 25 years under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

While the Boston has a glorious past, it is the orchestra of the present which provides the closing program in this season's Great Artist Series sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony.

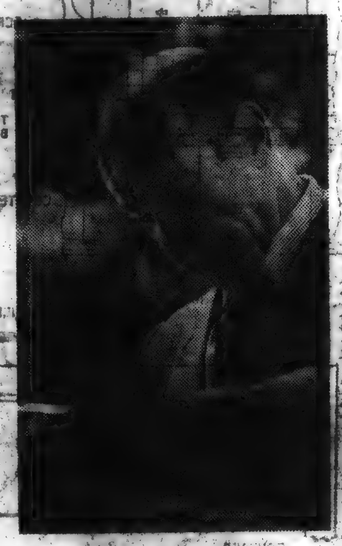
The internationally-bred Leinsdorf is bringing a more international tongue to the orchestra—one said to be "well modulated, clear and precise."

WHILE THE 104-members will be put to test in the building not known for its prompting of the clear and precise, the Boston will no doubt prove a musical point in that it is a symphony orchestra of the first rank.

The program: Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony;" Brahm's Third for Orchestra.

The Boston, when it appears here, will be on only its second transcontinental tour in history. It is touring by two charter jet airliners. Monday it plays in Chicago, Tuesday in Kansas City. Following its appearance here it plays in Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

THE BOSTON, ranked as one of the five best orchestras in the United States, is described as possessing "a new sound. And Leinsdorf is rapidly putting his individual stamp on the playing of the Bostonians, who seem to be in the process of becoming drier, crisper and perhaps a shade cooler."



Erich Leinsdorf

OKLAHOMA PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City Times
Oklahoma City, Okla.
22,579
DATE:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 16 1963

Boston Orchestra Ranks With Best

By Joe Broady
Fine Arts Writer

The Wednesday appearance of the Boston Symphony will mark a first visit to Oklahoma by the 82-year-old organization acclaimed as the "Aristocrat of orchestras."

While its appearance in Oklahoma City is a major musical achievement, only 11 cities are represented on its transcontinental tour itinerary, it hardly could be otherwise coming from a musical pioneer which has consistently provided an impressive list of achievements.

The Boston is ranked by virtually all musical authorities as being among the greatest orchestras in the world. It has owned, operated and presented concerts in its own auditorium for 62 years.

It may lay claim to making the first phonograph recording of a full symphony orchestra. It is the first Western orchestra to tour in the Soviet Union. It is the only orchestra in the world that operates its own school of music and conducts its own summer festival, both on its own property at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Boston has the longest season and presents more concerts than any other privately supported orchestra in the world. It has produced a spring season of semi - classical music since 1885, played by the renowned Boston Pops Orchestra.

Each summer it presents a series of free outdoor concerts and has done so every year since 1929.

The Boston, under conductor Erich Leinsdorf, was heard in Chicago Monday night. Tuesday, it plays in Kansas City. It will arrive in two jet airliners at Will Rogers Field at 12:35 p.m. Wednesday.

Leinsdorf is in his first year as the Boston's new conductor, coming from the Metropolitan Opera Company.

The 8:30 p.m. Municipal Auditorium program will include Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," Brahms' "Third Symphony" and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

This will be the third and final program of the Great Artist Series sponsored by the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony. Single tickets are available at the symphony box office, Municipal Auditorium.

Music Conductor Qualities Told

FORESHADOWING the coming of Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to play a concert here Wednesday night, qualities of a good conductor were outlined by Harvey Garber at the final 1962-63 meeting of the Women's Committee for the Oklahoma City Symphony Orchestra. The session was in the home of Mrs. Philip C. Honnold.

The final Great Artist series concert is at 8:30 in Municipal Auditorium.

Along with several other Eastman School of Music graduates in the local orchestra, French hornist Garber played under Mr. Leinsdorf when he was music director of the Rochester, N. Y., Philharmonic from 1947-1956. Norman Paulu, Larry Fisher, Horace Apgar and Roger Steward are on this alumni list.

GARBER ALSO serves as assistant conductor under Dr. Guy Fraser Harrison here, wielding his baton at several women's committee - sponsored children's concerts during the season.

"He must know the music backwards," Garber said of the conductor, "as well as have inherent elements of leadership." He pointed out that most conductors know one instrument as well as a performer, usually the piano.

Leinsdorf's own specialty has been opera conducting, especially with the Metropolitan; with the Boston Symphony he has given this up. Garber reminisced of the Boston conductor's rather flamboyant conducting style, that his musicians used to say, "First he scrubs the clothes and then he hangs them up to dry."

AS A SEPARATE profession, Garber continued, conducting is only about 125 years old. Before that the pianist or concertmaster of an orchestral group used to nod time while he played.

At first the conductor faced the audience (a habit partially revived on television), then turned to face the musicians and weld the orchestra into a cohesive whole. In a way no one completely understands, different conductors can get different tone from the same orchestra.

"Whatever else it is now," he concluded, "it is not just beating time!"

ACCOMPANIED by Mrs. Apgar, pianist, Garber played the Richard Strauss French horn concerto.

Describing his instrument, he called it a real "conversation piece"; it is so difficult to play and so easy to hear over the strings' sound, he quipped, we give people the opportunity to speculate. "Is he going to make it or isn't he?"

157 front page / second section

Current, Coming and Choice

Boston Symphony's ...earance Brings ...ories

By Aline Jean Treanor

If readers will pardon the ego, this will be a personal tribute to the Boston Symphony, whose coming on the Great Artist Series April 17 has put me up in the air in more ways than one.

For one thing, my little house (el Odds-n-Endso) is ringing with the latest records the Boston has made under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

For another, I've risked life and limb climbing to my top bookshelves to bring down the scrapbook of "my Boston Symphony year," a year often described as "gone mad," though I was only scantily aware of its madness, being on a mad career of my own, during which I did not intend to let the Boston Symphony play in its Symphony Hall without benefit of my presence.

THAT WAS 1926-27, A YEAR of Flaming Youth, Paul Whiteman, the Charleston, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ben Hecht; of crystal radio sets, of a rising Gloria Swanson and ebbing Pola Negri, of Clara Bow and John McCormack, of Texas Guinan and the speak-easy, (Tex wore a necklace of padlocks); of "Vo-Do-De-Odo," and "Do Wacky-Do"; of "Knock, Knock," of Peaches and Daddy Browning, of Shipwreck Kelly, the flagpole sitter.

It was the year of Lindbergh's flight across the Atlantic. It was the year of Dempsy-Tunney fights that left Dempsy tired and worn, Tunney a cool, fresh heavyweight champion. Babe Ruth was getting $70,000 a year and racked up 61 home runs. Sound movies were initiated by Al Jolson with "The Jazz Singer." Henry Ford brought out his new model A—550 of them in the first run off the assembly line.

But did any of this touch me? Well, very little of it. Sacco and Vanzetti more than Scott Fitzgerald; Lindbergh more than the model A, which is one Ford no one in my family ever owned.

I WAS TOO BUSY TAKING IN the museums, the lectures, the scope of the Boston public library with its Puvis de Chavannes murals; the Harvard Arboretum, the re-ride of Paul Revere; the theatre, the opera; but most faithfully, and most excitedly, the Boston Symphony.

I had gone to Cambridge fresh out of college, with a classical education in music and English still fresh in mind. I had heard almost no music of the kind called "modern," and it was the most exciting experience I had ever encountered.

Koussevitzky had been two years conductor of the orchestra, and was signing for another two years. But he had by no means established himself as he was to do eventually, and remain for years, during which fault-finding with him died down to almost none. In this year, it was being said, "His way of disregarding the music's plainest printed directions at behest of his own temperament and emotions seems utterly unjustifiable."

TO ME, HE NEEDED NO justification. He was a prophet and an angel of good tidings. For the first time I heard the music of Stravinsky, "The Firebird," "Petrouchka," "Rite of Spring," and they made my hair stand on end.

I heard the music of Prokofieff, "Chout," "The Scythian Suite," the "Symphony Classique" that we'll hear April 19.

I heard the works of Borodine and Tchaikowsky; Scriabine, Moussorgsky; Szymanowski, Ravel and Ibert; Debussy, Walton, Tansman; Weberg; Copland, Bartok.

Respighi and Casella, Italy's great composers of the time, came as visiting conductors and played their works.

Almost as grand as hearing the moderns was hearing the classics as Koussevitzky revitalized them, Mozart, Haydn, Handel; and the romantics, Schumann, Schubert, Brahms, Beethoven. A great Beethoven Festival was held, in which all the symphonies were played: the D minor Mass (the Choral Symphony, the quartets heard in smaller halls.

Ernest Newman, venerated English critic came over to sing Beethoven's praises, and O. G. Sonneck, editor of the Musical Quarterly appeared to speak outrageous heresy—that Beethoven stated, that he did not maintain a high level of excellence in all his works, that [illegible] aesthetic is [illegible] shared by the rest of [illegible] sic. It sounded like higher criticism to me then.

So the Boston has always been dear to my heart. I have often thought I could truthfully say, "I went to school to Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony."

I have heard it at every opportunity since, under the Russian Koussevitzky and his successor, the French Charles Munch. Now I will hear it under the Viennese Leinsdorf. I wouldn't miss it.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
D. 167,008 S. 256,270

APR 14 1963

'New Sound' Stirs Boston Orchestra Fans

By John Acord III

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays in Oklahoma City Wednesday, those in attendance will be hearing the ensemble's "new sound."

This new sound has started a raging controversy among the normally staid and proper Bostonians. The controversy is over whether Boston prefers the rich, well-disciplined, sometimes cool sound of a German-type orchestra or the fiery, exciting, colorful but usually lax and undisciplined sound of a French-type orchestra.

BUT AFTER a little research you find Bostonians have been arguing over orchestral sound since the orchestra was founded.

The Boston Symphony started its career in 1881 as an orchestra that reflected the sound and discipline of Germanic orchestras in tonal color and ensemble sonority. The orchestra stayed 'German' until early in 1918, when American feeling against anything Teutonic reached a peak of misdirected rage, that Wagner and Beethoven were barred from concert halls and opera stages. The career of Karl Muck, then director of the Boston, came to a tragic end.

The Boston then came under the influence of French conductors, who traditionally are more colorful in their approach to music, but notoriously loose in orchestral discipline. The orchestra stayed on this course until the arrival of Serge Koussevitzky, whose conducting was a unique blend of Russian discipline and French fervor.

KOUSSEVITZKY'S 25-year association with the orchestra were the most successful from a musical standpoint ever attained by the great orchestra. Koussevitzky was responsible for the introduction and playing of more modern American composers' compositions than any other single conductor.

Charles Munch, who retired last year, again brought the Boston under the French influence and again the ensemble sound became less perfect in its total execution, but Munch's performances were always full of Gallic fire and excitement. Munch's new recording of Ravel's 'Bolero' is a good example of what he accomplished with the orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf, 11th and present conductor, is Viennese by tradition, an American by long adoption, and a strict orchestral disciplinarian.

LEINSDORF is a conductor who likes to build his chords upon the bass fundamentals, which gives the orchestra a more massive sonority. Unlike most Germanic conductors, he prefers an open quality to the sound that gives each a note a clear definition of its own.

Leinsdorf's handling of the Boston is best exampled by his new recording of the "Concerto for Orchestra" (RCA) by Bella Bartok. This is a composition full of spirit and humor that is lost under some Germanic conductors, but not Leinsdorf's reading. He gives a reading that is lucid and sparkling, crammed to the hilt with Viennese humor and splendid orchestral playing. This is one of the selections on the program for Oklahoma City audiences.

Oklahoma City
Oklahoman 4/19/63

Reviews and Previews

Only at the encore end of the concert did conductor Erich Leinsdorf let his Boston Symphony loose Wednesday night, to reveal it in full force of tone and timbre. With Wagner's "Valkyries," he took the large audience for a ride on the wild side. It was an exciting season's close to the Great Artist Series of the Women's Committee for the Symphony, marked by standing ovation in the audience and a long round of bows on stage.

In the programmed concert, both the characteristic tone and temper of the orchestra were tamed some, first by the master himself, and second by Municipal Auditorium's customary toll of sonorities sentenced to its limbo of lost decibels.

Still, the Boston's characteristic rich sinuous flow of sound and perfection of ensemble were there, to be detected all evening. What was new was the Leinsdorf reading of the works. He exercised more rectitude than passion throughout, which made for a perfectly parsed and diagrammed Classical Symphony, with lights bouncing off its every angle and shining up its every lyric strand—all that could be asked for.

But more of the spirit and less of the letter would have given the Brahms Third Symphony sharper elegance, and favored the brilliant Bartok Concerto for Orchestra with more brilliant illumination.

Rectitude itself can project a kind of passion, as it did for the late Frederick Stock of the Chicago Symphony, but it takes more than one evening of listening to develop an audience's realization of it. Mr. Leinsdorf may very well stake and win his Boston reputation on this style of conducting and interpretation. It has its virtues. But they are restrained as compared to the French and Russian-French influences that have swayed the orchestra its last four decades.

The unique expressive voice of this aristocratic ensemble continues to be its distinguishing characteristic, and it is a collective phenomenon that can't be simply explained by the laws of physics or the sounding of a half million dollars worth of refined modern wind instruments and old Cremona strings.

It stems from the traditions of the orchestra, its high state of civilization, so to speak—every member chosen with care for nothing less than superb solo artistry; 49 work weeks a year and pay on a scale equal to the neighboring Harvard professors; stable support and humane conditions of employment that hold members indefinitely. (An average annual turnover of three owes largely to retirement of old members.)

Thus is bred this ensemble of purpose, of pitch, of expression; this collective depth of comprehension and response to the music, to the conductor, and of every individual and every choir to the every other. It is musicianship and virtuosity aged in the wood, so to speak.—A.J.T.

158

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,028 S. 150,442

APR 19 1963 Byfuller

Music Lovers of State Applaud Boston Visitors

Music lovers from all parts of Oklahoma as well as adjoining states converged on Oklahoma City Wednesday night for the most important musical event in many seasons—the first appearance in Oklahoma of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now on a transcontinental tour.

If there were any in Wednesday's audience who challenge the Boston orchestra's claim to the title of the nation's finest, they were a minority.

The standing ovation which Maestro Erich Leinsdorf and his orchestra received at the close of the program was less indicative of the feeling of the audience than the spirit of excitement which was felt during the intermission and after the concert.

It would be hard to say which group was the more moved, those to whom the concert brought back nostalgic memories or the younger music students for whom it opened up a new concept of symphonic sound.

* * *

The formula for such an orchestra is simple: 103 musicians, each of whom might legitimately aspire to a solo concert career, a full schedule of rehearsals and concerts under a master conductor and 82 years of experience.

The age of the orchestra is not without significance, for, though individual cells replace one another, the organism retains its identity and continues to mature.

The size of the orchestra also counts for much and the phenomenal unity within the large sections produces an overwhelming effect.

The great mass of tone accentuated the wit of the Prokofiev "Classical Symphony" which opened the concert program, a work in which the composer toys with the style evolved for the smaller orchestra of the 18th century.

The showpiece of the evening was the Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" written for this orchestra. Individual sections acknowledged the tremendous ovation given the performance in the manner of solo artists.

* * *

The Brahms Third, the second number of the program, is not a work to show off the virtuosity of such an outstanding ensemble. It is the least popular of Brahms' four symphonies and its inclusion seemed an obvious avoidance of the obvious.

"The Ride of the Valkyries" played as an encore, brought the audience to a pitch of excitement which this reviewer wholeheartedly shared.

Oklahoma is lucky to have been the third stop on the orchestra's tour during which it will play 11 concerts in 13 days. Such a grueling schedule after a strenuous season cannot but take something off the edge from the orchestra's brilliance.—M. de V.

STILLWATER, OKLA.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 6,834 S 6,834

APR 21 1963 Byfuller

FOOTNOTES AND FANCIES

Nothing Approximates True Symphony Music

By JAMES C. STRATTON
News-Press Fine Arts Editor

For a good many of us, I suspect, the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Oklahoma City this past Wednesday evening served to add a dimensional experience of some penetration plus an opportunity to readjust our ears to a true evaluation of orchestral sound.

Again the realization was underlined that unless the listener to music, particularly symphonic form, maintains a fairly close and continuing contact with the full-blown sound of a great permanent symphony ensemble, our aural evaluations begin to suffer. We may listen to the full complement of great symphonic groups, both domestic and European on records played on equipment of wide potential but what we hear is only an approximation.

Comparison between the true sound and the recorded sound can only continue to be correctly in balance unless we hear the live sound frequently enough to be able to compensate. As a matter of fact, some current observations on the widely-advertised "dynagroove" technique now being touted by RCA Victor are implicit in reminding us that our minds continually compensate for the shortcomings of any symphonic record. We actually fill in what is simply not present. We add the concert hall sound when we listen in our living room.

Those of us who were swept away by the fabulous sound of the Boston orchestra—the range of highs and lows, the tremendous dynamics, the precision of sections and soloists, the balance of aural effects—can have no way of checking on such distortions as were effected by the acoustics of the Oklahoma City Municipal Auditorium which is generally deadening to any type of utterance from its stage. I had the impression, however, that the sheer mass of the more than 100 members of this ensemble came through about as well as can be expected in this area. If the auditorium produced distortion, it was too subtle on the occasion. One was able to see who was doing what—unless you were on the treacherous flat floor of the front seats which will obscure anything that goes on back of the front line of the stage—and the intricacies of any given passage became as clear as a crystal and wholly illuminating to the general development of the musical score.

Hardly anyone was not aware of the impeccable technique of this great ensemble or uncomfortably nudged by even the vaguest distress as to the group's approach to the score. One could settle back comfortably and fully savor Conductor Erich Leinsdorf's way with his folk and how all and sundry collaborated with the utmost precision in producing the musical idea which was being delineated by the composer. Perhaps the composer. Perhaps the only uncomfortable moments came with those orchestral effects which made the hair stand up on the back of your neck or sent a chilling shiver of response down your spine. Naturally, this is what actually should occur neatly and properly at the requisite moment.

The music essayed provided this —Prokofieff's gentle if sometimes wry excursion into the past in the "Classical" symphony: Brahms' melting lines in the Third symphony; the conceptions of the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra in which everything fell into to place to reveal it as one of the musical masterworks of our age; and the sweep of the Valkaries' ride which the group tossed in as a closing bon bon.

There is no substitute for the best, and we can be quite thankful for this initial excursion of the Boston orchestra into this area. We can only hope for an occasional evening such as last Wednesday when we can again refresh ourselves as to the true sound in order to strengthen our ability to compensate on other occasions.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
D. 116 792

APR 18 1963

159

The Boston's Leinsdorf . . . "... been here before" . . . "a great organization"

Symphony Gets Standing Ovation

Joe Broady
Fine Arts Writer

The 104-member Boston Symphony was on its way westward Thursday after proving in a Wednesday night Municipal Auditorium concert a bad hall can sound good.

The 4,000 concertgoers responded with a standing ovation following Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" — an orchestral showpiece which allows virtuoso treatment for the orchestra's various segments.

Erich Leinsdorf, the balding 51-year-old conductor who conducts without aid of baton or score, beckoned the orchestra segment by segment, to stand. The applause came in waves.

Leinsdorf, in almost casual fashion, cued the proper "Boston" for a dynamic and rich interpretation of Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries." Another burst of applause from an appreciative audience resounded through the confines of the municipal. The [illegible] lights grew bright [illegible] memorable musical [illegible] ment had come to a close.

The "Boston" used no microphones. The familiar shell used by the Oklahoma City Symphony was widened some five feet on each side to accommodate the large number on stage. It was a big evening indeed. Mayor Jack Wilkes made each of the orchestra members and its conductor honorary ambassadors of good will.

Prior to intermission Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 3" was heard.

Why does the Boston sound as it does? Musical discipline would explain much of the reason. A budget of $2.7 million would be an excellent ingredient. Perhaps most noticeable of all to the musical layman was the lush and large string section. There should be no doubters when our own Guy Fraser Harrison speaks of the need for more money which in turn will provide more strings.

Leinsdorf explained Wednesday "the Boston is the greatest organization I have ever worked with." He is now in his first season with the orchestra coming from conducting with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

"The organization behind it is the one that gives it the opportunity. And too we have a hall which is second to none," he said.

By the end of this second transcontinental tour, the "Boston" will have traveled 8,500 miles. Leinsdorf said, "I like touring. I'm sort of a green wagon man (meaning gypsies). I enjoy traveling. And it agrees with the orchestra as well as long as we don't eat fried foods. Traveling is a stimulating experience."

This first tour since coming to the Boston? Hardly, he said, "this is our sixth.

16 ALBUQUERQUE.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 47,720 S. 67,920

MAR 10 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA public relations director, Harry Beall, left, and Ralph Berkowitz, business manager of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, complete final arrangements for an appearance of the Boston Symphony April 18 at 8:30 p.m. in Civic Auditorium, sponsored by the Albuquerque Civic Symphony. The Boston Symphony will appear here during a trans-continental tour of 11 major cities, immediately following the close of its 82nd season on April 13 at Boston. Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of the Boston Symphony this season from the Metropolitan Opera, will conduct its performance in Albuquerque. Tickets for the concert are available from the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, Korber Bldg., or from Riedling Music, May's Music and Cleveland's Music. Berkowitz and Dr. Leroy Miller, president of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, are serving as co-chairmen of ticket sales.

(Journal photo)

CLOVIS, N.M.
NEWS-JOURNAL
D. 8,273 S. 8,540

MAR 10 1963

Boston Symphony Performs In Albuquerque

ALBUQUERQUE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Albuquerque at the Civic Auditorium on Thursday, April 18.

On a transcontinental tour of ten cities, the Boston Symphony chose Albuquerque as its only stop in the Southwest between appearances in Oklahoma City and Los Angeles.

Now in its 82nd year, the Boston Symphony has established a string of records which will mark its career in musical history for a long time to come. It was the first American orchestra to appear in Russia, its tours of the Orient, Australia and New Zealand brought a new meaning to those lands of the United States' attainments in symphonic playing and its appearances in Europe have been acclaimed by critics and public alike.

The Boston Symphony received its first world recognition about 40 years ago when it came under the leadership of the legendary Serge Koussevitzky. After 25 years he relinquished his baton to the French conductor Charles Munch. Mr. Munch's tenure, completed after a dozen years, was followed at the beginning of the current season by Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's new conductor and music director who will conduct the Albuquerque performance.

The Civic Auditorium will contain a number of reserved seats of which some are still available at $7.50.

Unreserved seats on the floor are priced at $2 and in the balcony at $2 and $3.

Mail orders are being filled either by Riedling Music Co., 616 Central Avenue, SW or The Albuquerque Civic Symphony, 323 Korber Bldg., both in Albuquerque.

ALBUQUERQUE — Journal 4/14/63

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert Is Thursday Night

Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a concert Thursday night at 8:30 in the Civic Auditorium, the fourth concert in as many days of its trans-continental tour.

Starting Monday, the orchestra will play in Chicago, followed by Kansas City and Oklahoma City appearances prior to its arrival here.

For Ralph Berkowitz, manager of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony which sponsors the Boston Symphony's appearance here, the arrival of the orchestra will be in the nature of a re-union.

For 16 years Berkowitz has been dean of the Berkshire Music Center, home of the Berkshire Festival which the Boston Symphony gives each summer at Tanglewood, Mass.

Arriving with the orchestra's 110 musicians in two chartered planes will be a staff of about 15 librarians, secretaries, press representatives and other orchesta officials. A third plane bearing eight tons of instruments and personal effects will arrive early Thursday morning for preparations of the Civic Auditorium stage.

The Boston Symphony's program Thursday will consist of Beethoven's Lenore Overture No. 3, Wagner's Prelude to Act III, The Good-Friday Music and The Transformation Scene from his opera "Parsifal"; and Gustave Mahler's First Symphony.

Civic Auditorium box office will be open daily from 10 a.m. for sale of the remaining tickets.

LAS CRUCES, N.M.
SUN-NEWS
D. 6,161 S. 6,446

MAR 10 1963

Boston Symphony's Duke City Concert Planned For April

The Boston Symphony Orcestra, one of the great orchestras of the world, will appear in Albuquerque on Thursday, April 18, at the Civic Auditorium.

On a transcontinental tour of 10 cities, the Boston Symphony chose Albuquerque as its only stop in the Southwest between appearances in Oklahoma City and Los Angeles.

World Recognition

Now in its 82nd year, the Boston Symphony has established records that will mark its career in musical history for a long time to come. It was the first American orchestra to appear in Russia, and its tours of the Orient, Australia and New Zealand brought a new understanding to those lands of the United States' attainments in symphonic playing. Its appearances in Europe have been acclaimed by critics and public alike.

The Boston Symphony received its first world recognition of the legendary Serge Koussevitzky. After 25 years he relinquished his baton to the great French conductor, Charles Munch. Munch's tenure, completed after a dozen years, was followed at the beginning of the current season by Erich Leinsdorf who will conduct the Albuquerque performance.

Order Tickets

State-wide interest has been high during the past few months since the first announcement of the Boston Symphony's Albuquerque appearance. Some reserved seats in the Civic Auditorium are still available at $7.50. Unreserved seats on the main floor are priced at $2, and in the balcony at $2 and $5.

Mail orders are being filled either by Riedling Music Company, 610 Central Ave. SW or the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, 323 Korber Building, both in Albuquerque.

ROSWELL, N.M.
RECORD
D. 14,685 S. 14,791

MAR 21 1963

Boston Symphony Group To Appear in Albuquerque

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, generally considered one of the top great orchestras of the world, will appear in Albuquerque at the Civic Auditorium on Thursday.

On a transcontinental tour of ten cities, the Boston Symphony chose Albuquerque as its only stop in the southwest between appearances in Oklahoma City and Los Angeles.

Now in its 82nd year, the Boston Symphony has established a string of records which will mark its career in musical history for a long time to come. It was the first American orchestra to appear in Russia, its tours of the Orient, Australia and New Zealand brought a new meaning to those lands of the United States' attainments in symphonic playing and its appearances in Europe have been acclaimed by critics and public alike.

The Boston Symphony received its first world recognition about 40 years ago when it came under the leadership of the legendary Serge Koussevitzky. After 25 years he relinquished his baton to the great French conductor Charles Munch. Mr. Munch's tenure, completed after a dozen years, was followed at the beginning of the current season by Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's new conductor and music director who will conduct the Albuquerque performance.

Among the very first symphony orchestras to make recordings, the Boston Symphony is still among the world's most important ensembles to be available in a vast number of discs which comprise virtually the complete orchestral repertoire.

State-wide interest has been high during the past few months since the first announcement of the Boston Symphony's Albuquerque appearance. The Civic Auditorium will contain a number of reserved seats of which some are still available at $7.50.

Unreserved seats on the floor are priced at $2 and in the balcony at $2 and $3.

Mail orders are being filled either by Riedling Music Co., 610 Central Avenue, SW or The Albuquerque Civic Symphony, 323 Korber Bldg., both in Albuquerque.

TUCUMCARI, N.M.
NEWS
D. 4,068

APR 15 1963

CLOVIS, N.M.
NEWS-JOURNAL
D. 8,273 S. 8,540

APR 16 1963

Boston Orchestra Due In Duke City

BOSTON, Mass. (UPI)— The Boston Symphony Orhcestra left Monday for the first time in 10 years on a trip to the West Coast that will inlude a performance Thursday at Albuquerque.

The orchestra, with its 121 members traveling aboard two chartered planes, will present a concert in Chicago today, Kansas City Tuesday and Oklahoma City Wednesday.

The Albuquerque concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. at the Civic Auditorium.

The program consists of Beletho-ven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Wagner's Prelude to Act III, The Good Friday Music and the Transformation Scene from his opera "Parsifal"; and Gustave Mahler's First Symphony.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
TRIBUNE
D. 31,556

APR 4 1963

Symphony Adds Work to Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has added another work of Richard Wagner to its program which will be presented April 18 at the Civic Auditorium. Erich Leinsdorf will direct.

The composition will be the Prelude to Act III from "Parsifal."

Remaining reserved seats and unreserved seats are available at Riedling's Downtown and at Winrock, May's and Cleveland's.

ALAMOGORDO, N.M.
NEWS
D. 6,680 S. 6,680

APR 7 1963

Boston Symphony Tickets Going Fast

Ralph Berkowitz, conductor of the civic symphony, said about 2400 of the 3800 seats available for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Civic Auditorium April 18 have been sold.

He said, however, that persons planning to buy unreserved tickets to the concert should purchase them right away. Many unreserved seats both on the balcony and on the floor, remain to be sold, he said, but at the rate they are going, few if any will be left at the door.

Also plentiful, Berkowitz said, are down-front $7.50 reserved seats on the floor. Other floor reserved sections are largely sold out, he said.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony appearance are available at Riedling's, 610 Central SW, and Winrock Center; May's Music Co., 514 Central SW, and Cleveland's, 5015 Lomas NE.

GALLUP, N.M.
INDEPENDENT
D. 4,132 S. 3,977

APR. 9 1963

Boston Symphony Plays April 18

The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director and conductor Erich Leinsdorf will play works by three of the 19th century's orchestral giants at its appearance in Albuquerque's Civic Auditorium on Thursday, April 18.

Mrs. Leinsdorf has chosen a program which is not only made up of acknowledged masterpieces but which will also serve to demonstrate the legendary orchestral sound and virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will consist of Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 3, the Prelude to Act III, Good Friday Music and Transformation Scene from Richard Wagner's "Parsifal" and Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1.

The Boston Symphony is appearing in Albuquerque as its only stop in the entire Southwest on a transcontinental tour which includes concerts in Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Winnipeg. Ticket orders may be obtained at Riedling Music Company., 610 Central Avenue S. W,. and the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, 323 Korber Bldg., Albuquerque.

Schuster was elected secretary to replace Mrs. Alton Gienger who is leaving Gallup. Mrs. John Graham was hostess for the meeting.

Plans were discussed for a rummage sale scheduled May 11 at the Gallup Community Center. Anyone wishing to donate items may leave them at the church starting May 1. Proceeds will be used for chancel furnishings.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

APR 17 1963

'Symphony' Of Parties Planned

Lavish parties will add to the enthusiasm of local concert-goers Thursday night when the Boston Symphony presents a concert at Civic Aduitorium.

Dining with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Quinn will be Rear Adm. and Mrs. A. M. Granum, Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Nordhaus and Mr. and Mrs. Willis C. Wolf.

Dr. and Mrs. Solomon Papper will join the George Boydens for some of Mrs. Boyden's celebrated cookery.

Mr. and Mrs. John Findlay will welcome a group for dessert following the concert. Guests will be Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cook, Mr. and Mrs. George Dacey, Dr. and Mrs. Friedolf Smits, Mr. and Mrs. Eaton Draper, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bell and Mr. and Mrs. John Durrie.

Entertaining several Guatemalan interns will be Dr. and Mrs. Jack McCarthy, who will be joined by Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Jelosek. The interns are in Albuquerque to observe hospital techniques.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony are available at the box office of Civic Auditorium.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

APR 6 1963

Leinsdorf Arranging Auditions

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is arranging auditions in each of 11 cities visited by the orchestra in its transcontinental tour this month. Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will audition instrumentalists, conductors and choral singers who wish to attend the 31st session of the Music Center, June 30-Aug. 25 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Boston Symphony will present a concert April 18 at the Civic Auditorium, under the sponsorship of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony. Their appearance here was arranged by Ralph Berkowitz, manager of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, and Dr. Leroy Miller, president of the Civic Symphony board. Berkowitz is dean of the Berkshire Music Center, conducted concurrently with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Instrumentalists, singers and conductors interested in auditioning for admission to the 1963 session of the Berkshire Music Center should write to the Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. It should be noted that a minimum age of 18 is necessary for all members except those in the department of listening and analysis, when it is 16.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

MAR 31 1963

Boston Symphony Or

Erich Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf Selects Four Works

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the program for its appearance in Albuquerque April 18 in a concert sponsored by the Albuquerque Civic Symphony. The concert will be presented at 8:30 p.m. in the Civic Auditorium. The program will consist of Beethoven's "Lenore Overture No. 3"; Wagner's "Good Friday Music," and the "Transformation Scene" from Parsifal; and Gustave Mahler's "Symphony No. 1."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is visiting Albuquerque as part of its transcontinental tour of 11 cities, making this its only stop between Oklahoma City and Los Angeles. Long accustomed to touring, the orchestra has appeared in the Soviet Union, Japan, Taiwan, the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand, as well as in most European capitols. Its present national tour is part of 227 concerts it is giving in this, its eighty-second season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 110 players and staff of 15 associates will arrive in two chartered planes about noon on April 18. A third plane, carrying 8 tons of instruments and personal effects, will have arrived earlier for preparation of the Civic Auditorium's stage and back-stage area.

A few reserved seats are still available for the concert and are on sale at Riedling's Downtown and in Winrock, at May's Music and Cleveland's Music. Unreserved seats priced at $2 and $3 are also on sale.

Ralph Berkowitz, manager of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, and Dr. Leroy Miller, president of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, are serving as co-chairmen of ticket sales for the appearance of the orchestra in Albuquerque.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

APR 17 1963

Symphony To Hear Berkshire Auditions

McDowell Eugene Kenley, 3223 Pershing Drive SE, will audition for the Berkshire Music Center at 7 p.m. Thursday, at the Civic Auditorium.

The audition is being held in connection with the appearance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony presents a program at 8:30 p.m. Thursday at the auditorium.

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center is the summer center for the advanced study of music maintained by the symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, said that others may apply for auditions Thursday.

Mr. Kenley plays trombone. He is a member of the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, the University of New Mexico Orchestra and has played solo with the UNM Band. He is a freshman at UNM. He is a graduate of Highland High School.

MR. KENLEY said the auditions are for scholarships and also for admission to the summer music center.

The Berkshire Music Center will be in session for eight weeks, June 30 to Aug. 25.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra program here is being sponsored by the Albuquerque Civic Symphony.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
TRIBUNE
D. 31,556

APR 18 1963

Here Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was to arrive here shortly after noon today aboard two chartered planes. The internationally known orchestra will play a concert at 8:30 tonight at the Civic Auditorium.

Albuquerque is the only city in the Southwest included on the orchestra's 11-city transcontinental tour.

The Civic Auditorium box office will be open tonight until concert time.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

APR 13 1963

Symphony Concert Hostesses Are Members of Women's Unit

The grand finale of the 1963 Symphony season will be April 18, when the Boston Symphony will be programmed in Civic Auditorium.

Tickets may be purchased Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. at the auditorium box office. Persons planning to attend are urged to purchase tickets immediately.

Hostesses, members of the Albuquerque Women's Symphony Assn., will greet the concert goers, including Mmes. E. V. Balcomb, Keith A. Wolfenbarger, Ronald Jelosek, Frank Mims, William Work, Fred Langner, Herbert Briggs, Willis A. Smith Mr., Alec Grossetete, John H. Findlay, Jackson G. Akin, Fred Mossman Jr., Eaton H. Draper, Federico Mora, Robert Lemm and William J. Hanratty.

Albuquerque is one of 10 cities on the current tour of the Boston Symphony, directed by Erich Leinsdorf.

162

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
TRIBUNE
D. 31,556

APR 11 1963

Boston Symphony Has $2.7 Million Budget

The world - famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, appearing at the Civic Auditorium April 18 operates on an annual budget in excess of $2,700,000.

This sum, one of the largest in the world for a symphonic ensemble is realized by more than two million dollars in ticket sales and record royalties, while the annual deficit of about $650,000 is met by gifts, income from investment and other contributions obtained by the orchestra's Board of Trustees.

THE BOSTON Symphony also owns and operates its Boston home, Symphony Hall, as well as the vast summer Festival at Tanglewood in Massachusetts' Berkshire Hills. All these undertakings make it one of the most ambitious and enterprising cultural organizations of the U. S.

By next August, when the Boston Symphony ends its 82nd season, it will have played 227 concerts before an estimated three quarters of a million people. It will have traveled 8,500 miles. Its television programs will have been seen in 20 cities and its radio broadcasts heard in 60.

ALTHOUGH the Boston Symphony has visited New York City annually for the past 77 years it made its first transcontinental tour only in 1953. This year it will appear in Chicago, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Minneapolis.

The orchestra visited Europe in 1952, again in 1956 and in 1960 made its historical tour of the Far East, playing in Formosa, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

On the podium on April 18 in the Civic Auditorium will be the Boston Symphony's new conductor and Music Director Erich Leinsdorf. Born in Vienna in 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf was assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festivals between 1934 and

CLOVIS, N.M.
NEWS-JOURNAL
D. 8,273 S. 8,540

MAR 31 1963

Boston Symphony Announces N.M. Program

ALBUQUERQUE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director and conductor Erich Leinsdorf will play works by three of the 19th century's orchestral giants at its appearance in Albuquerque's Civic Auditorium on Thursday, April 18.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen a program which is not only made up of acknowledged masterpieces but which will also serve to demonstrate the legendary orchestral sound and virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will consist of Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 3, the Prelude to Act III Good Friday Music and Transformation Scene from Richard Wagner's "Parsifal" and Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1.

The Boston Symphony is appearing in Albuquerque as its only stop in the entire Southwest on a transcontinental tour which includes concerts in Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Winnipeg.

Extraordinary interest from Texas and Colorado as well as all quarters of New Mexico is shown in ticket orders to Riedling Music Co., 610 Central Avenue SW, and the Albuquerque Civic Symphony, 323 Korber Building, Albuquerque.

Unreserved seats are available at $2 and $3; remaining reserved seats are priced at $5 and $7.50.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
TRIBUNE
D. 31,556

APR 20 1963

Fine Performance

Orchestra's Reputation Draws Large Crowd

The incredible precision and artistry of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf drew a record crowd at the Civic Auditorium Thursday night and won its enthusiastic applause.

Thousands see the orchestra and millions hear broadcasts and recording of this orchestra each year. The orchestra's reputation pulled some 3,800 persons to the concert for one of the largest concert crowds we've yet seen in Albuquerque.

THE BOSTONIANS, under their new director, presented a performance that was elegantly phrased and gleaming in tone. The ensemble is impeccable.

Opening with the dramatic Beethoven Overture to "Lenore" No. 3, the orchestra also played excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal".

The Mahler First Symphony proved notable for its melodic strings. It is a score that featured dozens of solo parts and the rich sounds a large orchestra can produce.

The orchestra's color and tone was especially evident in the Mahler. But as a whole the program lacked the variety that might have been expected from so fine an orchestra.

CONDUCTOR Leinsdorf directs with an imperious calm and little motion that has an intellectual appeal. His face is immobile. His hands move with grace. Personally we like more fire and greater dramatics from a conductor.

Mr. Leinsdorf completed his first Boston winter season last week. He has been the United States' busiest conductor since he opened the season last September. He has conducted 86 out of 129 concerts plus 22 recording sessions. He will conduct 11 concerts on the transcontinental tour.

Following this, he said he would vacation in Greece until late June when he and his Boston Symphony Orchestra prepares for their eight weeks Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in July and August. —Urith Lucas

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.
JOURNAL
D. 49,784 S. 70,885

APR 20 1963

3700 Attend

Boston Symphony Is Hailed

By JOHN MORRIS

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented a concert Thursday night at Civic Auditorium which left no doubt in the minds of 3700 Albuquerqueans how their worldwide reputation was achieved.

It is quite a sight to see that large an audience give an orchestra a standing ovation, one which might be described as entirely deserved. The program was composed of three works, but these three proved an evening of music satisfying to all but the extreme in musical taste.

Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, was the first selection. Conductor Leinsdorf offered a reading which surely must rank with the purest available. There was very little of Leinsdorf, but a great deal of Beethoven in "Leonore."

Excerpts from Act III of Wagner's "Parsifal" followed, and proved a revelation of the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From the merest whisper of sound to the gigantic swells of fervor in "Parsifal," this offering was perhaps the fullest in meaning to the audience.

The final presentation was the powerful Mahler Symphony in D Major, No. 1, which occupied the entire second half of the program. The range of ideas in the symphony was broad enough, but in this work, Conductor Leinsdorf stepped in, with slightly more of himself, and allowed the gay spirits and good humor in the work to come through.

It must certainly be said that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Leinsdorf have made many new friends in Albuquerque, and cemented old ones solidly.

SAN DIEGO

163

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434

MAR 30 1963

Bostonians Get Set For Busy Road Work

It takes a bit of doing to get an orchestra of 106 men on the road.

The Boston Symphony, soon to start its spring tour which includes an April 19 stop in San Diego, is a good example.

The orchestra's assistant manager, Harry Beall, who made a quick stop here recently to check facilities, detailed some of the complications involved.

Swing to Take In 11 Cities

"We'll be in 11 cities in 13 days," Beall said. "We start in Chicago, then on to Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque and San Diego. After that it's Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

"We have to be back in Boston by April 28," he explained, "because most of the men play for Arthur Fiedler's Pops Orchestra, and their season begins on April 30."

Beall said most of the travel on the tour is to be done by air. Two planes will be chartered by the orchestra and most of the space on a scheduled flight also will be used. One plane will be used for instruments and other equipment alone. That amounts to about 8 tons, Beall said.

Precautions in Flight

"We arrange it so that not more than 60 per cent of the orchestra rides together and also see that each section is broken up," Beall said.

"There are some men who prefer not to fly, so rail travel is arranged for them. They really have to hustle, too, to keep up our pace."

The Boston orchestra is one of the busiest in the country. Its regular season at home in Symphony Hall includes 84 concerts. In addition there are six annual appearances in Providence, R.I., and 15 in New York.

The effort is fully justified, Beall said the Boston concerts are always sold out in advance of the season and on the road it's invariably standing room only.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434

APR 6 1963

Boston Orchestra's Concert Here April 19 To End Concert Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes the San Diego Symphony Association's winter season with a concert April 19 at Russ Auditorium. The program begins at 8:30 p.m.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf, is on a transcontinental tour for the first time in 10 years.

The concert will feature works by Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaikovsky, a blend of the old and the new.

Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" will open the concert. It demonstrates the wedding of contemporary and classical styles. Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" is considered a masterpiece of orchestration.

Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor will be the last work on the program. It is one of the six most widely performed symphonic works.

The Boston orchestra will maintain a hectic schedule on this tour. It is scheduled to take in 11 cities in 13 days. The tour starts in Chicago and heads West. San Diego is the fifth city on the agenda. It ends in Minneapolis.

Harry Beall, the orchestra assistant manager, was in San Diego recently to check facilities. He said that the orchestra has to be back in Boston by April 28, since most of the members are a part of Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, which opens its season on April 30.

CONDUCTOR ERICH LEINSDORF
Brings Boston group here April 19

LEMON GROVE, CALIF.
REVIEW
W. 4,918

APR 11 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PLAY IN S.D. APRIL 19

The closing concert of the San Diego Symphony Winter Season promises to be one of the outstanding events of this or any other musical season. It will be the word-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra on April 19 at 8:30 p.m. at Russ auditorium.

CORONADO, CALIF.
JOURNAL
W. 4,372

APR 11 1963

Boston Symphony to play San Diego date April 19

The closing concert of the San Diego Symphony Winter Season promises to be one of the outstanding events of this or any other musical season—the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to San Diego for the first time on April 19.

The Boston Symphony, one of the greatest orchestras in the United States, is on a transcontinental tour for the first time in ten years and San Diegans are indeed fortunate to have an opportunity to hear this superlative orchestra under the direction of its new music director and conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert, at the Russ Auditorium at 8:30 p.m., will feature three works, by Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaisovksy, a beautiful blend of new and old, all of it in the very best tradition of orchestral composition.

The concert will open with Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony"—a piece which demonstrates the happy marriage of contemporary and classical styles; followed by Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," indeed a masterpiece of orchestration, exhibiting the full potentialities of each section of the orchestra, all this presented by a composer whose Hungarian heritage is impressively reflected in this work. The concluding work is Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, one of the six most widely performed and beloved symphonic works.

Tickets are still available at Thearle Box Office and special buses will run from Coronado, La Jolla, La Mesa, Mission Hills, Point Loma, Solana Beach and the South Shore. There will be a special shuttle bus from the organ pavilion in Balboa Park to the Russ Auditorium.

RANCHO SANTA FE, CAL.
TIMES
W. 757

APR 11 1963

CLOSING CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, on transcontinental tour for the first time in 10 years, will give the closing concert of the San Diego Symphony winter season at 8:30 p.m., April 19, at Russ Auditorium.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 13 1963

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS SCHEDULED

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions in San Diego Friday at 7 p.m. Auditions will be conducted at Russ Auditorium, prior to the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Russ at 8:30.

Instrumentalists, conductors and choral singers wishing to attend the 1963 session of the Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., are asked to be at the audition.

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the symphony orchestra, will head the Berkshire Music Center this summer. Aaron Copland will direct the Department of Composition.

The Fromm Music Foundation provides fellowships for those gifted in performing contemporary music. Auditions for these fellowships also will be held Friday.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 13 1963

STACCATO NOTES

Boston Symphony Due Here Friday

By CONSTANCE HERRESHOFF

The great Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented in concert next Friday night at 8:30 in Russ Auditorium as the final event in the current season of the San Diego Symphony. If you hurry and are extremely lucky you may possibly be able to snag a ticket.

The Boston Symphony will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf in a program to include Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," "Concert to For Orchestra" by Bartok and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5."

Tickets for this important event are on sale at the Thearle Box Office, 640

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 19 1963

Boston Orchestra Sold Out Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Russ Auditorium tomorrow night is a complete sellout, it was announced yesterday.

The orchestra, on a transcontinental tour, is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The concert, which concludes the San Diego Symphony Association's winter season, will feature Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony," Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 19 1963

Entire Concert To Be Broadcast

KOGO-FM will broadcast the entire concert of the Boston Symphony from Russ Auditorium tonight at 8:30. Enrich Leinsdorf is director of the orchestra, which is touring the United States. The broadcast is expected to last until 10:30 p.m.

SAN DIEGO

163

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434

MAR 30 1963

Bostonians Get Set For Busy Road Work

It takes a bit of doing to get an orchestra of 105 men on the road.

The Boston Symphony, soon to start its spring tour which includes an April 19 stop in San Diego, is a good example.

The orchestra's assistant manager, Harry Beall, who made a quick stop here recently to check facilities, detailed some of the complications involved.

Swing to Take In 11 Cities

"We'll be in 11 cities in 13 days," Beall said. "We start in Chicago, then on to Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque and San Diego. After that it's Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

"We have to be back in Boston by April 28," he explained, "because most of the men play for Arthur Fiedler's Pops Orchestra, and their season begins on April 30."

Beall said most of the travel on the tour is to be done by air. Two planes will be chartered by the orchestra and most of the space on a scheduled flight also will be used. One plane will be used for instruments and other equipment alone. That amounts to about 8 tons, Beall said.

Precautions in Flight

"We arrange it so that not more than 60 per cent of the orchestra rides together and also see that each section is broken up," Beall said.

"There are some men who prefer not to fly, so rail travel is arranged for them. They really have to hustle, too, to keep up our pace."

The Boston orchestra is one of the busiest in the country. Its regular season at home in Symphony Hall includes 84 concerts. In addition there are six annual appearances in Providence, R.I., and 15 in New York.

The effort is fully justified, Beall said the Boston concerts are always sold out in advance of the season and on the road it's invariably standing room only.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434

APR 6 1963

Boston Orchestra's Concert Here April 19 To End Concert Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes the San Diego Symphony Association's winter season with a concert April 19 at Russ Auditorium. The program begins at 8:30 p.m.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf, is on a transcontinental tour for the first time in 10 years.

The concert will feature works by Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaikovsky, a blend of the old and the new.

Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony" will open the concert. It demonstrates the wedding of contemporary and classical styles. Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" is considered a masterpiece of orchestration.

Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor will be the last work on the program. It is one of the six most widely performed symphonic works.

The Boston orchestra will maintain a hectic schedule on this tour. It is scheduled to take in 11 cities in 13 days. The tour starts in Chicago and heads West. San Diego is the fifth city on the agenda. It ends in Minneapolis.

Harry Beall, the orchestra assistant manager, was in San Diego recently to check facilities. He said that the orchestra has to be back in Boston by April 28, since most of the members are a part of Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra, which opens its season on April 30.

CONDUCTOR ERICH LEINSDORF
Brings Boston group here April 19

LEMON GROVE, CALIF.
REVIEW
W. 4,918

APR 11 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PLAY IN S.D. APRIL 19

The closing concert of the San Diego Symphony Winter Season promises to be one of the outstanding events of this or any other musical season. It will be the word-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra on April 19 at 8:30 p.m. at Russ auditorium.

CORONADO, CALIF.
JOURNAL
W. 4,372

APR 11 1963

Boston Symphony to play San Diego date April 19

The closing concert of the San Diego Symphony Winter Season promises to be one of the outstanding events of this or any other musical season—the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to San Diego for the first time on April 19.

The Boston Symphony, one of the greatest orchestras in the United States, is on a transcontinental tour for the first time in ten years, and San Diegans are indeed fortunate to have an opportunity to hear this superlative orchestra under the direction of its new music director and conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The concert, at the Russ Auditorium at 8:30 p.m., will feature three works by Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaikovsky, a beautiful blend of new and old, all of it in the very best tradition of orchestral composition.

The concert will open with Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony"—a piece which demonstrates the happy marriage of contemporary and classical styles; followed by Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," indeed a masterpiece of orchestration, exhibiting the full potentialities of each section of the orchestra, all this presented by a composer whose Hungarian heritage is impressively reflected in this work. The concluding work is Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, one of the six most widely performed and beloved symphonic works.

Tickets are still available at Theatre Box Office and special buses will run from Coronado, La Jolla, La Mesa, Mission Hills, Point Loma, Solana Beach and the South Shore. There will be a special shuttle bus from the organ pavilion in Balboa Park to the Russ Auditorium.

RANCHO SANTA FE, CAL.
TIMES
W. 757

APR 11 1963

CLOSING CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, on transcontinental tour for the first time in 10 years, will give the closing concert of the San Diego Symphony winter season at 8:30 p.m., April 19, at Russ Auditorium.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 13 1963

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS SCHEDULED

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions in San Diego Friday at 7 p.m. Auditions will be conducted at Russ Auditorium, prior to the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Russ at 8:30.

Instrumentalists, conductors and choral singers wishing to attend the 1963 session of the Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., are asked to be at the audition.

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the symphony orchestra, will head the Berkshire Music Center this summer. Aaron Copland will direct the Department of Composition.

The Fromm Music Foundation provides fellowships for those gifted in performing contemporary music. Auditions for these fellowships also will be held Fri-

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 13 1963

STACCATO NOTES

Boston Symphony Due Here Friday

By CONSTANCE VERBESHOFF

The great Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented in concert next Friday night at 8:30 in Russ Auditorium as the final event in the current season of the San Diego Symphony. If you hurry and are extremely lucky you may possibly be able to snag a ticket.

The Boston Symphony will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf in a program to include Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," "Concerto For Orchestra" by Bartok and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5."

Tickets for this important event are on sale at the Theatre Box Office, 6

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 19 1963

Boston Orchestra Sold Out Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Russ Auditorium tomorrow night is a complete sellout, it was announced yesterday.

The orchestra, on a transcontinental tour, is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The concert, which concludes the San Diego Symphony Association's winter season, will feature Prokofiev's "Classical Symphony," Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor and Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra."

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

APR 19 1963

Entire Concert To Be Broadcast

KOGO-FM will broadcast the entire concert of the Boston Symphony from Russ Auditorium tonight at 8:30. Enrich Leinsdorf is director of the orchestra, which is touring the United States. The broadcast is expected to last until 10:30 p.m.

164

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 16 1963

—Associated Press Wirephoto, Special to The San Diego Union

BOSTON SYMPHONY SAN DIEGO-BOUND

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra boarded a chartered plane in Boston yesterday to begin a 13-day U.S. tour that will include a concert in San Diego Friday in the Russ Auditorium.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

MAY 4 1963

NEIL MORGAN

MY SAN DIEGO: Now comes a post mortem from Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted the Boston Symphony here the other day. His program included the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony, and the less familiar Concerto for Orchestra by Bela Bartok. It was a musical bill of fare intended not to overlook the musical sophisticate, but taking its heaviest aim at the mass audience. Leinsdorf, like most others who have visited San Diego in recent years, upgraded his appraisal of our city after a chat with a taxi driver on the morning after the concert. All the way to Lindbergh Field, Leinsdorf recalls, the driver talked to him about the concert: not about the Tchaikovsky, but about the Bartok.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 20 1963

S.D. SYMPHONY SEASON ENDS

A guest appearance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Russ Auditorium last night closed the San Diego 1962-63 symphony season. A review of the performance written by Alan M. Kriegsman will be found on page a-20.

PACIFIC BEACH, CALIF.
SENTINEL
TW 49,061

APR 25 1963

Music Review

Technique Fine But Emotion Is Missing

By RENEE MUELLER

Where is the fine-line distinction between technical perfection in a musical performance and emotional expression? Must precision be sacrified to some degree in order to achieve a heart-felt interpretation?

Has anyone ever put his finger on that indescribable something that really makes a performance "click?" Oh, there have been lots of theories, and these questions and many theories ran through my mind last Friday evening at the Russ.

The Boston Symphony, under the extremely capable baton of Erich Leinsdorf performed Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaikovsky.

It was a beautifully executed concert but it never quite got off the ground.

Never Discovered

That indescribable something was never discovered. Or, perhaps, I just never felt it. I almost did, however, during moments of the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony in E minor.

The work must certainly contain some of the most beautiful melodies ever written. The brasses came through with remarkable sonority, plus a wonderful clarity of tone which seems to be a second-nature virtue of the entire orchestra.

But when one goes to hear a great old "war-horse," which this work is, one looks for something more to gain from it; perhaps a fresh approach; maybe something to give it a new or more intense meaning. I listened and searched but I never found anything which had not already been revealed to me many times before.

Rendition of the Prokofiev "Classical" Symphony was light, precise, almost modest. Leinsdorf could possibly be criticized for his stylized gimmicks in directing, but he gets the job done as far as perfection and discipline and tone are concerned. Could it be that his highly developed, personal style is what hinders him from creating, with his orchestra, the uplifting warmness that was so sorely missing?

The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra was the best performed work on the program, or it seemed this way because it was the most interesting. But where was the emotional drive and the earthy abondon so necessary in the first movement?

The orchestra did finally come to life in the third movement during which a mysterious quality of expectation was beautifuly captured, and the final presto was performed with great dexterity.

The audience gave Leinsdorf (who, incidentally, directed the entire program without score) and the orchestra, several enthusiastic standing ovations.

It was satisfying to observe a responsive, sold-out house. We need more sold-out houses for concerts, plays, musicals, and lectures in San Diego!

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 20 1963

NEW CONDUCTOR DIRECTS

Boston Symphony Concert 'Magnificent, Incomparable'

By ALAN M. KRIEGSMAN

The glory of an instrument like the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that no matter how many times one hears it, on records or in the flesh for that matter, its magnificence always surpasses memory of it. The miracle repeated itself again at last night's concert in Russ Auditorium, with the famous ensemble under the direction of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The sound of this orchestra is incomparable. Somehow it seems to embrace the music as it emanates from the instruments, bestoying a constant warmth. The floating quality of the strings in melodic passages is always solidly supported, and the separate choirs are blended in such a way that the ear remains aware of both their unity and diversity.

The one trouble was due to the hall; without risers, the winds were sometimes obscured at crucial moments. The clarinet theme at the opening of Tchaikovsky's Fifth, for example, was drowned by the strings.

Leinsdorf uses no baton and no score, but employs both hands to give cues, phrase indications and beats. His motions have a logical but colorful economy. He has not been with the Bostonians long enough to achieve the pinpoint precision of, say, Szell and Cleveland, though the cohesion is amazing enough. He also works up an intensity which belies the sangfroid of his appearance.

I found Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra outstanding among the evening's interpretations. It was not the most gripping of performances, but it bore the marks of greatness, and left one thoughtful and moved rather than breathless. From the gravity of the opening measures it revealed depths which other conductors have missed by treating the work purely as a display of orchestral virtuosity. It did not lack energy, but its outstanding trait was inevitability in the progression of mood.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, granting its many merits, suggested to me that Leinsdorf's personal sympathies do not run as deep here as in the case of Bartok. It was "objective" Tchaikovsky, shorn of exaggeration and adornment. As such, it was beautifully molded and allowed the music's eloquence to speak for itself.

But certain qualities were sacrificed. The final coda, for example, cannot become the thundering peroration which is its nature without stretching a point here and there. Best was the familiar Andante, whose "stretching" is composed into its fabric.

Likewise, Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony was superbly played, but seemed more "classical" than "Prokofiev." It missed just that scintillation which can convert it from an emulation to a revitalization of 18th century form.

164

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 16 1963

—Associated Press Wirephoto, Special to The San Diego Union

BOSTON SYMPHONY SAN DIEGO-BOUND

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra boarded a chartered plane in Boston yesterday to begin a 13-day U.S. tour that will include a concert in San Diego Friday in the Russ Auditorium.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670

MAY 4 1963

NEIL MORGAN

MY SAN DIEGO: Now comes a post mortem from Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted the Boston Symphony here the other day. His program included the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony, and the less familiar Concerto for Orchestra by Bela Bartok. It was a musical bill of fare intended not to overlook the musical sophisticate, but taking its heaviest aim at the mass audience. Leinsdorf, like most others who have visited San Diego in recent years, upgraded his appraisal of our city after a chat with a taxi driver on the morning after the concert. All the way to Lindbergh Field, Leinsdorf recalls, the driver talked to him about the concert: not about the Tchaikovsky, but about the Bartok.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 20 1963

S.D. SYMPHONY SEASON ENDS

A guest appearance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Russ Auditorium last night closed the San Diego 1962-63 symphony season. A review of the performance written by Alan M. Kriegsman will be found on page a-20.

PACIFIC BEACH, CALIF.
SENTINEL
TW 49,061

APR 25 1963

Music Review

Technique Fine But Emotion Is Missing

By RENEE MUELLER

Where is the fine-line distinction between technical perfection in a musical performance and emotional expression? Must precision be sacrified to some degree in order to achieve a heart-felt interpretation?

Has anyone ever put his finger on that indescribable something that really makes a performance "click?" Oh, there have been lots of theories, and these questions and many theories ran through my mind last Friday evening at the Russ.

The Boston Symphony, under the extremely capable baton of Erich Leinsdorf performed Prokofiev, Bartok and Tchaikovsky.

It was a beautifully executed concert but it never quite got off the ground.

Never Discovered

That indescribable something was never discovered. Or, perhaps, I just never felt it. I almost did, however, during moments of the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony in E minor.

The work must certainly contain some of the most beautiful melodies ever written. The brasses came through with remarkable sonority, plus a wonderful clarity of tone which seems to be a second-nature virtue of the entire orchestra.

But when one goes to hear a great old "war-horse," which this work is, one looks for something more to gain from it; perhaps a fresh approach; maybe something to give it a new or more intense meaning. I listened and searched but I never found anything which had not already been revealed to me many times before.

Rendition of the Prokofiev "Classical" Symphony was light, precise, almost modest. Leinsdorf could possibly be criticized for his stylized gimmicks in directing, but he gets the job done as far as perfection and discipline and tone are concerned. Could it be that his highly developed, personal style is what hinders him from creating, with his orchestra, those uplifting warmness that was so sorely missing?

The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra was the best performed work on the program, or it seemed this way because it was the most interesting. But where was the emotional drive and the earthy abondon so necessary in the first movement?

The orchestra did finally come to life in the third movement, during which a mysterious quality of expectation was beautifully captured, and the final presto was performed with great dexterity.

The audience gave Leinsdorf (who, incidentally, directed the entire program without score) and the orchestra, several enthusiastic standing ovations.

It was satisfying to observe a responsive, sold-out house. We need more sold-out houses for concerts, plays, musicals and lectures in San Diego.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 20 1963

NEW CONDUCTOR DIRECTS

Boston Symphony Concert 'Magnificent, Incomparable'

By ALAN M. KRIEGSMAN

The glory of an instrument like the Boston Symphony Orchestra is that no matter how many times one hears it, on records or in the flesh for that matter, its magnificence always surpasses memory of it. The miracle repeated itself again at last night's concert in Russ Auditorium with the famous ensemble under the direction of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

The sound of this orchestra is incomparable. Somehow it seems to embrace the music as it emanates from the instruments, bestowing a constant warmth. The floating quality of the strings in melodic passages is always solidly supported and the separate choirs are blended in such a way that the ear remains aware of both their unity and diversity.

The one trouble was due to the hall; without risers, the winds were sometimes obscured at crucial moments. The clarinet theme at the opening of Tchaikovsky's Fifth, for example, was drowned by the strings.

Leinsdorf uses no baton and no score, but employs both hands to give cues, phrase indications and beats. His motions have a logical but colorful economy. He has not been with the Bostonians long enough to achieve the pinpoint precision of, say, Szell and Cleveland, though the cohesion is amazing enough. He also works up an intensity which belies the sangfroid of his appearance.

Found Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra outstanding among the evening's interpretations. It was not the most gripping of performances, but it bore the marks of greatness, and left one thoughtful and moved rather than breathless. From the gravity of the opening measures it revealed depths which other conductors have missed by treating the work purely as a display of orchestral virtuosity. It did not lack energy, but its outstanding trait was inevitability in the progression of mood.

The performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, granting its many merits, suggested to me that Leinsdorf's personal sympathies do not run as deep here as in the case of Bartok. It was "objective" Tchaikovsky, shorn of exaggeration and adornment. As such, it was beautifully molded and allowed the music's eloquence to speak for itself.

But certain qualities were sacrificed. The final coda, for example, cannot become the thundering peroration which is its nature without stretching a point here and there. Best was the familiar Andante, whose "stretching" is composed into its fabric.

Likewise, Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony was superbly played, but seemed more "classical" than "Prokofiev." It missed just that scintillation which can convert it from an emulation to a revitalization of 18th century form.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182
MAY 5 1963

165

In Boston, A Cold Baton?

By ALAN M. KRIEGSMAN: San Diego Union Music Reviewer

After the recent local appearance of the Boston Symphony, there can be no doubt in the mind of Californians that the orchestra occupies the high pedestal on which the world of music has placed it with every justification.

However, both in its home city and in other localities where it has been heard since the installation of its new conductor, the acceptance of Erich Leinsdorf as heir to its leadership has been far from unanimous.

It is a matter of consensus that Leinsdorf's technical competence is not in question, that he is a master of conductorial know-how, of orchestral discipline, and of those aspects of musicianship which derive from a close and thorough knowledge of scores. From here on the disagreement commences.

There are many who feel he can infuse music with the enlivening spark of insight, that he is superb in the ambiance of traditional German repertoire, that he has the gift of profound solemnity.

At the other extreme are some who regard him as a mechanical monster, devoid of feeling, eschewing any indication of personal involvement in a performance, "objective" to a fault.

There are still others who claim that the miraculous sound of the Boston Symphony is now undergoing an eclipse, in contrast to the days of Koussevitzky and Munch, both of whom made the sensuous perfection of orchestral tone a primary concern.

The debate is being waged at white heat, not only in private conversation, but in Letters-to-the-Editor columns of such publications as Saturday Review and The Christian Science Monitor (published in Boston).

One reader praises Leinsdorf's performances for "marvelous discipline and mastery" and "eloquent and direct communication of the music itself." Another hails him as "a breath of air, youth and vigor, returning one almost to the excitement of Koussevitzky," and a third exclaims, "I vastly prefer these rather sober but clear, balanced and controlled performances to the kind of hysterical excitement that Munch tried to generate."

On the other side of the ledger is one disgruntled correspondent who dismisses Leinsdorf as "a good drill-sergeant type" and goes on to maintain that, as of now, the "joy of producing beauty of tone" is conspicuous by its absence. Another declares that "great as Mr. Leinsdorf is, for me he has taken the soul out of music;" and still another, apparently a musician who has played under Leinsdorf, writes, "one important thing is lacking — warmth which underlines subjectivity . . . there never is inspiration."

Personally, having heard Leinsdorf conduct only two concerts in person (at Lincoln Center and in San Diego), I am reserving final judgment about a musician who obviously merits exhaustive consideration. His performance on records and radio have always been enigmatic for me—there were marvelous things, and also wild eccentricities.

His recent recordings of works such as Wagner's "Die Walkure" (some say he is at his best in opera) and Mahler's First Symphony I find wholly admirable. But I also recall his torpid rendering of Beethoven's "Eroica" at Lincoln Center, which was irreproachable as to details, yet stuffy and inert as a whole.

In general, I am inclined to agree that there is something overly detached and impersonal in his approach. Even his searching and comprehensive performance of the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, here in San Diego, was a strangely "anonymous" listening experience.

If the sound of the orchestra has suffered any, I was unable to detect it. But if one asks, what conductor is there in the world today of a stature equal to the Boston Symphony, can anyone supply a satisfactory answer? Szell and Steinberg are well ensconced elsewhere, Monteuz and Reiner are all but retired, and to my mind no one looms large enough among the Europeans (with the possible exception of Wolfgang Sawallisch, who is unknown in the United States).

Of course, sometimes great orchestras make their conductors great by osmosis. Koussevitzky, in fact, had many native limitations, but in retrospect he certainly gave to the orchestra as much as he drew from it.

Today, however, it is a legitimate question whether there is anyone to fill the bill of an "ideal" conductor for what is acknowledged to be the ideal orchestra.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 117,670
APR 20 1963

S.D. Takes Symphony To Its Heart

By DAVE McINTYRE

The skies may have been leaden, the air heavy with moisture and the traffic snarled, but everything seemed just right in San Diego last night, because the Boston Symphony was here.

Not the weather nor the drab interior of Russ Auditorium could diminish the luster of this grand orchestra, nor muffle in the slightest the beautiful sound it produced.

It was a musical event to remember, last night's concert by the Massachusetts visitors. Brilliantly played and masterfully led by Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, the program was a rich helping of instrumental perfection.

Standing Ovation

Justifiably, Leinsdorf and his 106 performers received a standing ovation at the close of the concert. And if a poll were taken on the spot, there's no doubt that it would have favored 100 per cent a move to adopt the entire ensemble right then and there.

The San Diego Symphony did the next best thing. President Dallas Clark gave the key to our city to Maestro Leinsdorf, urging him to use it often.

Leinsdorf responded that he would see that 106 duplicates were made immediately and distributed in the Boston ensemble.

The only key they would need to enter our doors, however, is the one struck by Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as prelude to the concert. That note signaled some of the most beautiful sounds ever heard here.

In fact, the Bostonians play sweetly enough to pass right through the Pearly Gates. It's no wonder they're so heartily welcomed everywhere on the face of the earth.

Opens With Prokofiev

Last night's concert opened with Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony, a short but impressive work, performed with remarkably crisp style, spirited and cheerful.

The Boston Orchestra then turned its attention to the more puissant delights of Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, a composition which allowed for a fine display of individual artistry, particularly in the woodwind and brass sections.

Leinsdorf, although slight of stature, presents a commanding figure on the podium. He is not an exuberant conductor, though he can be vigorous at times. Each gesture communicates meaning to his orchestra.

The graceful way he keeps the timing of the music is a marvel to behold. He also has an intriguing manner of evoking rhythm through body movement. At one point during the Bartok he almost slipped into a twist.

Panorama of Sound

The concert's piece de resistance, saved for last, was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in the Bostonians' hands a magnificent panorama of sound.

This memorable presentation, played with just enough sentiment and considerable sophistication, brought out every nuance of the Tchaikovsky score. And since that's considerable, it added up to a treat as delicious as a concertgoer could hope for.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

APR 14 1963

A Bonus For San Diego Concert-Goers

Sergei Prokofiev

Bela Bartok

Peter Tchaikovsky

Princely styling and continental sounds of the Boston Symphony Friday night will wind up San Diego Symphony's 1963 season.

By ALLAN M. KRIEGSMAN, San Diego Union Music Reviewer

For several years, the San Diego Symphony has formally ended its season with a special valedictory bonus—a concert by a distinguished visiting orchestra. No previous visitor holds a place of greater eminence in the world of music than this year's guest, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The much-heralded ensemble will make its appearance in Russ Auditorium at 8:30 Friday evening, under the baton of its newly-engaged conductor and musical director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf, who succeeded the retiring Charles Munch just last September, will lead the orchestra in performances of Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. The program is not only well-balanced musically, but is also a tailor-made showcase for the virtuosity of the Bostonians.

If, as has been said, the Philadelphia Orchestra is "the solid-gold Cadillac" among the great American ensembles of today, the Boston Symphony must surely be the Rolls-Royce. It is the most princely in style, and the most mellowed and "continental" in its sound image. And it reflects more clearly than anything else all that its native city is said to represent in the way of Old World tradition, charm and artistic sophistication.

To Bostonians, their Symphony is an institution, as worthy a source of pride and veneration as the Tea Party or the Common. The list of distinctions to which the orchestra lays claim is too long to cite in detail. But, among other things, the Boston Symphony is the oldest major orchestra in the country and one of the oldest in the world.

The orchestra is the best supported, the most consistently well-attended and has the largest annual earnings of any American orchestra; it also has the longest season (11 months) and has been "first" in numberless ways — it was, for example, the first Western orchestra to perform in Leningrad and Moscow (in 1956).

The Boston Symphony is now in the midst of its 81st year of existence. Only the London Philharmonic, and the principal orchestras of Leipzig, Vienna and Paris are older. Even the venerable Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam is two years its junior.

The orchestra was founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, a Boston financier of remarkable vision and enterprise, whose love of the musical arts knew no bounds.

Higginson devoted an enormous personal fortune and 37 years of his life to the creation of the first permanent major orchestra the United States had ever known. As the orchestra's first conductor, he engaged a young German musician, George Henschel, who led the debut concert in Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881. Of the conductors who succeeded Henschel in the years prior to World War I, those most significant for the orchestra's musical history were Artur Nikisch, widely regarded as the greatest conductor of the 19th Century, and Karl Muck.

In the postwar period the orchestra was reorganized as a public trust, and one year after it had resumed operations, the French maestro Pierre Monteux was appointed musical director. It was Monteux who laid the

(Continued on c-3, Col. 1)

VIENNA-BORN Erich Leinsdorf will direct the Boston Symphony Friday at the Rus...

Boston Symphony: A 'Concert Bonus'

(Continued from c-1)

groundwork for the orchestra's international prestige; many of his own appointees such as concertmaster (now associate conductor) Richard Burgin, have remained with the orchestra to the present day.

Then in 1924, Serge Koussevitsky began his 25-year reign, ushering in an era of illustrious renown for the ensemble which gives no sign of ending.

The esteemed French musician Charles Munch was appointed music director in 1949, and continued to enhance the orchestra's reputation for the 12 seasons of his tenure.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's new master, had previously appeared on a number of occasions as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, as well as of almost every major orchestra both in America and abroad.

Born in Vienna in 1912, Leinsdorf brings both prodigious talent and vast experience to his latest and most exalted post.

His career began auspiciously at the age of 22, when Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini engaged him to assist at the Salzburg Festival. Soon afterwards he began to conduct at the Metropolitan Opera, specializing in the Wagnerian repertory. (When the Met recently revived Wagner's operatic cycle, "The Ring," Leinsdorf was chosen for the task.)

In 1943 he became conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, but was called away shortly to serve with the United States armed forces during World War II. After the war, Leinsdorf assumed positions with the Rochester Philharmonic, the New York City Opera and again the Metropolitan Opera, and continued to appear as a guest in major musical centers throughout the world.

The orchestra whose mantle Leinsdorf has now inherited, and which is now his to shape, may well be the greatest on the face of the earth. That, at least, has been the opinion of many for a long time. If you have any doubts, go hear it Friday; you may find yourself agreeing with English critic Colin Mason, whose ecstatic words I cannot refrain from quoting:

"So dazzling to the ear was this orchestra's playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no 'departments,' no brass, wind and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvelously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joints. Even the austerest critics, by temperament resistent to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it."

LOS ANGE... HERALD E... D. 721,028
APR 1...
Bos...
When the...
...ony Orch...
...e the Shrin...
...n April 21, it...
...e baton of...
...ductor, Eric...
...om Charle...
...ll. The orche...
...season...
...d embark...
...p a flying...

...Feat... for... Con...
The...
...chestra...
...ture...
...ance of...
...ew works...
...in Shrin...
...Sergei...
...al Sym...
...perform...
...Sunday...
...Decem...
...premier...
...Guest...
...No...
...Years...
...ducted...
...New...
...Boston...
...ra. A...
...excerpt...
...Jeff L...
...The...
...chestra...
...Los An...
...ices o...
...ia Sym...
...or of th...
...harmoni...
...Leinsd...
...appe...
...the Phil...
...Hollywo...

LOS ANGE... TIMES ... D. 772,438
APR 1...

NORTH HO... VALLEY T... D. 52,21...
APR 1...

...The Berk...
...mer bester...
...sic mainta...
...Symphony Orc...
...ox, Mass., w...
...the 33 cities...
...during its...
April. Mem...
Berkshire...
instrumen... tal ensem...
season of...
operate on...
shire Festi...
Audition... here in San...
the date...
Leinsdorf...
Lee...

LOS ANGE... TIMES ... D. 442,22...
MAR 31...

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
D. 108,179 S. 210,182

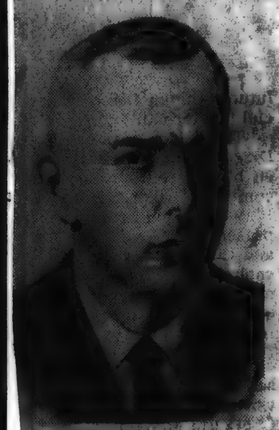
APR 14 1963

A Bonus For San Diego Concert-Goers

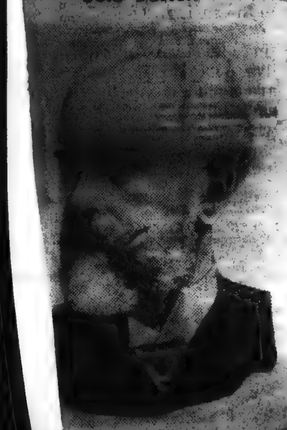
Princely styling and continental sounds of the Boston Symphony Friday night will wind up San Diego Symphony's 1963 season.

By ALLAN M. KRIEGSMAN, San Diego Union Music Reviewer

Sergei Prokofiev



Bela Bartok



Peter Tchaikovsky

For several years, the San Diego Symphony has formally ended its season with a special valedictory bonus—a concert by a distinguished visiting orchestra. No previous visitor holds a place of greater eminence in the world of music than this year's guest, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The much-heralded ensemble will make its appearance in Russ Auditorium at 8:30 Friday evening, under the baton of its newly-engaged conductor and musical director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf, who succeeded the retiring Charles Munch just last September, will lead the orchestra in performances of Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. The program is not only well-balanced musically, but is also a tailor-made showcase for the virtuosity of the Boston-fans.

If, as has been said, the Philadelphia Orchestra is "the solid-gold Cadillac" among the great American ensembles of today, the Boston Symphony must surely be the Rolls-Royce. It is the most princely in style, and the most mellowed and "continental" in its sound image. And it reflects more clearly than anything else all that its native city is said to represent in the way of Old World tradition, charm and artistic sophistication.

To Bostonians, their Symphony is an institution, as worthy a source of pride and veneration as the Tea Party or the Common. The list of distinctions to which the orchestra lays claim is too long to cite in detail. But, among other things, the Boston Symphony is the oldest major orchestra in the country and one of the oldest in the world.

The orchestra is the best supported, the most consistently well-attended and has the largest annual earnings of any American orchestra; it also has the longest season (11 months) and has been "first" in numberless ways — it was, for example, the first Western orchestra to perform in Leningrad and Moscow (in 1956).

The Boston Symphony is now in the midst of its 81st year of existence. Only the London Philharmonic, and the principal orchestras of Leipzig, Vienna and Paris are older. Even the venerable Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam is two years its junior.

The orchestra was founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, a Boston financier of remarkable vision and enterprise, whose love of the musical arts knew no bounds.

Higginson devoted an enormous personal fortune and 37 years of his life to the creation of the first permanent major orchestra the United States had ever known. As the orchestra's first conductor, he engaged a young German musician, George Henschel, who led the debut concert in Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881. Of the conductors who succeeded Henschel in the years prior to World War I, those most significant for the orchestra's musical history were Artur Nikisch, widely regarded as the greatest conductor of the 19th Century, and Karl Muck.

In the postwar period the orchestra was reorganized as a public trust, and one year after it had resumed operations, the French maestro Pierre Monteux was appointed musical director. It was Monteux who laid the

(Continued on c-3, Col. 1)

VIENNA-BORN Erich Leinsdorf will direct the Boston Symphony Friday at the Russ.

...mphony: ...rt Bonus'

...chestra, but was called away shortly to serve with the United States armed forces during World War II. After the war, Leinsdorf assumed positions with the Rochester Philharmonic, the New York City Opera and again the Metropolitan Opera, and continued to appear as a guest in major musical centers throughout the world.

The orchestra whose mantle Leinsdorf has now inherited, and which is now his to shape, may well be the greatest on the face of the earth. That, at least, has been the opinion of many for a long time. If you have any doubts, go hear it Friday; you may find yourself agreeing with English critic Colin Mason, whose ecstatic words I cannot refrain from quoting:

"So dazzling to the ear was this orchestra's playing last night that for that evening at least it was impossible to recall anything comparable. There can in fact be no other orchestra like it in the world. It has no 'departments,' no brass, wind and strings to compare and evaluate. Its sound is a single marvelously rich silken texture into which every note of every instrument is so carefully woven that everything can be heard except the joints. Even the austerest critics, by temperament resistent to the seductions of mere gorgeousness of orchestral sound or virtuosity of technique, and boiled hard by constant listening, were thrilled by it."

LOS ANGE
HERALD E
D. 721,028
APR 1

NORTH HO VALLEY
D. 52,21
APR 19

LOS ANGE
TIMES
D. 772,439
APR 19

LOS ANGE
TIMES
D. 442,220
MAR 31

LOS ANGELES.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 442,220 S. 975,126

31 1963 Bigfeller

The Berkshire Music Center, summer center for advanced study of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will hold auditions in each of the 11 cities visited by the orchestra during its transcontinental tour in April. Members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center will audition instrumentalists, conductors, and choral singers who wish to attend the 21st session of the Music Center, which will operate concurrently with the Berkshire Festival from June 30-Aug. 25. Auditions by appointment will be held here in Shrine Auditorium on April 21, the date of the Boston Symphony concert in Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 21 1963 Bigfeller

Symphony Will Hold Auditions

The Boston Symphony will hold auditions at 6 p.m. today at Shrine Auditorium for young candidates for its summer music school at Tanglewood, Mass.

The auditions will precede the symphony's Shrine concert at 8:30 p.m. Members of the orchestra will conduct the try-outs for youngsters throughout Southern California.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 442,220 S. 975,126

APR 1 1963 Bigfeller

Boston Symphony Sets Concert Here April 21

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's flying tour across the continent will include a concert in Shrine Auditorium April 21 under auspices of Southern California Symphony Assn.

Tickets go on sale today at all offices of the Auto Club of Southern California, Mutual Ticket Agencies and Southern Calif.. Music Co.

The orchestra will close its 82nd season April 13 and will leave by three chartered planes on a tour of 11 cities in 13 days. Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's new music director, will conduct all of the concerts on tour.

Two of the planes will carry the musicians, and a third one will transport 8 tons of baggage and musical instruments.

Leinsdorf took over his duties as music head of the orchestra last fall. He has conducted the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra in both winter and Hollywood Bowl seasons. He also has conducted the San Francisco Opera in Los Angeles.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard here for 10 years. In its last visit in 1953, the concert also was sponsored by the Symphony Assn.

Leinsdorf will conduct a program of music by Mahler, Prokofieff and Wagner.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100 000

APR 16 1963 Bigfeller

Boston Symphony's Date

Special to The New York Times.

HOLLYWOOD, April 15 — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform at the Shrine Auditorium on Sunday night and in San Francisco the following evening. Because of an error in transmission the story in yesterday's paper had the wrong date.

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
VALLEY TIMES TODAY
D. 52,276

APR 19 1963 Bigfeller

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 19 1963 Bigfeller

Feature Works for Symphony Concert Billed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will note two anniversaries in the performance of Prokofieff and Mahler works Sunday at 8:30 p.m. in Shrine Auditorium.

Serge Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony had its first performance 45 years ago Sunday, and the following December had its American premiere.

Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1 was completed 75 years ago. It will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also programmed are excerpts from Richard Wagner's lyric drama "Parsifal."

The 82-year-old Boston orchestra is being presented in Los Angeles under the auspices of the Southern California Symphony Assn., sponsor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

Leinsdorf, who has made guest appearances here with the Philharmonic in winter, Hollywood Bowl concerts in the summer, and with the San Francisco Opera, began his new duties as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last fall.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 21 1963 Bigfeller

MUSIC NEWS

Boston S

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will be heard tonight at 8:30 in Shrine Auditorium under auspices of the Southern California Symphony Assn., sponsor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. The famous orchestra is making its first cross-country tour in more than a decade. Leinsdorf is in his first season as music director of the orchestra, which now is in its 82nd season. Leinsdorf's program will consist of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal," and Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D Minor. The conductor is well known in Los Angeles as guest conductor of the Philharmonic in both winter and Hollywood Bowl seasons, and with the San Francisco Opera. Two members of the orchestra formerly were members of the Los Angeles Philharmonic — Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute; and James Stagliano, solo horn.

Hollywood, Calif.
Citizen News
(Cir. D. 42,000)

APR 15 1963

APRIL 21

Boston 1710 Symphony Arriving

First trip to the Pacific Coast in 10 years is being made by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be heard in Shrine Auditorium Sunday, April 21, under auspices of the Southern California Symphony Association.

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the orchestra, will conduct music of Mahler, Wagner and Prokofieff on the program the orchestra will perform here.

The music director, who has been prominent as conductor of symphony and opera in the United States for a quarter of a century, is the 11th maestro to lead the Boston orchestra as permanent conductor since it was founded 81 years ago.

Leinsdorf will open the program with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, followed by excerpts from Wagner's opera "Parsifal" and the Symphony No. 1 by Mahler.

HOLLYWOOD, L.A., CAL.
CITIZEN-NEWS
D. 36,585

APR 20 1963 Bigfeller

CONCERT TOMORROW

The 104 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Los Angeles today for their concert in Shrine Auditorium tomorrow night at 8:30.

Appearing under the auspices of the Southern California Symphony Assn., sponsor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the orchestra will play a program of music by Mahler, Prokofieff and Richard Wagner, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 14 1963 Bigfeller

Leinsdc

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the Boston Symphony will conduct his orchestra next Sunday in Shrine Auditorium.

Leinsdorf will open the program at 8:30 p.m. with Prokofieff's "Clasical Symphony," followed by excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D Major.

HOLLYWOOD, L.A., CAL.
CITIZEN-NEWS
D. 36,585

APR 19 1963 Bigfeller

DIRECTOR — The 104 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which appears Sunday night at the Shrine Auditorium, will be under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, pictured. This is orchestra's first appearance here in 10 years.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 19 1963 Bigfeller

Leinsdorf Leads

For the first time in a decade, the Boston Symphony Orchestra visits Los Angeles for a concert in the Shrine Auditorium Sunday night.

The organization's new permanent musical director Erich Leinsdorf, will be on the podium to conduct Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the First Symphony of Mahler. Leinsdorf is familiar to Los Angeles audiences as guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra in its winter season, and also in its summer concerts in the Hollywood Bowl.

The Boston Symphony, founded 81 year ago, is completing a season of 227 concerts, including five different series in Symphony Hall, Boston.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 13 1963 Bigfeller

Bostonians Play April 21

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra appears at the Shrine Auditorium on April 21, it will be under the baton of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, who took over the post from Charles Munch last fall.

The orchestra closes its Boston season on April 13, and embarks immediately on a flying tour that will take it to 11 cities in 13 days. The appearance here is under the auspices of the Southern California Symphony Association.

no

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

APR 22 1963

CULTURAL EVENTS STIR LOS ANGELES

Boston Symphony on Tour —Drawings Are Exhibited

By MURRAY SCHUMACH
Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, April 21 — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, making its first tour of the West Coast in 10 years, has touched off a busy period in arts and letters for the Los Angeles area. The activity will continue well into the summer.

This evening's concert, for hundreds of persons in the enthusiastic audience at the Shrine Auditorium, was the first opportunity to hear the famous orchestra except on records or on television.

Under its conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra performed Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal," and Mahler's First Symphony. The orchestra then left by plane for tomorrow's concert in San Francisco.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
WESTERN EDITION
D. 100,000

APR 15 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY AWAITED IN WEST

Tour to Begin in San Diego After Absence of 10 Years

By MURRAY SCHUMACH
Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, April 14—One of the most important musical events in the West in years will begin on Thursday, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a tour of the Pacific Coast.

For San Diego, Portland and Seattle this will be the first visit by the world-famous orchestra, which is conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Western tour will begin in San Diego on Thursday. The orchestra will then go to Los Angeles on Saturday, to San Francisco on Sunday, to Portland on April 23, to Seattle on April 24 and to Winnipeg, Man., on April 26.

Even with sellout audiences, the orchestra will lose money. The tour begins tomorrow in Chicago and includes Kansas City, Oklahoma City and Albuquerque before reaching the Coast.

A representative of the orchestra estimated that the flying trip by the 101 men and 3 women in the orchestra, with their 8 tons of equipment, would result in a loss of about $75,000.

Economics, it was explained, is a main reason why 10 years have passed since the Boston Symphony was last in this part of the country.

There are several reasons for making the trip despite the certainty of the financial loss:

¶Such a tour enhances the prestige of the organization in the West, where the population has boomed in 10 years and created an audience that did not exist the last time the Boston Symphony was here.

¶Exposure in the West is likely to stimulate purchases of the orchestra's recordings.

¶The orchestra, through an agreement with Seven Arts Productions, televises concerts that are sold to independent television stations throughout the country.

The program for the Los Angeles concert, at the Shrine Auditorum, will include Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, the Good Friday Spell and the Transformation scene from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's First Symphony.

The "Parsifal" performance will use electronic bells to reproduce the tones in the Wagner score. The bells were heard for the first time in Boston last Thursday and yesterday.

In San Francisco the program will be changed. The Prokofieff work will be retained, but Brahms' Third Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra will be substituted for the Wagner and the Mahler works.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 16 1963

CONCERT HERE SUNDAY BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be heard Sunday in Shrine Auditorium under auspices of the Southern California Symphony Assn., is making its first trip to the Pacific Coast in 10 years.

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the orchestra, will conduct music of Mahler, Wagner and Prokofieff on the progam.

Leinsdorf, who has been prominent as conductor of symphony and opera in the United States for a quarter of a century, is the 11th maestro to lead the Boston orchestra as permanent conductor since it was founded 81 years ago.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world. The 1962-63 season of 227 concerts consists of five different series in Symphony Hall, and various tours (including this month's cross-country trek.)

Leinsdorff will open the program with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony followed by excerpts from Wagner's opera "Pargsifal" and the Symphony No. 1 by Gustav Mahler.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 18 1963

Famed Boston Symphony to Appear Sunday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is headed west aboard two special planes on a cross-country tour that includes a concert visit to Los Angeles Sunday night in Shrine Auditorium.

Erich Leinsdorf, new music director of the famous orchestra, will conduct all of the 11 concerts on the 13-day jaunt. The Southern California Symphony Assn., sponsor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, will present the Boston Symphony in its concert here.

Last Visit in 1953

The 82-year-old symphony orchestra made its last visit to Los Angeles in 1953. The group of more than 100 musicians left Boston Monday with stops scheduled for Chicago, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque, San Francisco and four other cities.

Two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians formerly were with the Los Angeles Philharmonic: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, solo flute, and James Stagliano, solo horn.

Leinsdorf, well known to Los Angeles audiences, will conduct the following program:

The "Classical Symphony" by Serge Prokofieff, excerpts from Richard Wagner's lyric drama "Parsifal," and the Symphony No. 1 in D Minor by Gustav Mahler.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 20 1963

Week's Music Events

An Orchestra From Boston

By Patterson Greene

Two major orchestras visit the Shrine Auditorium in the coming week. Tomorrow night, the storied Boston Symphony appears there under its new musical director, Erich Leinsdorf. Next Saturday evening, our Philharmonic Orchestra dons its lighter moods for the final "Promenade" concert of the season, with Johnny Green on the podium.

Leinsdorf has programmed the "Classical" Symphony of Prokofieff, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's First Symphony, which carries on the score the subtitle, "Like a sound of nature."

82 Years, 12 Conductors

This is the Bostonians' first visit to us in a decade. Leinsdorf is the orchestra's 12th permanent conductor in the 82 years of its existence. Our own pushed-about Philharmonic has often played for that many conductors in a single year. Under the Boston policy, the Symphony—except for a brief period of disruption after World War I—has maintained its place among the great ones of the world.

(Does anyone remember—or care—that when the Los Angeles Philharmonic was formed 44 seasons ago, a number of its first chair men were alumni of the Boston Symphony in its peak days under Karl Muck?)

SANTA BARBARA NEWS-PRESS 4/18/63

Famed Boston Symphony in State Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf will give three California concerts on its first major U. S. tour. Tomorrow night it will be heard in San Diego, Sunday night in the Shrine Auditorium of Los Angeles and Monday night in the San Francisco Opera House.

Following the current tour, Leinsdorf will go to Sicily for a vacation and then return for duty in the Tanglewood series. Arthur Fielder will handle the baton for the Boston pops programs.

The orchestra, with traditions dating back to its founding, has a schedule of 277 concerts a year and is remarkable in American symphony circles in that it employs its musicians 50 weeks a year and pays them for 52, according to Harry Beall, public information representative for the orchestra, who was in Santa Barbara yesterday afternoon.

Beall, traveling in advance of the orchestra and arranging for its California appearances, was accompanied here by Dave Pearce, distributor from Los Angeles for RCA Victor, which has featured the Boston Symphony in numerous albums.

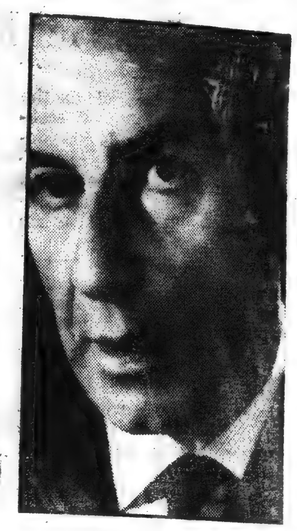
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 14 1963

Leinsdorf to Conduct

• The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear next Sunday in Shrine Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. under auspices of the Southern California Symphony Assn. Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's new music director, will conduct.

Leinsdorf will open the program with Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," followed by two excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D Major.



ERICH LEINSDORF

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

APR 20 1963

104 Bostonians Arrive Today for Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 104 musicians will arrive here today for a concert in Shrine Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Sunday.

Appearing under the auspices of Southern California Symphony Assn., sponsor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, the Bostonians will play a program of music by Gustav Mahler, Serge Prokofieff and Richard Wagner under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

The Boston Symphony is making its first appearance here in 10 years. Leinsdorf is in his initial year as music director of the 82-year-old orchestra.

The current tour is a flying jaunt, with 11 concerts scheduled for 13 days. The only California concerts are in Los Angeles, San Diego (played last night) and San Francisco. The orchestra then will head East, arriving home in time to begin the Boston "Pops" series.

Leinsdorf will open with the jaunty "classical" symphony by Prokofieff, and will offer excerpts from Wagner's lyric drama "Parsifal," and the Symphony No. 1 of Mahler.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 772,439 S. 1,120,153

MAY 5 1963

171

Erich Leinsdorf: Another Success in Boston

BY ALBERT GOLDBERG

ERICH LEINSDORF REVIEWS A YEAR IN ONE OF HOTTEST SPOTS IN THE MUSICAL WORLD.

• When Erich Leinsdorf took over as the 10th permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the beginning of this season, he moved into one of the hottest and most exposed spots in the musical world.

He had to uphold the standards that had made the Boston Symphony world-renowned for excellence and he had to face comparison with the long line of famous conductors that, since the orchestra's founding in 1881, had included George Henschel—who, curiously, was a singer by training—Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Muck, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

If experience was the criterion that dictated his selection, Leinsdorf at 55 had had about as much in every musical direction as any one man could boast. Born in Vienna, the son of an amateur pianist, he learned to read music almost before he learned to read words. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and made his official conducting debut in his native city in 1933.

When he was 20 he hiked the 150 miles from Vienna to Salzburg to present himself to Bruno Walter, who was so impressed with his talent that he took him on as his assistant. For the next three summers he continued to work in Salzburg with Arturo Toscanini, who recommended him to the Metropolitan Opera. He started there as an assistant conductor but when Artur Bodanzky died he became the Met's principal conductor of the German repertoire, remaining until 1943 when he was called to become conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra.

Service in the U.S. Army ended that stint and when he was released he went to the Rochester Philharmonic, a post that occupied him for the next nine years. After a year as director of the New York City Opera he returned to the Met as music consultant and conductor where he stayed [illegible]. Then came the bid to Boston.

On his recent visit to Los Angeles with the Boston Symphony we ventured to ask Mr. Leinsdorf how things were going. He beamed at the question.

Esprit de Corps Noted

"I have now conducted 90 concerts and there has not been a single major problem," was the reply. "I always knew the Boston was a major orchestra but I did not expect such an incredibly fresh and youthful mentality. I have never encountered [illegible] quite like the esprit de corps of these musicians. Let me tell you [illegible] stories that would be hard to match in any similar group.

"We have a new double-bass player who is a small fellow, not the usual colossus who plays this instrument. We had a concert in Brooklyn, on a small and crowded stage where the new man would have had trouble seeing the conductor. When I came on for the concert I found all the other players had moved him up to the third position. They felt he should have the best possible chance.

"Then one of our horn players took sick just before a concert at the University of Connecticut, where we were playing Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. By the time I had got to my dressing room I found the other horn players had already secured a replacement from Boston and were carefully rehearsing him. With their help the youngster, who had very little experience, got through the whole symphony without a fluff."

Violin Section Rotates

"I have tried to encourage this attitude. Shortly after the season opened a first violinist died and I could not find a replacement of Boston Symphony caliber. I did not fill the vacancy but move anyone else into the spot. Instead I moved members of the second violins into the chair.

"All violinists in the Boston Symphony have to start at the back of the seconds and some of them have been concertmasters with other orchestras. It is important that these people should not be relegated to the corner. I also rotate them in small ensembles. When we played Schoenberg's 'Verklarte Nacht' six violins switched to violas and two bass players moved to cello.

"I want complete flexibility. No one has been moved back and many have been moved forward. We have two crews of wind players that alternate. Thus in the Los Angeles concert the [illegible] first oboist played the solos in Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, and [illegible] first in the Mahler. The [illegible] who played the Prokofieff played the E Flat clarinet in the Mahler, and the first horn for the Prokofieff and Wagner played fifth horn in the Mahler."

The Boston Symphony is a formidable operation. By the end of the tour it will have played 120 concerts during the season, of which Leinsdorf will have conducted 90. He also will conduct 16 out of the 24 concerts the orchestra will play at Tanglewood next summer.

In Boston the orchestra plays for 24 weeks during the winter season with seven subscription series—24 Friday afternoons, Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons; six Mondays, 10 Tuesdays, and six concerts in Cambridge, which next year will be moved from the Sanders Theater to Boston's Symphony Hall to accommodate the demand. There are also from eight to 10 open rehearsals on Thursday nights which are sold out mainly to students with proceeds going to the pension fund.

In addition to the open air Esplanade concerts which follow the regular season and the summer season at Tanglewood, the orchestra tours for five or six weeks, with two subscription series in New York's Philharmonic Hall. And this year it has had 24 recording sessions with a resultant new crop of 11 LPs.

"Everything is sold out," said Leinsdorf. "It is the greatest single blessing. It enables you to program and to engage soloists solely from the point of view of music. Box office is eliminated as a prime factor of policy. All this is due to the vision in planning when the orchestra was founded by Henry Lee Higginson back in 1881. And we have plenty of rehearsals. A total of 286 is allotted for the basic 24 programs, which averages about five full rehearsals for every program.

"The musicians get two weeks' paid vacation a year, although a small group of 40 to 50 is engaged for a series of Mozart concerts for which they are paid in addition to the vacation."

Orchestra Forms Big Percentage

The total yearly expense of the Boston Symphony operation is $2.7 million. An endowment of $1.5 million produces from $60,000 to $70,000 a year. Some 5,000 members of The Friends of the Boston Symphony contribute about $50,000 a year. But the orchestra is able to earn [illegible] of its income. The phenomenon of [illegible] in the country, running neck to neck [illegible] with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mr. Leinsdorf is also director of the Berkshire Festival, where the orchestra plays during the summer at Tanglewood, Mass., and of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for advanced study. His plans call for a complete reorientation of the latter's activities.

"I wish to emphasize that it is not a school," he said. "We are not going to take anyone who needs to be taught how to play an instrument. The eight weeks must be a crowning experience in the learning of young musicians. We want to clarify where their strength lies. I am shifting the emphasis from the orchestra to chamber music. It must be a center aids for the young person to decide whether he should become a soloist or an orchestral player.

Too Many Disappointed Soloists

"We should not leave any stone unturned. The betrayal began 20 years ago when too many young musicians were encouraged to become soloists. Had they been led to utilize their playing in other directions we might not now have so many disappointed soloists who have to make a living as disgruntled teachers. In centers like Los Angeles and New York there is an enormous group of musicians who started out to be soloists but now have to do commercial work.

"Tanglewood should not compete with other summer schools. What is unique about it? The youngster who comes for eight weeks can live within the organism of a major symphony orchestra. There will be seminars where teachers can discuss the problems encountered. No one is accepted on recommendation alone. We audition every applicant. Large numbers don't impress. A student group is like a convoy: the slowest ship holds up the others. We will actively encourage people out of sheer goodness to do something they are not suited for. This [illegible] should be [illegible]

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 21 1963

"SOFTLY . . . SOFTLY . . ." Conductor Erich Leinsdorf motions for muted notes

Boston Symphony on Tour

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 8:30 in Shrine Auditorium.

The orchestra, making its first cross-country tour in more than a decade, is in its 82nd season. This is Leinsdorf's first year as music director.

The program will consist of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, excerpts from Richard Wagner's lyric drama "Parsifal," and Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D minor.

Final Promenade concert by the Philharmonic will be next Saturday night in Shrine Auditorium. Mary Costa, soprano, and Richard Verreau, tenor will be soloists. Johnny Green will conduct.

Other concerts by the Philharmonic this week include Pepperdine College, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.; Claremont College, Thursday at 8:15 p.m., and the final Symphonies for Youth program Saturday at 10:30 a.m. in Shrine Auditorium. All will be conducted by Henry Lewis. Pianist Russell Sherman will be soloist on the Claremont College concert.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 721,026 S. 735,992

APR 22 1963

Banners From Boston

Boston Players Score With Mahler

By Patterson Greene

Boston's superb orchestra unfurled all its banners in the First Symphony of Mahler last night, when it played in the Shrine Auditorium under the baton of its new musical director, Erich Leinsdorf.

The massive score mustered up the full strength of the orchestra's membership, and showed off the glories of its various choirs —particularly the strings and the brasses. This organization, like the symphonies of Philadelphia and Cleveland, has enjoyed long tenure of office on the part of its conductors, and as a result it has developed an ensemble tradition that has survived inevitable changes of personnel.

Passes Test

The Mahler work, with its "sounds of nature," calls up woodland idylls in its first movement (recapitulated in the course of the fourth), and provides a holiday for woodwinds. The second movement, in Laendler rhythm, abounds in melodies for the violins and cellos to sing, and the third section—a "funeral march" developed from the tune of "Frere Jacques," transposed to minor, is a test of precision in attack—a test that was child's play for the Bostonians.

In the pre-intermission portion of the program, we heard the "Classical" Symphony of Prokofieff — polished and delicate, but somehow without the touch of impishness that once seemed to mark its sly deviations from the expected. Have our ears changed, or did Mr. Leinsdorf miss something?

Three excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" (the Prelude to Act III, the Good Friday Spell and the scene of transition to the Temple of the Grail) were "silver gray, placid and perfect—" but the emotional depths of the music were not sounded.

STAR NEWS, PASADENA
4/22/63

Symphony Orchestra Applauded

By ROY COPPERUD

When one of the world's great orchestras makes its way to these far reaches, the audience is attracted by both curiosity and expectation of something out of the ordinary in the way of musical satisfaction.

Many are curious to hear for themselves just what it is that has made a great reputation, and interested to judge whether those qualities are still in evidence. Both curiosity and the hopes of a special experience were amply rewarded at the concert last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, presented as an extra attracion by the Southern California Symphony Association.

A good deal of attention centered on the conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, who took the helm of the orchestra last fall at the age of 50 after a career that gained him a worldwide reputation, principally in opera.

Mr. Leinsdorf is no stranger to these parts, having appeared often as guest conductor with the Los Angeles Philharmonic both during its winter seasons and in the Hollywood Bowl. Even so, it was a different matter to see him with his own outfit, and especially newly-ascended to the leadership of one that has been regarded with the highest respect for many years.

I cannot pretend to be a connoisseur of orchestras, for only occasionally do I hear outlanders in the flesh, and most of my impressions of their relative merits are gained second-hand from printed commentary. But it seems hardly risky to say that the wonderful instrument Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch created in the Boston Symphony is in safe hands.

The clapping at the intermission and at the end seemed as if it would never stop. On one of his returns to the stage, Mr. Leinsdorf made his acknowledgment by having the musicians rise section by section until all were standing and each section had savored its particular share of the applause.

This is a considerable distance to get in a review without mentioning what was played, but of course that is less important than the manner of its performance, a fact that was conspicuously evident on this occasion.

The program consisted of Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" (Prelude to Act III, "Good Friday Spell," and Transformation Scene), and, as a brilliant climax, Mahler's First Symphony.

In general, it was a program in which subtle effects rather than dramatic climaxes predominated. The playing was such as transcends itself and creates a new dimension for the music. No doubt it comes closest to what the composer imagined; perhaps such skillful interpretation sometimes exceeds his expectations.

It was music of a kind that one does not so much listen to as lose oneself in.

Los Angeles Times 4/23/63

THE SOUNDING BOARD

Superb Boston Symphony Conducted by Leinsdorf

BY ALBERT GOLDBERG

If ever there was a tonic for tired ears and an uplift for drooping spirits it was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert under its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, in Shrine Auditorium Sunday night.

The Boston Symphony has long been a legend and that can be a hard thing to live up to. But there was no problem in this case; the orchestra seemed better even than we remembered it and the indications were that its legendary prowess is going to be further expanded under Mr. Leinsdorf's ministrations.

One can only marvel at the perfection of this instrument. It is something like a dream come true. It cannot be explained simply by describing the luster and unity of the strings, the limpid clarity of the woodwinds, or the brass that has power without blatancy. These are all contributing factors, as are the superb quality of the solo players and the disciplined teamwork.

Masterly Conducting

But above and beyond these are the spirit of the organization and the intensity of its musical devotion. It has virtuosity in the highest degree but it is never stressed for its own sake. The gloss, the polish and the precision are only aimed at the most legitimate musical ends.

An orchestra of such mechanical perfection can sometimes seem to outshine the conductor, but there was never an instant in which Mr. Leinsdorf was not the master of the situation. The playing was as he wanted it and there was never any doubt about it.

And the playing that he demanded and got from the orchestra was of such musical sensitivity and such probing expressiveness that it immeasurably increased his stature as a conductor. There need be no fear as to the future of the Boston Symphony; it has again found the right man for an extraordinarily difficult job.

Unlike most conductors of visiting orchestras Mr. Leinsdorf paid us the compliment of selecting a program notable for its omission of the hackneyed repertoire that some people seem to think is the level of Los Angeles' musical taste.

Gorgeous Wagner

It was rather sly of him to pick Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, for that has always been a Boston Symphony specialty and maybe he wanted to show that it could play it as well for him as it did for its previous conductors. That it certainly did, with all the old time sparkle and virtuosity plus a flickering variety of light and shade and delicate nuance that was definitely his own contribution.

In the opera house Mr. Leinsdorf has always been a superior Wagner conductor, but there he never had such an orchestra to reveal the gorgeous splendor of three excerpts from the third act of "Parsifal" — the Prelude, the Good Friday Spell and the Transformation Scene. The tonal effects were a balm to the ear but at no sacrifice of the mystical and emotional properties of the music.

Of equal intensity was Mr. Leinsdorf's searching interpretation of Mahler's First Symphony. Here again was a beautiful balance between the niceties of instrumental coloring and the poignant expressiveness of Mahler's uniquely personal idiom. It made a powerful impact both for the exquisite refinement of the playing and for its eloquent communicativeness. It crowned a memorable concert and the large audience cheered as it usually does for Tschaikowsky's Fourth.

Long Beach Enterprise 4/23/63

Rare Treat by Boston Symphony

By RACHEL MORTON

The Boston Symphony, known as the artistocrat of orchestras, gave a concert in Shrine Auditorium Sunday night directed by its conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. The special concert was presented by the Southern California Symphony Association. The vast audience hailed the event with pounding feet and wild acclaim—all of which was richly deserved.

Leinsdorf is no stranger to Los Angeles audiences. He has conducted the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra on many occasions and is remembered for his fine operatic directing of the San Francisco Opera company.

Without score or baton, he conducted the entire program with little ostentation but with telling effect. His dignified bearing had dynamic significance and he got what he wanted. The players responded to him as to a beloved master.

* * * *

AND WHAT AN orchestra to conduct is the Boston Symphony! It sounded like a single instrument, so disciplined and at one were the players. The tonal quality had depth and warmth; the violins shone lustrously and the brass blazed gloriously. The woodwinds were entities of great tonal beauty while the lower strings glowed in rich sonority.

It was interesting to note that there was no prima donna entrance of the concertmaster of this orchestra after all the other players were in place. He was seated with them from the very start.

The Classical Symphony in D Major by Prokofief seemed very tame after hearing other works by this composer. A quiet dignity pervaded the whole—the workmanship was remarkable, the gaiety contagious.

Far deeper was the impress of the sovereign music of excerpts from "Parsifal" by Wagner. The hallowed expression of the "Good Friday Spell" seemed almost too sacred to bear; the Prelude to Act 3 with its portent of evil and redemption was climaxed by the music of the "Transformation" scene with its thrilling March of the Knights of the Grail and the illumination of the Eucharist Cup, which suddenly gleams blood red. The gongs and brass and percussion in the gradual upsurging of the music was nerve-tingling. It was a tremendous performance, one not to be forgotten. And how wonderful to hear the music of Wagner again!

* * * *

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY No. 1 in D Major was full of contrasts. It began with sounds of nature, like twittering birds and whirring insects. The second movement was gay with Viennese life—dancing, distant bands and street scenes. Terribly depressing and dirge-like was the third movement.

But the storm of the last movement was music composition of sheer genius that aroused the audience to a fiery pitch of enthusiasm.

Leinsdorf responded to many recalls and finally had the orchestra rise in sections, beginning with the brass—a nice innovation.

A-8 Santa Barbara News-Press, Tuesday Evening, April 23, 1963 C

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN L.A.

Leinsdorf Refines Orchestral Tone

By Maurice Faulkner

LOS ANGELES — Several years ago at the Edinburgh Festival British colleagues who shared desks in the press room queried this reporter about the problems of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra after a second-rate performance under Pierre Monteux the night before. We were perplexed because the orchestra had turned in one of its worst evenings in our memory, and our only excuse for the inadequate American orchestra was that the men were very tired after a one day flight from the United States.

That had become the condition of the orchestra all too often under Muench whose lackadaisical attitude about rehearsal and concert had permitted the great Koussevitzky organization to deteriorate seriously. There were moments of greatness under Muench but most of them were in performances of French works to which he was singularly dedicated. That condition has changed now under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf who has begun a program of rehabilitation which has accomplished a semi-miracle in the refinement of tone in the string section. For the first time in recent years we now hear the exquisite precise string tone that has been the hallmark of a great orchestra such as the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam under Beinum.

STRING SONORITY

Sunday evening, in the Los Angeles Shrine Auditorium, Leinsdorf exhibited this excellent string sonority in Prokofief's "Classical Symphony," excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Mahler Symphony, No. One in D major. It reached its peak in the "Parsifal" Prelude to Act III with its great lyric beauty. The hushed pianissimos, the unified crescendos, the clear-cut and careful accuracy of pitch in all the strings, added up to a malleable material which the conductor could mold with emotional fervor and intelligent pacing.

We have heard the Mahler First in a number of different guises over the past five years, but we doubt that we have heard it with such well-integrated attention to tying the abstruse formal elements into an expressive and musical experience. The strings aided this conception with their great flexibility and finesse of sound. The brasses were competently powerful, driving relentlessly on in the finale to the climax. The wood winds appear to be the most reluctant section of the orchestra to accept the changes which have been developing. The first flute is excellent, the first oboe competent, the first clarinet somewhat out-of-tune in important solo and ensemble passages and producing a more piercing French-style sound that did not match the requirements of the Mahler and Wagner, the first bassoon exceptional; but all of these have not yet learned to ignore personal differences and match their pitches and tones to the virtuoso string section and the ensemble totality of one woodwind concept.

BALANCE QUESTIONED

If we had an opportunity to question Mr. Leinsdorf concerning his interpretive ideas, we would challenge his use of so many strings in the Prokofief work. With only one woodwind instrument to a part, he used the full string section with its overwhelming brilliance and suave tone. This overbalance in the delicate string passages jarred this reporter's concept of delightful precision, tracery of embellishment, and clean-sounding harmonies. Eighteen first violins and their complement in the remaining strings did not co-ordinate well on the rapid sixteenth-note runs and the delicious, piquant staccatos in the fast movements. Even in the slow section, the lushness of the tone may have appealed to the Romantically-inclined Germanophile but we have not been brought up on this sort of thing. Maybe we should go back and learn a new appreciation of the "Classical."

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
CALIF. JEWISH VOICE
W. 28,600

MAY 3 1963

173

The World and Music

by Morris Browda

BOSTON SYMPHONY

A gala audience greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it came to Los Angeles for a Shrine concert. [redacted] the reception given this famous orchestra was long and warm. The orchestra's new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, is a familiar figure in Los Angeles and his concert with the Boston orchestra was eagerly awaited. His program included the Classical Symphony by Prokofieff, excerpts from Wagner's Parsifal and Mahler's first.

Morris Browda

The Boston Symphony is one of this nation's oldest musical organizations and certainly one of its best. They play with a precision which emphasizes its technical perfection as a group and in individual playing by its first chair players. There is a beautiful balance between the sections and the devotion to the music itself is obvious.

We also found that because of the type of conductors this orchestra has had in the last two decades it has developed a style which has not made it possible to play certain styles of music with the utmost of recognized artistry. The program chosen by Leinsdorf for his Los Angeles concert was one that gave the orchestra, and conductor, some apprehension.

With so many years under the baton of such eminent French directors as Pierre Monteaux and Charles Munch, the orchestra, through a repertoire which often avoided German composers, developed a style of playing very close to the lighter style generally associated with the Paris symphony.

There was a lightness and a surface quality to its music that made the performance of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony a masterpiece of virtuosity in technique and musical conception but also made it almost flounder in trying to satisfy the conductor's demands in Wagner and Mahler. Try as he did, Leinsdorf could not achieve the broad power in volume or style of these German composers.

The string section of the Boston Symphony produces a tone of warm, expressive quality but it also gives the impression that a mute is being used. The only time when necessary volume was achieved was with full brass and then there was also some degree of inbalance.

Broadness of style and not particularly volume alone was noticeably missing in the excerpts from the opera "Parsifal." Were it not for the familiar music of this opera, the excerpts might have mistakenly been attributed to some French composer. The orchestra played the music with clarity and good tonal quality.

Leinsdorf tried hard to make the strings, particularly, soar into great volumes of tone. When and if the conductor can develop a tone and style with this orchestra for the music of Wagner then we may witness the world's finest symphony in Boston.

The first symphony by Mahler is also of a musical style which the orchestra seemed to try so hard to master. It was played in a manner that made parts of it completely logical and other parts little more than good note reading. The conductor was followed carefully.

The playful delicacy of the third movement showed the orchestra to its finest advantage in this particular symphony.

We believe that Leinsdorf is the best thing that could have happened to the Boston Symphony because this orchestra will now get a more diversified musical diet which will certainly give it something it now musically lacks. We hope this orchestra will again visit Los Angeles; it is always a musical treat to hear it.

PASADENA, CALIF.
INDEPENDENT
D. 23,911

APR 23 1963

Ovation Greets Tour by Boston Symphony

By ROY COPPERUD

When one of the world's great orchestras makes its way to these far reaches, the audience is attracted by both curiosity and expectation of something out of the ordinary in the way of musical satisfaction.

Many are curious to hear for themselves just what it is that has made a great reputation and interested to judge whether those qualities are still in evidence. Both curiosity and the hopes of a special experience were amply rewarded at the concert Sunday night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, presented as an extra attraction by the Southern California Symphony Association.

A good deal of attention centered on the conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, who took the helm of the orchestra last fall at the age of 50 after a career that gained him a worldwide reputation, principally in opera.

Mr. Leinsdorf is no stranger to these parts, having appeared often as guest conductor with the Los Angeles Philharmonic both during its winter seasons and in the Hollywood Bowl. Even so, it was a different matter to see him with his own outfit, and especially newly ascended to the leadership of one that has been regarded with the highest respect for many years.

I cannot pretend to be a connoisseur of orchestras, for only occasionally do I hear outlanders in the flesh, and most of my impressions of their relative merits are gained second-hand from printed commentary. But it seems hardly risky to say that the wonderful instrument Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch created in the Boston Symphony is in safe hands.

The clapping at the intermission and at the end seemed as if it would never stop. On one of his returns to the stage, Mr. Leinsdorf made his acknowledgment by having the musicians rise section by section until all were standing and each section had savored its particular share of the applause.

This is a considerable distance to get in a review without mentioning what was played, but of course that is less important than the manner of its performance, a fact that was conspicuously evident on this occasion.

The program consisted of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" (Prelude to Act III, "Good Friday Spell," and Transformation Scene), and, as a brilliant climax, Mahler's First Symphony.

It was music of a kind that one does not so much listen to as lose oneself in.

174

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
APR 26 1963

Travel Notes on the Boston Symphony's Trip

Variance of Acoustics Problem on Tour

By MARGO MILLER

LOS ANGELES—Frank Sinatra was there. So was Mrs. Jascha Heifetz and other stalwarts in California's grab bag of the arts. Daniel Pinkham, Roman Szulc and Charles van Wynbergen came backstage, these three being retired Boston Symphony members seeing old colleagues and hearing a new conductor.

MILLER

The occasion was the orchestra's concert last Sunday in Shrine Auditorium. This cavernous monument to an architect's flirtation with the mysterious Middle East, among other attractions, is the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra's home.

Like the orchestras in Oklahoma City, Albuquerque and San Diego, Los Angeles was sponsoring the Boston Symphony, and sowing the night's profits in its pension fund.

The B.S.O., of course, was delighted to help fellow organizations. The good will of local audiences insured full houses for Erich Leinsdorf's first transcontinental tour as B.S.O. conductor. And attendant publicity on the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer center for the advanced study of music, swelled the number of young musicians who came to audition for Tanglewood.

Acoustic Hazard

The only artistic hazard in a trip of this kind is the acoustics. The halls in which the orchestra plays often serve other functions. The acoustical peculiarities of the Albuquerque civic auditorium (which doubles as a gymnasium) made the off-stage trumpet in Beethoven's Third Leonore Overture sound twice as loud as the on-stage brass. The travelling schedule will not always permit a half-hour test of a hall's sound. Even if it did, there is sometimes little a conductor or his men can do to adjust the projection of sound.

In Los Angeles, however, Leinsdorf called such a rehearsal. He conducted certain passages from Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony and from Wagner. Scouts in the auditorium — Joseph Silverstein, current B.S.O. concertmaster, and Richard Burgin, his predecessor and the orchestra's associate conductor —would describe the quality of sound. Burgin then took the men through part of the Mahler First Symphony while Leinsdorf trotted up and down the center aisle, considering how best to salvage the sound. The acoustics tended to render every orchestral section clear, an admirable situation perhaps for the transparent Prokofiev Symphony but robbing the Mahler First of the blend of ensemble sound. By playing more loudly, but without forcing tone, the Mahler came across the footlights with a little of its accustomed bounce, although the music still seemed to be coming from far away.

While the acoustic rehearsal was going on, college and conservatory students from the Los Angeles area were tuning up back stage. They had come to audition for the Berkshire Music Center. B.S.O. principals from each section of strings, brass, percussion and winds — took turns hearing them play parts of the Brahms Third Symphony or Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony. These works are standard for Tanglewood auditions, as they present a young musician with most of the problems in the standard orchestral repertoire. Students are also expected to sight read from study books, and they bring a solo piece along to show off their instrumental technique. Within 15 minutes a B.S.O. player can assess the talent of the auditioning student. It takes associate conductor Burgin little longer in interviewing prospective conducting students to find out what they know.

Informal Life

Because of the informality of back-stage life — card playing, the story telling and joking — the auditions probably seemed more chaotic at first than they proved to be. Los Angeles' Shrine Auditorium lacking rehearsal rooms, any old corner was grabbed, a music stand set up and a cascade of notes added to the general cacophony of an orchestra warming up. Students waiting their turns stood in little groups, frankly sizing up first cellist Samuel Mayes' warms up by alternating passages from tonight's program with scraps of musical parody. Most musicians are half-dressed for the concert, lacking only white tie and tailcoat. Card scores are totted up, debts paid. Out in the auditorium the ushers have finished stuffing the B.S.O. souvenir book with the evening's programs.

Early arrivals will read the annotations of Symphony Hall's John N. Burk who has sent on his paragraphs in advance of the orchestra. Advertising in the Los Angeles program is much the same as in Boston: banks, pianos, luxury cars, fine jewelry. The center two-page spread, however, is given over to an institutional announcement from fabled Forest Lawn Memorial-Parks. Just why a 30-foot mosaic depicting the signing of the Declaration of Independence has been erected in a cemetery escapes this visitor from the East, but funeral gardens in this land of retirement being probably more profitable even than Disneyland, local industry does its share to support culture.

SAN FRANCISCO.

175

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 291,555 S. 325,016

MAR 25 1963

Boston Symphony To Play Here

ERIC LEINSDORF
Boston conductor

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance here at 8:30 p.m. on Monday, April 22, at the War Memorial Opera House.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in the special concert sponsored by the San Francisco Symphony Association. The program will include Symphony No. 8 by Brahms, Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

This is Leinsdorf's first major tour with the orchestra since becoming conductor last year, replacing Charles Munch. Leinsdorf had previously been the conductor and music consultant for the Metropolitan Opera. The orchestra was last here on its first national tour in 1953.

Tickets for the concert are available at the Opera-Symphony box office, Sherman Clay and Co., and other Bay Area agencies.

A Self-Portrayal

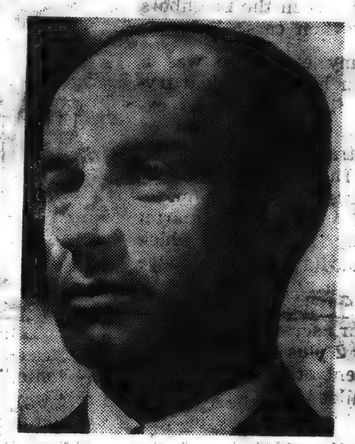
Shirley Eder, well-known Detroit television and radio personality, has been signed to portray herself in "Palm Springs Weekend," a Warner Bros. motion picture being directed by Norman Taurog and produced by Michael A. Hoey.

Our Correspondent

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

APR 21 1963

On the Podium



Distinguished conductors at the Opera House this week will be Seiji Ozawa (left) who will be guest artist with the San Francisco Symphony Wednesday and Thursday nights and Friday afternoon, and Erich Leinsdorf (below), who will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert Monday evening.

UKIAH, CALIF.
JOURNAL
D. 3,965

APR 3 1963

Symphony Orchestra In Concert April 22

SAN FRANCISCO —The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a special concert Monday, April 22, at 8:30 p.m. in the San Francisco Opera House.

With Erich Leinsdorf conducting, the orchestra will perform the Classical Symphony by Prokofiev, Symphony No. 8 by Brahms and Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 277,978 S. 450,991

APR 16 1963

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS-CALL BULLETIN
D. 201,422 SAT. 171,738

APR 18 1963

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

APR 15 1963

Tickets for Boston Symphony

Tickets are now on sale at Sherman Clay box offices for the San Francisco Opera House concert of the Boston Symphony on April 22, 8:30 p.m.

Erich Leinsdorf, who took over the reins of the famed music-making body from Charles Munch last year, is taking the orchestra on its first major tour under his leadership.

The Opera House program will include the Classical Symphony of Prokofieff, the Symphony No. 3 of Brahms, and Bartok's concerto for Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony, second oldest orchestra in the United States, has occupied a pre-eminent position in American music since 1881. The April 22 concert here marks the mid-point of the orchestra's trans-continental tour.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE
D. 172,280 S. 186,756

APR 17 1963

Auditions Will Be Held For Berkshire

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., summer center for the advanced study of music conducted by the Boston Symphony, will hold nationwide auditions this year for admissions and possible scholarships, for instrumentalists, singers and conductors. The San Francisco auditions will be held in the Opera House next Monday. Applications must be obtained from the center, addressed at Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS-CALL BULLETIN
D. 201,422 SAT. 171,738

APR 22 1963

Boston Visitors

The Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, its new director, performs at the Opera House tonight at 8:30. The renowned orchestra is playing Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Brahms' Third.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 120,434

MAR 30 1963

Bostonians Get Set For Busy Road Work

It takes a bit of doing to get an orchestra of 105 men on the road.

The Boston Symphony, soon to start its spring tour which includes an April 19 stop in San Diego, is a good example.

The orchestra's assistant manager, Harry Beall, who made a quick stop here recently to check facilities, detailed some of the complications involved.

Swing to Take In 11 Cities

"We'll be in 11 cities in 13 days," Beall said. "We start in Chicago, then on to Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Albuquerque and San Diego. After that it's Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

"We have to be back in Boston by April 28," he explained, "because most of the men play for Arthur Fiedler's Pops Orchestra, and their season begins on April 30."

Beall said most of the travel on the tour is to be done by air. Two planes will be chartered by the orchestra and most of the space on a scheduled flight also will be used. One plane will be used for instruments and other equipment alone. That amounts to about 8 tons, Beall said.

Precautions in Flight

"We arrange it so that not more than 60 per cent of the orchestra rides together, and also see that each section is broken up," Beall said.

"There are some men who prefer not to fly, so rail travel is arranged for them. They really have to hustle, too, to keep up our pace."

The Boston orchestra is one of the busiest in the country. Its regular season at home in Symphony Hall includes 84 concerts. In addition there are six annual appearances in Providence, R.I., and 15 in New York.

The effort is fully justified, Beall said the Boston concerts are always sold out in advance of the season and on the road it's invariably standing room only.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

APR 8 1963

Berkshire Auditions

The Berkshire Music Center, a summer center for the advanced study of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox, Massachusetts, will hold auditions here at the War Memorial Opera House on April 22 beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Instrumentalists, conductors and choral singers aged 18 and over who are interested in auditioning for admission or for a limited number of fellowships should write immediately to Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Participating in the summer center will be Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony; Aaron Copland, Yannis Xenakis, and Lukas Foss, composers; Gunther Schuller, French horn soloist, and others.

176

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 300,127 S. 442,350

APR 21 1963

PRIDE OF BOSTON COMES TO S. F.

MUSIC

CONDUCTOR ERICH LEINSDORF
He will direct Brahms' Third Symphony

A New Man on The Podium This Season

Two different orchestras and two conductors will make this a busy symphonic week at the Opera House.

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., the great Boston Symphony will be led by Erich Leinsdorf in a program offering Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," Brahms' Third and Bartok's brilliant "Concerto for Orchestra."

Now at the start of his 50's, Leinsdorf, one-time youth prodigy of the baton, this season became Boston's regular conductor, succeeding Charles Munch. San Francisco knows him well in concerts and opera.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
JEWISH COMMUNITY
BULLETIN
W. 10,203

MAR 22 1963

Boston Symphony Performs April 22

Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting will present a special concert April 22 at 8:30 p.m. in the War Memorial Opera House under the auspices of the San Francisco Symphony Assn. This is Leinsdorf's first major tour with the Boston Symphony since he took over the podium from Charles Munch in 1962.

The program will include the Classical Symphony by Prokofieff, Symphony No. 3 by Brahms and Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok, which the Boston players have recently recorded.

Leinsdorf, Boston's 13th conductor, follows an illustrious list that includes Munch, Koussevitsky and Monteux. He had previously directed at the Metropolitan Opera as chief conductor of German operas, a post he held from 1957 to 1962. He has conducted practically every major national and international orchestra, and has numerous operatic and symphonic recordings to his credit.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in 1881 and moved into its renowned Symphony Hall in 1900. The forthcoming concert in San Francisco marks the most westerly performance of its second transcontinental tour.

SAN JOSE, CALIF.
MERCURY-NEWS
SUN. 124,417

APR 7 1963

HAYWARD, CALIF.
REVIEW
D. 28,968 S. 28,876

APR 21 1963

REDWOOD CITY, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 20,583

APR 19 1963

Boston Symphony In SF on Monday

SAN FRANCISCO—The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting will present a special concert at 8:30 p.m. Monday in the War Memorial Opera House under the auspices of the San Francsco Symphony Association. This is Leinsdorf's first major tour with the Boston Symphony since he took over the podium from Charles Munch in 1962.

The program will include the Classical Symphony by Prokofiev, Symphony No. 3 by Brahms and Concerto for Orchestra by Bartok.

Leinsdorf, Boston's 13th conductor, follows an illustrious list that includes Munch, Koussevitsky and Monteux. He had previously conducted at the Metropolitan Opera as chief conductor of German operas, and later was music consultant and conductor, a post he held from 1957 to 1962. He has conducted practically every major national and international orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert October 22, 1881, and moved into its renowned Symphony Hall in 1900. This concert in San Francisco marks the most westerly concert of its second transcontinental tour.

Tickets for this performance are now on sale at the Opera-Symphony box office, Sherman, Clay & Co. Tickets may be ordered by calling EX 7-0717.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 300,127 S. 442,350

APR 24 1963

177

The Legendary Boston Symphony

'Why Not Match It?'

By ALEXANDER FRIED

Led by its new regular conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the touring Boston Symphony came to town for a single Opera House concert Monday night.

Promptly it endowed San Francisco with a legendary musical memory.

At the end of a fabulous performance of Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra," plus two encores, the audience remained standing and cheering.

I have no doubt that many of the cheerers were thinking: "If Boston can have so marvelous an orchestra, we ought to have one just as good. When and how are we going to get it?"

ERICH LEINSDORF
In the palm of his wizardly hand

STIFF START

To be exact, not everything about the concert was equally thrilling. Leinsdorf's start in the Prokofieff "Classical Symphony" was too stiffly humorless (and it used too large an orchestra) for so sparkling a work.

Then he warmed up considerably — though not yet totally—to the beautiful, romantic feelings of Brahms' Third Symphony.

At last it was in the Bartok that there could be no reservations. The "Concerto" is a virtuoso piece that makes utmost demands of brilliance and finesse, and I have never heard so wizardly a performance of it by anyone anywhere.

Encores were a deliciously played Hungarian-style excerpt of Kodaly's "Hary Janos" and a rigidly bronco-broken performance of the "Ride of the Valkyries."

The latter performance typified the fact that there are curious, even baffling limitations to Leinsdorf's temperament as a conductor.

Of course he knows his music and craft of leadership inside out. He holds the great Boston Symphony in the palm of his batonless hand.

INGROWN RESTRAINT

Yet even in his Brahms, where he brought forth many passages of great melodic warmth and charm, an ingrown restraint partly hemmed him in. For it is not his basic nature to let his music flame with exciting passion and freedom, and music at times should certainly do just that.

It can't be said he was military in precision, or dry. But he always kept his sense of order to the fore in whatever he did. In fact, his Brahms performance, based on unquestioned authority, did something surprising, because now and then it was so relaxed that it became tame.

In the Bartok, Leinsdorf's special sort of control was all to the good. The performance glittered with a penetrating richness and lucidity of color. Its melancholy pages were very moving, without bathos. The final pages (where the music itself gets dangerously close to a happy, vulgar showmanship) were for once vividly fine, not brash.

Boston's 110 symphony players are a picked, magnificently unified big-league team. Wherever one listens among them, one hears superior skills, distinguished solo artistry and instrumental perfections ranging from utmost delicacy to noble grandeur.

No wonder Leinsdorf made each separate section of the orchestra take a special bow for its part in the Bartok.

No wonder Leinsdorf himself—despite his tendencies at the age of 51 to take on the look of an elder statesman in so high a post—seemed as happy as any man ever has a right to feel in this harsh world.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 300,065 S. 330,671

APR 24 1963

Music Review

Boston Symphony Plays Some Well-Worn Pieces

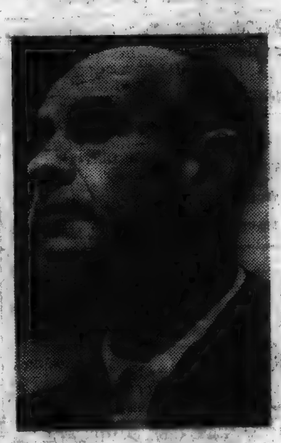
By Alfred Frankenstein

Erich Leinsdorf, the recently appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is much respected in San Francisco because of his work in past seasons with our own orchestra and our opera company, but he did not exert himself to return the compliment when he made out the program for the Boston Symphony concert over which he presided Monday night at the Opera House.

The program was composed entirely of well-worn success pieces. It was suitable, perhaps, for some small town whose public has never heard anything, but it was not what one expects of a great orchestra performing for the public a musically cultivated metropolis.

HUB

Among the things one missed was recognition of the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the musical hub of New England. There is more important creative activity and more worth-while musicological pursuit in New England than anywhere else in the country, but the testimony of Leinsdorf's program is that the Boston Symphony stands entirely apart from all of it. If so, its policy is culturally irresponsible and basically insulting both to its home community and to communities such as this one which it may visit.



ERIC LEINSDORF
More expected

The fact that Monday night's program was rapturously applauded throughout is no justification for it, since a symphony orchestra is not a commercial institution. Actually, an orchestra as exalted as the Boston Symphony has no right to be applauded all the time. The late Serge Koussevitzky, who is primarily responsible for the Boston Symphony's enormous reputation, understood all this very well. It is to be hoped that Leinsdorf will come to understand it as he matures in his job.

The Boston Symphony was far and away at its best in that glorified pop-concert wow-number, Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra." This was truly the prodigious Boston band of the legend, wiht every instrument blazing with color and virtuosity and the ensemble exceeding the sum of its parts in the exhilaration and brilliance of the whole.

So be it. I hereby vote to make this the last performance of that work we shall hear at the Opera House for a while. Twenty years ago, when it was new, I predicted that the concerto would become the "Scheherezade" of the 1970s, but it has become a nuisance long before that time.

SYMPHONY

The program opened with a remarkably precise and exact performance of Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony." To be sure, even the Boston violins and the first and last movements of this work with a shriek instead of a tone, but otherwise the sounds of the various choirs came through with the deep penetration of an x-ray. But the x-ray reveals anatomy, not the vital processes; parts of the symphony were heavy and lacked the small-scaled, scintillating humor it demands.

The Brahms third symphony was most remarkable in its brooding, mysterious, ruminative passages. Otherwise it was rather sparse in contrast and elasticity, but if you never hear a worse performance you may consider yourself lucky.

The encores were the intermezzo from Kodaly's "Hary Janos" and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries."

BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE
D. 14,319

APR 23 1963

Director Leinsdorf Great—

S.F. Audience Hails Boston Symphony

By FRED GARDNER

The Boston Symphony Orchestra stopped in San Francisco last night to give one of the nine concerts scheduled in 11 days, in its whirlwind tour of the west. But at the completion of the program, it was the audience that was left breathless.

To many, it must have been a revelation that an orchestra can produce such a gorgeous sound, play with such individual perfection and perform in such complete unison. With this orchestra, Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has a tiger on a string.

Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" was chosen to open the program, and was given a glistening, dancing performance. Leinsdorf picks up the humor of the orchestral writing rather than laying emphasis on the satirical aspects of this still-charming work.

BRAHMS WORK

With the Brahms "Symphony No. 3," the depth and greatness of this orchestra asserted itself. A large orchestra, it produces a deep mellow sound largely because of the heavy contingent of double basses. The large string section sings and whispers with a variety of tone that is hardly believable. To cap this, the brass section produced a tone like rich autumnal sunlight.

The sheer quality of sound almost obscured the interpretation, although in Leinsdorf's approach, it is probably the most important element in his music-making. The symphony's two middle movements were taken at a loving and leisurely pace, with a string tone so sweet one hated to see them stop.

The first and last movements moved forward with effortless drive, with every last detail in Brahms' lush orchestration perfectly blended, but totally clear.

As the piece de resistance, the orchestra offered Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra" in a performance as stunning as it was exciting. Here the brass took on a lighter, clearer tone, while the strings shifted through the total spectrum of tone color.

Leinsdorf's tempi were splendidly chosen, as the beat often varied, but always seemed just right. Again, the sensous effect was so absorbing that it was difficult to consider how the work was being played.

After an ovation, the likes of which the Opera House has seldom seen, Leinsdorf granted the ravenous audience an unheard of two encores, a selection from Kodaly's "Harry Janos Suite" and "The Ride of the Valkyries" from Wagner's "Die Walkure." Well over 20 minutes elapsed between the completion of the Bartok and the dispersion of the audience.

There is no doubt San Francisco would like to call the Boston Symphony Orchestra its own. Let us hope, with the incoming Josef Kripps, that an orchestra of comparable glory, may soon be abuilding.

178

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS-CALL BULLETIN
D. 201,422 SAT. 171,738

APR 23 1963

S. F. Cheers Boston Symphony

By ARTHUR BLOOMFIELD

Ten-minute ovations by cheering, stamping capacity audiences are not the exclusive property of coloratura sopranos, we're glad to report, and that's just the response the fabulous Boston Symphony earned last night at the Opera House.

The orchestra is indeed remarkable. It has had an excellent personnel as long as one can remember, thanks to those three magical factors — money, imagination, and thinking BIG—and now Erich Leinsdorf has come along to place his own stamp of refined orchestral balance upon its justly famous sound.

It's very fashionable among the critics to say that Leinsdorf, a rather military figure on the podium (although he swings and bounces now and then), has turned the Boston into a stiff machine. This summation fails to take account of a large helping of humanity which registers in his interpretations.

TRUE, the clarity of separation between the various sections of the orchestra is flabbergasting. Why complain? It by no means got in the way last night, and who could want a more fragrantly idyllic exposure of the middle movements of the Brahms Third than Leinsdorf offered? Elsewhere the music had great propulsion, but this doesn't mean there was undue rush.

Nothing was more remarkable, though, than the third chord at the opening of the Brahms. At that moment we had the pleasure of hearing the first big sound from the bass choirs, and what an educated thud it was! This orchestra really has a foundation — its bass provides as firm, full and suave an underpinning as ever took care of the lower symphonic lines. Of course, everything else is beautiful up through the especially brilliant top instruments, and at any given moment Leinsdorf has each section playing at just the right degree of loud, soft or one of the 57 varieties in between.

The program opened with a deft, light, straight Classical Symphony of Prokofieff, much of it conducted from the wrists rather than the shoulders, and it officially concluded with a big, broad and witty pronouncement, of Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. Encores followed: a bit from Kodaly's "Hary Janos" and a bewilderingly crisp Ride of the Valkyries. Did Brunnhilde ever have an orchestra like this?

OAKLAND, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 197,851 S. 226,924

APR 23 1963

Boston Symphony Stirs Enthusiasm

By CLIFFORD GESSLER
Tribune Music Critic

The Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf stirred extraordinary enthusiasm among a capacity audience Monday night in War Memorial Opera House.

An ovation of length such as is seldom heard hereabouts brought not only one encore, which in itself is unusual in a symphony concert, but two. Although it was apparent, from some viewpoints in the house, that Leinsdorf had already prepared for them, they wouldn't have been given if the audience hadn't shown a marked disinclination to go home.

While according to reports the Boston Symphony had been slipping somewhat in recent years, it is already making a pronounced comeback under its new conductor. Its playing was clean, yet flexible, as Leinsdorf's quiet efficiency moulded the music with delicate perception. A solid, rather than flamboyant conductor, he shaped the works with just regard to their total significance rather than concentrating on details, though the details were there in their proper places.

The qualities of conductor and orchestra showed to most advantage in Gartok's Concerto for Orchestra with its opportunities for various sections of the ensemble to be heard independently. Section members played in admirable according with one another. The consistent competence of the brasses was a special treat. The performance was a clear and stirring communication.

Tone in general was less mellow than expected, being directed more toward incisiveness, and the strings becoming somewhat harsh at times.

Leinsdorf's program, though two thirds contemporary, couldn't be called adventurous. Porkofieff's "Classical" symphony has always been safe, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra is one of that composer's most readily assimilable works. For conservative balance there was Brahms' third symphony, unfolded logically if without particular excitement.

The extra numbers were the intermezzo from Kodaly's "Hary Janos" and Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
D. 220,491 S. 243,883

APR 24 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 164,299
APR 23 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
APR 23 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 452,333
Apr 24 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
APR 23 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 23 1963

Symphony Makes History on Coast

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor Erich Leinsdorff last night played the first musical encores given by a symphony here in years.

Two short encores were brought on by tumultuous applause for a performance of Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. It was commissioned by the Boston Symphony in 1944.

PORTLAND

Eugene Register-Guard
Eugene, Oregon
(Cir. D. 41,725)

MAR 9 - 1963

Symphony Concert Set

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a concert in Portland's Public Auditorium on Tuesday, April 23, under the sponsorship of the Portland Symphony Society.

The orchestra will be under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, who came to the Boston Symphony last year after conducting for the Metropolitan Opera for six years.

Portland is one of only 11 cities slated to hear the orchestra in its spring tour.

The performance is not a part of the Portland Symphony's 12-concert season. Single tickets, priced from $2.50 to $6, each are available by writing J. K. Gills, 408 SW Fifth Ave., Portland. The tickets went on sale Feb. 28.

Portland, Oregon
The Oregonian
(Cir. D. 200,116 - S. 260,829)

APR 4 1963

Boston Symphony Set To Play 'Parsifal'

Apropos of the Easter season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Richard Wagner's "Prelude, Good Friday Spell, and Finale" from Act III of the German master's opera "Parsifal" during the famous symphony's single performance at the Public Auditorium Tuesday, April 23 at 8:30 p.m. sponsored by the Portland Symphony Society.

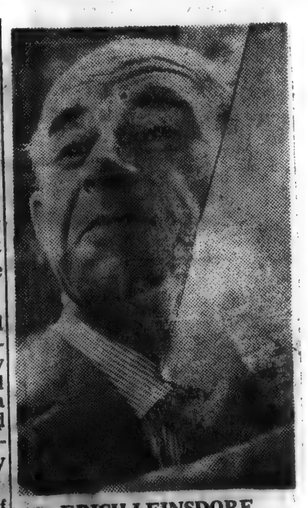
Parsifal is a mythological hero, representing "free human nature." Motivated by "the great message" of Good Friday, Wagner conceived in a single day his allegory based upon the cycle of stories dedicated to seekers of the Holy Grail.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf considers the Parsifal excerpts which he will present among "the most exalted and magnificent in all Wagner," embracing the motives of baptism, faith, and penitence.

Maestro Leinsdorf has also programmed Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 1 in D Major, begun in 1883 by a "youthful idealist of soaring artistic ambitions" reared on Wagner and Bruckner yet saddled by conducting an inept provincial theater orchestra at Cassel.

Bruno Walter, who arranged the symphony's New York premiere in 1909, called it "an avowal of the soul. The composition bears the imprint of ingenious inspiration, novelty and unreserved veracity. In the fourth movement, the raging vehemence of Mahler's nature breaks forth and, with relentless force, gains a triumphant victory over life."

The April 23 concert will



ERICH LEINSDORF

open with Ludwig van Beethoven's third overture to his opera "Leonore." The work now stands alone. Beethoven himself, after composing it, felt it was too long, too passionate, and too stirring to open the opera. It has remained program music since Gustav Mahler, as a conductor, chose to play the overture individually.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGON JOURNAL
D. 147,305 SAT. 122,981

MAR 16 1963

By MARTIN CLARK
Journal Music Editor

ERICH LEINSDORF will bring the world - famous, 104 - piece Boston Symphony Orchestra to The Auditorium for a single concert Tuesday, April 23, under the aegis of the Portland Symphony Society.

The performance is not a part of the Portland Symphony's year - long 12 - concert season, society president Fred M. Buchwalter points out.

Founded in 1881, the Boston Orchestra has been described as "The greatest assembly of skilled musicians the world has ever known." It has assured a place in musical history for such noteworthy conductors as Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, and its current musical director, Erich Leinsdorf — former assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini.

LEINSDORF CAME to the Boston orchestra last year, after having conducted for the Metropolitan Opera six years. His baton is familiar to audiences of the Cleveland, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Berlin, Vienna, and London symphonies, all of which he has conducted since leaving the Austrian State Academy of Music in 1933.

The nation's richest, and sometimes its best, symphony aggregation, the Boston is also America's hardest working orchestra — playing 227 concerts this season alone. Its last transcontinental tour was in 1953. Portland is one of only 11 cities slated to hear the orchestra.

Since making its first phonograph record in 1917, under Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston and its "Pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler have produced on - wax performances which have sold 30 million copies to date. The orchestra's home concerts are broadcast nationally by 55 radio stations. Last year, the orchestra also appeared in 13 one-hour TV concerts.

PORTLAND, ORE.
REPORTER
D. 54,752

APR 26 1963

ad lib... by charlie hanna

In the back of a keen Cadillac sat Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony; Thomas L. Perry, business manager of same, and non - Boston newspaperman I.

The non-Portlanders had arrived Tuesday afternoon with the symphony sidemen (including three women orchestra members plus Mrs. Perry) aboard two United charter airliners.

Mrs. James (Rita) Dewart, board member of the women's committee of the Portland Symphony society, had greeted Leinsdorf with a bouquet of roses as he stepped off the debarking ramp.

Then we Cadillacked it to the Sheraton hotel. During the ride Leinsdorf, who is short and sweet, talked about native-American and foreign-born musicians, widening interest in classical music and auditions.

And I asked Perry how much the airborne two-week tour of 17 cities is costing. What he said was it costs a lot, but that it's worth it in time and energy saved.

Half the Boston musicians are foreign-born, said Leinsdorf. This fact merely proves the international binding factor of music, he said.

Leinsdorf

"That reminds me of the last auditions we held not long ago for four open positions. The way we work auditions, incidentally, is that a committee of orchestra members from the particular instrument section hears the applicants during the morning. The committee selects those best qualified and I hear those with the committee in the afternoon. To the point, though: the four men hired were two American-born and two foreign-born. It just happened that way, you see. But it is symbolic of the Boston's international nature."

To prove that interest in the classics has broadened greatly in the last 20 years, Leinsdorf told of a chauffeur who drove him from the San Diego concert hall back to the hotel after the performance.

When the chauffeur opened the door for the Boston conductor, he told Leinsdorf he particularly enjoyed "that Bartok concerto." "That wouldn't have happened 20 years ago," said Leinsdorf delightedly.

The Cad pulled up in front of the Sheraton. Perry spotted the abstract-type mosaic near the hotel entrance and pondered briefly on its significance.

"I think it's an Alaskan verse of welcome for us," said Viennese-born Leinsdorf, who can pull a leg as well as lead an orchestra. And that night the Boston boys did well at the Civic Auditorium. They pulled an estimated 3,600 (seating was opened in one wing) and the closing ovation was a standing one.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
D. 200,616 S. 260,829

APR 7 1963

Concert Set For April 23

When Erich Leinsdorf first conducted a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—two years ago—he led the group faultlessly through Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, from memory. In the rehearsal audience, Piston, astounded, commented "I wasn't prepared for a man to know my score better than I did."

Similar anecdotes run like a thread of genius through the background of 52-year-old Leinsdorf, who will bring the almost sainted 104-piece orchestra here for a concert Tuesday, April 23, at the Public Auditorium, under sponsorship of the Portland Symphony Society.

Leinsdorf, former Metropolitan Opera conductor, has programmed for Oregonians Beethoven's Overture to "Leonora", excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's first Symphony.

Leinsdorf's career is as notable as that of the 82-year-old Boston orchestra. When he accepted the Cleveland baton in 1943, Erich Leinsdorf became the youngest conductor heading a major U.S. symphony. After that stint came the Rochester Philharmonic, New York's City Opera, then the Met. His roving may be over. Leinsdorf's predecessors in Boston — Serge Kaussevitzky and Charles Munch—held the Boston baton collectively for 38 running years.

After three summers of Salzburg tutelage under Toscanini, from 1935 to 1937, Leinsdorf was regarded as the "wunderkind" of U.S. music. His first Met production, "Die Walkure," in January 1938, won standing ovations . . . for Flagstad and Rethberg, certainly, but also for the slight, dapper Viennese in the pit: Erich Leinsdorf.

VANCOUVER, WASH.
COLUMBIAN
D. 23,225

MAY 2 1963

Symphony Concert Is Attended

CAMAS HIGH — Camas high school National Honor Society students rose to their feet to applaud the Boston Symphony as it finished its public appearance at the Portland Public Auditorium on Tuesday, April 23.

The Symphony, led by Erich Leinsdorf, entertained the citizens of Portland and NHS students with numbers such as the Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Opera 72, by Ludwig Van Beethoven; excerpts from "Parsifal" by Richard Wagner; and Symphony in D major, No. 1 by Gustav Mahler.

Tickets for the Symphony were $2.50, but NHS students were required to pay only $1.50 and the Society paid the remainder. The money paid for the cultural project is part of the sum received as the profit from the Lyceum Film Series.

OBSCURED TEXT

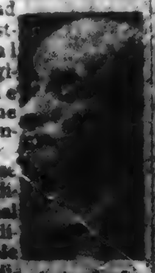
180

ad lib...

by charlie hanna

Say what you will, but at least I'm provincial.

I know that because, cuss my sensitive western hide, my dander got up (I know I have a high dander of living). When I read some suggested editorial material originated in the offices of the Boston Symphony.



The purpose of this editorial material is to give editors possible ideas for editorials having to do with the Boston Symphony coming to town (April 23 for a one-night stand at Civic Auditorium).

In effect, the suggested editorial states that not only will Portlanders be pleasured mightily, no doubt, by the stringed strains of the boys from Boston, but also we will be so impressed that, by program's end, we will charge out of the auditorium filled with inspiration and determination to git us a band just like them Boston cats got.

The Erich Leinsdorf-led symphony is so big with Boston, says the Boston originated editorial, outline, that they've even named a subway station "Symphony."

And that's just what we're aimin' to do, too, just as soon as we get us a subway. In the meantime, all we have to call "Symphony" is an orchestra. Crazy world, isn't it?

"There is more significance to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming Portland concert ... than beautiful music superbly performed," modestly states the Boston-authored editorial piece.

"The audience ... that there should not be an empty seat for such an occasion will instantly recognize the musical significance of this concert but ... great, they should also recognize and ponder the ... non-musical ... have made it possible ... (the Boston) organization ... thrive and mature to the point where it has become ... of the very greatest institutions of artistic importance developed by any civilization on earth."

Now this masterpiece of thoughtfulness and insight comes to the key question: "What can Portland do to ... ry (its) symphony picture ... h maturity? The best ... answer, of course, is to give (its) musicians a living wage spread over a majority of the year ..."

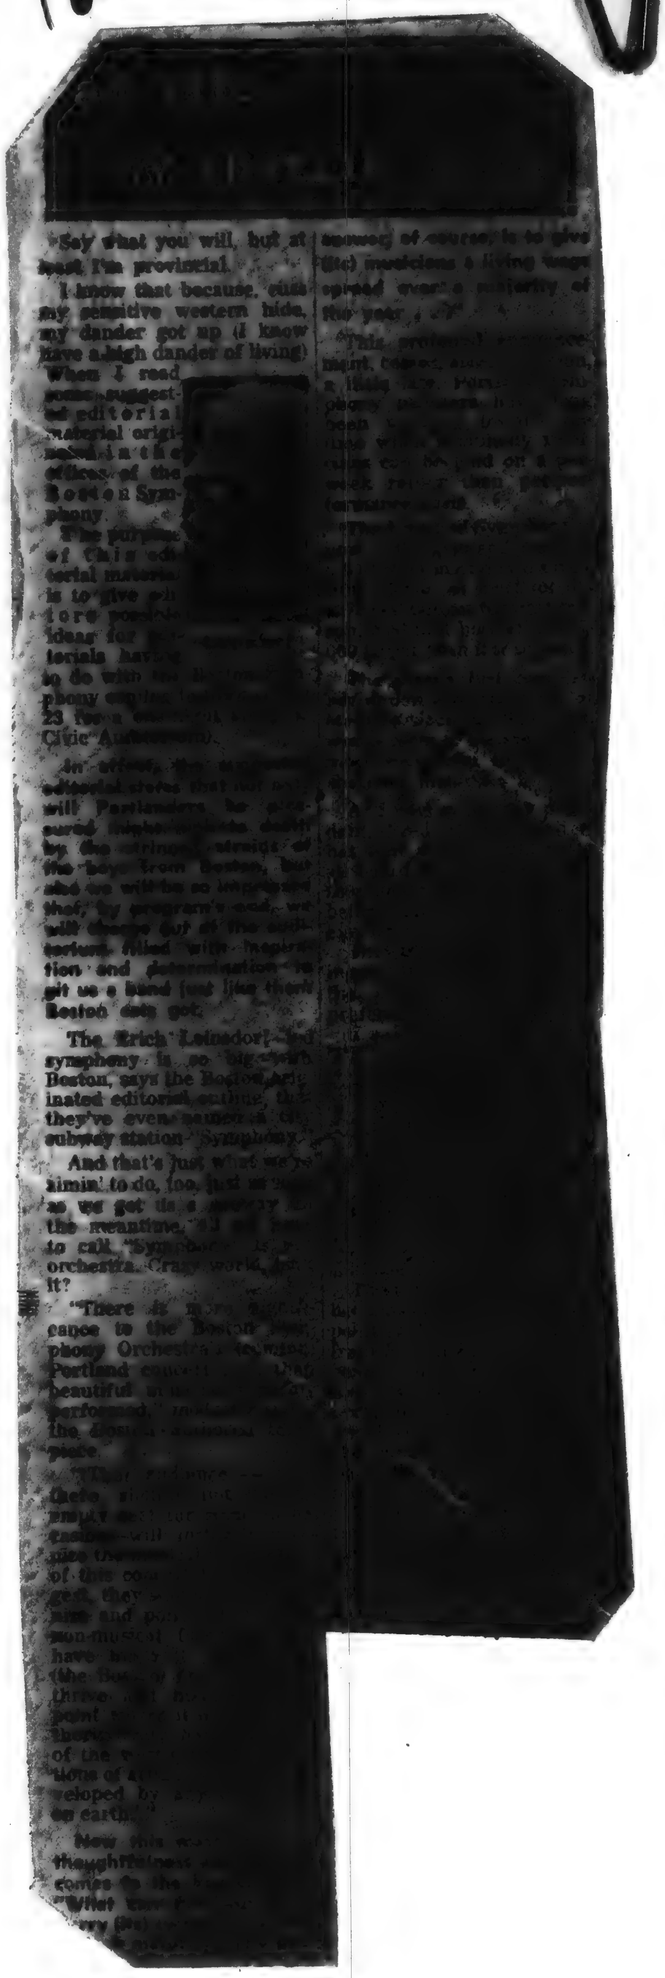
This profound announcement, coming direct from Boston, a little late, Portland Symphony planners have long been working toward the time when symphony musicians can be paid on a year-week rather than per-performance basis.

[illegible] ... a $100,000 ... $276,000 budget for next season. And that figure is ... 000 larger than last season.

[illegible] ... Mozart's ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible]

OBSCURED TEXT

130



"Say what you will, but at least I'm provincial.

I know that because, even my sensitive western hide, my dander got up (I know I have a high dander of living) When I read some suggested editorial material originating in the offices of the Boston Symphony.

The purpose of this editorial material is to give [illegible] more possible ideas for [illegible] materials have to do with [illegible] phony coming 23 [illegible] Civic Auditorium.

In effect, the editorial states that Portlanders will be [illegible] by the stirring strains of the boys from Boston, but also we will be so impressed that, by program's end, we will charge out of the auditorium filled with inspiration and determination to get us a band just like them Boston duty got.

The Erich Leinsdorf symphony is so big over Boston, says the Boston originated editorial writer, they've even named a subway station Symphony.

And that's just what we're aimin' to do, too, just as soon as we get the money. In the meantime, I'll call "Symphony" orchestra. Crazy world, isn't it?

"There is no substance to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Portland concert. The beautiful music performed, under the direction of [illegible] piece.

[illegible] empty [illegible] [illegible] of this concert, they [illegible] and pomp [illegible] non-musical [illegible] have been [illegible] the [illegible] three [illegible] of the [illegible] tions of a [illegible] veloped by [illegible] on earth.

Now this writer's thoughtfulness comes to the [illegible] that [illegible] very [illegible]

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
D. 200,616 S. 260,829

APR 24 1963

Boston Unit 'Joy To Ear'

Orchestra Worthy Of World Fame

By HILMAR GRONDAHL
Music Editor, The Oregonian

The concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night in the Public Auditorium was an event of persuasive beauty such as one is apt to remember for a long while. Eric Leinsdorf conducted, and the program included the Third Leonore Overture, three excerpts from Act 3 of "Parsifal" and the Mahler First Symphony.

Among these scores there was abundant opportunity for the revealing of those expressive qualities for which this ensemble is justly famous; the beauty of individual and total sound and the discipline which causes so many instruments to range the whole gamut of dynamics in precise accord. This orchestra is a collection of individual virtuosi whose musical integrity is such that they revel in their joint effort. To hear the clear, quiet beauty of the solo trumpet in the first movement of the Mahler, or the pure limpid tones of the flute, and then to watch the entire phalanx of fiddle bows rising and falling in military precision or to feel the sweep of carefully matched string tones from these violins down through the basses was a joy to ear and spirit.

Substitute 'Discordant'

There was one discordant set of notes and that was the electronic substitute for a set of bells in the "Parsifal" excerpts. These had little of the necessary release of sound, nor was the intonation what was called for.

It was to be expected that the Boston Symphony would make a stir here, not only because it had not been on this coast since the San Francisco World's Fair, but also because Mr. Leinsdorf had not conducted here since the San Francisco Opera production of "Tannhauser" in 1941. He had gained his conductorial stature first through opera, which is an operation which requires an alert and flexible supervisory command. We have heard him rehearsing "Boris" and conducting Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld"; in both instances he knew exactly the result he desired and mostly he achieved that result. To one who has conducted such involved and demanding scores as Wagner and the late Verdi with an orchestra in the pit, plus a chorus and soloists on the stage, the leadership of an ensemble as skilled as the Boston Symphony must seem almost a relaxation. But if there is an occasional appearance of relaxation about Mr. Leinsdorf, this illusion is shattered with dramatic suddenness when and if he has a dramatic point to make in the musical concourse. It is plain that the virtuosity he derives from the complexities of opera he puts right back into the intricacies of his symphonic direction.

Symphony Saluted

While this conductor and this ensemble performed to perfection in each of its three assignments, it seemed to us that the Mahler First had a special claim to congratulations and gratitude. Perhaps something of his Austrian derivation matched intimately the Viennese atmosphere of the Mahler inspiration, for here was Mahler as he is seldom played; with all the warmth, the nostalgic beauty, the naivete, the almost childish exuberance. We mentioned the remarkable trumpet solo. There was such scrupulously considered playing by the entire French horn section, delicate, almost whispered beauty. This could be said with almost equal justice about each player and each section. It was a work of musical intelligence, affection and sensitive supervision.

As suggested above, this was a peerless performance of the Mahler First. We salute Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

BREMERTO
SUN
D. 20,887

APR 8

Boston
Due in
In Late

SEATTLE

181

BREMERTON, WASH.
SUN
D. 20 897

APR 8 1963

Boston Symphony Due in Seattle In Late April

Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of director Erich Leinsdorf will appear in the Seattle Center Opera house April 24.

The program will include Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," Brahms' Symphony No. 3, and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Tickets for the concert are still available through the Bon Marche ticket office or Symphony office, 601 Orpheum building.

The performance is sponsored by Seattle symphony.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 214,542 S. 248,352

APR 14 1963

[illegible] SYMPHONY [illegible] present the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert at 8:30 p.m. April 24 in the Opera House. The Boston Symphony's new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, has programmed Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra for the concert.

ERICH LEINSDORF
Beethoven, Brahms and Bartok [illegible]

SEATTLE, WASH.
MAGNOLIA-NEWS
W. 5,700

APR 18 1963

Tickets still available for Boston Symphony

Contrary to rumor, there is still time and opportunity to get tickets for the single performance of the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of its distinguished new music director, Erich Leinsdorf, in the Opera House, Wednesday, April 24.

Seats for the world-famous orchestra's subscription concerts in Boston are at a premium, handed down in families from generation to generation since the Boston's first concert in '81. The sponsoring Seattle Symphony gave its own subscription audiences a short period of exclusive sale, but in answer to popular demand, now is offering tickets to the general public.

The program for the concert will be: Beethoven, Overture to 'Leonore" No. 3; Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Bartok, Concerto for Orchestra.

Concert tickets are available [illegible] Bon Marche ticket office [illegible]e Symphony office, 601 [illegible]n Bldg., Mu 2-1675.

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
D. 226,427 S. 257,927

APR 21 1963

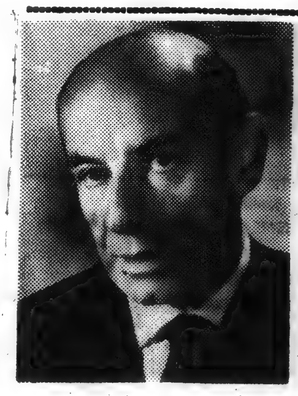
MORE FACES: Erich Leinsdorf and his staff will be doing double duty when they come in with the Boston Symphony for the Wednesday-night concert at the Opera House.

They will conduct auditions for instrumentalists, singers and conductors interested in attending the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center in the summer. Leinsdorf and members of the orchestra who also serve at Berkshire will be on hand at 7:15 in the evening to receive candidates at the stage entrance of the Opera House.

In case you missed news of the program, the concert will include Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3," Brahms' Third Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 203,663 S. 249,008

APR 21 1963



ERICH LEINSDORF, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct that orchestra in a concert of Brahms' Symphony No. 3, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, and Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 at 8:30 p.m. this Wednesday in the Opera House.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 203,663 S. 249,008

APR 25 1963

Boston Symphony Has Seattle Flavor

ERICH LEINSDORF, LESLIE (TINY) MARTIN
Boston Conductor Praises Tiny

FACE OF ERICH LEINSDORF, BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR
—(Post-Intelligencer Photos by Cary Tolman.)

BY KEN FLEMING

ALL THOSE PEOPLE nudging one another in the Opera House last night must have said the same thing at least once.

"Look, that bass player over there—that's Tiny Martin."

And indeed it was Leslie (Tiny) Martin, 42, the 350 pound double bass player that all Seattle knew and loved before he left the city six years ago to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THOUGH MARTIN played with the Seattle Symphony, was president of Musician's Union Local No. 76 and was active in a variety of other activities here, last night was his debut in Seattle with the Boston Symphony.

His boss, Erich Leinsdorf, famed conductor who is completing his first year with the Boston Symphony, had some nice words about Martin.

"Tiny is not only a very fine musician," Leinsdorf said, "but because of his huge experience in union affairs he is a valuable representative of the membership committee of the musicians. — he's our elder statesman in union matters."

LEINSDORF SAID only the best bass players are allowed to join the Boston Symphony.

"You must remember," he said, "that one of our previous conductors—Koussevitsky — was a bass player and that the bass section comes under particularly close scrutiny from Boston audiences."

The maestro praised the Opera House as a "perfect size house." The concert last night was his 95th with the Boston Symphony and the 118th performance for the organization since last September 21.

"We are the busiest orchestra in the world," Leinsdorf said. "We do 54 weeks work in our 49 week contract by doubling performances in some weeks."

Leinsdorf said that if every seat is filled in all 11 auditoriums on the Symphony's current Western tour the orchestra will "lose only $75,000."

THE TRUSTEES of the Boston Symphony are willing to lose such sums on tours, Leinsdorf said, because:

"Our trustees are people endowed with a large conscience. They want to share a good thing. The Boston Symphony is not merely a local institution. People want to hear it in the flesh. These tours are actually a necessity. I believe the orchestra contributes to the general progress of music."

182

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
D. 229,677 S. 274,473

APR 25 1963

WORDS AND MUSIC:

Boston Symphony Draws Ovation At Opera House

By LOUIS R. GUZZO
Arts and Entertainment Editor, The Times

Cancel those orders for additional equipment at the Opera House. The element it needs most to fulfill its great promise comes in 104 parts and arrived last night to perform magic for two hours. Little more is needed.

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony mesmerized a capacity house with a demonstration of orchestral brilliance, sonority and clarity that must have beckoned equal portions of admiration and envy. Without embarrassing the Seattle orchestra, it could be said that here was the ultimate requirement for the Opera House.

It was also a forceful reminder that the physical complements of a cultural center are a good beginning but never enough.

Last night the ear heard and the mind reveled. The legendary beauty of the Boston strings may have been a publicist's invention many years ago, but here it was, resonantly muscular and true, for all to hear. No legend, that.

There is method in Leinsdorf's programing. Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, Brahms' Third Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra have at least one thing in common: They give the Boston Symphony repeated opportunities to show off its unequalled strings.

And show off it did with tonal excursions of exceeding warmth, body and rich texture. It might also be noted that such a demonstration represented substantially what Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are expected to offer on tour. It's no secret that coast-to-coast trips by the Boston, the Philadelphia, the Cleveland and the New York Philharmonic are expected to lose considerable money —but to sell plenty of recordings to justify the record companies' investment in the tours.

Nothing wrong with it. Wonderful, in fact, for how else would other cities get a chance to hear such orchestras live?

Last night's audience gave the visitors as warm a response as has been accorded any visiting orchestra. The reaction to the Bartok was an ovation, complete with cheers and bravos. As a reward, Leinsdorf gave the Valkyries another ride.

MY RESPECT FOR Seattle concert audiences and their steadily advancing discrimination continues to grow and was fed somewhat last night, first for the uninhibited tribute the audience paid a great orchestra after the Bartok and second for a rather subtle distinction in measuring its applause.

The response given Leinsdorf for the Brahms was ample, but it was reserved compared to that for the Bartok. It should have been in contrast, for the Brahms was as deficient and disappointing in interpretation as the Bartok was inspired and elevating — and, what is equally important, a more accurate reflection of the score and the Bartok spirit.

A hint of the irritation to come was contained in the Beethoven as Leinsdorf "permitted" — and that is precisely the term for it — the Leonore to play itself. Sometimes such detachment is of value, but in this case it contributed to a disturbing "sameness" of treatment and methodical phrasing.

In the Brahms the pesky characteristic came full cycle. Leinsdorf has a capacity (not always, as the Bartok demonstrated) for dissipating a climax, for refusing to run the gamut of emotion, as trite as that may sound. Why he stops short is a mystery; perhaps it is part of the attire for the proper Bostonian.

At any rate, the unpredictable Leinsdorf penchant left islands of bewilderment in the tricky F Major. Patches of sudden "pulls" or rubati jolted freely moving cantilenas. The emotional pinnacle near the end of the first movement died a-borning, the ordinarily lovely third movement dragged because of an exaggerated emphasis on the captivating principal theme and the finale was uniformly spiritless, hardly the dramatic incident it should be.

For the period it took to play the Brahms, it seemed Leinsdorf was content not to interfere.

SEATTLE, WASH.
POST-INTELLIGENCER
D. 203,663 S. 249,008

APR 25 1963

Look And Listen:

'Virtuoso' Tag Well Applied

BY JOHN VOORHEES

The tag "virtuoso orchestra" has been affixed to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for publicity purposes but this is one time that a slogan seems to be 100 per cent factual.

One of the best symphony orchestras in the nation, and perhaps in the world, the Bostoon Symphony Orchestra played a concert last night in the Opera House and one of the outstanding characteristics of the performance was the virtuoso musiciannship that was in evidence from the first note to the last. The sound was nothing short of fabulous.

THE BOSTON Symphony's new concuctor, Erich Leinsdorf, lead the orchestra in a program of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra and every measure, from the quietest passages to resounding crescendos, were models of precision, of beautifully controlled dynamics and the highest quality timbre

In the past few years we have had the good fortune to hear the Philadelphia, Cleveland and New York symphonies, prior to the Boston, and each has been rewarding in its own way — as well as offering us inspiration in terms of making he Seattle Symphony ever better until some day it, too, may rank among those four. (That day may also provide the opportunity for the Seattle Symphony musicians to play as many concerts as the Bostonians and thus truly make a living at music, as do these first-rate Boston musicians.)

LEINSDORF, a baton-less conductor, is a meticulous one, with a pair of highly expressive, precise hands (although he throws a good deal more of himself into some passages).

Although this is his first season with the Boston Symphony, the musicians were most responsive to his every demand, resulting in performances that were masterfully lucid and thoroughly urbane.

This lucidily, coupled with the powerful and beautiful sound of the Boston Symphony, can be nearly overwhelming, as the enthusiastic capacity crowd indicated in its lengthy and excited applause for Leinsdorf and the musicians.

THERE WAS, however, one quality lacking in the program, at least for my taste, quality lacking in the program, at least for my taste, and that was a quality of passion or conviction or involvement. While it was glorious to hear the sound of the Boston Symphony and to be able to examine the nuances and subtleties in the three scores that Leinsdorf conducted, with so much precision, I would have traded a mite of thosequalities for a cision, I would have traded a mite of those qualities for a burst of occasional fervency.

This was particularly true in the Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, one of the most vital and energy-charged of contemporary scores (at least as most conductors feel it). Maybe one doesn't get passionate in Boston. But at any rate, Leinsdorf's interpretation, while it had beauty and scope, lacked the vitality that for instance, Milton Katims found in it when the Seattle Symphony played it in the past. (Indeed, the Boston Symphony's new RCA Victor recording of the work has more excitement in it than the performance showed last night.)

IN THE BARTOK, however, Leinsdorf seemed to awake to condition and reflex. Was this, perhaps, something he liked doing, in contrast to the Brahms?

Whatever the reason for the impulse, the Bartok emerged with sparkling clarity, fervor and power, notably in the last three movements. Except for a somewhat sluggish shaping of the comparatively jolly second movement, the only discordant note came from the unfortunate first-desk cellist, who had to repair a broken string in the elegy.

A sidelight of some fascination came with the Bartok. The Concerto for Orchestra, undoubtedly his most successful symphonic work, was given its world premiere by this very same Boston Symphony — and only 19 years ago under Serge Koussevitzky. It was written a year earlier, in 1943.

What is most interesting is the permanence the concerto has achieved in so short a time; compared with much 20th Century music, a lot of it written before the Concerto for Orchestra, it is relatively "old hat" and hardly shocking.

It's true Bartok said of the concerto that it was an indication of his "mellowing" behavior in his late years, but for this listener, at least, it has more food for the mind and heart than virtually anything written by his contemporaries or sucoessors.

It was also pleasant last night to see Tiny Martin once again, briefly before concert time and eventually up there where the fiddles grow large. Wouldn't it be nice to have him back again—along with his 103 new friends?

MINOT, N.
NEWS
D. 28,520

APR 20

Boston S
To Give Concert
WINNIPEG
phony Orchestr cert next Frid
the Winnipeg C
Tickets, pric and $2.50, may Celebrity Ticke
mezanine floor
Store on Portag should be accom addressed envel

WINNIPEG.

V 183

MINOT, N.D.
NEWS
D. 28,520

APR 20 1963

Boston Symphony To Give Winnipeg Concert Friday

WINNIPEG — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert next Friday at 8:30 p.m. in the Winnipeg Concert Hall.

Tickets, priced at $6, $5, $3.75 and $2.50, may be obtained at the Celebrity Ticket Office Ltd. on the mezanine floor of the Hudson Bay Store on Portage Avenue. Checks should be accompanied by a self-addressed envelope.

WINNIPEG TRIBUNE 3/23/63

We're only Canadian stop on Boston Symphony tour

By Lois Parkhill
Tribune Staff Writer

The Boston Symphony orchestra April 14 will load 5,000 pounds of equipment and 104 musicians in three jet planes and take off on its first big North American tour since 1958.

The only Canadian city on the itinerary is Winnipeg.

They play here April 26. Advance man Harry Beall was in Winnipeg checking acoustics in the Civic Auditorium.

"We always check an auditorium we've never played before," he said. It will be the first time the world-famous orchestra has visited western Canada.

The oldest?

The Boston Symphony was founded in the late 1800's and claims to be the oldest on the North American continent.

"Lennie Bernstein's little band says they are," said Mr. Beall. "But it's not true."

Leonard Bernstein conducts the New York Philharmonic.

Do Boston musicians ever defect to the Philharmonic?

No. They get better pay in New York and Philadelphia but they don't work for as long.

"Our musicians get pay cheques 50 weeks of the year. It was an objective of ours so they wouldn't have to tend bar."

Mr. Beall rattled off some more pertinent data:

"The Boston has the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world. We have a 52-week winter season, and Pops concerts in May and June."

Tractor at Tanglewood

Each summer the group moves to Tanglewood, a 210-acre estate in the Berkshire hills.

"It's a former posh family estate given to the Boston Symphony as a gift in 1936. It costs us over $100,000 a year in maintenance . . . We're the only orchestra in the world that owns a tractor."

They also own a restaurant and during the Pops concert season are probably "the large purveyors of champagne" in orchestral circles.

"We rip out the ground floor seats (in Symphony Hall), put in chair and tables and serve champagne."

They also charge admission on Sunday.

The name Tanglewood stems from Nathaniel Hawthorne's book, Tanglewood Tales. In 1849, the destitute New England author was given permission by owner Boston banker, William Aspinwall Tappan, to live in a deserted building on the estate.

The Boston Symphony in rehearsal.

Music centre

The symphony plays an eight week festival and runs the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood.

"We don't like to call it a school because the Conservatories think we're running competition. Therefore, it's a centre for advanced study at the graduate level."

When conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are in Winnipeg, they will hold auditions for the Tanglewood Music Centre.

"It's the only way a student can get in. We have 20 or 30 Canadians from Montreal and Toronto each year. You have to be over 18 to apply.

"Auditions will be held backstage, by appointment, the day of the concert."

Tanglewood houses its students in two private schools it leases in the neighborhood. In the morning, they work as members of an orchestra, and in the afternoon break up into smaller Chamber music groups in rehearsal barns scattered around the estate.

Musical scouts

"It's really a feeding ground. Every so often orchestra scouts will show up."

Alumnus Bernstein and conductor Leinsdorf are just as likely to appear, and the afternoon chamber music groups are top-heavy with members of the Boston Symphony.

"Leinsdorf takes as acute an interest in Tanglewood as Koussevitsky (its founder.) He is intrigued by it."

The majority of students are on scholarship. They can borrow from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund and pay later — "as late as 10 years later."

Big day at Tanglewood is the annual concert before 15,000 people.

"The students all get to sing in the chorus in a shed that seats 6,000. The other 9,000 are on the lawns."

The budget

The Boston Symphony operates on a $2,700,000 annual budget.

"The average orchestra earns 57 percent of its budget. Boston sometimes earns as much as 92 percent, depending on whether its record sales are up."

The rest is made up from voluntary contributions, which can run as high as $290,000.

"We have seven series all sold out. The most social concert is Friday afternoon. The dowagers arrive in their Rolls Royces and leave instructions for their subscription tickets in their wills.

"I think we have some names (on the subscription list) that can't still be alive."

Symphony Hall seats 2,600 people and was given to the Symphony orchestra by a man named Higginson. The City of Boston waives taxes on the building and property but otherwise the orchestra is without a subsidy.

As money-raisers, the Symphony holds benefit performances and pockets the profits as high as $13,000 if Arthur Rubinstein performs) into a pension fund for the orchestra.

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

184

Winnipeg Free Press - Apl. 27/63

49

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Concert Unmasks City

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: a Celebrity concert Friday night at the civic auditorium. Erich Leinsdorf conducted. Program comprised: Brahms' Third Symphony; the Good Friday Spell Music and Transformation Scene from Wagner's Parsifal; and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

By KEN WINTERS

It is sometimes interesting to see what a concert will reveal about a city.

Winnipeg, cultural hub of the prairies, played host Friday to one of the world's illustrious musical organizations — the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston orchestra, which will celebrate its centenary in a few years, has a superb tradition, established by such early leaders as Henschel and Nikisch and upheld by such recent ones as Koussevitsky, Monteux and Munch.

And while it is discouraging that, in a kind of travesty of the significance of this tradition, the orchestra is being advertised these days as "The Aristocrat of Orchestras," the pomposity of the claim need prejudice no one against the real worth of the orchestra. It still is an organization of shining eminence, and it is hard to believe that "cultural Winnipeg" could possibly be unaware of its importance, and of the importance of a visit by it.

And yet, while the audience for its concert here Friday was reasonably large (and tremendously enthusiastic after it heard the playing) it could hardly be described as "a capacity house." And furthermore, there were people (not many, but some in the audience who, in this advanced year, 1963, walked out on Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, presumably imagining that it was all a hoax devised to diddle, insult, cheat or make fools of them.

Of course, there's no law against ignoring an orchestra like the Boston. Winnipeggers have every right to pass it up, even while buying up every last square inch of standing room for The Limelight. And if they do go to hear it play, they have every right to walk out on its brilliant performance of one of the most valued and deservedly popular orchestral works of this century. But if they do, let Winnipeg stop giving itself airs as a "symphony city," a cultural oasis on the frozen prairie, a musical town able to hold its own with any other.

Winnipeg is still a town with a fairly vigorous but by no means enormous audience for civilized music; an audience still too small to fill the civic auditorium on those rare occasions that really warrant filling it.

THE ENCOURAGING side of all this is that if the audience wasn't enormous neither was it small. There cannot have been too many more or less than 3,000 people out to hear the Boston orchestra; and if a few were maddened or nonplussed by the Bartok, the overwhelming majority remained to cheer it.

There was reason to cheer, and to cheer more than the playing of the Bartok. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his orchestra gave Winnipeg one of the most lucid, substantial evenings of romantic music it has had in years. The fare was full of nourishment and the playing was a clear joy.

What a luxury it is to attend a concert by an orchestra in which every player, from the conductor's stand to the back walls, is first-class; in which 12 'cellos sound like one (six sounding all too plainly like six is more usual); in which the brass choir's work is like fine architecture in mellowed stone; in which the other departments are comparably good, so that a hundred instrumental voices can merge in impeccable unanimity or scatter in confident independance; and in which responsibility is being shouldered, and pride in the work is being felt, by each player.

THE FIRST movement of the Brahms Third set the standard for what lay ahead. Under Mr. Leinsdorf's crisp supervision, the first bars opened the door simply and instantly onto music of big, clearly defined layers of sound carried on rhythms of wonderful sturdiness and urgency. The tempos were slow, but the logic held, the proportions were true, the beauty and force of the music were not to be denied.

The second movement let me down somewhat. Mr. Leinsdorf justified his very slow tempo — as he justified most of what he did — but I kept thinking he wouldn't have had to justify it, if it had been more just in the first place; a little quicker, a little simpler in its way of moving, a little lighter in its color.

The third movement was more natural, I thought. The orchestra's playing struck just the right [illegible] between Teutonic [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] movement, and the transport [illegible] Leinsdorf's [illegible] grand re[illegible]y, perhaps (and I don't mean heavy-handed) but tremendously clear [illegible] thorough and good.

[illegible] WAGNER excerpt is not [illegible]rite music, but for any-[illegible]ite music it is, [illegible] and the or-[illegible]. it must [illegible] the [illegible] might be faulted on idiomatic grounds — Leinsdorf seemed at times to reduce the score's fervent discursiveness to polished applications of musical plane geometry. But what a gorgeous hunk of playing it was all the same! The second and third movements lost some of their personality through the extreme deliberateness of their shaping, but the effects were jewel-perfect and always fascinating as accomplishments. The first and fourth movements were more themselves — more coiled-spring Hugarian — and the finale was, quite properly, hair-raising.

This was a brilliant evening, brilliant, solid and satisfying. There shouldn't have been an empty seat in the hall.

CONDUCTOR LOVES TOURS

★ ★ ★

An Interview In A Rolls

By PHYLLIS LAKING

Members of the press were treated to a ride in a chauffeur-driven Rolls-Royce Friday when they went to interview the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf, 51, an internationally known conductor and the 108-member orchestra arrived at the International Airport aboard two chartered passenger planes to give a concert at the Auditorium Friday night. A third plane carried the eight tons of luggage required by the group.

Honorary Citizen

Ald. Edith Tennant was on hand to make Mr. Leinsdorf an honorary citizen of Winnipeg before he was whisked away to a waiting car.

There wasn't any time in Mr. Leinsdorf's schedule for him to be interviewed by the press, so Mr. Leinsdorf invited the press to join him in the Rolls-Royce so they could talk to him on the way to the hotel.

In the car, Mr. Leinsdorf said the Winnipeg appearance is the only Canadian concert on an 11-city, 14-day concert tour which began April 15. It is also his 96th concert since he joined the Boston symphony as musical director a year ago.

Far from being exhausted, Mr. Leinsdorf said, "I personally adore touring . . . everything is so well arranged. All I have to do is conduct the orchestra . . . we have three men who do nothing but set the stage."

All the orchestra members' instruments and evening clothes are sent directly to the concert hall. The musicians arrive at the hall shortly before the concert to change their clothes and pick up their instruments. This means that each man only has to carry an overnight bag. The rest of his baggage is looked after for him. Mr. Leinsdorf rates a valet to look after his luggage.

Mr. Leinsdorf said he prefers to conduct symphonies rather than opera. There are no singers or staging to worry about so it is possible to concentrate entirely on music. "Opera is accident-prone and symphony is not. After a while the non-music problems get you down."

The Boston symphony makes records and does six television programs each season. They are done live in Boston and put on video tape for distribution to other parts of the country.

The cost of transportation limits the amount of touring the symphony can do, Mr. Leinsdorf said.

In the United States their concerts are booked through local orchestras.

Long Effort

"I think older symphonies can help local orchestras grow. What we have to offer is the result of 89 years of unrelenting effort."

The symphony takes two or three programs with it when it goes on tour, Mr. Leinsdorf said. They try to choose works which the symphony is known for and which are different from what is usually done.

"There is no possible all-purpose hall that is good for music. A hall should not be too large because much symphony music is intimate — 3,000 to 3,500 is good for intimate music."

The clothes worn by a conductor require special tailoring, Mr. Leinsdorf said. "Keeping the body still while the arms are moving is the main problem." The armholes are cut particularly small and high. The tails are cut longer and overlap so they don't flap, he said.

There are some light moments while on tour. In Portland and Seattle, the home town of two of the double bass players, Mr. Leinsdorf found the entire bass section reshuffled. The two men were put in the front row so that their family and friends could see them.

Winnipeg Free Press - Apl. 27/63

Winnipeg Tribune - Apl. 29/63.

Boston Symphony was great

By S. Roy Maley

Many conductors become so immersed in their work they twist themselves into pretzels.

This is not the case in regard to Erich Leinsdorf, at the Auditorium Friday when he conducted the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra of 104 musicians in the final concert of the 1962-'63 celebrity series. More than 2,400 persons attended this historic event.

Winnipeg was the only city in Canada to be honored by a visit of the distinguished Boston orchestra, which concluded a 14-days' 11-concert spring tour in Minneapolis Saturday night.

Four curtain calls

Short and slight in physique, Mr. Leinsdorf is charming in manner and smiles frequently. He won four curtain calls and a standing ovation when he concluded the program with performance of Bela Bartok's concerto for orchestra.

The program opened with performance of Brahms' third symphony in F major, followed by the Good Friday Spell music from Wagner's last opera, Parsifal. The Bartok concerto concluded the program, but Mr. Leinsdorf gave an encore, the intermezzo movement from Hary Janos, a suite by Zoltan Kodaly.

Among several famous conductors I have heard, Pierre Monteux and Mr. Leinsdorf use the most economical of gestures and movements in commanding response from their musicians. Mr. Leinsdorf conducts without baton and from memory. He accomplishes all his virtuostic and interpretative desires by his supple use of fingers, hands and arms, seldom moving his body.

Deep feelings

Mr. Leinsdorf reveals deep feeling for orchestral color. Much of it is vivid, splashing color, but there is likewise delicate shading, compatible with whispering tone.

The string section is homogeneous as to color, plays with a mat tone that is dark but never heavy. The vibrato is warm but discreet. Attacks and releases have crispness. Each choir is so well-knit that it can sound, if it needs to, like one instrument, but there is ample opportunity for flexibility and individuality, as witnessed especially in the Bartok concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf is undoubtedly one of the great technicians of the podium.

The third is not one of Brahm's "epic" statements as are his first and fourth symphonies. Nor was it played epically, but rather in a light-fingered manner by a conductor who doesn't belabor or muddy the score.

The first movement was slowly and almost cautiously unfolded, with Leinsdorfa, gentle urger rather than a prodder using the spurs.

The little piping melodies and darting arpeggios were captivating in appeal, with mellow clarinet tones and tender 'cello phrases.

Musical pearls

The Good Friday Spell music from Parifal is "one of the pearls without price" in music. It demands a most eloquent and sympathetic interpretation.

Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation was the most spiritually exalted performance of many I have heard. The score glowed with a luminous light of unearthly radiance.

The towering Bartok concerto — his last work before death crowning achievement of the program. Written more or less in accepted symphonic form, it is tabbed a concerto primarily because most of the score has virtuoso melodies aganist the full orchestra harmonies.

The work is by no means as esoteric or harsh as other Bartok scores. It is a monumental expression not only of that poignantly modern romantic irony of which Bartok was the greatest of all contemporary exponents but also of the composer's wizardry at exploiting the possibilities of every instrument of the orchestra — from a side drum without snares in the second movement to the frantic moto perpetuo of the strings in the finale.

This first visit of the famed Bostonians proved one of the greatest musical events heard in Winnipeg during the past 30 years.

MINNEAPOLIS, M
TRIBUNE
D. 218,345 S. 85

APR 30 1963

Fears in Co
To four in the Symphony offered a special divi of Mr. and Mrs. E.
Edina, the minute th chairs. Their son-in-the oboe [illegible]. H extra, subbing for fi
the outset when Gor cert. He is [illegible]
Both teach [illegible]

ST. LOUIS P
DISPATCH
W. 7,282

APR 25

Boston
Master
One of the orchestras come auditorium at 8:30 for the University

MINNEAPOLIS,
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 86

APR 6 1963

Music Stu
Auditions
Auditions wi
7 p.m. April 2
Auditorium fo
cians, conducto for study this glewood, sum
the Boston Sy estra.
Applicants heard for $700
dation fellow
Berkshire M
seminar in music at Leno
Those intere
tioning should Berkshire Music
phony Hall, Bos
The auditions backstage at N
the Boston Sy versity Artist
cert here.

ST. PAUL,
PIONEER-P
D. 93,982 S

APR 14

★
THE BOS orchestra w
Twin Cities years when gives a con
on the Uni sity Arti course Ma piece se
April 27 in throp aud
um.
The or tra, under new cond
Erich Lein
the Russi Right Artists cance tour.

MINNEAPOLIS.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 218,345 S. 654,561

APR 20 1963

Fears in Concert

For four in the audience, Saturday's concert by the ... Symphony Orchestra in Northrop Auditorium ... a special dividend. You could see it on the faces of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Fierke Sr., 4510 Moorland Av., the minute the musicians came on stage to take ... s. Their son-in-law, Richard Summers, was one of the oboe players. He toured with the orchestra as an extra, subbing for first chair oboeist Ralph Gomberg at the outset when Gomberg was ill, then played every concert. He is married to the Fierkes' daughter, Winifred. Both teach at the New England Conservatory.

ST. LOUIS PARK, MINN.
DISPATCH
W. 7,282

APR 2 1 1963

Boston Symphony Closes Masterpiece Series Season

One of the world's great orchestras comes to Northrop auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Saturday for the University Artists course.

The Boston Symphony, with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the final concert on the Masterpiece Series which had been scheduled earlier in the month.

The Boston Symphony will present three works, opening with Prokovief's "Classical Symphony." The second work will be excerpts from "Parsifal." The program will close with Mahler's Symphony Number 1.

Tickets are available at the Artists Course ticket office, 105 Northrop auditorium; and the Downtown Ticket office. Artists course patrons will use the April 4 tickets.

Leinsdorf has just completed his first season at Boston. He originally came to the United States as a Toscannini protege in the late 1930's. He was the youngest conductor of a major orchestra when he held the post at Cleveland before being drafted into the Second World War. He was a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera from 1957 until he went to Boston last fall.

A special carillon has been constructed to magnify little bells 600,000 times in order to play the "Parsifal" bells as written into the score by Wagner. A cast bell would weigh 600 tons to play the same note. The instrument will be installed in Northrop.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 6 1963

Music Study Auditions Set

Auditions will be held at 7 p.m. April 27 in Northrop Auditorium for local musicians, conductors and singers for study this year at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants also will be heard for $700 Fromm Foundation fellowships to the Berkshire Music Center's seminar in contemporary music at Lenox, Mass.

Those interested in auditioning should write to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. The auditions will be held backstage at Northrop before the Boston Symphony's University Artists Course concert here.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D. 93,982 S. 190,042

APR 14 1963

★ ★ ★

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra will make its first Twin Cities appearance in 34 years when it gives a concert on the University Artists course Masterpiece series April 27 in Northrop auditorium.

Leinsdorf

The orchestra, under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the Russian pianist Sviatoslav Richter who was scheduled originally to close the Artists course season but canceled tour.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D. 93,982 S. 190,042

APR 21 1963

★ ★ ★

WAGNER, MAHLER and Prokofiev will make up the program of the Boston Symphony orchestra in its concert at 8:30 p. m. Saturday in Northrop auditorium.

Under its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra will play Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, the Prelude to Act III, Good Friday Spell and Transformation scene

Eric Leinsdorf
Boston Conductor

from Wagner's Parisfal, and Mahler's first symphony.

Using electronic means, the orchestra has solved the long-standing problem of bells in the Parisfal music. As conceived by the composer, the deep, 40-cycles-per-second sound would require a bell weighing 600 tons. The orchestra's percussionist and an electronic carillon firm have developed a device wihch produces the sound convincingly and can travel easily with the organization. It will be installed in Northrop for the occasion.

The concert is the final event on the University Artists course Masterpiece series. Season subscribers may use their April 4 tickets, issued originally for the recital by pianist Sviatoslav Richter which was canceled.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 7 1963

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions (by appointmeat) for instrumentalists, singers and conductors at Northrop Auditorium on April 27, when the Boston Symphony plays there . . .

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 6 1963

Music Study Auditions Set

Auditions will be held at 7 p.m. April 27 in Northrop Auditorium for local musicians, conductors and singers for study this year at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants also will be heard for $700 Fromm Foundation fellowships to the Berkshire Music Center's seminar in contemporary music at Lenox, Mass.

Those interested in auditioning should write to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. The auditions will be held backstage at Northrop before the Boston Symphony's University Artists Course concert here.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 218,345 S. 654,561

APR 21 1963

ERICH LEINSDORF
To conduct here Saturday night

Boston Symphony to Return After 33 Years

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its newly appointed conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will return to Northrop Auditorium Saturday night for the first time since the hall was dedicated in 1929.

The program, final concert of this season's University Artists Course, will be the "last stop" on the orchestra's transcontinental tour. Leinsdorf will conduct three works, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Mahler First symphony. The orchestra will be at full strength—101 men and three women players.

A novel feature of the concert will be the device used for the bell sound in "Parsifal." As originally specified by Wagner, the bell rings at 40 cycles per second, requiring a bell weighing 600 tons. The orchestra's librarian and percussionist appealed to Schulmerich Carillons, which was able to magnify the tone of bells 600,000 times, reproducing the tone of bells weighing 1.28 million pounds.

Artists Course patrons will use tickets dated April 4 for Saturday's concert.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
LAKE HARRIET COURIER
W. 1,945

APR 25 1963

Boston Symphony Closes Masterpiece Series Season

One of the world's great orchestras comes to Northrop auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Saturday for the University Artists course.

The Boston Symphony, with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the final concert on the Masterpiece Series which had been scheduled earlier in the month.

The Boston Symphony will present three works, opening with Prokovief's "Classical Symphony." The second work will be excerpts from "Parsifal." The program will close with Mahler's Symphony Number 1.

Tickets are available at the Artists Course ticket office, 105 Northrop auditorium; and the Downtown Ticket office. Artists course patrons will use the April 4 tickets.

Leinsdorf has just completed his first season at Boston. He originally came to the United States as a Toscannini protege in the late 1930's. He was the youngest conductor of a major orchestra when he held the post at Cleveland before being drafted into the Second World War. He was a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera from 1957 until he went to Boston last fall.

A special carillon has been constructed to magnify little bells 600,000 times in order to play the "Parsifal" bells as written into the score by Wagner. A cast bell would weigh 600 tons to play the same note. The instrument will be installed in Northrop.

MINNEAPOLIS.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 218,345 S. 654,561

APR 30 1963

Fears in Concert

To four in the audience, Saturday's concert by the n Symphony Orchestra in Northrop Aud offered a special dividend. You could see it on the faces of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Fierke Sr., 4510 Moorland Av., Edina, the minute the musicians came on stage to take chairs. Their son-in-law, Richard Summers, was one of the oboe players. He toured with the orchestra as an extra, subbing for first chair oboeist Ralph Gomberg at the outset when Gomberg was ill, then played every concert. He is married to the Fierkes' daughter, Winifred, and teach at the New England Conservatory.

ST. LOUIS PARK, MINN.
DISPATCH
W. 7,282

APR 25 1963

Boston Symphony Closes Masterpiece Series Season

One of the world's great orchestras comes to Northrop auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Saturday for the University Artists course.

The Boston Symphony, with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the final concert on the Masterpiece Series which had been scheduled earlier in the month.

The Boston Symphony will present three works, opening with Prokoviefs "Classical Symphony." The second work will be excerpts from "Parsifal." The program will close with Mahler's Symphony Number 1.

Tickets are available at the Artists Course ticket office, 105 Northrop auditorium; and the Downtown Ticket office. Artists course patrons will use the April 4 tickets.

Leinsdorf has just completed his first season at Boston. He originally came to the United States as a Toscannini protege in the late 1930's. He was the youngest conductor of a major orchestra when he held the post at Cleveland before being drafted into the Second World War. He was a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera from 1957 until he went to Boston last fall.

A special carillon has been constructed to magnify little bells 600,000 times in order to play the "Parsifal" bells as written into the score by Wagner. A cast bell would weigh 600 tons to play the same note. The instrument will be installed in Northrop.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 6 1963

Music Study Auditions Set

Auditions will be held at 7 p.m. April 27 in Northrop Auditorium for local musicians, conductors and singers for study this year at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants also will be heard for $700 Fromm Foundation fellowships to the Berkshire Music Center's seminar in contemporary music at Lenox, Mass.

Those interested in auditioning should write to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. The auditions will be held backstage at Northrop before the Boston Symphony's University Artists Course concert here.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D. 93,982 S. 180,042

APR 14 1963

★ ★ ★

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra will make its first Twin Cities appearance in 34 years when it gives a concert on the University Artists course Masterpiece series April 27 in Northrop auditorium.

The orchestra, under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the Russian pianist Sviatoslav Richter who was scheduled originally to close the Artists Course season but canceled a tour.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 6 1963

Music Study Auditions Set

Auditions will be held at 7 p.m. April 27 in Northrop Auditorium for local musicians, conductors and singers for study this year at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applicants also will be heard for $700 Fromm Foundation fellowships to the Berkshire Music Center's seminar in contemporary music at Lenox, Mass.

Those interested in auditioning should write to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. The auditions will be held backstage at Northrop before the Boston Symphony's University Artists Course concert here.

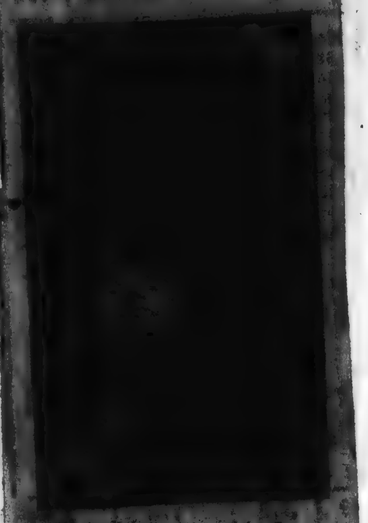
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D. 93,982 S. 180,042

APR 21 1963

★ ★ ★

WAGNER, MAHLER and Prokofiev will make up the program of the Boston Symphony orchestra in its concert at 8:30 p. m. Saturday in Northrop auditorium.

Under its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra will play Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, the Prelude to Act III, Good Friday Spell and Transformation scene



Eric Leinsdorf
Boston Conductor

from Wagner's Parsifal, and Mahler's first symphony.

Using electronic means, the orchestra has solved the long-standing problem of bells in the Parsifal music. As conceived by the composer, the deep, 40-cycles-per-second sound would require a bell weighing 600 tons. The orchestra's percussionist and an electronic carillon firm have developed a device which produces the sound convincingly and can travel easily with the organization. It will be installed in Northrop for the occasion.

The concert is the final event on the University Artists course Masterpiece series. Season subscribers may use their April 4 tickets, issued originally for the recital by pianist Sviatoslav Richter which was canceled.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,837 S. 661,654

APR 7 1963

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions (by appointment) for instrumentalists, singers and conductors at Northrop Auditorium on April 27, when the Boston Symphony plays there.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 218,345 S. 654,561

APR 21 1963

ERICH LEINSDORF
To conduct here Saturday night

Boston Symphony to Return After 33 Years

The Boston Symphony orchestra under its newly appointed conductor Erich Leinsdorf, will return to Northrop Auditorium Saturday night for the first time since the hall was dedicated in 1929.

The program, final concert of this season's University Artists Course, will be the "last stop" on the orchestra's transcontinental tour. Leinsdorf will conduct three works, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Mahler First symphony. The orchestra will be at full strength—101 men and three women players.

A novel feature of the concert will be the device used for the bell sound in "Parsifal." As originally specified by Wagner, the bell rings at 40 cycles per second, requiring a bell weighing 600 tons. The orchestra's librarian and percussionist appealed to Schulmerich Carillons, which was able to magnify the tone of bells 600,000 times, reproducing the tone of bells weighing 1.28 million pounds.

Artists Course patrons will use tickets dated April 4 for Saturday's concert.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
LAKE HARRIET COURIER
W. 1,945

APR 25 1963

Boston Symphony Closes Masterpiece Series Season

One of the world's great orchestras comes to Northrop auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Saturday for the University Artists course.

The Boston Symphony, with its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will replace the final concert on the Masterpiece Series which had been scheduled earlier in the month.

The Boston Symphony will present three works, opening with Prokoviefs "Classical Symphony." The second work will be excerpts from "Parsifal." The program will close with Mahler's Symphony Number 1.

Tickets are available at the Artists Course ticket office, 105 Northrop auditorium; and the Downtown Ticket office. Artists course patrons will use the April 4 tickets.

Leinsdorf has just completed his first season at Boston. He originally came to the United States as a Toscannini protege in the late 1930's. He was the youngest conductor of a major orchestra when he held the post at Cleveland before being drafted into the Second World War. He was a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera from 1957 until he went to Boston last fall.

A special carillon has been constructed to magnify little bells 600,000 times in order to play the "Parsifal" bells as written into the score by Wagner. A cast bell would weigh 600 tons to play the same note. The instrument will be installed in Northrop.

186

ST. PAUL, MINN.
SUN
W. 6,428

APR 25 1963 Buffalo

Forty-three years ago the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed for the dedication of Northrup Auditorium. This Saturday evening at 8:30 they will have their first return engagement. Erich Leinsdorf, their newly acquired director, will conduct the final concert of the University Artists Course. There are 104 members of the orchestra, 101 men and three women.

The program will begin with the Classical Symphony of Prokofieff. After this number they will have a very special feature, Wagner's Prelude to Act III, the Good Friday Spell and Transformation scene from "Parsifal". This is unusual because it will feature a bell sound called for by Wagner which would require a bell weighing 600 tons. However, Schulmerich Carillons have been able to reproduce such a sound electronically. This is really rather special. After the intermission they will perform Mahler's First Sympohny.

Some opera tickets still are available. Mail in orders to the Northrup ticket office. There is one sold out performance already; Verdi's "La Traviata".

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D. 93,982 S. 190,042

APR 28 1963 Buffalo

LEADER WORTHY OF TRADITIONS

Boston Symphony Combines Fine Qualities to High Degree

By JOHN H. HARVEY
Staff Writer

In recent years we have had a chance to hear the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia orchestra. Saturday night, for the first time since 1929, the Boston Symphony orchestra made its appearance in Northrop Memorial auditorium.

The other two are great orchestras beyond a doubt. But the BSO is THE American orchestra, and in its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, it has a leader worthy of its illustrious traditions.

No other organization in this country and possibly anywhere else has the combination of fine qualities elevated to so high a degree as this orchestra. Its ensemble is faultless, yet the tone is not a rich composite, but the clean, vital individualized sound one gets from a fine chamber group when every player is playing his best in delicate adjustment with his colleagues.

The string section has the patina of old wood lovingly cared for, but a marvelous transparency and unforced, perfectly controlled strength as well. The woodwinds are both butter-smooth and sharply defined. The brasses seem a gleam rather than a sound.

Perfect attacks apparently are routine with this orchestra. Suddenly a single entrance or a full, complex-colored chord is there, exactly right in time, balance and dynamic level.

One need not see the many gray with white heads on the stage to know the sum of mellow wisdom and experience there is in the group. That comes out in the beauty of phrasing.

Leinsdorf, of course, has inherited this body of great players and most of these qualities from his predecessors. But the precise, clear, penetrating nature of his musicianship has made a vital addition to them all.

The bulk of the first half of the program was given over to excerpts from the third act of Parisfal—the prelude, Good Friday spell and transformation scene. Here was the Wagnerian orchestra as it should sound but seldom does—pellucid, delicately tinted, excitingly alive. And the progress of the music had a simple, majestic inevitability under the conductor's calm guidance.

I was able to stay for only the first movement of Mahler's first symphony which ended the program, but this was enough to tell that it was a performance of marvelously fine-spun detail and exceptional eloquence.

The curtain-raiser was Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, which went off like jeweled clockwork. But this mechanism breathed, too.

The concert was the closing event of the Universty Artists course Masterpiece series. So far as this event was concerned, the title of the series could hardly be more appropriate.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR
D. 277,505

APR 29 1963 Buffalo

MUSIC REVIEW

Boston Symphony Creates Broad Panorama of Sound

By JOHN K. SHERMAN

Northrop Auditorium Saturday night rang thrillingly to the voice of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first visit here since 1929, when it played a dedication concert for the then-new hall on the campus. Saturday's event was the last of the University Artists Course and drew a overflow audience.

This great ensemble from the East has a big and many-shaded voice, offering a wide yet detailed panorama of sound, string tone of richness and depth, woodwinds and brass of smooth and striking clarity in solo and section passages. Under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra is a precision musical machine with a heart, apparently capable of any effect, simple or complex, at its full potential.

Particularly remarkable is the Boston orchestra's range of gradations in color and volume, its incredibly rich palette. Its procedure from opening to closing bar has a grand solidity and assurance, from fine spun subleties to pulse-stirring blare. Full-blown sonority is matched by balance by which every voice, leading or subordinate, is heard, and meshed with the texture.

Leinsdorf, whom we know from past local appearances (once as guest conductor with our orchestra and later with the Metropolitan Opera) is a calmly exacting leader, sparing of gesture, with a control that governs both the all-over campaign and the minute-to-minute skirmishes. A hand twich, an occasional bobbing motion with flexing knees, a suddenly upthrust arm—by a small repertoire of suggestive directions he gains instantaneous response from his 101 players.

The opening "Classical" symphony of Prokofieff was the aperitif of the evening, which seemed an easy but also effective exercise, not as impish or mocking as we sometimes have heard it, but illustrating the orchestra's unusual combination of relaxed and vivid expression.

Leinsdorf's Wagner has always had great authority, and his generalship in the extended tonal web of the "Parsifal" music—prelude, Good Friday music and the Transformation scene—was a model of management of slow undulations, long diminuendos, and so full of shifting tints and "lighting" as to keep interest constantly bated. The music had the quality of magic and incantation, and swelled to great juggernauts of sound.

But the chief excitement of the program came after intermission in the Mahler First symphony — Mahler made more graphic, suspenseful and eloquent than he ever has been made, I believe, in Northrop. The performance we heard showed what a universe of strange opposites was Mahler's: myth and apocalypic vision, innocence and bitterness, Viennese gemuetlichkeit and humor and outcry and consolation — it's all there. Hearing it all so knowingly and vividly expressed was a memorable experience.

It's worth pointing out, as postscript, that the gap between local and imported orchestral performance has lessened vastly since 1929, when the Boston's appearance was a major revelation in the light of the far lesser quality then of the Minneapolis Symphony. The Boston's playing is still a revelation, but the difference is no longer so great.

MINNEAPOLIS SUNDAY TRIBUNE
April 28, 1963 UM 3

Boston Players Impart Fresh Clarity to Music

By DAN SULLIVAN

"The Aristocrat of the Orchestras" — a term which somehow suggests periwigs, cologne-scented handkerchiefs and tired blood—is a misleading title for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC REVIEW

"World's Champion" may be equally inadequate and slightly vulgar as well. But it does suggest the effortless dexterity, the athletic grace and the burly strength with which this truly great orchestra overwhelmed an audience of 5,000 at Northrop Auditorium Saturday night.

Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Mahler's First Symphony made up the program. Within two minutes, it was evident that the orchestra had brought a new sound to Northrop—or, possibly, a sound that it had not heard since the orchestra opened the hall in 1929.

THE STRINGS were dazzling, but we have been dazzled in this department before. What was remarkable was the clarity conductor Erich Leinsdorf drew from the orchestra's inner voices, principally the woodwinds. At all times we heard what everyone in the orchestra was doing; and the effect was something like the removal of a film of thick, yellowish shellac from a colorful masterpiece.

This is partly a matter of manpower: the Boston Symphony has 104 players—all virtuosos—to the Minneapolis Symphony's 92. It is also partly due to tradition: the Boston Symphony has never sounded muddy. But the rest of the credit must go to conductor Leinsdorf, who last night proved he is a great heir to the tradition.

The orchestra was never, suffice it to say, at less than its best, and its best is better than anybody's. Someone in the percussion section dropped a cymbal at intermission. It was a gratifying sound. It proved that Leinsdorf's men are human.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

187

Wandering Minstrels Return

Experiences encountered by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the last leg of their first coast-to-coast trip in 10 years are captured on film by viola player George Humphrey.

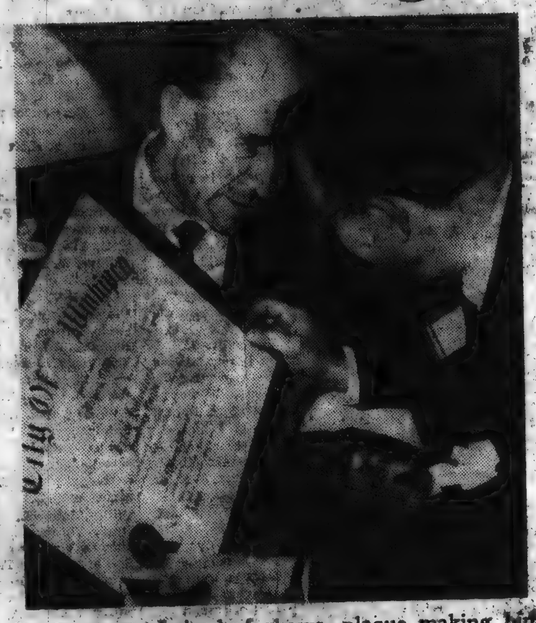
For the first time the orchestra and its conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, traveled by air, leaving Logan Airport Apr. 15 in two chartered planes. A baggage plane was also needed for the trip.

The orchestra played its first concert the same night in Chicago and received a thunderous ovation.

The tour included Missouri, Oklahoma, New Mexico, California, Washington, Oregon, Minnesota and Canada.

Tired but glad to return to the Bay State, the orchestra arrived here Sunday at 3:45 p.m.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf is greeted by daughter Jennifer as tour ends at Logan Airport.



During tour, Leinsdorf shows plaque making him an honorary citizen of Winnipeg, to Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager.

Leonard Moss uses harp for headrest.

Atop Seattle World's Fairground Space Needle, hostess Judi Simonis shows menu to violinists Stanley Benson and Victor Manusevitch.

Reunited in Minneapolis after many years are bassoonist Sherman Walt (right) Virginia, Minn., native, and his father.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,553
APR 29 1963

BOSTON SYMPHONY Director Erich Leinsdorf greets wife, Anne, and daughters, Hester, 14, left, and Jennifer, 11, at Boston Airport after returning from orchestra's first coast-to-coast tour in 10 years.

Traveler Scope . . . Where The News Comes Alive In Pictures

Symphony On Tour

FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA left Boston Airport April 15 for its first coast-to-coast tour in 10 years. It returns Sunday. Group played in eight states and in Canada. Above, Symphony players are serenaded in Albuquerque, N. M., by guitarists in La Placita restaurant. From left, Henry Portnoi, double bass; Reuben Green, viola; Jerome Lipson, viola, and Leslie (Tiny) Martin, double bass.

CHESS PROBLEM, above, is pondered by Alfred Schneider, violinist, left, and Vincent Mauricci, violist. Pocket-size chess set is great for killing time on those long flights. Most salesmen and travelers carry them or similar pocket games. Right, pilot explains intricacies of plane's gadgetry to George Zazofsky, left, violinist, and chairman of orchestra's committee, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager.

TRAVELER
4/26/63

ORCHESTRA MEMBER has a little fun on plane en route to San Diego. Violist player Joseph de Pasquale drowses, as Louis Speyer, English horn player, is about to crown him. At right, also in dreamland, is Jerry Lipson. Orchestra chartered three commercial airline planes to carry players and their equipment. Observers on the trip said most of the veteran orchestra members are taking the long air trip in stride, but new and younger members are not enjoying it too much. It could be they miss that home cooking. When the orchestra returns Sunday they will rest until Tuesday when the Pops season opens.

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870
APR 30 1963

Interview

An Orchestra Tours To Set Standards

BY MARGO MILLER

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, glories in puns. So to describe the orchestra's recent transcontinental journey to 11 cities as a "tour de force majeur" is to cap word play with his philosophy on the value of the trip.

A major orchestra, like the Boston, Leinsdorf feels, exists to establish artistic standards. The visit of this "superior force" to a city should also be a disruptive event.

"The sound, the playing rouse the audience to great excitement," the conductor notes, and from Chicago, southwest to Albuquerque, north to Seattle and home via Winnipeg and Minneapolis, sell-out houses proved his definition by their cheers for the 104 Boston players.

"But we can also show local orchestral management something else. We are the example that success is the result of combining artistic quality with sound administration and civic pride.

In cities where the local orchestra is in trouble internally you will find it is the fault of organization.

"No conductor," Leinsdorf continued, "can do a good job for an organization that isn't already strong. The tools to finish the job artistically is all we ask."

Once artistic eminence is reached, it is the duty of an orchestra to tour. Leinsdorf who last season became musical director of an orchestra with the longest season of any in the world commented with a smile:

"We don't travel simply to get additional dates. We play enough concerts just in our own backwater—Symphony Hall, Tanglewood, East coast cities. Major orchestras travel to keep up the artistic standard of symphonic music."

★

Boston's conductor has travelled with so many orchestras that it requires both hands to count tours, cites the example of Amsterdam's Concertgebouw.

"Holland is a tiny country. Even so, it has 11 orchestras, all providing fully paid jobs. The orchestras are not all good, so the Concertgebouw still tours Holland to set standards. The London orchestras do the same. You will find that the ideal of quality is set by individual cities, not by countries."

In 10 year's time, Leinsdorf hopes that the Boston Symphony will become a national institution. "To say that sounds like the grossest egotism, but we are a great orchestra."

(Another B.S.O. conductor, the late Serge Koussevitzky, was more succinct than Leinsdorf. Still quoted around Symphony Hall is his disclaimer, "Why be modest?")

★

The Boston orchestra is, of course, well known around the country through its radio and television programs, produced here and marketed by educational and commercial outlets.

While Leinsdorf feels that even more can be done by tape and long playing records, he says that there is no substitute for live performance.

"An audience must see you, too. They should know where certain sounds come from and how it looks when all the men are playing. Then, you know, they can go home and put on the recording. But it is important in the listening experience to see."

Tours, says the 51-year-old conductor, will become the rule rather than the exception.

"There are 40 or 50 cities we should visit in the next decade, 10 a year perhaps, and then repeat the visits. We don't expect to make money. This tour has cost the orchestra $75,000, but our Boston trustees are high-minded. They are really remarkable. They will find the community support to make it possible for the orchestra to share great music with other cities."

Just what music to play on tour is the conductor's concern. Prokofiev's Classical Symphony, which opened concerts in six cities, satisfied Leinsdorf's requirement for a work that would show off the particular strengths of his orchestra.

For less sophisticated communities, the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony was offered to concert managers.

"It was a most interesting thing, only one impresario, the man in San Diego, requested it. Really, I think that impresarios, not audiences, are more conservative.

I'd have to check, but I believe that we were the only orchestra ever to tour America with the Mahler First Symphony. I chose it because it is not often played by orchestras along our route. And the Brahms Third is seldom played; you are more apt to hear the other three symphonies.

"Smaller orchestras cannot do Wagner excerpts well. We brought along some "Parsifal" music for this reason. The Bartok Concerto for Orchestra needs the kind of virtuoso playing that the Boston does so superbly."

★

Critics in the tour cities were generally pleased with the Boston programs, although a San Francisco reviewer called the Bartok piece something fit for a Pops concert, the "'Scheherazade' of the 1970s."

"Of course the untutored listener will like the Mahler and the Bartok," Leinsdorf remarked. "These are emotional works which catch audiences up in them. But how will people know they like them until they've heard them. It may not be new music to the orchestra, but it's new music to many people."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

MAY 5 1963

Koussevitzky Stories Still Told in Orchestra

Many Tales Common To Other Conductors

By MARGO MILLER

Serge Koussevitzky, dead since 1951 but conductor of the Boston Symphony for 25 years, is still the most quoted figure when and wherever the orchestra gathers.

MILLER

"Koussy used to say . . ." is a phrase used even by musicians who joined the B.S.O. under Charles Munch. A young player who has "just heard a new Koussy story" and announces this happy discovery to his older colleagues only invites an avalanche of other anecdotes.

"One story reminds us of another. In Seattle (on the orchestra's recent transcontinental tour), we told stories for two hours at someone's house," a player noted. "Did you ever hear about the time when Koussy—and that's how it went."

Some Koussevitzky stories are one-liners, dealing with the Russian conductor's continual shadowboxing with the English language: "Gantlemen, play without a tense, with complete laxation." Or his testy instructions to an errant, so he thought, section of the orchestra: "Play with artistical feeling — if you have." Koussevitzky's directions were not always the kind that could be pencilled in the music, like bowings, the teller will comment to an outsider, but he got across what he wanted.

Koussevitzky was also a considerable showman. His cape was but one symbol to the public of exotic musical life. One violinist recalls how a Tchaikovsky symphony was reinforced by the visual element. "This man had been moved temporarily to a seat near the edge of the stage. His desk-mate, seated next to the audience, predicted that in a certain passage Koussevitzky would turn and conduct directly to him. Sure enough, at that spot the conductor's gestures grew grand and ardent, urging the violinist into the classic posture of a musician wringing the soul from his fiddle. But at a subsequent concert, the conductor's model violinist was ill; his replacement waited expectantly for his glorious moment. "Koussy took one look at me, and that was that. I just didn't look the part."

Loss of Dignity

Some members of the orchestra, however, deplore the Koussy stories being told outside the Symphony Hall tuning room, or even at all. The conductor's relations with the men were olympian and his methods of discipline sometimes cruel. "I used to sit in fear and trembling of him," a now white-haired player has said, "and it's true he said some inexcusable things to men in the orchestra. But it's just as true that without those 25 years of keeping after us, of making us play better than we knew how, the orchestra wouldn't be what it is today. The Koussy stories make fun of him and they rob the orchestra of its majesty."

But the tales go on, a whole canon of Koussy stories being devoted to the little men, usually victims of the conductors wrath, who never ceased to tilt at the diminutive giant. Once Koussevitzky came back from retirement to conduct at Tanglewood. Rehearsing Schumann's Spring Symphony he encouraged a certain mood, "Gentlemen, play happy, play gay." From down in the violin ranks came the muttered, "So what's the occasion?"

Not all stories are accurately attributed to the Boston conductor. The famous exchange between a now retired cellist who countered a Koussevitzky reprimand with a heart-felt "nuts to you" and heard the maestro assure him with equal heat, "It's too late to apologize," is an anecdote told also of Toscanini. Erich Leinsdorf, collecting variants of orchestra stories, says he can't wait to tell friends how certain tales are told in the Boston Symphony.

Just how universal some stories are—and one suspects that laughter, that useful antidote to on-stage tensions, is universal in all orchestras—was nicely shown in a recent story-swapping session. Harry Ellis Dickson, B.S.O. violinist, was telling Leinsdorf about a performance of the Tchaikovsky Fourth. In the final passages of the work, the violins are silent. Koussevitsky used to ask the section to sit with heads bowed so as not to distract the audience from the music. Thus instructed, one fiddler could not but notice his own feet. Nudging his neighbor, he inquired, "How do you like my new shoes?"

As Leinsdorf knew the story, is concerned the conductor Furtwaengler. The Tchaikovsky music was swelling to a close, the maestro stood seemingly in a trance. But to his concertmaster the conductor's question was straightforward: "Do you know of a good vegetarian restaurant?"

ORGAN CONCERTS 191-

Programs

First Concert . . . SUNDAY, JANUARY 20

David Craighead

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . Chorale Partita, O Gott, du frommer Gott

CÉSAR FRANCK (1822–1890) . . . . . Grande Pièce Symphonique, Op. 17
Andantino serioso; Allegro;
Andante; Allegro; Andante;
Recitative; Finale

CATHERINE URNER (d. 1942) . . . . . Barcarolle

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART (1756–1791) . . . . . Andante in F major, K. 616

OLIVIER MESSIAEN (1908–) . . . . . Two Meditations from The Ascension
Serene Alleluias from a soul that longs for heaven
Outburst of joy from a soul before the glory of Christ which is its own glory

* * *

Second Concert . . . SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10

E. Power Biggs

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) Prelude and Fugue in E flat, "St. Anne"
Chorale Prelude: "Deck Thyself, O Soul, with Gladness"
Prelude and Fugue, in A minor
Passacaglia and Fugue, in C minor
Pastorale in F major
Pastorale—Allegro—Adagio—Allegrovivace
Toccata in F major

Third Concert . . . SUNDAY, MARCH 3

Joseph Miranda

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in G major
Chorale Prelude Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele
Concerto in D minor, after Vivaldi
Allegro — Grave — Fuga
Largo e spiccato
Allegro

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART (1756–1791) . . . . . Fantasia in F minor, K. 608
Allegro — Andante — Allegro

LUDWIG LENEL . . . . . Four Organ Chorales
O Christ, who are the light and day
Now praise we Christ, the Holy One
O Christ, thou lamb of God
How lovely shines the morning star

MARCEL DUPRÉ (1886–) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Op. 7, No. 3

* * *

Fourth Concert . . . SUNDAY, APRIL 7

Berj Zamkochian

ANTONIO VIVALDI (1669?–1741) . . . . . Concerto in A minor
(Organ Transcription by Bach)
Allegro — Adagio — Allegro

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in C minor

JOHANNES BRAHMS (1833–1897) . . . . . Three Chorale-Preludes
Mein Jesu, der du mich (My Jesus calls to me)
O wie selig seid ihr doch ihr Frommen (How blessed are ye faithful souls)
O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid (O sorrow, O sadness of my heart)

JULIUS REUBKE (1834–1858) . . . . . Sonata on the 94th Psalm

PAUL DE MALEINGREAU (1887–) . . . . . Le Tumulte au Prétoire

GASTON LITAIZE (1909–) . . . . . Scherzo

C. ALEXANDER PELOQUIN . . . . . Toccata (Dedicated to Berj Zamkochian)
(First performance in Boston)

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521

JAN 1963

Boston Symphony Will Co-Sponsor Playing Competition

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to join the Boston Chapter in sponsoring the Young Artists' Competition. The winner of the final competition will play a public recital in the Symphony Hall Series of organ recitals in the 1963-64 season and will receive a $500 cash award. Applications with a $5 fee and a tape recording of the applicant's playing must be submitted by March 31 and should include a major Bach prelude and fugue and at least one work from a later period. Total running time of the tape should not exceed 25 minutes.

Players chosen on the basis of their tapes will be judged April 27 in a competition played on the Flentrop organ at the Busch-Reisinger Museum, Cambridge. Winners of this semi-final will play before a committee of three judges in recital in Boston May 6 as part of the annual meeting of the Boston Chapter.

Write Victor Mattfeld, Chairman, 107 Walker St., Cambridge 38, Mass., for application blanks and competition rules.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521

MAY 1963

Joseph Miranda, Salt Lake City, Utah, won the Boston Symphony young artists competition last May which entitled him to play this March 3 in the organ recital series at Symphony Hall. His program appears in the recital section. He was invited to repeat the program the following evening at St. Thomas Church, New York City and April 7 at the National Cathedral, Washington, D.C.

A student of Frank Bozyan, Anton van der Horst, Fenner Douglass and Grigg Fountain, he has attended Oberlin College, the Amsterdam Conservatory on a Fulbright grant, and Yale University.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

DEC 16 1962

To Start Jan. 20

Symphony Organ Series Renewed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will sponsor the third season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts beginning on Jan 20. The series will consist of concerts by four distinguished recitalists.

After two successful seasons the Symphony Hall Organ Concerts will begin this season with a recital by David Craighead, organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rochester, and head of the Department of Organ at the Eastman School of Music. E. Powers Biggs will be heard on Feb. 10.

The third concert will be given on March 3 by Joseph Miranda, winner of the 1962 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the American Guild of Organists i cooperation with the Boston Sym phony Orchestra. A recital o April 7 by Berj Zamkochian wi conclude the series. Mr. Zamko chian is organist and choir di rector of St. Theresa's Church West Roxbury.

The recitals will be held on Sundays at 6 p.m. with each program lasting approximately one hour. There will be no intermission.

Tickets for the Symphony Hal Organ Concerts will be available beginning Friday, Dec. 28, at $4 for the series. Single concert tickets are available at $1.50. All seats are unreserved.

ORGAN CONCERTS 191

Programs

First Concert . . . SUNDAY, JANUARY 20

David Craighead

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . Chorale Partita, O Gott, du frommer Gott

CÉSAR FRANCK (1822–1890) . . . . . Grande Pièce Symphonique, Op. 17
Andantino serioso; Allegro;
Andante; Allegro; Andante;
Recitative; Finale

CATHERINE URNER (d. 1942) . . . . . Barcarolle

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART (1756–1791) . . . . . Andante in F major, K. 616

OLIVIER MESSIAEN (1908–) . . . . . Two Meditations from The Ascension
Serene Alleluias from a soul that longs for heaven
Outburst of joy from a soul before the glory of Christ which is its own glory

• • •

Second Concert . . . SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10

E. Power Biggs

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) Prelude and Fugue in E flat, "St. Anne"
Chorale Prelude: "Deck Thyself, O Soul, with Gladness"
Prelude and Fugue, in A minor
Passacaglia and Fugue, in C minor
Pastorale in F major
Pastorale—Allegro—Adagio—Allegrovivace
Toccata in F major

Third Concert . . . SUNDAY, MARCH 3

Joseph Miranda

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in G major
Chorale Prelude Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele
Concerto in D minor, after Vivaldi
Allegro — Grave — Fuga
Largo e spiccato
Allegro

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART (1756–1791) . . . . . Fantasia in F minor, K. 608
Allegro — Andante — Allegro

LUDWIG LENEL . . . . . Four Organ Chorales
O Christ, who are the light and day
Now praise we Christ, the Holy One
O Christ, thou lamb of God
How lovely shines the morning star

MARCEL DUPRÉ (1886–) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Op. 7, No. 3

• • •

Fourth Concert . . . SUNDAY, APRIL 7

Berj Zamkochian

ANTONIO VIVALDI (1669?–1741) . . . . . Concerto in A minor
(Organ Transcription by Bach)
Allegro — Adagio — Allegro

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750) . . . . . Prelude and Fugue in C minor

JOHANNES BRAHMS (1833–1897) . . . . . Three Chorale-Preludes
Mein Jesu, der du mich (My Jesus calls to me)
O wie selig seid ihr doch ihr Frommen (How blessed are ye faithful souls)
O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid (O sorrow, O sadness of my heart)

JULIUS REUBKE (1834–1858) . . . . . Sonata on the 94th Psalm

PAUL DE MALEINGREAU (1887–) . . . . . Le Tumulte au Prétoire

GASTON LITAIZE (1909–) . . . . . Scherzo

C. ALEXANDER PELOQUIN . . . . . Toccata (Dedicated to Berj Zamkochian)
(First performance in Boston)

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521

JAN 1963

Boston Symphony Will Co-Sponsor Playing Competition

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to join the Boston Chapter in sponsoring the Young Artists' Competition. The winner of the final competition will play a public recital in the Symphony Hall Series of organ recitals in the 1963-64 season and will receive a $500 cash award. Applications with a $5 fee and a tape recording of the applicant's playing must be submitted by March 31 and should include a major Bach prelude and fugue and at least one work from a later period. Total running time of the tape should not exceed 25 minutes.

Players chosen on the basis of their tapes will be judged April 27 in a competition played on the Flentrop organ at the Busch-Reisinger Museum, Cambridge. Winners of this semi-final will play before a committee of three judges in recital in Boston May 6 as part of the annual meeting of the Boston Chapter.

Write Victor Mattfeld, Chairman, 107 Walker St., Cambridge 38, Mass., for application blanks and competition rules.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 22,521

MAY 1963

Joseph Miranda, Salt Lake City, Utah, won the Boston Symphony young artists competition last May which entitled him to play this March 3 in the organ recital series at Symphony Hall. His program appears in the recital section. He was invited to repeat the program the following evening at St. Thomas Church, New York City and April 7 at the National Cathedral, Washington, D.C.

A student of Frank Bozyan, Anton van der Horst, Fenner Douglass and Grigg Fountain, he has attended Oberlin College, the Amsterdam Conservatory on a Fulbright grant, and Yale University.

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

DEC 16 1962

To Start Jan. 20

Symphony Organ Series Renewed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will sponsor the third season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts beginning on Jan 20. The series will consist of concerts by four distinguished recitalists.

After two successful seasons the Symphony Hall Organ Concerts will begin this season with a recital by David Craighead, organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rochester, and head of the Department of Organ at the Eastman School of Music. E. Power Biggs will be heard on Feb. 10.

The third concert will be given on March 3 by Joseph Miranda, winner of the 1962 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the American Guild of Organists in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A recital on April 7 by Berj Zamkochian will conclude the series. Mr. Zamkochian is organist and choir director of St. Theresa's Church, West Roxbury.

The recitals will be held on Sundays at 3 p.m. with each program lasting approximately one hour. There will be no intermission.

Tickets for the Symphony Hall Organ Concerts will be available beginning Friday, Dec. 28, at [illegible] for the series. Single concert tickets are available at $1.50. All seats are unreserved.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
DEC 14 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
DEC 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
DEC 13 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
DEC 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 18 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
DEC 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
DEC 27 1962

Third Organ Concert Season Opens, Jan. 20

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will sponsor the third season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts beginning on January 20. The series will consist of concerts by four distinguished recitalists.

After two successful seasons the Symphony Hall Organ Concerts will begin this season with a recital by David Craghead, organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rochester, and head of the Department of Organ at the Eastman School of Music. The internationally known organist E. Power Biggs will be heard on February 10. The third concert will be given on March 3 by Joseph Miranda, winner of the 1962 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the American Guild of Organists in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A recital on April 7 by Berj Zamkochian will conclude the series. Mr. Zamkochian is organist and chor director of St. Theresa's Church, West Roxbury.

When Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, announced the first season of Organ Concerts, he stated, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this series of Organ Concerts our service can be expanded."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
JAN 17 1963

First Organ Recital Sunday Eve. Jan. 20

One of the finest and costliest of all the instruments of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—yet one doomed for long years to be heard only rarely—has come into its own at last. In the past two years it has brought large audiences to Symphony Hall to revel in its infinite variety of sounds. This is the Symphony Hall Organ, with its 4,802 pipes.

For the third season, staring next Sunday evening (Jan. 20) at the first of four recitals to reveal its myriad facets in music of composers past and present who rejoice in the organ as a solo instrument. Previously it has had to wait for a symphonic score in which a composer had elected to admit it as an ajunct to the orchestra. But two years ago Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, had moved to let the public enjoy its enormous resources between these select occasions, by means of organ recitals played by distinguished soloists. The response has exceeded expectations in terms of the size and enthusiasm of audiences. Incidental attractions have been the hour—from six o'clock to seven—and the fact that all seats are unreserved, permitting exercise of personal views about best locations. Then, too, the ticket arrangements have appealed—series tickets for $4.00, singles for $1.50.

The organ was installed during the construction of Symphony Hall, which was dedicated in 1900. In anticipation of the semi-centennial of the Hall, the organ was re-designed by the noted builder, the late Donald G. Harrison, of the Aeolian-Skinner Co. He took into consideration the thoughts of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and of Charles Munch, Dr. Wallace Woodworth — the latter three armed with experience as performers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
FEB 4 1963

Second Organ Recital Scheduled In Boston

BOSTON (UPI) — E. Power Biggs will present the second recital in the 1963 series of Symphony Hall Organ concerts Feb. 10, playing the same program Mendelssohn played in Leipzig in the summer of 1840 to raise funds for building a memorial to Johann Sebastian Bach.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JAN 13 1963

Symphony Hall Organ

One of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's finest and most costly instruments—its 4802-pipe grand organ—will be heard in recital at a series of organ programs beginning next Sunday at 6 p.m.

David Craighead, organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and chairman of the organ department at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., will be the first soloist. His program will include J. S. Bach's Chorale Partita "O Gott, du frommer Gott," Franck's Grand Piece Symphonique, Op. 17, Catherine Urner's Barcarolle, Mozart's Andante in F major, K. 616, and two meditations from Olivier Messiaen's "The Ascension."

Appearing later in the organ series will be E. Power Biggs, Feb. 10; Joseph Miranda, Mar. 3; Berj Zamkochian, Apr. 7.

The Grand Organ was installed during the construction of Symphony Hall, which was dedicated in 1900. In anticipation of the semi-centennial of the Hall, the organ was redesigned by the late Donald G. Harrison of the Aeolian-Skinner Co. He took into consideration the suggestion of Serge Koussevitzky, and of Charles Munch, G. Wallace Woodworth and Dr. Wallace Goodrich, all experienced organists.

The Symphony Hall instrument is really a group of seven organs, capable of independent or combination use. As a result, it can "speak" in the tones familiar to Bach, Handel and their predecessors in solo performance, or adapt itself to the demands of later masters, down to present day composers. The organ is also used as an instrument in the full modern symphony orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 13 1963

Third Season to Begin

Recital on Grand Organ Is Jan. 20

DAVID CRAIGHEAD

One of the finest and costliest of all the instruments of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—yet one for years heard only rarely—has come into its own. Next Sunday, Jan. 20, the grand organ in Symphony Hall will be heard in the third season of recitals.

Previously the organ had to wait for symphonic scores in which it was included. But two years ago Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, instituted the recitals by distinguished solists. The hour is from 6 to 7 p.m. on Sunday, and all seats are unreserved, allowing the exercise of personal views about best locations. Series tickets are $4 and single tickets $1.50.

The grand organ was installed during the construction of Symphony Hall and later redesigned by Donald G. Harrison. It is really a group of seven organs, which can used independently or in combination, and adapted both to Bach, Handel and their predecessors and to the demands of later composers.

David Craighead, organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Rochester, N.Y., will play next Sunday. The other soloists in the series of four recitals will be E. Power Biggs on Feb. 10, Joseph Miranda on March 3 and Berj Zamochian on April 7.

LAST SANDERS THEATRE CONCERT. 193

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
MAR 23 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
MAR 25 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
MAR 23 1963

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle Sun
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,526
MAR 14 1963

Sanders Symphonys Moving to Boston

The traditional Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which since World War II have been unable to accommodate the potential Harvard audience in Sanders Theatre, will move next season to Symphony Hall in Boston.

The move will double the seating available for the Cambridge concerts, since Symphony Hall holds 2,600, compared with only 1,200 in Sanders Theatre.

The move also will give new flexibility for the new programs of the Cambridge concerts. The smaller stage of Sanders Theatre has limited the size of the orchestra, especially when choruses or groups of large instruments were called for. Sanders does not have an organ for use with the orchestra.

The larger audience in Symphony Hall will permit a reduction ranging from $4 to $12 in the price of series tickets for the six Cambridge concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
MAR 22 1963

After five years, Channel 2's "live" telecasts of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts from Sanders Theater come to an end with next Tuesday night's program. Next season, our non-commercial station will televise a series of six concerts from Symphony Hall itself . . . Observation on human nature from Candid Camera's Allen Funt: "We have no trouble at all getting releases from people on film shots we've decided to use. It's the people wo don't use on the show who get furious."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
FEB 23 1963

Cambridge Concerts Will Be Shifted to Symphony Hall

The Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a tradition for 81 years, will move next season from Sanders Theatre to Symphony Hall in Boston.

The move will double the available seating. Since the war Sanders Theatre has been unable to accommodate all those wishing to attend.

New flexibility also will be provided for the programs. The smaller stage of Sanders Theatre has limited the size of the orchestra, and Sanders does not have an organ.

The Cambridge concerts are held on a series of six evenings during the Fall, Winter and Spring.

Ticket holders from Harvard and Cambridge will have priority for next season's seats until Apr. 8.

The larger audience in Symphony Hall will permit reductions of $4 to $12 in the price of series tickets.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 24 1963

Tuesday to Mark End Of Live Symphony Telecasts

Five years of live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts from Sanders Theatre come to an end this week.

On Tuesday, March 26, at 8:30 p.m. Channel 2 and WGBH-FM present the final concert of the season. Next year, the Symphony management recently announced, the special series of six concerts will be moved to Symphony Hall, and WGBH-TV will broadcast every one of them.

For his last Cambridge program Erich Leinsdorf has chosen two works: the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125 by Prokofieff, with the B.S.O.'s principal cellist Samuel Mayes as soloist; and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The day after this full-length concert Channel 2 to mark "Symphony Week," presents "Symphony Hall: An Intimate View."

At 9:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Mar. 27 host William Pierce asks the Orchestra's superintendent, Edward Charron, to tell what it's like behind the scenes, and then Pierce turns to the American pianist Lorin Hollander, to discuss Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra which the 19-year-old virtuoso recently introduced to Boston.

Together these two programs offer a unique portrait of a great orchestra.

Otis & Quincy, Too?

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

Now that the finials from Gore Hall have been proudly reset on either side of the Massachusetts Avenue entrance to Widener (BULLETIN, March 2), why couldn't the trustees of the Symphony Orchestra arrange with the University a similar touch of nostalgia to make the transfer of the concerts from Cambridge to Boston a little easier to bear?

Surely it would be no problem in these times to move the statues of James Otis and Josiah Quincy now flanking the Sanders stage to similar places at Symphony Hall—at least for the six Tuesday evenings of next years "Cambridge" Series.

G. KENNARD WAKEFIELD '22

Milton, Mass.

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

Harvard's new buildings are a tragic error and a disgrace, and the graduates paid the bill.

GEORGE L. HUNTRESS '05

Clearwater, Fla.

[But not always as a group. The Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts was the gift of Huntress' classmate Alfred St. Crain Carpenter and his wife.—ED.]

Tod—
An oddity for the scrap book from the Harvard Alumni
Bulletin
F.W.H
4/12/63

LAST SANDERS THEATRE CONCERT. 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
FEB 23 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
FEB 25 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
FEB 23 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle Sun
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,526
MAR 14 1963

Sanders Symphonys Moving to Boston

The traditional Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which since World War II have been unable to accommodate the potential Harvard audience in Sanders Theatre, will move next season to Symphony Hall in Boston.

The move will double the seating available for the Cambridge concerts, since Symphony Hall holds 2,600, compared with only 1,200 in Sanders Theatre.

The move also will give new flexibility for the new programs of the Cambridge concerts. The smaller stage of Sanders Theatre has limited the size of the orchestra, especially when choruses or groups of large instruments were called for. Sanders does not have an organ for use with the orchestra.

The larger audience in Symphony Hall will permit a reduction ranging from $4 to $12 in the price of series tickets for the six Cambridge concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
MAR 22 1963

After five years, Channel 2's "live" telecasts of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts from Sanders Theater come to an end with next Tuesday night's program. Next season, our non-commercial station will televise a series of six concerts from Symphony Hall itself . . . Observation on human nature from Candid Camera's Allen Funt: "We have no trouble at all getting releases from people on film shots we've decided to use. It's the people we don't use on the show who get furious."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
FEB 23 1963

Cambridge Concerts Will Be Shifted to Symphony Hall

The Cambridge concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a tradition for 81 years, will move next season from Sanders Theatre to Symphony Hall in Boston.

The move will double the available seating. Since the war Sanders Theatre has been unable to accommodate all those wishing to attend.

New flexibility also will be provided for the programs. The smaller stage of Sanders Theatre has limited the size of the orchestra, and Sanders does not have an organ.

The Cambridge concerts are held on a series of six evenings during the Fall, Winter and Spring.

Ticket holders from Harvard and Cambridge will have priority for next season's seats until Apr. 8.

The larger audience in Symphony Hall will permit reductions of $4 to $12 in the price of series tickets.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 24 1963

Tuesday to Mark End Of Live Symphony Telecasts

Five years of live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts from Sanders Theatre come to an end this week.

On Tuesday, March 26, at 8:30 p.m. Channel 2 and WGBH-FM present the final concert of the season. Next year, the Symphony management recently announced, the special series of six concerts will be moved to Symphony Hall, and WGBH-TV will broadcast every one of them.

For his last Cambridge program Erich Leinsdorf has chosen two works: the Symphony-Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 125 by Prokofieff, with the B.S.O.'s principal cellist Samuel Mayes as soloist; and Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

The day after this full-length concert Channel 2, to mark "Symphony Week," presents "Symphony Hall: An Intimate View."

At 9:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Mar. 27 host William Pierce asks the Orchestra's superintendent, Edward Charron, to tell what it's like behind the scenes, and then Pierce turns to the American pianist Lorin Hollander, to discuss Norman Dello Joio's Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra which the 18-year-old virtuoso recently introduced to Boston.

Together, these two programs offer a unique portrait of a great orchestra.

Otis & Quincy, Too?

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

Now that the finials from Gore Hall have been proudly reset on either side of the Massachusetts Avenue entrance to Widener (BULLETIN, March 2), why couldn't the trustees of the Symphony Orchestra arrange with the University a similar touch of nostalgia to make the transfer of the concerts from Cambridge to Boston a little easier to bear?

Surely it would be no problem in these times to move the statues of James Otis and Josiah Quincy now flanking the Sanders stage to similar places at Symphony Hall—at least for the six Tuesday evenings of next years "Cambridge" Series.

G. KENNARD WAKEFIELD '22

Milton, Mass.

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

Harvard's new buildings are a tragic error and a disgrace, and the graduates paid the bill.

GEORGE L. HUNTRESS '05

Clearwater, Fla.

[But not always as a group. The Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts was the gift of Huntress' classmate Alfred St. Crain Carpenter and his wife.—ED.]

Tod—
An oddity for the scrap book from the Harvard Alumni
Bulletin
F.W.H
4/2/63

194

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 27 963

BSO's Last Night at Sanders: Nostalgic, Lovely

(Globe Photo by Charles Carey)

LAST CALL—Intermission nears its end at Harvard's Memorial Hall and crowd gets ready to file in for final Boston Symphony appearance there.

By GEORGE McKINNON

It was a night of nostalgia and lovely music. Everything was very quiet and restrained.

This is the way things are done in Cambridge. No one cared to comment much. But it was the end of an era.

It was obvious the audience in Harvard's Sanders Theatre was moved when the last note sounded Tuesday night from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last performance in the hall.

Standing Ovation

But the appreciative audience did let go at the end. There was a standing ovation for the B.S.O. and conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

So that was it. No more Boston Symphony Concerts in the ugly Victorian Building just off Harvard sq.

But the special six-concert season is not done. The Winter series will play in more spacious and more comfortable Symphony Hall in Boston.

82-Year Tradition

Yet there is a loss for Cambridge. For 82 years these concerts were part of the Harvard and Cambridge life.

Last night before the first number, there were many subdued and regretful remarks that the B.S.O. was pulling up stakes.

Before the concert there were lines of people trying to get in for a last chance to hear the orchestra in Cambridge. No luck. There were no more seats to be had.

The audience included Harvard Pres. Nathan Pusey and B.S.O. manager Thomas Perry. The night's significance appeared to be deeply felt during the intermission.

And then it was over. The Cambridge gathering filed out. The end had come.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 26 963

Sanders Theater—I

Final Concert By Symphony To End an Era

By VICTOR O. JONES

A valuable cultural tradition or an impractical anachronism—depending upon how you look upon it—will come to an end in draughty, wood-panelled Sanders Theatre in Cambridge tonight when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays the last of its Cambridge Concerts in Harvard's beat-up Civil War memorial.

JONES

For the last 82 years, by special arrangement between the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Harvard Corporation, Boston's musicians have journeyed six times a Winter to Cambridge to play for the edification of Harvard and other colleges "north of the Charles River."

In that time, Sanders symphonies have become part of the Cambridge way of life, and the status of Harvard faculty members could be gauged by where they sat in the small, 1200-seat amphitheatre.

Of course, the Boston Symphony's Cambridge Concerts will not be abandoned entirely. They'll still take place six times a Winter, but, beginning next Fall, they will be performed, still on Tuesdays, but in Symphony Hall in Boston's Back Bay.

When this announcement was made a few weeks ago by the Harvard Corporation, there was brief consternation among the older patrons. A grandson and namesake of Charles W. Eliot, former president of Harvard, expressed his sorrow. The current president, Nathan M. Pusey, a regular attendant, had one evening in Sanders punctuated by many professors emeriti and their wives or widows who begged him to say it wasn't so. But the protest movement never really got off the ground because those responsible for the decision to move the Cambridge Concerts into Boston seemed to hold, tradition and sentiment aside, most of the high cards.

These high cards included factors such as:

1. More people would be able to listen to the concerts, and at lower prices.

2. Standard works of cultural importance, which can't be performed in Sanders because of the hall's physical limitations, will now be possible, including symphonies involving the Harvard-Radcliffe choruses.

3. Harvard and Radcliffe undergraduates, now practically shut out in favor of senior members of the faculty, not to mention the students and faculty members of other local colleges, will have at least some chance at the tickets.

4. The symphony players will be happier for not having to get themselves to Memorial Hall and its nonexistent dressing rooms; the orchestra's management will not have to worry about the bother and expense of moving bass viols and harps and grand pianos, and . . . .

5. Even at lower prices, the larger seating capacity of the symphony's home hall will cut the already sizeable deficit which the Boston Symphony runs into each year.

NEXT: Why Sanders was more of a status symbol than an auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118
MAR 27 1968

195

Concerts in Sanders Theatre—II

Only Patriarchs Got In

This is the second of two articles on the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Cambridge Concerts, the final performance of which in Sanders Theater was given Tuesday night. Beginning next Fall, the concerts after 81 years, will move to Symphony Hall.

By VICTOR O. JONES

Sanders Theater, which actually is the nave of Harvard's red brick American Gothic Civil War Memorial seats only 1200.

Poet Dave McCord can remember that when he was an undergraduate in the '20s there was a small balcony accommodating 60, some of them standees, behind the orchestra. These seats, disposed of on a rush basis, were in such demand that undergraduates used to line up at dusk, with the late Col Charles R. Apted, head of the Harvard Yard police, counting off the first 60 in line and sending the others about their business.

This balcony has since been removed. Though, theoretically, seats not subscribed for on a seasonal basis are still available to undergraduates and others, actually they just don't exist.

With only 1200 seats, Sanders hasn't enough seats to take care of the whole Harvard faculty and their wives, let alone the students. Tickets are alloted on a seniority basis, and you have to be almost a full professor or a dean to qualify.

As a result, the undergraduates and the younger ranking faculty have abandoned Sanders' Tuesday night concerts and have shifted instead to attending the orchestra's relatively new Open Rehearsals in Symphony Hall on Thursdays. Symphony Hall's capacity is 2600, more than double Sanders'.

Geographically, too, Sanders isn't as important as it used to be. In the old days, Harvard's faculty lived near the Yard and used generally to walk to the Tuesday night concerts, much easier to do than to take the horse cars into Boston—or in some cases to notify the coachman that the carriage should be at the front door at 7:30.

Many of Harvard's professors now live out in the suburbs and have to drive in to attend the concerts. Driving into Boston isn't a much longer haul, or there are the buses down Massachusetts av. or the round-about subway via Park st. under.

The Boston Symphony and Harvard aren't in business to make money. Both run at a deficit. Nevertheless, the larger capacity of Symphony Hall will enable the orchestra to reduce its prices for these concerts. The new prices will range from $12 to $24 for the six concerts, a saving of $4 to $12.

Present subscribers have until Apr. 8 to sign up for next season's concerts. After that the lists will be opened to the rest of the colleges "north of the Charles," and if any tickets still remain they'll be available to institutions on the less-favored side of the river.

Music lovers whose symphony attendance has been limited to the Cambridge concert may not know what they've been missing. The stage where the musicians perform is so small that you can't get the full orchestra performing if anything special is added.

Choral groups, as already mentioned, are out. Even a piano concerto is difficult, and, according to John Burke, the program notes editor of the Symphony, says that when a piano has been used at Sanders it has been not a concert grand but a smaller piano. Even to get this into the act it's been necessary to shave down on the number of violin or other stands.

Too, there's no organ in Sanders Theater, which knocks out a few more classics.

Burke has found in his records that Stravinsky's Rite of Spring was actually once performed at Sanders, but he thinks they must have shaved down on other instruments to get all the required timpani onto the stage. His records say that Leonard Bernstein was the conductor on this occasion. Among the pieces which have never been performed at Sanders because of space limitations, he says, are the following:

Mahler's Second Symphony, Mozart's Requiem, Bach's two Passions and Mass, Brahms' Requiem, Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, Debussy's Blessed Demoiselle, Saint-Saens' Organ Symphony and Strauss' Thus Spake Zarathustra.

No need, certainly, for me to tell you what big holes this would leave in anyone's musical education.

On the other hand, there's no doubt that Sanders had a warmth and an intimacy impossible in a larger hall. G. Wallace Woodworth, former director of the Harvard and Radcliffe choral societies and still a professor of music, also points out that Sanders was unexcelled in its acoustics.

Of course, not all the patrons of the Sanders symphonies were Harvard faculty members and their families, though the vast majority were alumni or wives of alumni. David Bailey, secretary of the Harvard Corporation, thinks that the audience was about half Harvard faculty and half what might be called "Old Cambridge." Some people came also from outside Cambridge, particularly in the last 15 years when the move to the suburbs got underway. Among these, for instance, there's Judge Lawrence Brooks of Medford.

The question has naturally been raised as to whether Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor, had anything to do with the move to Boston. The answer is no. Taking this step has been under consideration by the Symphony trustees and discussed with the Harvard Corporation for at least 15 years, or ever since the students were shut out.

Bringing good music to the students was the prime purpose when Maj Henry Lee Higginson first sent the orchestra across the river in 1881. Actually, the decision was that of the Symphony trustees, for it is they who run the orchestra. Harvard does nothing beyond furnishing the hall and handling the tickets for its faculty and undergraduates.

So there's nothing really remarkable about the end of the Sanders symphonies except that another old tradition is yielding to changed times and circumstances.

Transportation (even with parking worries) is now so much easier that it's hard to imagine what a boon the six Cambridge concerts used to be. People went to extraordinary trouble to get to these concerts. There used to be two East Somerville ladies who, no matter what the weather, used to take a streetcar to Union sq., Somerville, then change to a trolley running to Inman sq., near the Somerville-Cambridge line, and change once more to a trolley running to Harvard sq., all this in the dead of Winter.

Old Cambridge citizens and really venerable professors-emeriti are probably nowhere to be found in denser proportions than in Sanders Theater when the Symphony is playing.

I know of one Cambridge matron, daughter of one Harvard professor and the widow of another, who can remember attending her first Sanders concert when she was 8 years old, who still goes and who says there are many, many others who have been regulars longer than she.

Miss Ruth Mitchell, who has been handling the Harvard end of the tickets more than 40 years, explains that the tickets are allotted on a seniority basis, by Harvard classes. In some cases, the seats seem to be more or less inherited.

Mrs. A. Calvert Smith, widow of the former Harvard secretary of the Corporation, heads the whole list, having somehow, through his or her forebears, become affiliated with the class of 1823! She is a great-granddaughter of poet Henry W. Longfellow.

Prof Frederick N. Robinson, class of 1891, recently told Miss Mitchell he had been attending the Cambridge concerts for 75 years.

Mrs. Julian Coolidge, widow of the first master of Lowell House, and Mrs. Roger B. Merriman, widow of the first master of Eliot House, have been in attendance for a great many years.

So have Professors Emeriti Sidney B. Fay (Harvard 1896), Paul J. Sachs (Harvard 1900) and Edward W. Forbes, the last two former codirectors of the Fogg Art Museum.

Rev. Raymond Calkins, for many years pastor of the First Church in Cambridge, Congregational, in the class of 1890.

The Misses Alice Channing and Penelope Noyes are longtime supporters, and so is Prof. Donald Scott and Harvard Fellow Charles A. Coolidge, though the latter is a Johnny-come-lately as a member of the class of 1917.

Most of these veterans are a little sad about the move to Boston, but they're taking it in stride as something inevitable and are determined to maintain their interest in music, even if it means six trips all the way in to Boston.

196 YOUTH CONCERTS.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 19 1962

Youth Concerts Begin Nov. 3

Erich Leinsdorf, the new music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct the first work of this season's opening youth concert at Symphony Hall, Nov. 3.

The youth concerts, to be presented Saturday mornings Nov. 3, Nov. 10. Jan. 19, Jan. 26, March 30 and April 6, will be directed by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Mr. Leinsdorf will lead a performance of Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture. This first concert will also include a chance to "Meet the Boston Symphony Family,' ' as new concertmaster Joseph Silverstein will be the soloist in the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
OCT 29 1962

Students To Hear Youth Concert At Symphony Hall

HOLBROOK. — Students of the Holbrook schools who have subscribed to the series of concerts at Symphony Hall, will leave the Sumner School at 9:45 a.m. Saturday by bus. They will be accompanied by Francis J. Buckley, chairman and director of instrumental music.

The concert will start at 11 a.m. Sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the "Pops," will present a program, "Meet the Boston Symphony Family."

Eric Leinsdorf, the new director of the Boston Symphony, has volunteered [illegible] as guest conductor of the opening number. Joseph Silverstein, the new concert-master of the Boston Symphony, will appear as soloist in a Beethoven violin concerto, and other members will be featured in works by Mozart, Milhaud, Handel and Ibert.

The students should arrive home about 1 p.m. after the one hour concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
OCT 29 1962

Hingham

Youth Symphony Concert To Begin Fourth Season

HINGHAM — The Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall Inc. will start its fourth season this Saturday, and more than 90 young people from Hingham will leave by bus from the High School Auditorium parking lot at 9:15 a.m. for the opening concert.

Pops Concert Leader

Under the leadership of Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the "pops concert," 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present the program, titled "Meet the Boston Symphony Family."

Erich Leinsdorf, now conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the guest conductor for the opening number, and Joseph Silverstein, the new concert-master of the orchestra, will appear as soloist in a Beethoven violin concerto.

Mrs. S. Edward Eaton is the chairman, assisted by Mrs. Leavitt Howard, Mrs. Everett Leonard and Mrs. William Bolster. Mrs. Eaton and Miss Yvette Capillon of the music department of the public schools, will chaperone the group.

The program for the concert, to be given from 11 a.m. until noon, will include the Academic Festival Overture of Brahms; Finale from a Beethoven Violin Concerto; Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat, Mozart; Concerto for Percussion, Milhaud; Concerto for Organ (first movement), Handel, and Divertissement, Ibert.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,308,418
AUG 26 1962

FROM THE MAIL POUCH

To the Music Editor:

ROSS PARMENTER's article [Sunday, Aug. 5] "Starting Them Off — Concerts for Children Are a Vital Force" was of particular interest to us at the Boston Symphony Orchestra because of our activity in the field of music education and Mr. Parmenter's statement that we were "the only responding orchestra that did not present concerts for children."

It is true that the orchestra does not as an institution give concerts designed for children, and the reason for this is that the orchestra as an institution is so closely allied to a number of organizations whose activities are concerts for children, and offers them such enthusiastic support, that for the orchestra to officially enter the field might damage work excellently done, done in connection with the orchestra but not by the orchestra.

For example, the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall give a series of six concerts for children during the winter season. The president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Trustees is also president of this organization, the players are members of the orchestra, the conductor is Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Pops, the place is Symphony Hall, which is contributed by the orchestra along with administrative services.

Another series of children's concerts, which is directly under the aegis of the orchestra, is the free children's concerts on the Esplanade, given in the summer for years by Arthur Fiedler and played by members of the orchestra.

The chief educational work of the orchestra is the Berkshire Music Center, an eight-week school of music, held at Tanglewood each summer in connection with the Berkshire Festival, with a faculty chiefly of players in the Boston Symphony.

THOMAS D. PERRY Jr.
Manager,
Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
WAKEFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 6,468
MAY 10 1962

Students May Subscribe to Youth Concerts

Under the auspices of the School Department, Wakefield students in Grades 5 through 12 will be given the opportunity before the end of the school year to subscribe to the 1962-63 series of Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall. These concerts have been sold out for the past three seasons, attracting an audience of young people from 75 Massachusetts communities. Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and associate conductor of the Boston "Pops," will conduct 60 Boston Symphony musicians in a series of programs planned to stimulate the musical interest of the young subscribers.

In the season just completed, Mr. Dickson presented three programs designed to instruct as well as entertain. The first illustrated the difference between classical and modern music; the second was entitled "What is Opera?" and presented in its entirety the modern opera, "The Telephone," by Gian-Carlo Menotti, with Edith Gould and Ronald Holgate. The third program, entitled "Picture Music," showed how the composer and orchestra could paint a musical picture of an object. A yearly feature of the third concert is the participation of young musicians. This year members of the Massachusetts All-State High School Orchestra sat in with the veteran symphony players for the finale, and two high school students appeared as soloists. The program also included the performance of two original compositions by students at Newton High School.

Next season's concerts will take place at Symphony Hall at 11 a.m. on Saturday, Nov. 3; Saturday, Jan. 19; and Saturday, March 30. Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of Brookline is executive director of Youth Concerts. The Town Chairman for Wakefield is Mrs. Richard L. Evans, 45 Woodbriar rd, who is working with Jerry Beisen, head of the school music department, on plans for participation of Wakefield students in this fine cultural program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
OCT 14 1962

Six Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

Erich Leinsdorf will open the first pair of Saturday morning Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall this season. He will conduct Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," and then turn the baton over to Harry Ellis Dickson for the remainder of the concert.

Dickson, who originated the Youth Concerts four years ago, has announced that the program will also include the finale from Beethoven's Violin Concerto; Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn; Milhaud's Concerto for Percussion; the first movement of Handel's Concerto for Organ, No. 2, in B-flat; and Ibert's Divertissement. The concert will be held Saturday, Nov. 3, at 11 a.m. and it will be repeated Nov. 10.

The second program, to be given on Jan. 19 and 26, includes Caillet's "Variations on a well-known theme"; the finale from Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Dohnanyi's Variations on a Nursery Rhyme for piano and orchestra; the fourth movement of Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra; and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

High School Festival

Sixty members of the Boston Symphony make up the Youth Concerts orchestra. The season closes Mar. 30 and Apr. 6 with the Massachusetts High School Festival. The program will include music by Sir Arthur Sullivan, Debussy, and Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 18 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 10 1962

DICKSON PLANNING FOURTH SEASON OF YOUTH CONCERTS

Plans for a fourth season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall are now being worked out by their founder and conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson.

As before, the concerts will be played by a large group of Boston Symphony musicians on Saturday mornings from eleven o'clock to noon. Three programs will be presented for a first subscription series and repeated a week later for a second series. The dates are: Nov 3, Jan. 19, Mar. 30; and Nov. 10, Jan. 26, Apr. 6.

Since subscription renewals and new subscriptions are being filled in order of receipt, it is advisable that applications be sent in now to Youth Concert Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. A stamped self-addressed envelope should be enclosed. All seats are reserved and at the same rate of $4 for either series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

OCT 21 1962

YOUNG PEOPLE may enjoy the Symphony on Saturday mornings. Here Mayor Collins' family is chatting with Mrs. Manuel Kurland, third from left, ticket chairman for the annual Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall beginning Nov. 3. There are two series with three concerts in each. A series is $4. More information may be obtained by calling Mrs. Kurland on weekdays from 9 to 5 p.m. at 469-0656.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826

MAY 1 1963

Prepare Series of Youth Concerts at Boston Hall

With one season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall just completed, the young people of Framingham are looking forward to the next.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Harry Ellis Dickson, Music Director of the Youth Concerts revealed their delight in the response to these concerts, as some of the young people may be future members or subscribers to the world renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the past, the programs that have been presented have provided a wide range of music, with soloists from the orchestra and a program of opera, staged by Boris Goldovsky. These concerts were aimed at the level of the youth audience and plans are being made to make next seasons programs even more attractive.

To add to the pleasure of these Saturday morning concerts prior to the performance, the young people visited the ancient instruments room at Symphony Hall and on two occasions heard a lecture by Laning Humphrey.

The Framingham school system graciously provided buses to transport the students to and from Boston at a very nominal charge and the assistance of the following named chaperones is herewith acknowledged: Joseph Murray, Miss Marjorie Prescott and the Mesdames Frederick Hatch, Norman Harper, Cecil Trost, Carl Wormebrand, Frederick White and Ernest Jardine.

Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Chestnut Hill is in charge of reservations at Symphony Hall and in order to insure excellent arrangements for the Framingham students, one week (that of April 29) has been set to finalize plans for the 1962-64 season. Blocks of seats, for the various towns, are reserved on a first come, first served basis and in view of the fact that the concerts are always over-subscribed, Framingham wishes to be among the first to apply.

With the approval of Supt. Albert G. Reilley and the Music Departments of the schools, these concerts are available to students in the fifth grade through high school. Starting at 11 a.m. on a Saturday morning and lasting for approximately one hour, these are three concerts for a total charge of $4. Framingham has selected the second series the dates of which are Nov. 9, Jan. 11 and March 7.

Notices and an application will be distributed this week through the schools and on Friday morning, May 3, arrangements have been made to have someone at each school to receive the applications and payment for the series.

It is hoped that many more Framingham families will permit their children to avail themselves of this fine opportunity to introduce them to this delightful approach to classical music.

Co-Chairman for Framingham, Mrs. Frederick White and Mrs. Ernest Jardine have attended organization meetings at Symphony Hall in recent weeks planning the concerts for next season and would be happy to furnish additional information to any interested persons.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,117

JAN 2 1 1963

Youth Concert In Boston Sat.

The second Youth Concert of the season will be given at Symphony Hall, Boston at 11 a.m. on Saturday when Miss Joela Jones, 16-year old pianist, will appear with Harry Ellis Dickson and 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The bus for Natick subscribers to the concert will leave from Coolidge Junior High at 9:30 a.m., from Brown School at 9:40 and from Wilson Junior High at 9:50. This program is sponsored by the Natick Music Association.

The theme for Saturday's concert will be "Variations in Music". Miss Jones, whose father is supervisor of music in Miami, Florida, public schools will perform "Variations on a Nursery Rhyme". She has been termed capable of becoming "the world's greatest pianist," and is presently a student at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y.

The program will also include "Variations of a Theme of Haydn" by Brahms, the fourth movement of "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by Webern and the Finale of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Tickets for the Youth Concerts are sold in series only but single admissions are often available at the box office on the mornings of concerts, since some subscribers return their tickets at the last moment.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,000

SEP 20 1962

First Youth Concert Set

Advance subscription records have been broken for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played by members of the Boston Symphony and conducted by the founder of the Youth Concerts, Harry Ellis Dickson.

Erich Leinsdorf, the new director of the Boston Symphony, has volunteered his services as guest conductor of the opening number in the first concert, Saturday morning, Nov. 3, from 11 a.m. to noon, to be repeated the following Saturday.

The theme for the first concert will be "Meet the Boston Symphony Family." Those introduced, besides Mr. Leinsdorf, will be Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist and Messrs. Holmes, Cardillo, Yancich, Firth and Zamkochian as oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, percussion and organ soloists.

PREPARATIONS FOR A NEW SEASON of the highly successful Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston are discussed by conductor Erich Leinsdorm and co-chairmen from various areas, pictured above (left to right) as follows: Mrs. Harry Brenner, Walpole; Mrs. Ralph Pope, Jr., Milton; Conductor Leinsdorf, Mrs. Frederick White, Framingham; Mrs. Max Horshman, Norwood; Mrs. Abbott Rand, Weston; and Mrs. Ernest Jardine, Framingham. Mrs. White and Mrs. Jardine are the Framingham area co-chairmen. (Lenscraft Photos)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500

MAY 28 1962

Concert Series Offered Students

Quincy students in grades five through eight may attend three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next year in field trips sponsored by the school administration.

The symphony will present three Saturday morning concerts for youngsters on Nov. 3, 1962, Jan. 19, 1963 and March 30, 1963. Parents sending their children to the concerts will buy a three-concert ticket for $4 and 90-cent bus fare. The school pays part of the bus expense.

Mrs. Harriette Goldman of 39 Whitney Road, Quincy, is chairman for the Quincy school participation. Students today brought home an application for the concert series, which must be returned to the school by this Friday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

JAN 20 1963

2600 Pack Hall For Second of Youth Concerts

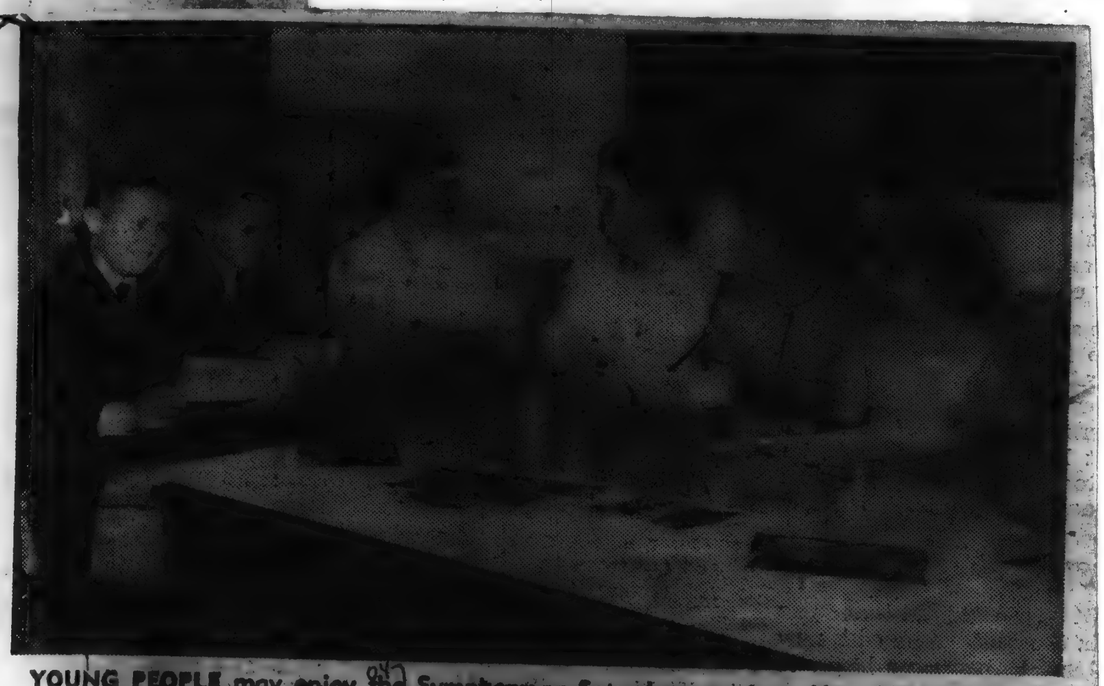
Some 2,600 elementary and high shool students from throughout the state yesterday filled Symphony Hall to hear the second in a series of three youth concerts.

Conducting his group of Boston Symphony musicians was Harry Ellis Dickson. The program was devoted to illustrations of variations by composers ranging from Beethoven and Brahms to the contemporary Caillet and the late Anton Webern.

A highlight of the program was the teen-aged pianist, Miss Joela Jones, who was soloist in "variations on a nursery rhyme for piano and orchestra" by Dohnanyi.

Each program is given in two concerts. A repeat performance will be given next Saturday at 11 a.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 21 1962



YOUNG PEOPLE may enjoy the Symphony on Saturday mornings. Here Mayor Collins' family is chatting with Mrs. Manuel Kurland, third from left, ticket chairman for the annual Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall beginning Nov. 3. There are two series with three concerts in each. A series is $4. More information may be obtained by calling Mrs. Kurland on weekdays from 9 to 5 p.m. at 469-0656.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,000
SEP 20 1962

First Youth Concert Set

Advance subscription records have been broken for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played by members of the Boston Symphony and conducted by the founder of the Youth Concerts, Harry Ellis Dickson.

Erich Leinsdorf, the new director of the Boston Symphony, has volunteered his services as guest conductor of the opening number in the first concert, Saturday morning, Nov. 3, from 11 a.m. to noon, to be repeated the following Saturday.

The theme for the first concert will be "Meet the Boston Symphony Family." Those introduced, besides Mr. Leinsdorf, will be Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist and Messrs. Holmes, Cardillo, Yancich, Firth and Zamkochian as oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, percussion and organ soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826
MAY 1 1963

Prepare Series of Youth Concerts at Boston Hall

With one season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall just completed, the young people of Framingham are looking forward to the next.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Harry Ellis Dickson, Music Director of the Youth Concerts revealed their delight in the response to these concerts, as some of the young people may be future members or subscribers to the world renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the past, the programs that have been presented have provided a wide range of music, with soloists from the orchestra and a program of opera, staged by Boris Goldovsky. These concerts were aimed at the level of the youth audience and plans are being made to make next seasons programs even more attractive.

To add to the pleasure of these Saturday morning concerts prior to the performance, the young people visited the ancient instruments room at Symphony Hall and on two occasions heard a lecture by Laning Humphrey.

The Framingham school system graciously provided buses to transport the students to and from Boston at a very nominal charge and the assistance of the following named chaperones is herewith acknowledged: Joseph Murray, Miss Marjorie Prescott and the Mesdames Frederick Hatch, Norman Harper, Cecil Trost, Carl Wormstrand, Frederick White and Ernest Jardine.

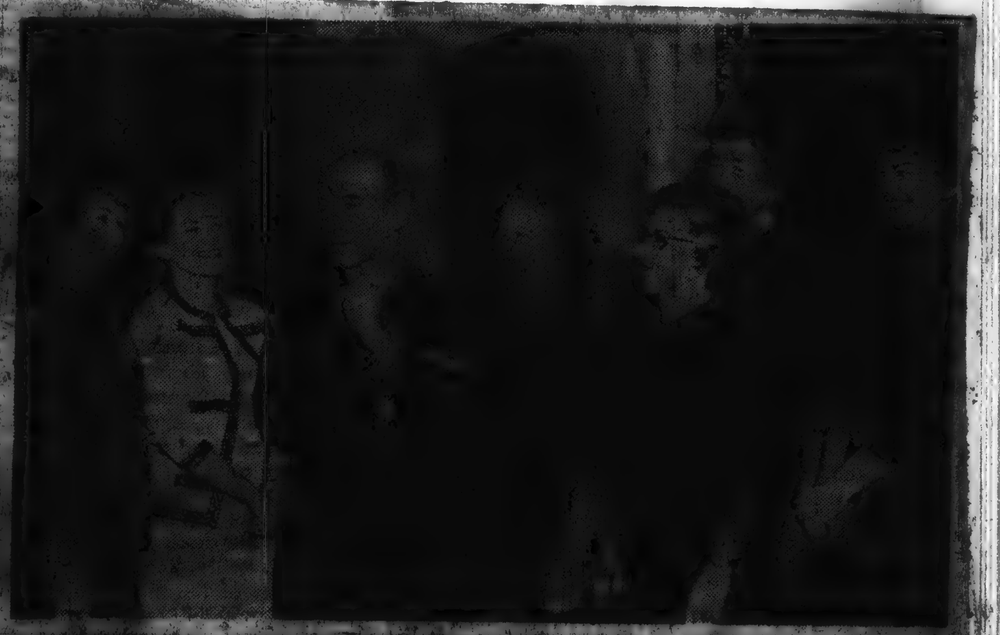
Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Chestnut Hill is in charge of reservations at Symphony Hall and in order to insure excellent arrangements for the Framingham students, one week (that of April 29) has been set to finalize plans for the 1963-64 season. Blocks of seats for the various towns, are reserved on a first come, first served basis and in view of the fact that the concerts are always over-subscribed, Framingham wishes to be among the first to apply.

With the approval of Supt. Albert G. Reilley and the Music Departments of the schools, these concerts are available to students in the fifth grade through high school. Starting at 11 a.m. on a Saturday morning and lasting for approximately one hour, these are three concerts for a total charge of $4. Framingham has selected the second series the dates of which are Nov. 9, Jan. 11 and March 7.

Notices and an application will be distributed this week through the schools and on Friday morning, May 2, arrangements have been made to have someone at each school to receive the applications and payment for the series.

It is hoped that many more Framingham families will permit their children to avail themselves of this fine opportunity to introduce them to this delightful approach to classical music.

Co-Chairman for Framingham are Mrs. Frederick White and Mrs. Ernest Jardine have attended organization meetings at Symphony Hall in recent weeks planning the concerts for next season and would be happy to furnish additional information to any interested persons.



PREPARATIONS FOR A NEW SEASON of the highly successful Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston are discussed by conductor Erich Leinsdorf and co-chairmen from various towns, pictured above (left to right) as follows: Mrs. Harry Brenner, Walpole; Mrs. Ralph Pope, Jr., Milton; Conductor Leinsdorf, Mrs. Frederick White, Framingham; Mrs. Max Horchman, Norwood; Mrs. Abbott Reed, Weston; and Mrs. Ernest Jardine, Framingham. Mrs. White and Mrs. Jardine are the Framingham area co-chairmen. (Lenscraft Photos)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,117
JAN 2 1 1963

Youth Concert In Boston Sat.

The second Youth Concert of the season will be given at Symphony Hall, Boston at 11 a.m. on Saturday when Miss Joela Jones, 16-year old pianist, will appear with Harry Ellis Dickson and 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The bus for Natick subscribers to the concert will leave from Coolidge Junior High at 9:30 a.m., from Brown School at 9:40 and from Wilson Junior High at 9:50. This program is sponsored by the Natick Music Association.

The theme for Saturday's concert will be "Variations in Music". Miss Jones, whose father is supervisor of music in Miami, Florida, public schools will perform "Variations on a Nursery Rhyme". She has been termed capable of becoming "the world's greatest pianist," and is presently a student at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y.

The program will also include "Variations of a Theme of Haydn" by Brahms, the fourth movement of "Six Pieces for Orchestra" by Webern and the Finale of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8.

Tickets for the Youth Concerts are sold in series only, but single admissions are often available at the box office on the mornings of concerts since some subscribers return their tickets at the last moment.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
MAY 28 1962

Concert Series Offered Students

Quincy students in grades five through eight may attend three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next year in field trips sponsored by the school administration.

The symphony will present three Saturday morning concerts for youngsters on Nov. 3, 1962, Jan. 19, 1963 and March 30, 1963. Parents sending their children to the concerts will buy a three-concert ticket for $4 and 90-cent bus fare. The school pays part of the bus expense.

Mrs. Harriette Goldman of 35 Whitney Road, Quincy, is chairman for the Quincy school participation. Students today brought home an application for the concert series, which must be returned to the school by this Friday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JAN 20 1963

2600 Pack Hall For Second of Youth Concerts

Some 2,600 elementary and high shool students from throughout the state yesterday filled Symphony Hall to hear the second in a series of three youth concerts.

Conducting his group of Boston Symphony musicians was Harry Ellis Dickson. The program was devoted to illustrations of variations by composers ranging from Beethoven and Brahms to the contemporary Caillet and the late Anton Webern.

A highlight of the program was the teen-aged pianist, Miss Joela Jones, who was soloist in "variations on a nursery rhyme for piano and orchestra" by Dohnanyi.

Each program is given in two concerts. A repeat performance will be given next Saturday at 11 a.m.

198

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
JAN 22 1963

School Men Uphold Policy On Concerts

Two School Dept. officials hit back sharply Monday at criticisms that a "silly" school committee rule is depriving the city's public school pupils from enjoying the Youth Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concerts are held at Symphony Hall and, of the 2900 young people in attendance last Saturday, an estimated 20 were from Boston.

The villain in the piece, according to Elliot Norton, Record American and Sunday Advertiser drama critic, is a rule which bars teachers from selling tickets for any paid event. (Norton revealed the story in his column appearing on P. 25.)

Joseph Trongone, acting director of music in the Boston schools, rapped those who called the rule "silly."

CAN'T SELL TICKETS

"That's unfair," he declared. "What they are trying to do is make ticket sellers out of teachers. They came to us last year and asked us to sell tickets to three concerts for a total price of $1.50.

"We can't have our teachers taking time out from their work to sell tickets. Children in Boston get more culture out of good music than do the children in any suburban area around here.

"And we can't ask our teachers to give up their Saturdays to accompany children to Symphony Hall on the MTA. In the suburbs, which are smaller, buses are hired to take the children to the hall, but it wouldn't be feasible here, because a bus would have to travel all over the city picking up children."

School Committeeman Joseph Lee said Boston has its own music appreciation program—and it's a good one.

TWO CONCERTS GIVEN

"All the children in Boston schools take part in cultural programs of one type or another," he declared. "We have an excellent music appreciation program, in which talented musicians are brought right into the schools from time to time. And a couple of times a year the School Dept. has its own Youth Symphony. Two concerts are given at Jordan Hall and each one is packed."

Dr. Frederick J. Gillis, superintendent of schools, said that teachers are allowed to collect funds for such causes as the United Fund and the March of Dimes, but maintained that this is vastly different from selling tickets to a concert.

He said the youth programs at Symphony Hall are excellent, but asked:

"If we allow soliciting of their tickets in the classroom, what about other groups that are equally worthwhile? Where do you draw the line?"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
JAN 22 1963

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Silly Boston Rule Bans Students From Concerts

There were students of 55 communities at Symphony Hall Saturday morning to enjoy their usual happy, hearty way the second program, an admirable one, in the series of Boston Symphony Orchestra Youth oncerts, an admirable series. Among 2900 young patrons there were, however, only 20 from the Boston schools. That's most unforunate, and the Boston School Committee rule which is responsible is most unwise.

Our School Committee, it appears, will not allow school teachers, or anyone else, to recruit their pupils for this activity. The result is that you ngsters from all the other cities and towns of eastern Massachusetts are given a privilege which should belong primarily to those of Boston.

Elliot Norton

Nobody benefits from these youth concerts but the children. They are operated on a non-profit basis. They are educational in every sense of the word. The young patrons are given the extraordinary opportunity to see and hear one of the great orchestras of the world, our own, in programs especially prepared for them, with informative commentaries and explanations by Harry Ellis Dickson, who conducts.

These are not cute kiddie concerts, designed to amuse little ones. Although some mothers unwisely take small children, the programs are devised for high schoolers, to give them an insight into the pleasures of concert-going.

What they get, in terms of music, is nothing short of magnificent. In the entire world, there are not more than four cities, at the most, with such an orchestra. Nowhere could they hear the music and musical techniques played more brilliantly or explained with more lucid commentary.

There is no financial need for the support of the Boston pupils; nobody needs them to balance the budget. In this, the fourth season, all the concerts were sold out before the year began and, as was true last year, every program is being repeated twice.

But there should be a preponderance of Boston pupils, not a mere 20. Our students of the right age should, if they have an interest, be encouraged to go. They are not. They are denied the chance by ancient rules which appear to apply in no other school community.

The rules, which bar any solicitation for any paid event, are obviously well intended. School children should be protected from many of the ticket-pedlars who would like to get their dollars. But it is nonsense to hamper their access to concerts like these.

The same silly rules were involved last week for a theatrical attraction which many Boston students would have found enjoyable and instructive.

RULES INVOKED

When the producer of the unique dramatic entertainment called "The Hollow Crown" asked to be allowed to invite Boston school students to see it at the Wilbur Theater at 90 cents apiece he was denied permission. The rules forbade it.

"There was no "catch," no trick involved. No student would have been dragooned into attending. But the manager wanted to let those who might enjoy it hear about the student rate. He wasn't allowed to do it—not in Boston. In Washington, yes; in Washington, the week before, hundreds of school children enjoyed "The Hollow Crown."

In a thousand American communities school boards are eager to cooperate with any play to help children see and hear music and drama of the right kind.

Not in Boston, though.

The New Boston is still run in many departments, by the old rules, which no longer apply.

The New Boston is still frightened of the political tricksters, who have done most to keep us from getting into the 20th century.

The New Boston is going to have new buildings, some of them handsome; new roads, many of them ugly and dangerous, but no new forward spirit of cultural adventure.

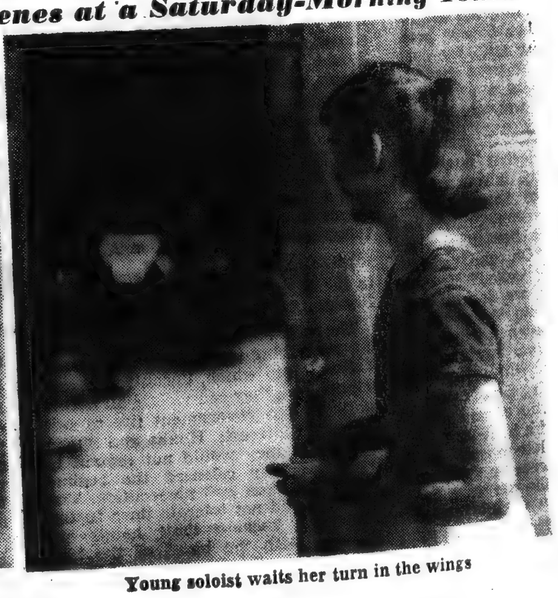
Not if the School Committee can help it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
FEB 23 1968

Scenes at a Saturday-Morning Youth Concert in Boston

By Jim Hughes, Staff Photographer

Eager ticket buyers storm Symphony Hall box office



Young soloist waits her turn in the wings

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Where can you find a better audience than this?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

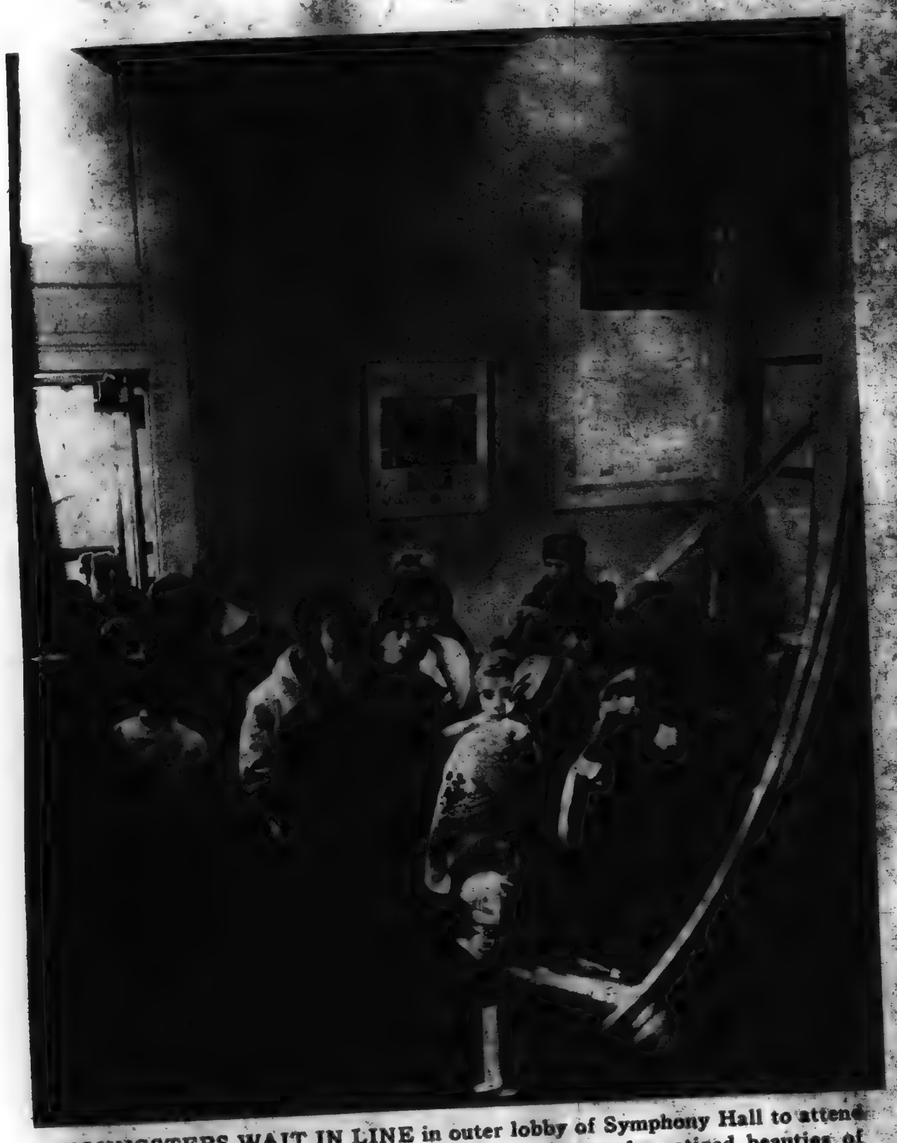
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

FEB 17 1963

199

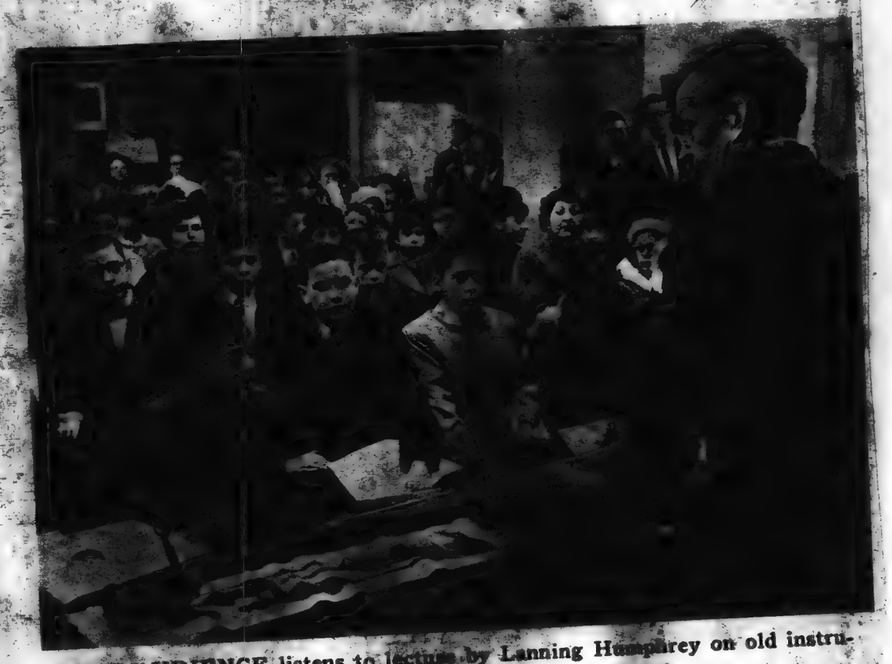
Music Hits High Note With Youngsters

YOUTH AND MUSIC had its date as some 2,600 elementary and high school students from throughout Massachusetts filled Symphony Hall to hear the second in a series of three youth concerts. This program was devoted to Music of Celebrations by composers from Beethoven and Brahms to the contemporary Cailliet and the late Anton Webern. Harry Ellis Dickson conducted the group of Boston Symphony musicians. Each program is given in two concerts.



YOUNGSTERS WAIT IN LINE in outer lobby of Symphony Hall to attend second in series of three youth concerts. Program dramatized beauties of music from time of Beethoven to present.

A WEALTH of old and odd instruments were examined by some of the young music lovers at Symphony Hall.



RAPT AUDIENCE listens to lecture by Lanning Humphrey on old instruments. His talk was given prior to opening of the concert.

IN UPPER BALCONY, attentive listeners are Joseph O'Donnell and son, Billy, 4, of Winchester.

INTENT YOUTH listens to opening of the concert.

200

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
OCT 21 1962

CONCERT CALENDAR

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, who conducts his fourth season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall beginning with Saturday mornings, Nov. 3 and 10, at 10:15.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
MAR 24 1963

Youth Concert Finale

This season's Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall will be brought to a close by their founder and conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson, on Saturday mornings, March 30 and April 6.

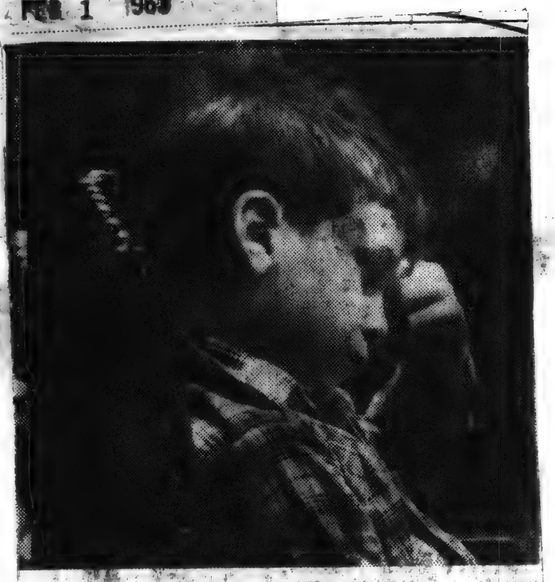
Joining with Mr. Dickson's usual large ensemble of Boston Symphony players will be members of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony, trained by Michael Rabin, and a combined school vocal ensemble drawn from the chorus of the Catholic Memorial High School and the Archbishop Williams High School in presenting the chorale finale of Beethoven's 9th Symphony.

Soloists will be four professional singers: Leslie Looslik Eleanor Davis, William Flavin and John Ring.

Peter Williams of Natick, auditions winner, will be heard with the Symphony players in the first movement of Beethoven's First Concerto, and the program will also include Brahams Academic Festival Overture and Debussy's "Festivals."

The same program will be presented on the two Saturdays of March 30 and April 6 at the regular time of eleven to twelve o'clock. It will be repeated at one o'clock on the sixth, under the sponsorship of the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation by invitation to less privileged boys and girls.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
FEB 1 1963



Bored

Tired

Interested?

THIS YOUNGSTER at the Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall seems completely bored by the proceeding. In the top photo. The boredome changes to downright sleepiness in the center, but has music soothed and won him over in the bottom photo.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
BURLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,500
NOV 8 1962

First Youth Symphony An Outstanding Success

The first Young People's concert of a series of three given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was attended by almost 50 Burlington students. From any point of view the concert was highly successful, and judging from the young people's reactions, was quite a lot of fun. The B. S. O. members performed with their usual competency.

Unfortunately, many children who wanted to go were unable to do so since the series is a complete sellout and no additional tickets are available until next years series. Mrs. E. W. Markow the local chairman for these concerts, offers her personal regrets to those who were disappointed in not being able to attend.

Chaperones included Mrs. Andruske, Mrs. Granfield, and Mrs. Markow. Special commendation should be made of the excellent manner in which all of the young people conducted themselves. There was not one unhappy incident.

Aside from the two remaining B. S. O. Young People's Concerts in Boston, the P. T. A. Council is planning a special children's performance in Burlington during the month of January. More details will be reported regarding program content and time as information becomes available.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
NOV 4 1962

Dickson Begins Fourth Youth Concerts Season

YOUTH CONCERTS at Symphony Hall began their fourth season yesterday, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. First program, "Meet the Boston Symphony Family": Mendelssohn: Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Beethoven: Rondo, Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein soloist; Mozart: Symphonie Concertante in E-flat, finale, soloists: John Holmes, oboe; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; Charles Yancich, horn; Ernst Panenka, bassoon; Milhaud: Concerto for Percussion, soloist Arthur Press; Handel: Organ Concerto No. 2, first movement, soloist Berj Zamkochian; Ibert: Divertissement.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Harry Ellis Dickson and an orchestra of Boston Symphony players began yesterday morning the fourth season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. Days before the event, the placards outside Symphony Hall had been pasted over with Sold Out signs. This in itself, is indication of how successful these concerts, and how large their public, have become.

The present season will follow usual courses: a total of six concerts, one program for each two, presented on Saturday mornings in week-apart pairs. Next will be Saturday, Nov. 10; after that, Jan. 19 and 26, Mar. 30 and Apr. 6.

As before, the audience of youngsters represented yesterday a rather wide age-spread, from what appeared to be junior high schoolers down to lap-sized moppets. Although the frightful racket that children can make broke loose the moment the concert was over, all hands were pretty well-behaved during the hour or so of music.

This last proves the excellent tact and skill of Dickson in talking to children and keeping their attention. It is all simple ,seldom with too-big words, never talking-down in a sentimentalized or prissified manner; always with dignity and friendliness and always with an adult's authority.

The initial program, to be repeated next Saturday, was entitled "Meet the Boston Symphony Family" and consisted largely of concerto movements in which single and joined solo talents could shine. The first was that of the Boston Symphony's new concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, in a delightfully sensitive performance of the rondo from the Beethoven Violin Concerto.

Mozart's Symphonie Concertante gave scope for Holmes, Cardillo, Yancich and Panenka to show how lovely woodwinds and horn can sound. Arthur Press provided a dazzling show of quick-change and rhythmic virtuosity with the 14 instruments the soloist is required to manipulate in Milhaud's Concerto for Percussion.

Then Berj Zamkochian, to inform that the Symphony Hall organ occupies the width of a city block and the height of 4½ stories (something I didn't know!), and to play the instrument (most dexterously even in the pedal cadenza) in Handel's bright concerto excerpt. For all hands: much, much applause.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
DEC 5 1962

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Superb 'Youth Concert' Starts New Hub Series

Of course, the first of this season's Youth Symphony Concerts was a hit. They all are—and deserve to be. The music is great, the orchestra is the Boston Symphony—which is the greatest. Harry Ellis Dickson, who knows music and what young people like, conducts. All the seats are always full, and the audience of young people is admirable.

Naturally, some of them squirm and fidget. An occasional moppet keeps time with his feet, or imitates the French horn with a rolled-up program. Not many, though. By and large, they are wonderfully attentive and responsive.

Elliot Norton

It would be a great thing for the theater in Boston if we could borrow a few hundred for our first nights.

Under the chairmanship of E. Anthony Kutten, with a board of eminent associates, the Youth Symphony Concerts were inaugurated in '59, to make great music available and comprehensible to young people who might otherwise not have the opportunity to hear it "live."

The children are recruited from schools and from settlement houses. Most of them come in buses, from all towns and cities in this area and, obviously, from many backgrounds. This is a genuinely democratic enterprise.

3 CONCERTS A YEAR

There are three concerts each year and since the demand for seats is so great, each concert is repeated. That of last Saturday will be offered again next Saturday morning.

What the young people get to hear is a program shrewdly chosen to hold their interest, played by the full symphony orchestra or as many members as the music requires. There are no substitute musicians, no stand-bys; what these fortunate children hear is the Boston Symphony, which is so celebrated in the world of music that whenever it plays away from home, anywhere from Moscow to Tokyo, people stand in line for hours for the privilege of buying tickets.

This, of course, is a good reason for the unqualified success of these concerts, and it is a further reason why they are so important to the community, and for the future of music here. The school children who attend are being exposed to the best, under the most favorable auspices. If home, perhaps, do not respond, that is unfortunate; there are children and adults, too, to whom great music does not and cannot mean anything. But what a wonderful experience for most of them, and what pleasures it may open up for them!

MEET SOLOISTS

The first concert of Saturday last introduced the listeners to music of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart and Handel, among the classical standard composers and to brightly unusual modern pieces by Darius Milhaud and Jacques Ibert.

At the same time, they met soloists of the orchestra, some of whom explained briefly just what their part was to be in a given composition.

There is no attempt at anything so formal as a music lesson. "But each piece of music is described and identified in advance, and the young audience is advised about what to listen for.

On Saturday, they seemed to be fascinated by everything, from the fairy music of Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," to the frantic prankishness of Ibert's "Divertissement," which includes a made piano passage—they loved that! — and the noise of a big parade, heard first in the distance, then passing, then receding.

WOWED BY ORGANIST

Perhaps the most spectacular show, one which had some of the eager ones in the balcony hanging over the rail, was a performance of Handel's Concerto for Organ, No. 2, in B-flat, played by Berj Zamkochian, who first explained the enormous size and almost incredible magic of the Symphony Hall organ, then played it brilliantly—and played one cadenza legitimately with his feet. ("Look, Ma—no hands!"). That produced stunned attention and almost hysterical applause.

In the Finale from Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the fortunate concertgoers heard Joseph Silverstein, new concertmaster of the orchestra. Before the Mozart Symphonie Concertante (all these terms were, of course, explained to them) they met, then heard from John Holmes, Pasqualie Cardillo, Charles Yancich and Ernest Panenka, the virtuosi who played it.

It is worth emphasizing that none of these musicians condescends to the special audience. Not for a moment; they speak and play at their best—which is incomparable.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
APR 8 1963

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Dandy Audience Hear Last Youth Concert Here

The last two Youth Concerts of the season were given at Symphony Hall Saturday. The second was remarkable in many ways, on the stage and in the auditorium. The second was played, as are all the others in this impressive series, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

Elliot Norton

But they were not alone this time, at least not in the final music. In that, they were joined by members of Marvin Rabin's Youth Symphony Orchestra, along with soloists and a costumed chorus of 200 high school students for the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The Symphony players, who rank with the world's best, sat side by side, chair for chair, with the student musicians, who played their hearts out. There are no laggards among them; the impression they created was good.

The impression created by the young people in the auditorium was also good. For this concert, they were all guests of the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation, a benevolent organization dedicated to providing, in this case, great music without charge to great young people who couldn't otherwise afford it.

These listeners came from settlement houses in the Greater Boston area and, more than a few, from hospitals.

200 HANDICAPPED THERE

Boston policemen, who can behave admirably where youngsters are involved, helped bring in about 200 in wheel chairs, or on crutches.

You can be sure that these handicapped ones got the best seats. For them the first two rows of chairs were taken out. They had places of vantage and of honor.

Although some of the young auditors professed in a show of hands to have heard symphony concerts before, at least half indicated that this was a totally new experience. They listened respectfully when Conductor Dickson described each of the four selections which were to be played, laughed when the musicians popped up big and little instruments for them to identify, and when they were told to "sit back, relax and enjoy the music," did just that.

For this concert, as for the others, the musicians play nothing obscure. Nor do they impose inordinately long selections on the audience. On the other hand, they make no silly concessions. The music they offer is great music, greatly played. The experience for the young listeners is a great experience.

To watch them respond to it is, for the adult observer, quite an experience too.

That they are well behaved is a credit to the unselfish men and women who escort them. That they are—most of them—completely engrossed in what they hear is proof enough that they are deeply moved.

Some of them are "exceptional" children, but they are all boys and girls, which means they can't sit still for very long. Harry Dickson keeps down the length of some selections to 10 minutes. After the first number, he urged them to "stand and stretch the way the musicians do." They enjoyed that. They began to understand that such a concert should not be a duty, to be performed grimly, but a source of enjoyment.

BACKERS LAUDED

Those who have a hand in preparing these concerts are doing something of incalculable importance for every youngster lucky enough to attend and, in a very good sense, for the entire Greater Boston community.

They select the programs with intelligent care, making sure that what is played is meaningful. They are providing a generation of boys and girls with an impetus to enjoyment which will very likely enrich their lives.

In an age that emphasizes physical sensation as the sole source of pleasure, they are making it possible for their patrons to understand that there are other kinds of enjoyment.

To hear great music greatly played and to enjoy it fully it is necessary to be present when it is being made. Although the manufacturers are producing better and better records, no record of a concert is as satisfactory as the performance itself. Except for the Youth Concerts, thousands of young people would never know this, for it is a proposition that cannot be proved on paper.

Of course, the school children of Boston will not be able to learn and to enjoy it next year, because our school committee still cares nothing about music. But great congregations of boys and girls from nearby cities and towns will have the privilege.

UNVEILING A WASHINGTON CULTURAL CENTER MODEL

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

SEP 12 1962

SEP 12 1962

First Lady Unveils Culture Center Model

Washington Project to Cost 30 Million —Drive Opens

By ARTHUR GELB
Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 11—A drastically revised model for the National Cultural Center in Washington was unveiled today by Mrs. John F. Kennedy.

Mrs. Kennedy, who serves as honorary co-chairman of the center with Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower, asked for nation-wide support of the project.

Introduced to an audence of 300 by Roger L. Stevens, board chairman of the center, Mrs. Kennedy said she wished people throughout the country could see the model and hoped it would be sent on tour.

The ceremony was attended by celebrities from the arts, television cameramen and as many millionaires as could be packed into the ballroom of one of this town's fabled estates. Only Leonard Berstein's last-minute failure to appear sounded a dissappointing note for fund raisers who had gathered from thirty-one cities to give the models their blessing.

The conductor of the Philharmonic, who was to introduce Mrs. Kennedy, sent word that he had accidentally cut his lip and would be unable to deliver his speech.

The center, envisioned as the first effective home for the performing arts in the nation's capital, has been considerably reduced in scope by Edward Durell Stone from the original design he drew up in 1959.

Although several expensive features have been dropped, the white marble building still promises to be elaborate. It will include a 1,200-seat theatre, a 2,750-seat symphony hall and a 2,500-seat hall for opera, musical comedy and ballet.

All-Purpose Area

A roof garden with a retractable ceiling will house two restaurants and an area that can be converted into a theatre-in-the-round, a ballroom, an art gallery, a band stadium or an amusement arena for children whose parents are attending matinees downstairs.

Unlike New York's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, which will provide homes for the Metropolitan Opera Company, the Philharmonic and a new repertory company, the Washington project will have no permanent tenants. It will be used for visiting groups from all over the country and abroad.

Mr. Stone said he had scrapped his first models to comply with the financial specifications of the center's recently strengthened board of directors.

The directors maintained that the $75,000,000 needed to carry out the first plan was "too grandiose." The money, which must be privately subscribed, according to a Congressional ruling, could not be raised.

The current design calls for a "practical budget," $30,000,000. Center officials believe the money can be raised in time to start construtcion next year on a thirteen-acre site on the east bank of the Potomac. The $12,000,000 site, donated by Congress, is not far from the Lincoln Memorial and overlooks Theodore Roosevelt Island, a bird sanctuary.

The building will be 630 feet long and 300 feet wide and will rise 100 feet from a terraced plaza; it was deliberately designed eighteen inches lower than the Lincoln Memorial to avoid dwarfing it. Underground parking facilities will be provided for 1,500 cars. Construction is expected to be completed at the end of 1965.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Mrs. John F. Kennedy walks past model of National Culture Center. With her is Edward Durrell Stone, who drew the plans for the center, to be built on east bank of Potomac.

Pleased With Changes

Mr. Stone declared before the ceremony that he was pleased to have been forced to revise his plan. Pointing out his pet features on the new model—an exquisitely airy rendering—he said it was more compact and functional than the original, which called for a huge rotunda and required bulkheads sunk into the Potomac.

Mr. Stone, one of the most venerable and versatile American architects, designed the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the United States Pavilion at the Brussels World's Fair and the United States Embassy in New Delhi.

President Kennedy examined the model here privately on Sunday and was equally enthusiastic. The seven-foot-long model will go by truck to Gettysburg, Pa., on Saturday to be inspected by former President and Mrs. Eisenhower.

The unveiling took place here because Mrs. Kennedy is on vacation at Hammersmith Farm, the home of her stepfather and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss.

The scene of the ceremony was The Elms, the former Edward L. Berwind estate. It was bought recently by the Newport Preservation Society and was converted into a museum last month.

TV Show Scheduled

Some of today's speakers will also appear on a closed-circuit coast-to-coast television show for two hours on Nov. 29. With tickets ranging from $5 to $100, the center expects to raise $5,000,000.

The speakers included Geraldine Page, the actress, and Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony. But the hit of the hour-long ceremony was Danny Kaye.

Mr. Kaye made the audience roar with laughter when he dropped a bashful curtsy to Mrs. Kennedy and commented on how well she and the President looked in bathing suits.

More seriously, he thanked the President and Mrs. Kennedy for leading a cultural movement in the United States and "for making writers, actors, and musicians feel they are ten feet tall."

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 432,953

SEP 29 1962

THE NEW YORKER

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

Notes and Comment

THE absence of Leonard Bernstein, who was suffering from a cut lip, was the only disappointing note relayed from Newport when Mrs. Kennedy there unveiled the model of Washington's new National Cultural Center a week or two ago. The First Lady, Roger L. Stevens (chairman of the project), Geraldine Page, Erich Leinsdorf, and Danny Kaye addressed an audience of some three hundred art patrons who had gathered to admire the model of the building—a six-hundred-and-thirty-foot structure of white marble, which will be raised on the east bank of the Potomac and will contain a twelve-hundred-seat theatre, a twenty-seven-hundred-and-fifty-seat symphony hall, a twenty-five-hundred-seat opera hall, two restaurants, a roof garden, and space for a future theatre-in-the-round, a future band stadium, a future art gallery, and a future children's amusement area.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...URG JOURNAL
...ptember 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...LAKE ENTERPRISE
...ptember 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...RNING LEADER
...September 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...NT VERNON ARGUS
...September 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SALAM... REPUBLICAN PRESS
...ptember 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...NG REPORTER DISPATCH
...September 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

...N CITIZEN REGISTER
...September 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
...day, September 12, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 12 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
SEP 12 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,152
SEP 13 1962

NEWARK EVENING NEWS
NEWARK, N. J.
SEP 12 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TARRYTOWN NEWS
Wednesday, September 12, 1962

Center Model Unveiled by First Lady

By FRANCES LEWINE

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy declared the dream "much closer to reality" as she officially unveiled the gleaming white model of a proposed $30-million national cultural center for Washington.

She said people from all over the country, who come to Washington as tourists, will profit by this marble and glass center for the arts on the banks of the Potomac.

The design, by famed Arkansas-born architect Edward Durell Stone, made its debut yesterday amid the ballroom splendor of "The Elms," a museum and relic of a bygone era of Newport society.

Because Mrs. Kennedy, honorary cochairman of the center, is on an extended vacation here, the trustees, and advisory committee and backers and artists—some 300 strong—made the trek to Newport from 35 cities across the coumutury. They heard Stone predict the center would be built by late 1965 or early 1966.

In a brief teatime appearance at "The Elms," Mrs. Kennedy told them it would be wonderful if the center could become a reality by a clap of the hands, but "the heroic task" of raising the $30 million would be theirs.

Comedian Danny Kaye, actress Geraldine Page and Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf voiced high hopes for the center and viewed it as a symbol of Washington's commitment to things of the spirit as well as things political.

Architect Stone detailed the flat-roofed, 630-foot-long white marble center as housing all of the performing arts in one building "for the first time in history"—a 1,200-seat theatre, a 2,750-seat symphony hall and a 500-seat hall for opera, musical comedy and ballet.

LINCOLN CENTER

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

OCT - 6 1962

W E D CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApital 6-4044

New Start For Boston

OF ALL THE conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings as well. This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority.

To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step. Leading the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor.

And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For, in an interesting alteration of pattern, the Boston management has exchanged an improviser for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

A methodical man, too, in his approach to the problems of his craft, Leinsdorf learned Italian at an early age because he deemed it a prerequisite for a man who aspired to conduct opera, his first love. And, as those who believe with Branch Rickey (of the baseball world) that "luck is the residue of design", that knowledge provided him with an access to the favor of Arturo Toscanini when a knotty rehearsal problem arose at a Salzburg Festival some 25 years ago, and the eager Leinsdorf, not much out of his 'teens, had the linguistic as well as the musical talents to "jump".

Since that time, Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Arthur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr, and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

Since then he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City Center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston.

—I. K.

AL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Friday, September 21, 1962

Eric Leinsdorf

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,148,219

SEP 13 1962

Added Starter

The overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," has been added to the program for the special benefit performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall on Sept. 24.

* * *

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418

MAY 20 1962

TICKETS GO ON SALE FOR LINCOLN CENTER

Approximately 15,000 tickets for ten of the opening week concerts at Lincoln Center were announced for public sale today. Prices range from $1 for three afternoon concerts to $100 for a parquet seat for the opening benefit concert on Sunday evening, Sept. 23.

The concerts will take place at the new Philharmonic Hall. On Sunday, Sept. 23 and Wednesday, Sept. 26 there will be evening concerts by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein's direction. The Boston Symphony, under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, will perform on Monday, Sept. 24. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelpiha Orchestra the following night. George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra will play on Thursday, Sept. 27, and on Saturday and Sunday nights the Metropolitan Opera will give a concert performance of Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida" under Ernest Ansermet's direction.

There will be a three low-priced afternoon concerts during the week. The New York Pro Musica will play on Wednesday, Sept. 26 at 5:30. The Julliard Quartet will be heard on Friday, Sept. 28, also at 5:30. The duo pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale will be heard on Saturday, Sept. 29 at 3.

Tickets for these concerts can be obtained from Philharmonic Hall, Box 10, New York 23.

AN EARLY GUEST AT PHILHARMONIC HALL is Erich L dorf, the Boston Symphony's new conductor (above), leads the orchestra for the first time here during one week. The auditorium (left) is photographed from a mo

by Christie Bar

ALL THAT remains now at Philharmonic Hall are finishing touches—the last few daubs of paint, taking up of the drop cloths and the laying of the heavy gold carpet over which the Lincoln Cent opening night audience will file to its seats, Sunday, S 23. On that night, thanks to CBS Television and Corning Glass, the nation will join that audience in welcoming th New York Philharmonic to its new home. Leonard Bern stein will conduct. Two of the city's leading choruses— Hugh Ross's Schola Cantorum and Abraham Kaplan's Juilliard Chorus—will sing. A dozen vocal soloists will waiv their fees, as will the others in subsequent concerts, to cele brate the orchestra's move from Postal Zone 19 to number 23. And Aaron Copland's "Connotations," specially com missioned in honor of the Philharmonic's inaugural season at the new address, will be performed for the first time. The following evening, the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will pay their respects, with John Browning as soloist in the premiere of a new piano concerto by Samuel Barber.

Seats for the gala opening, the first in a week-long series of benefit performances, are still available at a gala $100 a head. Tickets for the BSO may likewise still be had at $20 to $30, though the program by the visiting orchestra will be broadcast in full by WQXR for the benefit of those whose voluntary and involuntary tax deductions seem to them excessive at this point.

24

LINCOLN CENTER

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
OCT - 6 1962
047

W E D
CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApitol 6-4044

New Start For Boston

ALL THE conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings as well. This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority.

To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step. Leading the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor.

And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket, which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For in the interesting alteration of players, the Boston management has exchanged an improviser for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

A methodical man, too, in his approach to the problems of his craft, Leinsdorf learned Italian at an early age because he deemed it a prerequisite for a man who aspired to conduct opera, his first love. And, as those who believe with Branch Rickey (of the baseball world) that "luck is the residue of design", that knowledge provided him with an access to the favor of Arturo Toscanini when a knotty rehearsal problem arose at a Salzburg Festival some 25 years ago, and the eager Leinsdorf, not much out of his teens, had the linguistic as well as the musical talents to "jump".

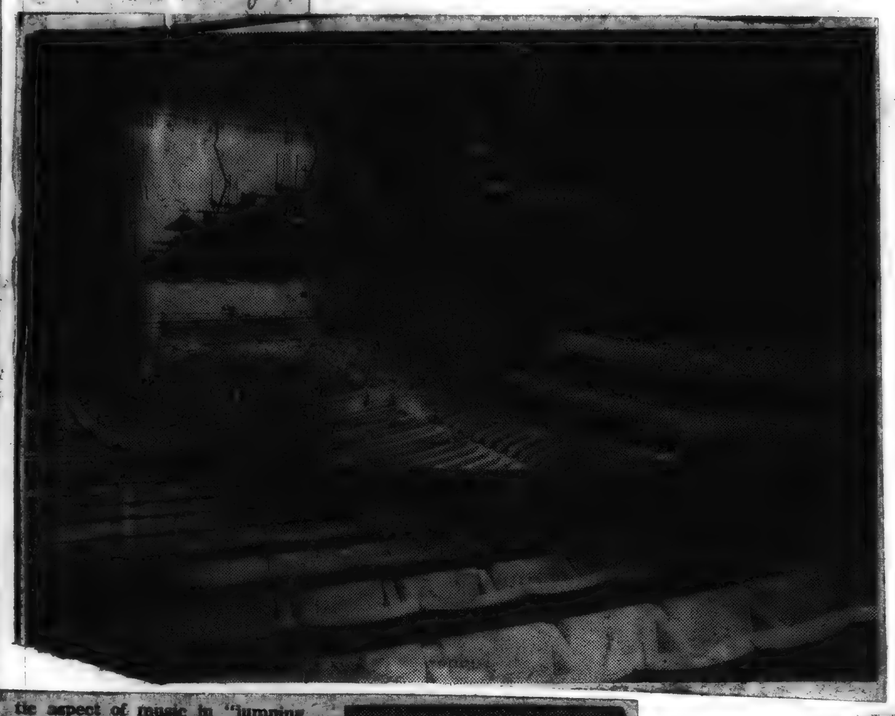
Since that time, Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Arthur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr, and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

Since then he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City Center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston.

—I. K.

AL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Friday, September 21, 1962
047



Eric Leinsdorf

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,148,218
SEP 13 1962

Added Starter

The overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," has been added to the program for the special benefit performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall on Sept. 24.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 880,265 S. 1,306,418
MAY 20 1962

TICKETS GO ON SALE FOR LINCOLN CENTER

Approximately 16,000 tickets for ten of the opening week concerts at Lincoln Center were announced for public sale today. Prices range from $1 for three afternoon concerts to $100 for a parquet seat for the opening benefit concert on Sunday evening, Sept. 23.

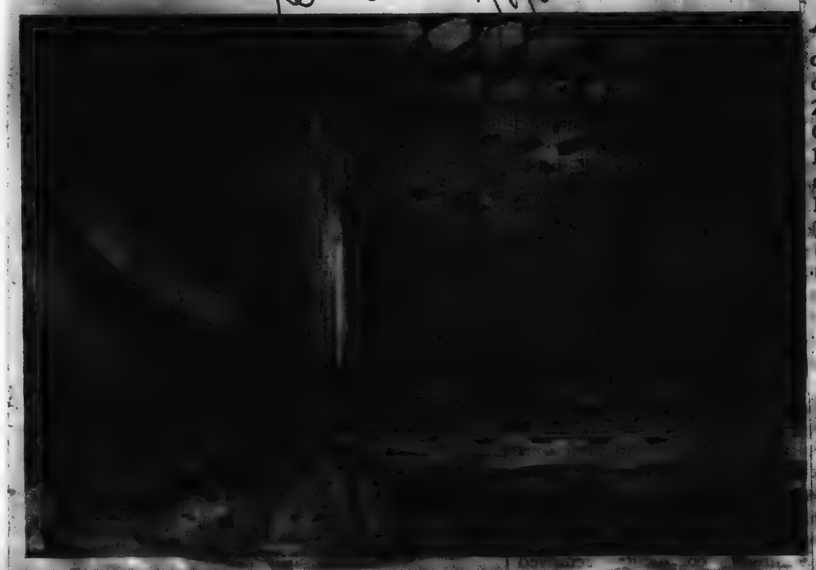
The concerts will take place at the new Philharmonic Hall. On Sunday, Sept. 23 and Wednesday, Sept. 26 there will be evening concerts by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein's direction. The Boston Symphony, under its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, will perform on Monday, Sept. 24. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelpiha Orchestra the following night. George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra will play on Thursday, Sept. 27, and on Saturday and Sunday nights the Metropolitan Opera will give a concert performance of Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida" under Ernest Ansermet's direction.

There will be a three low-priced afternoon concerts during the week. The New York Pro Musica will play on Wednesday, Sept. 26 at 5:30. The Julliard Quartet will be heard on Friday, Sept. 28, also at 5:30. The duo pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale will be heard on Saturday, Sept. 29 at 3.

Tickets for these concerts can be obtained from Philharmonic Hall, Box 10, New York 23.

AN EARLY GUEST AT PHILHARMONIC HALL is Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony's new conductor (above), who leads the orchestra for the first time here during opening week. The auditorium (left) is photographed from a mod...

Newsweek 9/1/62

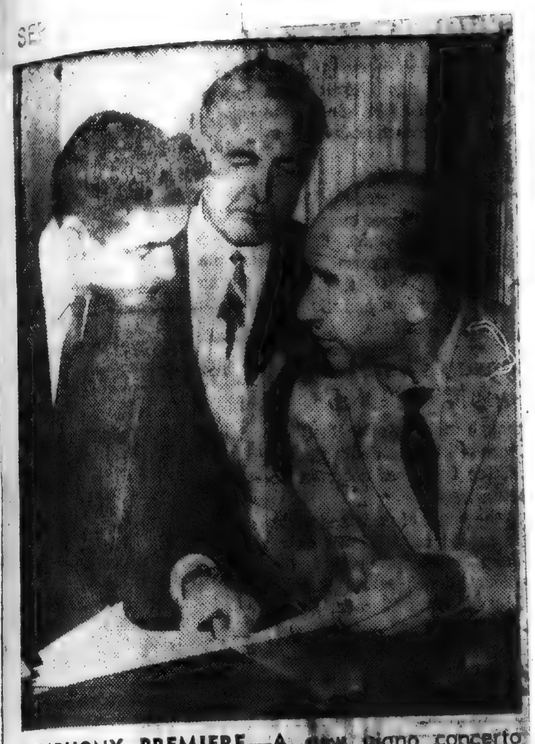


by Christie Barte

As to what remains now at Philharmonic Hall are the finishing touches—the last few dabs of paint, the taking up of the drop cloths and the laying down of the heavy gold carpet over which the Lincoln Center opening night audience will file to its seats, Sunday, Sept. 23. On that night, thanks to CBS Television and Corning Glass, the nation will join the audience in welcoming the New York Philharmonic to its new home. Leonard Bernstein will conduct. Two of the city's leading choruses—Hugh Ross's Schola Cantorum and Abraham Kaplan's Juilliard Chorus—will sing. A dozen vocal soloists will waive their fees, as will the others in subsequent concerts, to celebrate the orchestra's move from Postal Zone 19 to number 23. And Aaron Copland's "Connotations," specially commissioned in honor of the Philharmonic's inaugural season at the new address, will be performed for the first time. The following evening, the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will pay their respects, with John [illegible] on the premiere of a new piano concerto by Samuel Barber.

Seats for the gala opening, the first in a week-long series of benefit performances, are still available at a gala $100 a head. Tickets for the BSO may likewise still be had at $20 or $30, though the program by the visiting orchestra will be broadcast in full by WQXR for the benefit of those whose fiduciary and involuntary tax deductions seem to them [illegible] at this point.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,439
SEP



SYMPHONY PREMIERE—A new piano concerto by Samuel Barber, center, will be introduced to Boston by Erich Leinsdorf, right, and the Boston Symphony on Friday. John Browning, left, will be soloist.

Concert Monday in N. Y.

Boston Symphony At Lincoln Center

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been invited to present the second concert tomorrow evening in the week of inaugural programs at Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall in New York City.

This honor comes to the orchestra since it has visited New York City continuously for 77 years, a period longer than any other visiting orchestra.

For this concert Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the world premiere of the Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber. The concerto was commissioned by G. Schirmer & Co. in celebration of its 100th Anniversary. The concert will begin with the first New York concert performance of Prokofiev's Overture to "War and Peace." Also to be heard will be the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

The orchestra will return immediately following the concert and next evening present the first concert in the Tuesday evening series in Symphony Hall.

The first Boston performances of Barber's Piano Concerto with John Browning as soloist will take place at the concerts on Friday and Saturday. These programs will also include Brahms' Variations and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius.

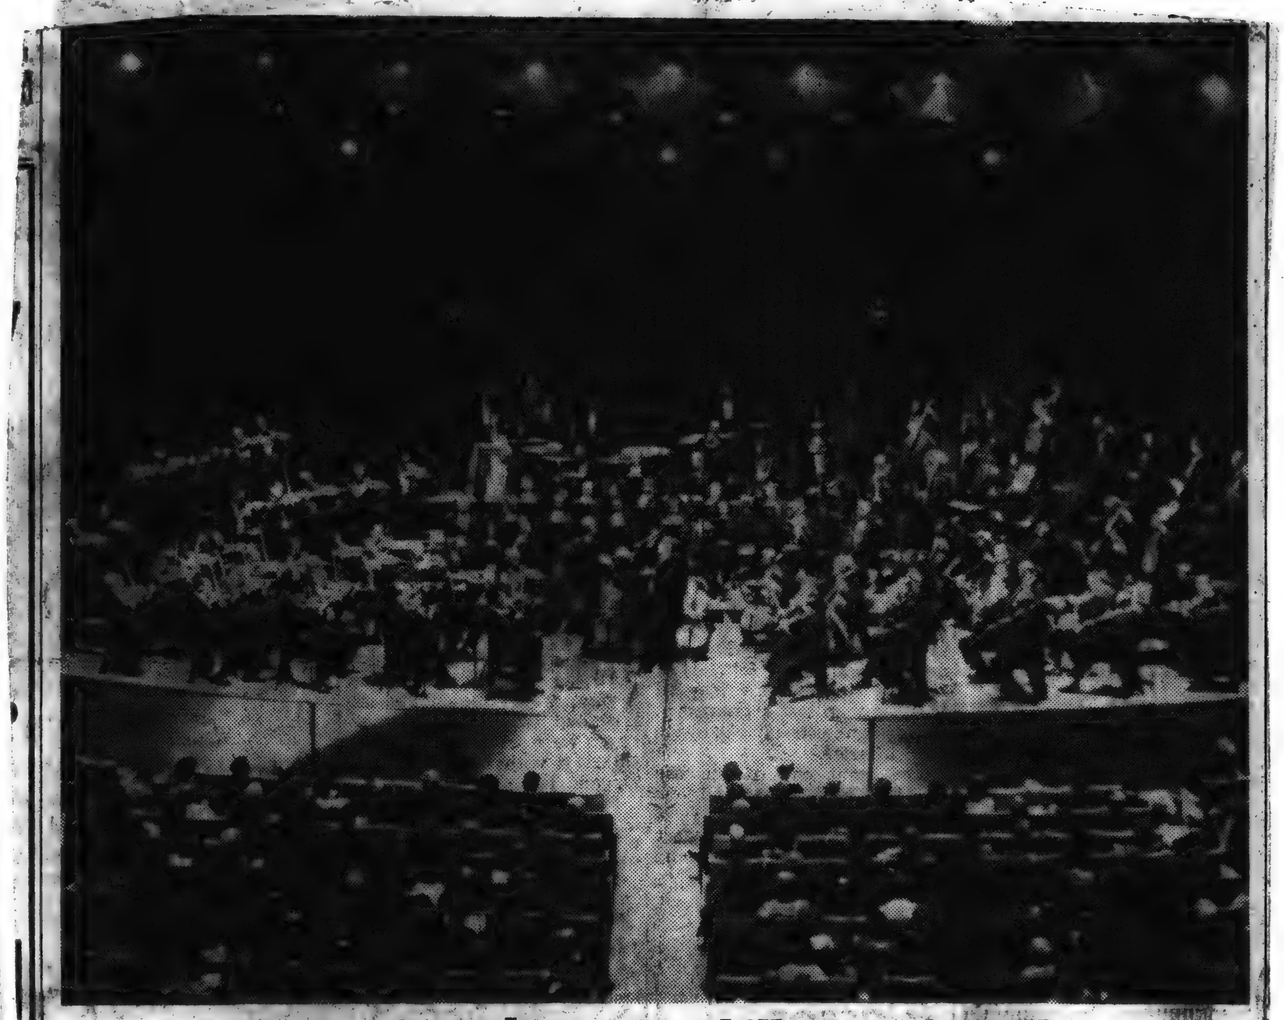
CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 161,388
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
SEP 1 1962

and the second, Nov. 28, featuring the Ninth Symphony, will be conducted by Otto Klemperer who returns to New York after an absence of twenty years.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct all ten of the Boston Symphony concerts at Philharmonic Hall this season, the first pair on Sept. 24 and 25. Though programs are not available, indications are that New Yorkers are in for a treat.

JOHN BROWNING, with the BSO, introduces a new piano concerto by Samuel Barber, Oct. 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
SEP 25 1962



Boston Symphony At Philharmonic Hall

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under direction of Erich Leinsdorf, plays at Philharmonic hall in New York last night. The hall, a unit of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, opened Sunday night.—AP WIREPHOTO.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GLENS FALLS TIMES
Saturday, September 22, 1962

Philharmonic Hall Opening In New York Tomorrow; First of Center's Units

By BILL BINDER

NEW YORK, Sep. 22 (AP)—One of the biggest cultural investments in the nation's history pays its first dividend tomorrow.

Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts opens the doors to Philharmonic Hall, the futuristic new home of the New York Philharmonic and the city's first new orchestral concert hall in 71 years.

For New York, the inaugural concert by the Philharmonic under Conductor Leonard Bernstein will be a gala event. High society in full dress will help make it so.

But it will be only the first of a week's series of concerts and recitals marking the debut of the $15.4 million musical house. The Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland orchestras and the Metropolitan Opera will be among the performers.

As the first completed structure at Lincoln Center, the high-columned, glass-walled Philharmonic Hall is a symbol of much more than just another concert hall. To those who had the dream of a cultural and educational community, Philharmonic Hall is the first evidence of the reality.

From a strictly parochial point of view, it also heralds the resurgence of Manhattan's west side—the victory of redevelopment over slum blight.

The center is located just west of Broadway between 62nd and 66th Sts.

The new home of America's oldest orchestra will have seats upholstered in plush browns and gold, each offering an unobstructed view.

Opening nighters will hear the world premiere of Aaron Copland's "Connotations for Orchestra," commissioned by the Philharmonic.

The Philharmonic will give a second concert Wednesday night, including music by Richard Strauss, Haydn, Vivaldi and Stravinsky.

Monday the Boston Symphony, its new music director Erich Leinsdorf and pianist John Browning will give the premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto.

The next night Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra will present the premiere of Walter Piston's "Lincoln Center Festival Overture," and U.N. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson will narrate Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

Thursday's concert by the Cleveland orchestra under George Szell will offer the New York premiere of Alvin Etler's "Concerto in One Movement," commissioned by the orchestra for its 40th season, 1957-58.

On Saturday, the Metropolitan Opera orchestra and chorus, under Swiss conductor Ernest Ansermet, will give the American premiere of Manuel De Falla's dramatic cantata, "Atlantida."

There will be other concerts by the New York Pro Musica, the Juilliard string quartet, the Juilliard orchestra and the duo-pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale.

By week's end, the critics, and the Lincoln Center fathers, should have a good idea of how the hall sounds under real concert conditions, and whether its unusual system of acoustical panels that hang from the ceiling will have to be modified.

As recently as last June, a quarter of a million dollars had to be spent on the acoustical system when dead spots — in which certain instruments are not as audible as in others—were discovered during tests.

The hall's companion buildings at Lincoln Center are all scheduled to be completed by 1966 at a total cost of $142 million.

At present the center is composed of five constituent institutions—the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, the Metropolitan Opera Association, the Lincoln Repertory Company, the Juilliard School of Music and the New York Public Library, which will run the Library-Museum of the Performing Arts.

Negotiations are pending to bring the New York City Center of Music and Drama into the New York State Theatre.

Four-fifths of the $142 million price tag has already been raised through gifts, pledges and authorizations by private donors and city, state and Federal governments.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
TENNESSEAN
D. 131,339 S. 207,101
SEP 16 1962

The Music Scene

Bernstein To Ir

By LOUIS NICHOLAS

THE THOUGHTS of American music lovers will be directed toward New York City and the opening of the first building in the Lincoln Center complex next Sunday, Sept. 23, when Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic inaugurate Philharmonic Hall.

CBS Television Network will present a special two-hour broadcast of this momentous event. It will be carried locally by WLAC-TV, 8-10 p.m.

It is fortunate for music and for the whole future of Lincoln Center that so distinguished a musician as William Schuman was chosen as its head. He is not only one of our most eminent composers, but a noted educator and administrator, having been president of the Juilliard School of Music for a number of years.

Nicholas

The character of the offerings of the opening week at Philharmonic Hall indicates both the complexion of what may be expected there—though perhaps less concentrated — in the coming years, and also the catholicity of interests that Schuman has, as well as his interest in American composers and performers.

More Top Concerts

Following the Philharmonic's opening concert, there will be concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director; the Philadephia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, music director; another performance of the New York Philharmonic; the Cleveland Orchestra, George Szell, music director; and on Saturday and Sunday evenings the Metropolitan Opera Company will present a program under the direction of Eugene Ansermet.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,654,550

OCT 5 1962

CONDUCTING AT LINCOLN CENTER

The Boston's New Boss

For 13 years, audiences attending the weekly concerts of the Boston Symphony had stared at the unruly, silvering thatch of Conductor Charles Munch, for 25 years before that, the thatch had been that of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Last week, when the Boston appeared at Manhattan's new Philharmonic Hall, the man on the podium was Munch's successor, and in impeccable control of his orchestra. Few who listened doubted that one of the most distinguished eras in the orchestra's history had begun.

Serge Koussevitzky played on the Boston with Slavic fire, kindling it to its best efforts in Russian works or in the epic grandeurs of Beethoven and Sibelius. Charles Munch tuned its voice to the French composers, infusing it with a certain Gallic grace. Leinsdorf, 50, is Viennese-born but internationally bred, and he will presumably make the Boston speak a more international tongue—well-modulated, clear and precise. Although a great orchestra does not change its accent overnight, the Boston played with wonderful clarity and precision last week, responding to Leinsdorf's tick-tock beat with hair-trigger reflexes. The orchestra was installed on risers introduced by Leinsdorf to get a better integrated sound, and it was apparent from front row to rear that the men were emotionally "up" as well as for their new conductor as much as for the new hall.

Controlled Nostalgia: There was scant surprise in Boston when Leinsdorf was appointed Munch's successor; he had already made an excellent impression on both orchestra and public in guest appearances. If there was surprise elsewhere, it was only that he would be willing to give up the opera conducting that has been such an important part of his career. But despite the fact that he had started in opera first at Salzburg, later at the Metropolitan Opera, to which he was invited in 1937, Leinsdorf found when the Boston invitation came that my nostalgia for opera is [illegible]

Control, in fact, has always been a Leinsdorf hallmark and it was continued to be in the few months since he moved with his wife and five children to a Boston suburb. A man who feels "at home in the great classical tradition," he has so far [illegible] to drastic new programming plans, and declines to announce all the programs for this season [illegible] (would this have made "the world a private place of changing my mind"). He would like the Boston to Tanglewood to commission and play more works for small groups for the very practical reason that "more and more far-out composers are writing for small groups now and not for the orthodox string [illegible]"

"Quite a Band." Leinsdorf's extraordinarily rapid ability to assimilate new scores has already amazed his orchestra; a week before he had to lead [illegible] through Samuel Barber's [illegible] Piano Concerto (see above), he had not received a complete score, a hazard he dismissed as being part of "musical tradition." Just before leading the orchestra in Philharmonic Hall, Leinsdorf conducted Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7 in Boston, rehearsing it for the first time purely from memory. Said an astounded Piston: "I wasn't prepared for a man to know my score better than I did."

At the first Leinsdorf rehearsal of the orchestra, according to a visitor, it "played like a million dollars," and its new conductor commented happily: "It's quite a band." Indeed, it is more of a band than Leinsdorf has ever had before: his career with the Cleveland Orchestra, to which he was invited in 1943, was interrupted by the war, and in the postwar years he moved about considerably, from the Rochester [illegible] to the Met to guest conducting all over. The delight of Boston players these days is that in the Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf has at last found an instrument worthy of his great skills.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony at Lincoln Center

AP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at Philharmonic Hall in New York Monday night. Hall, a unit of Lincoln Center for Performing Arts, opened Sunday night with the N.Y. Philharmonic.

By JOHN STUART COX

NEW YORK — Philharmonic Hall, the first of seven monuments to good intentions scheduled for completion at Lincoln Center in the next four years, opened Sunday. Eric Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its music director for the first time in Boston on Friday. The celebrities have all gone home now. The New York and Boston press corps are sleeping it off, and the television industry is reconsidering some of the claims it funneled to a nationwide audience. America has not come of age. The millennium has not arived.

Last night Mr. Leinsdorf appeared for the second time as the permanent conductor of the BSO at the second concert presented in Philharmonic Hall. That is today's news. We are back to normal now.

* * *

THE MOST significant event last night was the first performance of Samuel Barber's first piano concerto. It is the first piano concerto with a future written by an American during my lifetime, the first since George Gershwin's respected fiasco. As forcefully and articulately introduced by John Browning, it was momentous. Recall the rhythmic fire of Medea's death dance in the Cave of the Heart, consider the percussive possibilities of the virtuoso piano, imagine them combined in a sonata form with considerable melodic outline hovering on the atonality threshold of the sophisticated musical ear. The piece is extraordinarily economical, clear in design, integrated. The third movement, a savage dance built almost entirely on a rhythmically distinct vive note figure in 5/8 time, brought the audience howling to its feet. No worthwhile judge of music with a sense of history could fail to see how the appearance of this work eclipses the opening of a new music hall.

* * *

INCIDENTALLY, for an account of what several authorities consider the meaning of all the ballyhoo, I refer the reader to a special supplement in last Sunday's New York Times. The new hall, in my opinion, is gay and inviting, but its system of hanging baffles, known as clouds, took what was rightfully my sound in the center of the 6th row and tossed it along to the top of the roller coaster gallery. The sound stretching has definitely compromised the privileges of those in the dress circle. The percussion floats away on gossamer wings. Quite honestly, I believe the baffle fad is an economy we can afford to do without.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened the program with the overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," like the 5th symphony a work of the war years and sober therefore. He closed the program with an equally sober Till Eulen Spiegel's Merry Pranks. In between, before the Barber concerto, he conducted Beethoven's Eroica, also a work of the war years, also very sober. The performance was by no means matchless, though it suggested a bright promise of things to come. Having taken it all apart, Mr. Leinsdorf almost succeeded in putting it back together. The ideal was just beyond his grasp, the perfect ambience lacking. I would guess the orchestra is headed for an old-fashioned German ordeal.

* * *

IN MY PART of the auditorium everyone was dressed in dinner clothes, as opposed to Sunday's full dress. Some of them clapped between movements and some of them left before or during the last number. Eventually Lincoln Center will have to appropriate money to hire good audiences if this experiment is going to work. The surest way, of course, would have been to reduce prices rather than raising them and making attendance ever more dependent on an ability to pay. Prosperity makes people fat and fat kills the heart. Lincoln Center is an affirmation of a belief in this nation's creative mission. Would that we didn't have to protest so much.

TEL. Hi 5-4000

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 559,573

SEP 1962

PIANISTS are big news during Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall opening week. Top, far left, John Browning, who world premières Samuel Barber's (center) Concerto for Piano and Orchestra with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdrof (right). Hear him, Capitol LP.... Moscow-triumphant Susan Starr (below) opens Stokowski's Carnegie Hall season.

[continued page 30]

Mademoiselle for September 1962

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

OCT 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Having appeared in New York continuously for 77 years, a longer period than any other visiting orchestra, the Boston Symphony was invited to present the second concert in Lincoln Center's inaugural week on Sept. 24. The event marked Erich Leinsdorf's first New York appearance as the Orchestra's Music Director. It also saw the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, a work commissioned by G. Schirmer and Company in celebration of its 100th anniversary. John Browning was soloist.

Philadelphia Orchestra

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,854,550

OCT 5 1962

the pa ambian might ta audienc even in sound of

The Boston's

For wee had of Co befo
Con
wha new podi and Few most histo

Serg ton wi best e epic gr
Charles
French co
tain Galli
Viennese and he speak a modulated, great orch overnight;
derful clar sponding to with hair-was instal
Leinsdorf
and it was rear that the men were emotionally dug in"
as well as that their new conductor as much as for the new hall.

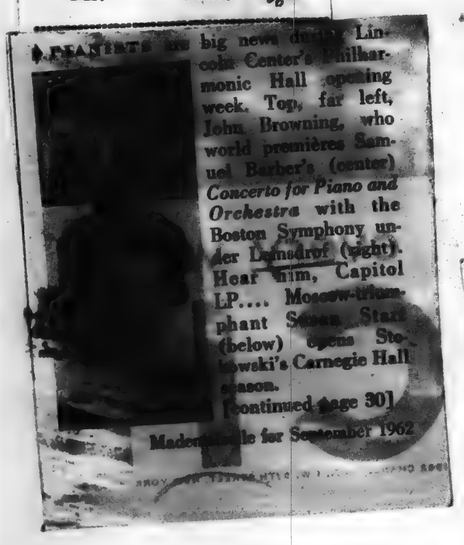
Crowded Nostalgia Time's second surprise in Boston appointed ready little both orchestra and public pearances. If there it was only that it would be willing to give up the opera conductor that had been such an important part of its career.
But despite the fact that he had stated

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 550,573

SEP 1962



PIANISTS are big news during Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall opening week. Top, far left, John Browning, who world premières Samuel Barber's (center) Concerto for Piano and Orchestra with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf (right). Hear him, Capitol LP.... Moscow-triumphant Soviet Star (below) opens Stokowski's Carnegie Hall season.

[continued page 30]

Mademoiselle for September 1962

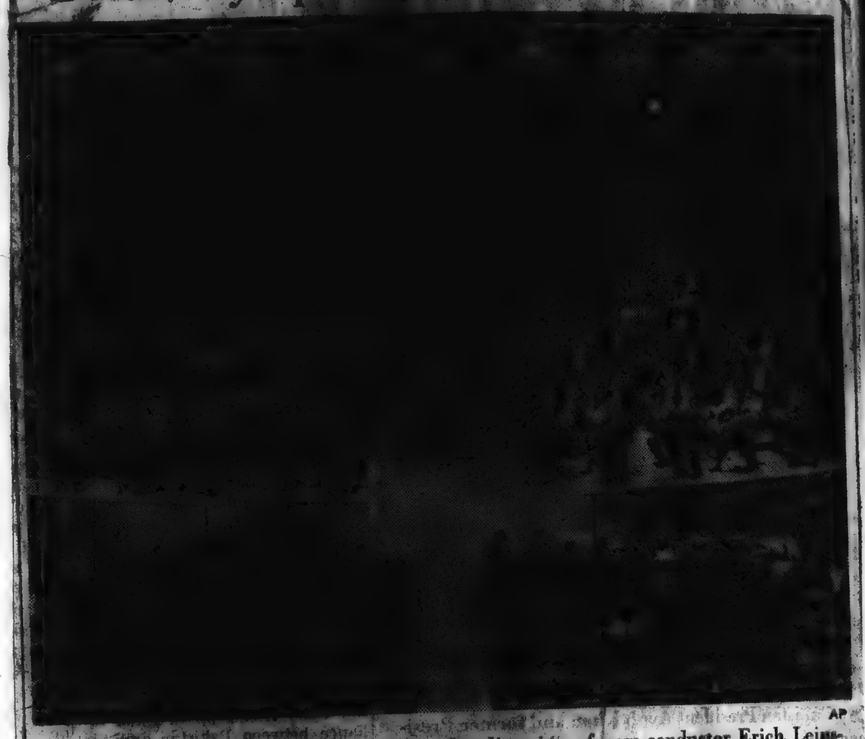
MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

OCT 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Having appeared in New York continuously for 77 years, a longer period than any other visiting orchestra, the Boston Symphony was invited to present the second concert in Lincoln Center's inaugural week on Sept. 24. The event marked Erich Leinsdorf's first New York appearance as the Orchestra's Music Director. It also saw the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, a work commissioned by G. Schirmer and Company in celebration of its 100th anniversary. John Browning was soloist.
Philadelphia Orchestra

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony at Lincoln Center



AP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at Philharmonic Hall in New York Monday night. Hall, a unit of Lincoln Center for Performing Arts, opened Sunday night with the N.Y. Philharmonic.

By JOHN STUART COX

NEW YORK — Philharmonic Hall, the first of seven monuments to good intentions scheduled for completion at Lincoln Center in the next four years, opened Sunday. Eric Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its music director for the first time in Boston on Friday. The celebrities have all gone home now. The New York and Boston press corps are sleeping it off, and the television industry is reconsidering some of the claims it funneled to a nationwide audience. America has not come of age. The millennium has not arived.

Last night Mr. Leinsdorf appeared for the second time as the permanent conductor of the BSO at the second concert presented in Philharmonic Hall. That is today's news. We are back to normal now.

* * *

THE MOST significant event last night was the first performance of Samuel Barber's first piano concerto. It is the first piano concerto with a future written by an American during my lifetime, the first since George Gershwin's respected fiasco. As forcefully and articulately introduced by John Browning, it was momentous. Recall the rhythmic fire of Medea's death dance in the Cave of the Heart, consider the percussive possibilities of the virtuoso piano, imagine them contained in a sonata form with considerable melodic outline hovering on the atonality breakhold of the sophisticated musical ear. The piece is extraordinarily economical, clear in design, integrated. The third movement, a savage dance built almost entirely on a rhythmically distinctive note figure in 5/8 time, brought the audience bowling to its feet. No worthwhile judge of music with a sense of history could fail to see how the appearance of this work eclipses the opening of a new music hall.

INCIDENTALLY, for an account of what several authorities consider the meaning of all the ballyhoo, I refer the reader to a special supplement in last Sunday's New York Times. The new hall, in my opinion, is gay and inviting, but its system of hanging baffles, known as clouds, took what was rightfully my sound in the center of the 6th row and tossed it along to the top of the roller coaster gallery. The sound stretching has definitely compromised the privileges of those in the dress circle. The percussion floats away on gossamer wings. Quite honestly, I believe the baffle fad is an economy we can afford to do without.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened the program with the overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," like the 5th symphony a work of the war years and sober therefore. He closed the program with an equally sober Till Eulen Spiegel's Merry Pranks. In between, before the Barber concerto, he conducted Beethoven's Eroica, also a work of the war years, also very sober. The performance was by no means matchless, though it suggested a bright promise of things to come. Having taken it all apart, Mr. Leinsdorf almost succeeded in putting it back together. The ideal was just beyond his grasp, the personal ambiance lacking. I would guess the orchestra is headed for an old-fashioned German ordeal.

* * *

IN MY PART of the auditorium everyone was dressed in dinner clothes, as opposed to Sunday's full dress. Some of them clapped between movements and some of them left before or during the last number. Eventually Lincoln Center will have to appropriate money to hire good audiences if this experiment is going to work. The [illegible], of course, would have been to reduce prices rather than raising them and making attendance ever more dependent on an ability to pay. Prosperity makes people fat and fat kills the heart. Lincoln Center is an affirmation of a belief in this nation's creative mission. Would that we didn't have to protest so much.

TEL Hi 5-4000

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
SEP 25 1962

Music: Barber Concerto

Green & Rossi

From left are John Browning, pianist, Samuel Barber, composer, and Erich Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor.

Browning Is Soloist in Premiere at Hall

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

IT was the turn of the Boston Symphony last night in Philharmonic Hall, and the concert took a more conventional aspect than it had at the Sunday evening opening. For one thing, there was no chorus. This meant that the orchestra was in its orthodox position on stage rather than pushed forward. This, in turn, meant that acoustics would be different. And so they were.

At his opening Boston concert last Friday, Erich Leinsdorf, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony, placed the musicians in the rear choirs on risers. By doing this he reverted to the practice of Serge Koussevitzky. Whether or not this had any effect on the sound heard in Philharmonic Hall last night, there could be no doubt that there was a distinct improvement.

•

Earlier in the day the acousticians had altered the position of the overhead panels. What with one thing and another, the orchestral sound began to sound orchestral. Basses could be heard, and there was more of a homogenous mix.

The hall, though, remains inconsistent. Heard from the side of the top terrace, Beethoven's "Eroica" sounded overfull and overresonant. But in the same terrace, under the overhang of the projection booths, the sound thinned considerably. On the whole, sound thins out in Philharmonic Hall the farther one gets from the stage—except in the top terrace.

But in the center parts of the auditorium, and along the sides, the Boston Symphony came through clearly. Philharmonic Hall never will have the mellowness of the great ones of the past; the sound at best is going to be on the dry side, with clarity the primary consideration.

Perhaps this is what the acousticians were aiming for. Leo Beranek said yesterday afternoon that a modern concert hall need not sound like one built a hundred years ago; that Philharmonic Hall was "a hall of today and tomorrow, not a hall of the past." Whatever the validity of this reasoning, and it can be argued pro and con, it appears sure that the new hall will have little in common with such admired exemplars as Symphony Hall in Boston and the Musikvereinsaal in Vienna.

Last night's concert was distinguished by a world premiere. Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto was heard, with John Browning as soloist. It made a decided hit with the audience, and it may be that Mr. Barber has supplied a repertory piece.

The concerto is based, roughly, on such contemporary works as Prokofieff's Third; and, indeed, much of the piano writing is strongly Prokofieffian. No standard key relationships are present, the writing for solo piano is mixture of romanticism and everything but tone clusters, and the five-four finale is a first cousin to the toccata-like conclusion of the Prokofieff Seventh Sonata.

This is a real virtuoso concerto, with some staggeringly difficult writing. It also has a strong melodic profile, a lyric slow movement and a sense of confidence in the entire conception — the confidence that comes only from an experienced composer engaged in a work that interests him.

•

Mr. Browning, one of the more expert technicians around, gave a very strong performance, and it will be even stronger when he works his way into the score. The middle section of the slow movement, with its cascades of notes and inner voices, did not come off so well as it might have. Otherwise Mr. Browning stormed the work, surmounted the peaks and proved himself to be a virtuoso with a fine sense of line. In music like this he is an eminently satisfactory pianist.

The program was otherwise largely familiar, save for the Prokofieff "War and Peace" Overture. This is a surprisingly inconclusive, weak-sounding, negative work from so fine a composer. The "Eroica," as noted last week from Boston, received a clear, accurate and well-considered performance, one in which shape and balance predominated over passion. Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" ended the evening.

The Program

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor; John Browning, pianist. At Philharmonic Hall.

Overture to War and Peace....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 3 (Eroica).....Beethoven
Piano Concerto (first performance), Samuel Barber
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks..Strauss

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 26 1962

207

Lincoln Cente

By Green and Rossi

John Browning, pianist; Samuel Barber, composer, and Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, participated in the world première of Mr. Barber's first Piano Concerto Monday night at the new Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York.

Comes Musically Alive

Two New Works in a New Hall

By Harold Rogers

New York

The difference between the first two concerts to be given at the new Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts—those by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein and by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf—is the same difference one finds between the two cities themselves.

The opening program by the New York Philharmonic was something macrocosmic, a stage filled with three choruses, a dozen world-famous singers, and the orchestra of course, all ringing the welkin with sky-scraping thrusts of monumental sound. The second concert by the Boston Symphony, in which only the orchestra and the pianist John Browning participated, was sedate, serene, polished.

Both concerts presented world premières. In the first it was Aaron Copland's "Connotations for Orchestra," commissioned by the New York Philharmonic for its opening season in Philharmonic Hall. In the second it was Samuel Barber's first Piano Concerto.

Contrast Noted

Here, too, the comparisons between New York and Boston can be applied. The Copland score is dodecaphonic (his first orchestral essay in the Schoenbergian technique)—music that is agitated, urban, mechanistic, ruthless, often repulsive. The Barber score is a marvel of neo-romantic charm, harking back to a period of greater serenity and grace, to tempos of contemplation or moods of aspiration and achievement.

The Copland had a debatable reception. The Barber was a forthright success.

Writing of his "Connotations," Mr. Copland has said that he wanted to express "something of the tensions, aspirations, and drama inherent in the world today," and this aim he undoubtedly achieved.

But in choosing the twelve-tone technique as his idiom, Mr. Copland has robbed himself of his musical individuality. True, the orchestral color is his; the scoring has his masterful touch; but the quality of inspiration is inferior—it could have been turned out by any competent dodecaphonist. Blaring, percussive, rising into great piles of organized noise, the music invites the listener to close his ears, at least mentally, about half way through and to endure the remainder as well as he can.

The whole thing reminded me of what I once heard a lecturer say as he was expounding on the Schillinger method of composing with mathematical formulae: "Don't pay attention to inspiration. Forget it. Just follow the charts." Let us hope that Mr. Copland is not trying to bolster a flagging inspiration by following the charts.

Unabashed Romantic

Unlike Mr. Copland, Samuel Barber has made little attempt in his music to be a modernist. He is an unashamed romantic—a rarity in this era—yet his new Piano Concerto has just enough of our times in it to identify it as being part of the present. The work can be easily labeled as neo-romantic; it aims at being nothing more than a winsome display piece, as all good concertos should be.

In this performance it displayed the virtuosic talents of the young Mr. Browning, who struck off the ear-tickling phrases of the end movements with coruscating brilliance, and who infused the middle Canzona with a satisfying depth of emotion. The Allegro appassionato opened with a strong statement from the piano alone, to be followed by the introduction of the main theme in the orchestra alone; afterward a tossing of the ball between the two in strong, active rhythmic and melodic splashes.

The Canzona is pure lyricism, singing its way into the heart with the aid of the flute (serenely played in this performance by Doriot Anthony Dwyer). The final Allegro molto is a tricky piece of writing, cast in 5/8 time throughout. Mr. Browning and Mr. Leinsdorf cooperated to bring this première to a scintillating conclusion.

The reception was stupendous — a rising ovation followed by many curtain calls on behalf of the composer, conductor, and soloist. The concerto will have its Boston première this Friday afternoon.

Leonard Bernstein's program, nationally televised over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, opened with a stirring performance of Beethoven's Gloria from the Missa Solemnis, continued with the Copland "Connotations" and a thoroughly ingratiating reading of Vaughan Williams' "Serenade to Music," and concluded magnificently with the first part of Mahler's Symphony No. 8 known as the "Symphony of a Thousand." Mr. Bernstein led his forces with fire and fury.

Erich Leinsdorf's program, in addition to the Barber concerto, included a stately traversal of the Prokofiev Overture to "War and Peace," a noble conception of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, and a thoroughly jovial reading of Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

Acoustics Rated

The acoustics of the new hall have elicited considerable comment, as always happens when a new hall is tried out for the first time. Reports vary according to where the listeners happen to be seated. At Mr. Bernstein's concerts the acoustics sometimes seemed overly brilliant; one often longed for a greater tempering of the sound. At Mr. Leinsdorf's concert, where the stage held nothing more than the Boston Symphony, the sound was much the same as it is in Boston's Symphony Hall, though the basses were subdued.

But acoustics can be adjusted, especially in this hall where the design includes the possibility of their adjustment, and corrections will doubtless be made after it has been more lived in and has become more familiar to those using it.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
SEP 30 1962

Lincoln Center Philharmonic Hall Gets Off to a Great Start

By John Chapman

NEW YORK, [Special]—In the minds of most of the male inhabitants of this country "culture" is a frightening work. Like being bitten by a bubonic rat, snapped at by a hydrophobic dog, stung by a hornet which has fed on green appples or led by a wife into a concert hall or an opera house, it is something which threatens death and must therefore be avoided.

This city's greatest new temple of culture since the Metropolitan Opera house, Carnegie hall, and the Radio City Music hall was opened a week ago. It is Philharmonic hall in the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. It will be supported by women on their husbands' money, and the husbands will have to be dragged to it on nose rings.

• • •

In its first week Philharmonic hall has sprung to the forefront of this city's cultural life. Already it is an institution — and it should be, for in its first week it offered more notable events than an idealist could dream of.

First there was the $250-top, white tie opening—a vast affair with an expanded Philharmonic orchestra, 200 or more choristers and the most distinguished, best behaved first night audience I have seen in 35 years of first nighting.

• • •

Following the opening bash, Philharmonic hall played host to the Boston symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, Leonard Bernstein and his boys again, the Cleveland orchestra under George Szell and the Metropolitan Opera company with its own orchestra and chorus. All in one super-glamorous week.

The Met was in for two performances—Saturday and the Sunday beginning the second week—doing the first American performance of Falla's "Atlantide." There also were sidebar events, including a free concert for teachers by the Juilliard orchestra, a free morning concert for children by the Philharmonic, and a one- hour program at twilight by Gold and Fizdale, a two-piano team.

• • •

This probably was too heady a schedule for the new hall to maintain, for it is in competition with another great concert hall, Carnegie; but it did serve to give the place a severe acoustical test. [Incidentally, Isaac Stern, who was at the forefront of those who saved Carnegie hall from demolition, was the soloist with the Cleveland orchestra.]

It had long been known that Philharmonic hall could be "tuned"—and that it might take a year to tune it perfectly. Sound is carried from the stage to the auditorium by dozens of acoustical "clouds" hanging from the ceiling.

These appendages, which look something like surfboards with broken surfaces, can be individually raised, lowered or tilted. Their purpose is to speed sound on its way, distribute it evenly and keep it from bouncing back.

• • •

Acoustics was on everybody's mind on that fabulous opening night. Afterward, critics, sound experts, and patrons agree that the sound was too brittle or brilliant, as tho a phonograph or radio were adjusted to give too much treble and not enough bass. Dr. Leo Beranek, the chief sound expert, went to work next, lowering some of the panels over the stage and putting in platforms for the cellos and double bases.

That night, when the Boston Symphony's new director, Leinsdorf, conducted his first concert here, there was a remarkable improvement in tonal balance, and Samuel Barber's new Piano Concerto, played dazzlingly by John Browning, came over beautifully. There is no doubt in my mind that the hall itself will be a great musical instrument.

• • •

And what a place it is! It is magnificently staffed; even on opening night everything ran like a watch.

The building is stunningly but not overpoweringly modern. There is plenty of promenade space on all levels—glass-walled, offering a view of the Lincoln Center to be. A ground floor restaurant and bar are open to all comers, ticket holders or not, from luncheon on. The 2,600 seats are as comfortable as theater seats can be made.

Philharmonic hall is a thrilling augury of what Lincoln Center will be like on the completion of the Metropolitan Opera house, the New York State theater, Vivian Beaumont's Repertory theater and the Juilliard school.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
SEP 25 1962

Barber Sounded Bad to Barbers

Hub Symphony Wows 'Em in N.Y. But Hall's Acoustics Need Tuning

By DONAL J. HENAHAN
Chicago Daily News
Music Critic

NEW YORK—If the men in charge of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts went to bed last night and dreamed of a $15 million lemon, it would not be surprising.

The second concert at Philharmonic Hall, first of the six structures in the arts center to be occupied, gave no more grounds for acoustical good cheer than Sunday evening's opening event. At this stage in its career the hall produces a dead and unpredictable sound.

Supposedly, the hall is infinitely adjustable to provide any acoustical effect. Trying to learn what troubles exist and how to iron them out of Philharmonic Hall are unquestionably giving Lincoln Center's general staff long thoughts, and one can only hope that a satisfactory aural formula will be discovered soon, before the elegant lady gets a bad name.

Last night's concert, which brought the Boston Symphony and its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf into the spotlight, provided a great deal more to listen to than the New York Philharmonic's tasteless hootenanny on Sunday.

Acoustics or no, this was a genuine concert by a virtuoso orchestra, led with aplomb by a master technician. One might quarrel with Leinsdorf's impossible slow funeral march in Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, and even wonder why he chose to open with so undistinguished a piece as the overture to Prokofiev's opera "War and Peace." But it was identifiable as a concert, and there was excitement to match the duller patches.

As on opening night, when Aaron Copland's "Connotations" was a bright spot, the creative arts were well represented, John Browning and the Bostonians gave Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto a world premiere that blazed with conviction and bravura playing.

The concerto, a frankly exhibitionistic showpiece in three movements, sounded now like Khatchaturian, now like Ravel, and again like Gershwin, with a modicum of wrong-note Brahms thrown in, but its musicality could not be denied. Everything was composed with such technical proficiency and executed with such commitment that the work managed to sound major even while reeking of banalities, as in the dreamy slow movement.

WINS PLAUDITS in New York. Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Barber is likely to make himself some money with this one. Virtuosos and audiences both will take to it, if its first thunderous reception is any criterion.

New York has suddenly become a beehive of acoustical experts, all but a handful fiercely partisan amateurs of the game. Every barber and cabbie has his own theory how the hall sounds.

At that, they seem no more befuddled than the conductors, musicians and other qualified experts who eventually have taken their measure in person. It is impossible to find anyone on what is wrong and how to fix it — not impossible to find anyone outside official L[illegible] circles who is satisfied with the acoustical results so far.

With so much invested in Philharmonic Hall, there is no doubt but that the acoustical medicine men will go into their rain dance and eventually produce something that New York's musical public can live with. In the meanwhile, perhaps someone should start listening seriously to those barbers and cabbies.

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
SEP 25 1962

Barber's Concerto Hailed At Premiere

Reviewer Praises Soloist's Performance; Leinsdorf Calls Work Splendid

By MILES A. SMITH

New York (AP) — Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited First Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on September 9 and the pianist said he spent 10 or 11 hours a day learning it, with mastery coming only 2 days ago. Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of Music Director of the Orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

OTHER WORKS

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica", was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace", by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic Week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony 'Splendid' In New York Performance

By MILES A. SMITH
Associated Press Art Editor

NEW YORK, Sept. 24 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, which has been playing concerts in this city for 77 years, gave its first performance at the new Philharmonic Hall tonight, featuring a splendid world premier of Samuel Barber's first piano concerto.

The young pianist John Browning was the soloist in this work.

Barber has created a vigorous, bright composition in three movements which preserve the traditional approach and strong melodic line which have characterized his earlier works.

But he also introduced sharper harmonies and some of the more dissonant sounds of the modern idiom.

The score gave Browning a good opportunity to display his qualities as a virtuoso, and he came up to the mark. He played the first movement with spirit, gave the song-like second movement the lyrical quality which it deserves, and handled the complex rythmns and resounding tonalities of the final movement with dash.

The other principal work was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica." Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new capacity as the orchestra's music director, presented a rendition marked by calm, measured dignity.

He drew on the orchestra's sonority with precision and polish, stressing the lyrical quality of the symphony.

The program opened with Prokofiev's overture to "War and Peace," subtly played, and concluded with a rousing interpretation of Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

This also was the first time New Yorkers have heard Joseph Silverstein in his new position of concertmaster.

Tomorrow night, the third of Philharmonic Week—celebrating the opening of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts—the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will present the world premiere of an overture written for the occasion by Walter Piston, and Van Cliburn in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 [illegible]

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
SEP 30 1962

Lincoln Center Philharmonic Hall Gets Off to a Great Start

By John Chapman

NEW YORK, [Special]—In the minds of most of the male inhabitants of this country "culture" is a frightening work. Like being bitten by a bubonic rat, snapped at by a hydrophobic dog, stung by a hornet which has fed on green appples or led by a wife into a concert hall or an opera house, it is something which threatens death and must therefore be avoided.

This city's greatest new temple of culture since the Metropolitan Opera house, Carnegie hall, and the Radio City Music hall was opened a week ago. It is Philharmonic hall in the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. It will be supported by women on their husbands' money, and the husbands will have to be dragged to it on nose rings.

• • •

In its first week Philharmonic hall has sprung to the forefront of this city's cultural life. Already it is an institution — and it should be, for in its first week it offered more notable events than an idealist could dream of.

First there was the $250-top, white tie opening—a vast affair with an expanded Philharmonic orchestra, 200 or more choristers and the most distinguished, best behaved first night audience I have seen in 35 years of first nighting.

• • •

Following the opening bash, Philharmonic hall played host to the Boston symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, Leonard Bernstein and his boys again, the Cleveland orchestra under George Szell and the Metropolitan Opera company with its own orchestra and chorus.

All in one super-glamorous week.

The Met was in for two performances—Saturday and the Sunday beginning the second week—doing the first American performance of Falla's "Atlantide." There also were sidebar events, including a free concert for teachers by the Juilliard orchestra, a free morning concert for children by the Philharmonic, and a one- hour program at twilight by Gold and Fizdale, a two-piano team.

• • •

This probably was too heady a schedule for the new hall to maintain, for it is in competition with another great concert hall, Carnegie; but it did serve to give the place a severe acoustical test. [Incidentally, Isaac Stern, who was at the forefront of those who saved Carnegie hall from demolition, was the soloist with the Cleveland orchestra.]

It had long been known that Philharmonic hall could be "tuned"—and that it might take a year to tune it perfectly. Sound is carried from the stage to the auditorium by dozens of acoustical "clouds" hanging from the ceiling.

These appendages, which look something like surfboards with broken surfaces, can be individually raised, lowered or tilted. Their purpose is to speed sound on its way, distribute it evenly and keep it from bouncing back.

• • •

Acoustics was on everybody's mind on that fabulous opening night. Afterward, critics, sound experts, and patrons agree that the sound was too brittle or brilliant, as tho a phonograph or radio were adjusted to give too much treble and not enough bass. Dr. Leo Beranek, the chief sound expert, went to work next, lowering some of the panels over the stage and putting in platforms for the cellos and double bases.

That night, when the Boston Symphony's new director, Leinsdorf, conducted his first concert here, there was a remarkable improvement in tonal balance, and Samuel Barber's new Piano Concerto, played dazzlingly by John Browning, came over beautifully. There is no doubt in my mind that the hall itself will be a great musical instrument.

• • •

And what a place it is! It is magnificently staffed; even on opening night everything ran like a watch.

The building is stunningly but not overpoweringly modern. There is plenty of promenade space on all levels—glass-walled, offering a view of the Lincoln Center to be. A ground floor restaurant and bar are open to all comers, ticket holders or not, from luncheon on. The 2,600 seats are as comfortable as theater seats can be made.

Philharmonic hall is a thrilling augury of what Lincoln Center will be like on the completion of the Metropolitan Opera house, the New York State theater, Vivian Beaumont's Repertory theater and the Juilliard school.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
SEP 25 1962

Barber Sounded Bad to Barbers

Hub Symphony Wows 'Em in N.Y. But Hall's Acoustics Need Tuning

By DONAL J. HENAHAN
Chicago Daily News
Music Critic

NEW YORK—If the men in charge of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts went ot bed last night and dreamed of a $15 million lemon, it would not be surprising.

The second concert at Philharmonic Hall, first of the six structures in the arts center to be occupied, gave no more grounds for acoustical good cheer than Sunday evening's opening event. At this stage in its career the hall produces a dead and unpredictable sound.

Supposedly, the hall is infinitely adjustable to provide any acoustical effect. Trying to learn what troubles exist and how to iron them out of Philharmonic Hall are unquestionably giving Lincoln Center's general staff long thoughts, and one can only hope that a satisfactory aural formula will be discovered soon, before the elegant lady gets a bad name.

Last night's concert, which brought the Boston Symphony and its new conductor Erich Leinsdorf into the spotlight, provided a great deal more to listen to than the New York Philharmonic's tasteless hootenanny on Sunday.

Acoustics or no, this was a genuine concert by a virtuoso orchestra, led with aplomb by a master technician. One might quarrel with Leinsdorf's impossibly slow funeral march in Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, and even wonder why he chose to open with so undistinguished a piece as the overture to Prokofiev's opera "War and Peace." But it was identifiable as a concert, and there was excitement to match the duller patches.

As on opening night, when Aaron Copland's "Connotations" was a bright spot, the creative arts were well represented. John Browning and the Bostonians gave Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto a world premiere that blazed with conviction and bravura playing.

The concerto, a frankly exhibitionistic showpiece in three movements, sounded now like Khatchaturian, now like Ravel, and again like Gershwin, with a modicum of wrong-note Brahms thrown in, but its musicality could not be denied. Everything was composed with such technical proficiency and executed with such commitment that the work managed to sound major even while reeking of banalities, as in the dreamy slow movement.

WINS PLAUDITS in New York. Erich Leinsdorf, new conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Barber is likely to make himself some money with this one. Virtuosos and audiences both will take to it, if its first thunderous reception is any criterion.

New York has suddenly become a beehive of acoustical experts, all but a handful fiercely partisan amateurs of the game. Every barber and cabbie has his own ideas about how the hall sounds.

At that, they seem no more befuddled than the famous conductors, musicians, and other qualified experts who actually have taken the Hall's measure in person. It is almost impossible to find two agreeing on what is wrong, let alone how to fix it — but it is also impossible to find anyone outside official Lincoln Center circles who is satisfied with the acoustical results so far.

With so much invested in Philharmonic Hall, there is no doubt but that the acoustical medicine men will go into their rain dance and eventually produce something that New York's musical public can live with. In the meanwhile, perhaps someone should start listening seriously to those barbers and cabbies.

HERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
SEP 25 1962

Barber's Concerto Hailed At Premiere

Reviewer Praises Soloist's Performance; Leinsdorf Calls Work Splendid

By MILES A. SMITH

New York (AP) — Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited First Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on September 9 and the pianist said he spent 10 or 11 hours a day learning it, with mastery coming only 2 days ago. Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of Music Director of the Orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

OTHER WORKS

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica", was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace", by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic Week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,245
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony 'Splendid' In New York Performance

By MILES A. SMITH
Associated Press Art Editor

NEW YORK, Sept. 24 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, which has been playing concerts in this city for 77 years, gave its first performance at the new Philharmonic Hall tonight, featuring a splendid world premier of Samuel Barber's first piano concerto.

The young pianist John Browning was the soloist in this work.

Barber has created a vigorous, bright composition in three movements which preserve the traditional approach and strong melodic line which have characterized his earlier works.

But he also introduced sharper harmonies and some of the more dissonant sounds of the modern idiom.

The score gave Browning a good opportunity to display his qualities as a virtuoso, and he came up to the mark. He played the first movement with spirit, gave the song-like second movement the lyrical quality which it deserves, and handled the complex rythms and resounding tonalities of the final movement with dash.

The other principal work was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica." Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new capacity as the orchestra's music director, presented a rendition marked by calm, measured dignity.

He drew on the orchestra's sonority with precision and polish, stressing the lyrical quality of the symphony.

The program opened with Prokofiev's overture to "War and Peace," subtly played, and concluded with a rousing interpretation of Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

This also was the first time New Yorkers have heard Joseph Silverstein in his new position of concertmaster.

Tomorrow night, the third of Philharmonic Week—celebrating the opening of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts—the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy will present the world premiere of an overture written for the occasion by Walter Piston, and Van Cliburn in Rachmaninoff's Piano

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
SEP 25 1962

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Leinsdorf in Debut With Bostonians

Like a hex last night at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's debut in Philharmonic Hall, the necessity for evaluating the acoustics kept pursuing my thoughts as I listened to the music led by Erich Leinsdorf in his first appearance here as the ensemble's music director. Reviewing a building, along with music and performers, is a disconcerting but inevitable counterpart of the opening of Lincoln Center's first auditorium.

And the dramatic contrast of personality between two major conductors and orchestras, as illustrated by Sunday's and last night's events, didn't make the acoustical puzzle any easier to solve. The works performed by the Bostonians necessitated no contingent of 400-plus as the Philharmonic's closing number, Part I of Mahler's "Eighth," did.

Instead, the dressy, black-tie audience heard the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto with the brilliant, young pianist, John Browning, as soloist; Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, done more deliberately than I can ever remember; the first N. Y. performance of Prokofiev's Overture to his opera, "War and Peace," and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," played admirably, but with a minimum of the roguish mischief which animates its mood.

Leinsdorf's Discipline

Leinsdorf's meticulous, disciplined approach to his job, his judicious control of sound and his absence of excess motion made him like Professor Jones who was equipped to demonstrate his treatise on "How to Do It." Bernstein's uninhibited fervor and elation at Sunday's opening Philharmonic concert, infectious as it proved to be, was far more idiomatic.

Apparently the hall's tricky acoustics, are momentarily as different in various parts of the hall as an operatic prima donna's unpredictable emotions. But from my left-center seat, the sound of the strings, as at the opening, lacked warmth and carrying power, even though Leindorf had some sections on risers. While the winds were consistenly more vital, and the flute solo in the song-like slow movement of the Concerto, wonderfully clear, the sound in general, (less so of the piano) had an impersonality that matched Leinsdorf's scientific neutrality. It was as if he were insisting on the music's speaking for itself without any dynamic push or drive on his part.

Acoustically, the music often gave the curious illusion of moving upward toward the stage ceiling instead of surging out into the hall.

Browning's Virtuosity

Browning performed the 25-minute Concerto with a splendid blending of virtuosity, perceptive musical understanding and tonal beauty. In the final movement, taking only five minutes to perform, the interchange of syncopation, triplets and repeated notes highlighted by accents, drove the music ahead with hypnotic momentum. It was a great success with the audience. Browning tossed it off so spontaneously that he received an ovation at the work's conclusion. Composer, conductor and soloist all took many bows.

In a conservative idiom, and vitalized by flashy cadenzas in the initial movement, the Concerto's short third expresses the most individuality.

New York World-Telegram
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
SEP 25 1962

Music

Erich Leinsdorf At Lincoln

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Only two days old, Philharmonic Hall was the scene of one of the most spectacular triumphs in the history of American music last night.

This was the premiere of the new piano concerto by Samuel Barber—a work of powerful appeal that brought the second night audience to its feet shouting and applauding when the composer returned for a bow.

Much of the excitement was generated by the brilliant performance of John Browning and the Boston Symphony under its inspired new leader, Erich Leinsdorf. The combination was perfect.

A Proud Night

But it was the score itself, with its opulent melody and color, its fiery drama and enormous rhythmic drive, that stirred the imagination. It was a proud night for American music.

Leinsdorf, who is starting his first season as the Boston Symphony's regular conductor, was obviously sold on the concerto from start to finish. All his astounding musicianship and conviction went into the work.

The same goes for Browning at the keyboard. Here were the sensitivity and virtuosity to which he has accustomed us, plus the added pride and zeal of participating in the birth of an American classic.

Impressive Showing

This being orchestra week at Philharmonic Hall, the Boston was the second of the country's four major orchestras to share in the housewarming. With the strain and pressure of Sunday's inaugural out of the way, it made an impressive showing.

Thanks to the Philharmonic's spade work of the night before, the way was cleared for more leisurely and congenial listening, and for a truer appraisal of acoustical features.

What the hall boasts is a compact and decisive quality, brilliant in the extreme but demanding iron control to prevent deafening shrillness and to build up the muffled basses.

More at Ease

With what he had at his disposal, Leinsdorf really accomplished marvels last night. Again, maybe it was only a matter of psychological adjustment to music rather than to acoustics. We were all more at ease last night.

Just how fine a conductor the Boston Symphony brought back to New York was apparent in the major work of the first half of the program—

JOHN BROWNING

Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

All the technical brilliance and expressive resources of this fabled orchestra were coaxed into a reading of epic breadth and cohesive power. The last movement was breath-taking in its momentum.

Equally exciting, and even more brilliant in sheer sound, was the performance of Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel." With Leinsdorf to show the way, the orchestra gave fresh life and color to every detail of the roguish fantasy.

The concert opened with the rousing little overture to Prokofieff's opera, "War and Peace."

New York World-Telegram
D. 463,241 SAT. 175,139
SEP 29 1962

Music

Opening of New Hall Brought 2 Major Works

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

For those who study the trends of American music, the news at Lincoln Square this week was not brand-new Philharmonic Hall and who was there, but the premieres of two American compositions.

Either of them would have made news enough for any single week or month in the music calendar of novelties. Both showed their composers at their best and both composers are in the forefront of American music.

Of the two, Aaron Copland was the older but more original, and Samuel Barber the younger and more traditional. Of the two, Barber enjoyed a spectacular success, and Copland a creative, if not exactly popular, triumph.

Important Concerto

On the basis of one hearing, and that of a masterly performance, I am inclined to rate Barber's new work as the best American piano concerto since those of MacDowell and Gershwin, easily their superior in workmanship and continuous appeal.

History was obviously being made Monday night when John Browning, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony combined to launch the concerto on its triumphant way. The score deserved the best attention and received it. All over the house people rose in joyous homage.

Although many in the hall, and even more TV viewers, may have disagreed, history was also being made at Sunday's inaugural when Leonard Bernstein and the Philharmonic ran off a premiere of Copland's "Connotations for Orchestra."

Couched in 12-tone style, this was a lot harder to take, not only because of its form and content, but because, in the brilliant acoustics of the hall, the peak crescendos were a merciless jolt to the ear.

But for those who like myself have followed Copland's career step by step, the composition marked a turning point. At sixty-two, America's leading composer has shifted his perspective and found a new release for his genius.

No Doubt of Genius

For genius Aaron Copland is. Let there be no doubt on this score.

If recent compositions of his had somewhat estranged me from his music, the "Connotations" sufficed to restore my faith in the means and ends of his creative search.

I firmly believe that, as the years go by, the "Connotations" will win more and more friends, influence more and more people, and prove the threshold of a brave new world for American composers. American 12-tone music has had its long-awaited break.

One More Premiere

Because of its decisive stand, the "Connotations" may, in the end, prove the far more important work of the two premieres. But a viable new piano concerto is a rarity, here and everywhere else. So Barber's work will go from triumph to triumph while the other waits.

With one more major novelty—tonight's premiere of de Falla's unfinished masterpiece "Atlantida"—still to go, the claims of new and neglected music may be said to have been handsomely heeded this first week of Philharmonic Hall.

Along with the splendor of the edifice and the brilliant parade of orchestras and conductors and soloists, they will have helped make this week one of the most memorable chapters in the story of American music.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 886,367 S. 1,158,921
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony Superb

ROBERT COLEMAN'S REVIEW

The Boston Symphony made its initial appearance at our new Philharmonic Hall last evening. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf offered a program notable for variety. There was something for every taste, including the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto.

As you may know by now, we are not one of the more ardent devotees of contemporary music, but, in our opinion, Barber does more than most with an orchestra. His latest work is a curious blend of Gershwin-like jazz, the moodiness of Debussy and occasional dissonances for effect and contrast.

The soloist in this instance was John Browning. This was his debut with the Boston Symphony. We thought him excellent at the piano, though the Barber work was not exactly calculated to test his virtuosity and stature. There is melody and excitement in this example of modern music, however.

LEINSDORF and the orchestra appeared to like this one. Both were at their best, and most certainly did it justice. Browning, too, caught all of the tricky rhythms and changes of pace with persuasive skill. As for the audience, a definite note of approval was signaled by prolonged applause.

Leinsdorf chose the Overture to Prokofieff's opera, "War and Peace" for the opening number. It served to get the program away to a rousing start. And then came one of the noblest symphonies of them all: Beethoven's Third, the "Eroica," which marked a new approach to this musical form and established Beethoven as a master of it.

"The "Eroica" was to be dedicated to Napoleon, but when the great Ludwig discovered that Bonaparte was an ambitious and unscrupulous adventurer rather than an idealist, he tore off the title page and tossed it away. This was no man for whom to compose a paean to human dignity and freedom.

There was some improvement in the acoustics of Philharmonic Hall over opening night, though not sufficient to display this masterwork in all its glory. Leinsdorf's reading was detailed and meticulous, but the bouncing sounds made some of the transitions seem a bit abrupt, and lessened the impact of the superb musical texture.

For a high-spirited finish, there was Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," which, for all its roguery and larkishness, has a macabre ending. What a master of orchestration was Strauss. How he could fashion descriptive scores. The Boston's program, we thought, superior to that of the Philharmonic's opening night, despite the latter's impressive corps of vocal soloists and choruses.

Leinsdorf is an interesting conductor to watch. Like some of his peers, he has discarded the traditional baton. His hands and arms are graceful, and his movements on the podium are striking without being overly showy. All things considered, the Boston's first appearance here this season proved a distinguished event.

210

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

NOV 4 1962

Music

Symphony's Gamble Paid Off

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Pianist John Browning, the Boston Symphony and conductor Eric Leinsforf are to be congratulated for putting their trust in Samuel Barber's new piano concerto.

They performed it with conspicuous success for the second night audience at Philharmonic Hall in New York's Lincoln Center Sept. 24. They could have takn the line of least resistance by playing any one of a dozen concertos whose presence on the program would have been "standard procedure."

Leinsforf and the orchestra did just that, unless Prokofieff's little "War and Peace" Overture is still to be considered off the beaten path, although it was written 20 years ago. Balance of the orchestral program was in the safety zone — Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

Most orchestras are trying to break loose from the famous "fifty pieces." In so doing, they run the risk of comparison. This is unique to the concert and operatic platforms.

Theater-going audiences do not condemn a play because it isn't as good as "Hamlet." A new Broadway musical isn't doomed because it doesn't measure up to "South Pacific."

In fact, the New York critics wax enthusiastic about once a month and call something "the best show of the year."

Contemporary music is only one of the problems confronting the orchestral conductor. If young Joe Schmaltz writes a new symphony, he faces the almost unsurmountable problem of getting it played by a top-grade orchestra.

When it is played, it is judged in terms of everything written during the past three centures. If it doesn't measure up to the Beethoven Seventh or Brahms First, it is most likely to be dropped.

No Room

There is no permanent place on symphony programs for good "grade B" music.

This applies equally to established composers of the past. Dvorak's Fourth Symphony can't survive with the "New World." A comparatively small number of Mozart's 41 symphonies are played Full-scale productions of Wagner's "Rienzi" or "Flying Dutchman" are rare.

Excellent "grade B" music has to rely on radio and recording for survival. The "pop" concerts also bring much of his music into the light of live performance.

The record collector has a wide choice of "William Tell" Overtures. He also has to rely on recordings to hear Massenet's "Scenes Alsaciennes," the other four "Pomp and Circumstance" Marches by Elgar, Rachmaninoff First Piano Concerto, Sibelius' Third Symphony, or Gershwin's Second Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra.

Pop orchestras seem to thrive on good second-rate music, even though it may be devoid of any intellectual or spiritual content. It requires no salesmanship to put across such gems as Liszt's saccharine "Liebestraume," Rimsky's "Flight of the Bumblebee," Gries' "In the Hall of the Mountain King," or Dvorak's "Slavonic" Dances.

In this day, symphony orchestras are so highly developed that there is absolutely no means to lower standards in the area of professional instrumental programing.

But orchestras are still handicapped by the problems of risking the new and comparison of the old.

Some conductors face this problem realistically and courageously. For example, this season Harry Levenson will conduct the Worcester Orchestra in Ulysses Kay's Symphonia in E, Alan Hovhaness' Preludes and Quadrangle Fugue for Orchestra, and MacDowell's Second Indian Suite.

The Springfield Symphony and conductor Robert Staffanson have scheduled Ginastera's Overture to the "Creole" Faust, Cherubini's Requiem, and Charles Ives' "The Unanswered Question."

Speaking of the Browning-Leinsdorf-Barber performance at Lincol Center, one of the New York critics called it "one of the most spectacular triumphs in the history of American music."

The gamble paid off.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,148,219

SEP 25 1962

SHOW BUSINESS

Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony Make Music in Philharmonic Hall

By JOHN CHAPMAN

After its exciting, ultra-glamorous opening, Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center got down last evening to the business it was built for—making music. It was a heartening event.

The occasion was Erich Leinsdorf's New York debut as musical director of the Boston Symphony. He made his Boston bow last Friday. Bostonians should be happy over their choice.

Leinsdorf, familiar to New Yorkers as a conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, now is in charge of a superb musical instrument, and last evening he showed he could play it. The orchestra's performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony was a masterpiece of clarity, majesty and delicacy—some of the very best Beethoven I ever heard in my whole ear.

Don't Fence Him In

On the podium Leinsdorf offers an interesting contrast to our ebullient Bernstein. In the first place, his podium is barely big enough for his medium-size feet, and it has no fence around it to keep him from jumping out or off, as Bernsteins has.

Leinsdorf conducts from memory, uses no baton and few gestures. He appears to use his hands as though he were trying to mold the music into a three-dimensional shape. And mold it he did, thrillingly, last evening.

His program began with an interesting, well-behaved overtrue, Prokofiev's opening of his "War and Peace" opera. Then came the Beethoven, and after that the first performance of Samuel Barber's new piano concerto.

Some of Barber's Best

The soloist was young John Browning, and Barber set him a tricky task—also a satisfyingly showy one. On first hearing, this concerto strikes me as possibly Barber's most mature work.

It is boldly but not aggressively inventive, and both its instrumentation and its rhythms are full of pleasant surprises. There were cheers for Browning and Barber—as there had been for Leinsdorf and his wonderful men after the Beethoven.

The sound of the hall was less brilliant than it was the night before—perhaps because the high notes were not bouncing off several acres of boiled shirts. It still is a "live" hall, but it is a great hall. The soft murmurings of the strings during the scherzo and allegro of the "Eroica" were a lovely demonstration of how music can be heard in the new Philharmonic home. The Bostonians are the first to show what the place can do.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 886,367 S. 1,158,921

SEP 26 1962

Boston Symphony Superb

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)

ROBERT COLEMAN'S REVIEW

The Boston Symphony made its initial appearance at our new Philharmonic Hall last evening. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf offered a program notable for variety. There was something for every taste, including the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto.

As you may know by now, we are not one of the more ardent devotees of contemporary music, but, in our opinion, Barber does more than most with an orchestra. His latest work is a curious blend of Gershwin-like jazz, the moodiness of Debussy and occasional dissonances for effect and contrast.

The soloist in this instance was John Browning. This was his debut with the Boston Symphony. We thought him excellent at the piano, though the Barber work was not exactly calculated to test his virtuosity and stature. There is melody and excitement in this example of modern music, however.

LEINSDORF and the orchestra appeared to like this one. Both were at their best, and most certainly did it justice. Browning, too, caught all of the tricky rhythms and changes of pace with persuasive skill. As for the audience, a definite note of approval was signaled by protonged applause.

Leinsdorf chose the Overture to Prokofieff's opera, "War and Peace" for the opening number. It served to get the program away to a rousing start. And then came one of the noblest symphonies of them all: Beethoven's Third, the "Eroica," which marked a new approach to this musical form and established Beethoven as a master of it.

"The "Eroica" was to be dedicated to Napoleon, but when the great Ludwig discovered that Bonaparte was an ambitious and unscrupulous adventurer rather than an idealist, he tore off the title page and tossed it away. This was no man for whom to compose a paean to human dignity and freedom.

There was some improvement in the acoustics of Philharmonic Hall over opening night, though not sufficient to display this masterwork in all its glory. Leinsdorf's reading was detailed and meticulous, but the bouncing sounds made some of the transitions seem a bit abrupt, and lessened the impact of the superb musical texture.

For a high-spirited finish, there was Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," which, for all its roguery and larkishness, has a macabre ending. What a master of orchestration was Strauss. How he could fashion descriptive scores. The Boston's program, we thought, superior to that of the Philharmonic's opening night, despite the latter's impressive corps of vocal soloists and choruses.

Leinsdorf is an interesting conductor to watch. Like some of his peers, he has discarded the traditional baton. His hands and arms are graceful, and his movements on the podium are striking without being overly showy. All things considered, the Boston's first appearance here this season proved a distinguished event.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,910

SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony, Concerto Premiere in New N.Y. Hall

New York — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been playing concerts in this city for 77 years, gave its first performance at the new Philharmonic Hall last night, featuring a splendid world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto.

The young pianist John Browning was the soloist in this work.

Barber has created a vigorous, bright composition in three movements which preserve the traditional approach and strong melodic line which have characterized his earlier works.

But he also has introduced sharper harmonies and some of the more dissonant sounds of the modern idiom.

The score gave Browning a good opportunity to display his qualities as a virtuoso, and he came up to the mark. He played the first movement with spirit, gave the song-like second movement the lyrical quality which it deserved, and handled the complex rythmns and resounding tonalities of the final movement with dash.

Teh other principal work was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica." Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new capacity as the orchestra's music director, presented a rendition marked by calm, measured dignity.

He drew on the orchestra's sonority with precision and polish, stressing the lyrical quality of the symphony.

The program opened with Prokofiev's overture to "War and Peace," subtly played, and concluded with a rousing interpretation of Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

This also was the first time New Yorkers have heard Joseph Silverstein in his new position of concert master.

Tonight, the third in Philharmonic Week — celebrating the opening of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts — the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will present the world premiere of an overture written for the occasion by Walter Piston, and Van Cliburn in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3.

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND
D. 393,585 S. 360

OCT 7 1962

Leinsdorf Snapped His Bato

By IRVING

Of all the orchestras in the first in Lincoln Cent was, to some much on trial viously untried ings.

This was Erich lately installed rector of the phony Orches pearing for th in New York as sible authority. ual observer, have seemed m same Boston Sym ever, but to the there were the of a new broom clean, at least veteran with a in his step.

LEADING now as Leinsdor ant was the brill violinist Joseph who has succeede admired Richa the orchestra's ate conductor. An ing to his baton w and celerity that times been missin under Charles Mu an alert ensem mined to play its into the top brack for some tastes, it occupied alone.

For, in an inter teration of pattern, ton management changed an impro what, in the theat be called a disci method school. "M is the word for who belies his background in a rence for "Schi (the Austrian equ "easy does it"), d the letter of the conducts as a nece cedent to honoring Leinsdorf has pr self adept at the aspect of music i ing in" to many waters and mor swimming than sir prime instance was cession, at the sudd of Artur Bodanzky mary responsibility Metropolitan's Ger pertory in the days stad and Melchio and Lehmann. N them welcomed th ity asserted by on half their age, but L made it clear that h the authority, and e his stature thereby.

SINCE THEN he weathered storms rector of the Clevela Rochester orchestras served a term as h New York's City Opera before return the Metropolitan as Bing's musical admi tor.

From these varied fications, Leinsdorf h sembled a strong ha play when a trump c required to serve hi in Boston.

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 393,595 S. 369,907

OCT 7 1962

Leinsdorf Snapped His Baton

By IRVING KOLODIN

Of all the conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings.

This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority. To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were the signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step.

* * *

LEADING the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor. And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For, in an interesting alteration of pattern, the Boston management has exchanged an improvisor for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Artur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

* * *

SINCE THEN he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 551,529 S. 643,232

SEP 27 1962

Barber Work Wins Ovation At Premiere

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

NEW YORK — With the glitter of opening night past, Philharmonic Hall slipped quietly into its role as New York's principal concert room. Thus, except for a noticeable number of dinner jackets, the second of the opening week audiences hardly seemed much different from the fashionably dressed assemblies one normally sees at the city's important artistic events.

Actually the ceremonials attending upon the inauguration of this initial unit of the Lincoln Center project could hardly be said to have begun. Monday night's concert presented the Boston Symphony, first of three notable out-of-town orchestras to appear in the series. (Conspicuously missing from the list is the Chicago Symphony which, as Orchestra Hall explained things, does not normally play a New York series and thus did not seem to belong in a sequence with the ensembles of Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland which make regular appearances in its greatest success with the Manhattan.)

SURPRISINGLY, the Boston Symphony did not achieve its greatest success with the Beethoven, Strauss or Prokofiev it played, but with the world premiere of a new American Work, the piano concerto of Samuel Barber. The event served as John Browning's first solo appearance with the orchestra.

Barber has succeeded in the all but impossible task of writing a concerto that has much of the appeal of the familiar romantic scores for piano and orchestra and yet expresses itself in an idiom that is plainly of this day. Anyone familiar with the polite apathy which normally greets contemporary music could not help but be impressed by the ovation given the composer, Browning and conductor Erich Leinsdorf, an ovation in which many of the audience were standing and all seemed to share the sort of enthusiasm and delight which cannot be expressed in less than a half-dozen curtain calls.

Cast in the usual three movements, the concerto opens with a fairly long passage for the solo piano, after which the orchestra enters with the principal theme.

ONE OF THE MARKS of a real composer is the ability to write a good alow movement, and Barber's is a beauty with the solo flute and piano used most strikingly. The finale is lively and unusual with its five-to-a-bar rhythm.

From the acoustic standpoint, the orchestra sounded wonderful even on the improvised risers Lincoln Center provided, but several wind solos with string accompaniment lacked the clarity and balanced found in the Boston auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

SEP 25 1962

Symphony Thrills N.Y.

NEW YORK—The second concert in the new Philharmonic Hall got under way last night as the Boston Symphony appeared on the stage.

Taking back as its head after a long tenure of French or French oriented conductors, Erich Leinsdorf, the Viennese-born but altogether Americanized conductor, will undoubtedly follow a more catholic musical policy, not necessarily unduly weighted with the Germanic.

SYMPHONY

age Fifteen

Precision Has Returned

The very favorable recollection of Mr. Leinsdorf's recent excellent performances of the "Ring" at the Metropolitan Opera, with the inadequate forces of the Met gave promise of notable results with the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command.

We are not disappointed in the brilliant performance of Samuel Barber's new concerto.

Precision has returned to the Bostonians and they played with remarkable virtuosity. The new Boston maestro is a perfectionist and has tightened for himself some bonds which other conductors wear more loosely.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," was another matter. Again, the playing was precise, tidy, and the conductor payed much attention to every detail, but he missed the large line and a good deal of the Driob Beethoven expressly demands on the first page of the score.

The lordly first movement was a shade slow and Mr. Leinsdorf further romanticized it by making tempo alterations for the subsidiary theme. The slow movement was more decent than sorrowful, and the impetuous scherzo lacked impetuosity. I am sorry I could not stay for the Strauss piece which may have tilted the scales in the conductor's favor.

Barber's Piano Concerto

Samuel Barber's new piano concerto displays beneath the elegance of it's technique a warm sincerity and exquisite command of form. Everywhere one feels sensibility to the higher forms of esthetic experience.

The concerto is bright, virtuoso in the best sense of the word, entertaining, sympathetic, and especially in the last movement, with a threat of genial mockery. It will stand a lot of wear.

Mr. Barber, though a modern composer, is not a member of the avant garde and in some quarters will be denounced as a "traditionalist."

But what is tradition? The slavish imitator of the past denies the history of progress, denies his own age, and insults the very things he tends to imitate by misusing them. There is considerable between this sort of traditionalism and a true understanding of the continuity of creative endeavor. That a work is deliberately within a somewhat older style is not a flaw unless it fails to gather impetus in the artist's temperament in proceeding.

This concerto rises everywhere above the painstaking and the ingenious. Individual elements have importance in themselves and the whole is

...rf Precision ... Symphony

...t greater than the sum of its ...arts.

...ound a Bit Blurred

...John Browning played the ...lo part with dash and com...ete understanding of his role ... the finely integrated sym...onic ensemble. At times the ...und was a little blurred, but ... could not tell whether this ...as owing to over-pedalling or ... some acoustic quirk.

Speaking of acoustics—last night the sound appeared more acceptable than on opening night.

At normal volume everything seemed agreeable if on the bright side, but the hall seems to be allegric to large volumes of sound.

A few characteristics are already in evidence. The classic orchestra sounded quite well, but to my surprise this modern hall is somewhat unkind to more modern sound patterns. Especially the lound percussion instruments sound shrill, the ting. Conductors will have to handle them with kid gloves.

The piano sound was also a little brittle, and in the ensemble the woodwinds tend to get lost. But the bass was very good last nighh ,tand it is hoped that by manipulating the overhead baffles all these curiosities can be eliminated.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
• ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Tuesday, September 25, 1962

Barber Concerto Given In New Lincoln Center

By MILES A. SMITH

New York (AP)—Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited first Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago." Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant qualities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

The Philadelphia Orchestra is scheduled to appear at Utica's Stanley Theater tomorrow night. Conductor will be Leopold Stowkowski.

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 393,595 S. 369,907

OCT 7 1962

Leinsdorf Snapped His Baton

By IRVING KOLODIN

Of all the conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings.

This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority. To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were the signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step.

* * *

LEADING the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor. And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For, in an interesting alteration of pattern, the Boston management has exchanged an improvisor for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Artur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

* * *

SINCE THEN he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 551,529 S. 643,232

SEP 27 1962

Barber Work Wins Ovation At Premiere

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

NEW YORK — With the glitter of opening night past, Philharmonic Hall slipped quietly into its role as New York's principal concert room. Thus, except for a noticeable number of dinner jackets, the second of the opening week audiences hardly seemed much different from the fashionably dressed assemblies one normally sees at the city's important artistic events.

Actually the ceremonials attending upon the inauguration of this initial unit of the Lincoln Center project could hardly be said to have begun. Monday night's concert presented the Boston Symphony, first of three notable out-of-town orchestras to appear in the series. (Conspicuously missing from the list is the Chicago Symphony which, as Orchestra Hall explained things, does not normally play a New York series and thus did not seem to belong in a sequence with the ensembles of Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland which make regular appearances in its greatest success with the Manhattan.)

SURPRISINGLY, the Boston Symphony did not achieve its greatest success with the Beethoven, Strauss or Prokofiev it played, but with the world premiere of a new American Work, the piano concerto of Samuel Barber. The event served as John Browning's first solo appearance with the orchestra.

Barber has succeeded in the all but impossible task of writing a concerto that has much of the appeal of the familiar romantic scores for piano and orchestra and yet expresses itself in an idiom that is plainly of this day. Anyone familiar with the polite apathy which normally greets contemporary music could not help but be impressed by the ovation given the composer, Browning and conductor Erich Leinsdorf, an ovation in which many of the audience were standing and all seemed to share the sort of enthusiasm and delight which cannot be expressed in less than a half-dozen curtain calls.

Cast in the usual three movements, the concerto opens with a fairly long passage for the solo piano, after which the orchestra enters with the principal theme.

ONE OF THE MARKS of a real composer is the ability to write a good slow movement, and Barber's is a beauty with the solo flute and piano used most strikingly. The finale is lively and unusual with its five-to-a-bar rhythm.

From the acoustic standpoint, the orchestra sounded wonderful even on the improvised risers Lincoln Center provided, but several wind solos with string accompaniment lacked the clarity and balanced found in the Boston auditorium.

Olympic
NATIONALLY ADVERTISED TV-STEREO
BRIA surplus, sizes 30 to Worsted SL

Leinsdorf Precision Sparks Symphony

SYMPHONY
Continued from the last Page

His predecessor Charles Bunch, was a great and good friend of the American composer. Mr. Leinsdorf is on record as favoring continuation of the fine Boston Symphony tradition, and demonstrated it in his first New York concert.

Precision Has Returned

The very favorable recollection of Mr. Leinsdorf's recent excellent performances of the "Ring" at the Metropolitan Opera, with the inadequate forces of the Met gave promise of notable results with the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command.

We are not disappointed in the brilliant performance of Samuel Barber's new concerto.

Precision has returned to the Bostonians and they played with remarkable virtuosity. The new Boston maestro is a perfectionist and has tightened for himself some bonds which other conductors wear more loosely.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," was another matter. Again, the playing was precise, tidy, and the conductor payed much attention to every detail, but he missed the large line and a good deal of the Driob Beethoven expressly demands on the first page of the score.

The lordly first movement was a shade slow and Mr. Leinsdorf further romanticized it by making tempo alterations for the subsidiary theme. The slow movement was more decent than sorrowful, and the impetuous scherzo lacked impetuosity. I am sorry I could not stay for the Strauss piece which may have tilted the scales in the conductor's favor.

Barber's Piano Concerto

Samuel Barber's new piano concerto displays beneath the elegance of it's technique a warm sincerity and exquisite command of form. Everywhere one feels sensibility to the higher forms of esthetic experience.

The concerto is bright, virtuoso in the best sense of the word, entertaining, sympathetic, and especially in the last movement, with a threat of genial mockery. It will stand a lot of wear.

Mr. Barber, though a modern composer, is not a member of the avant garde and in some quarters will be denounced as a "traditionalist."

But what is tradition? The slavish imitator of the past denies the history of progress, denies his own age, and insults the very things he tends to imitate by misusing them. There is considerable between this sort of traditionalism and a true understanding of the continuity of creative endeavor. That a work is deliberately within a somewhat older style is not a flaw unless it fails to gather impetus in the artist's temperament in proceeding.

This concerto rises everywhere above the painstaking and the ingenious. Individual elements have importance in themselves and the whole is not greater than the sum of its parts.

Sound a Bit Blurred

John Browning played the solo part with dash and complete understanding of his role in the finely integrated symphonic ensemble. At times the sound was a little blurred, but I could not tell whether this was owing to over-pedalling or to some acoustic quirk.

Speaking of acoustics—last night the sound appeared more acceptable than on opening night.

At normal volume everything seemed agreeable if on the bright side, but the hall seems to be allegric to large volumes of sound.

A few characteristics are already in evidence. The classic orchestra sounded quite well, but to my surprise this modern hall is somewhat unkind to more modern sound patterns. Especially the lound percussion instruments sound shrill, the ting. Conductors will have to handle them with kid gloves.

The piano sound was also a little brittle, and in the ensemble the woodwinds tend to get lost. But the bass was very good last nighh ,tand it is hoped that by manipulating the overhead baffles all these curiosities can be eliminated.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
• ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Tuesday, September 25, 1962

Barber Concerto Given In New Lincoln Center

By MILES A. SMITH

New York (AP)—Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited first Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago." Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant qualities, closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

The Philadelphia Orchestra is scheduled to appear at Utica's Stanley Theater tomorrow night. Conductor will be Leopold Stowkowski.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635

OCT 6 1962

New Start For Boston

OF ALL THE conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings as well. This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority.

To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step. Leading the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor.

And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For, in an interesting alteration of pattern, the Boston management has exchanged an improviser for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

A methodical man, too, in his approach to the problems of his craft, Leinsdorf learned Italian at an early age because he deemed it a prerequisite for a man who aspired to conduct opera, his first love. And, as those who believe with Branch Rickey (of the baseball world) that "luck is the residue of design", that knowledge provided him with an access to the favor of Arturo Toscanini when a knotty rehearsal problem arose at a Salzburg Festival some 25 years ago, and the eager Leinsdorf, not much out of his 'teens, had the linguistic as well as the musical talents to "jump".

Since that time, Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Arthur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr, and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

Since then he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City Center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston. —L. K.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony, Soloist Present Barber Concerto

NEW YORK, Sept. 24 (AP)—Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long-awaited first piano concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago." Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic Week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

Eric Leinsdorf

New York Herald Tribune
18 Wednesday, September 26, 1962

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor

PHILHARMONIC HALL
Lincoln Center

Conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; soloist: John Browning, pianist. The program:

Overture to "War and Peace"...Prokofiev
Symphony No. 3.....Beethoven
Piano Concerto (premiere).....Barber
"Till Eulenspiegel".....Strauss

By Paul Henry Lang

The second concert in the new Philharmonic Hall got under way Monday night as the Boston Symphony appeared on the stage. Taking office as its head after a long tenure of French or French-oriented conductors, Erich Leinsdorf, the Viennese-born but altogether Americanized conductor, will undoubtedly follow a more catholic musical policy, not necessarily unduly weighted with the Germanic. His predecessor, Charles Munch, was a great and good friend of the American composer, Mr. Leinsdorf is on record as favoring continuation of this fine Boston Symphony tradition, and demonstrated it in his first New York concert.

The very favorable recollection of Mr. Leinsdorf's recent excellent performances of the "Ring at the Metropolitan Opera, with the inadequate forces of the Met, gave promise of notable results with the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command. We were not disappointed in the brilliant performance of Samuel Barber's new piano concerto; precision has returned to the Bostonians and they played with remarkable virtuosity. The new Boston maetsro is a perfectionist and has tightened for himself some bonds which other conductors wear more loosely.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," was another matter. Again, the playing was precise, tidy, and the conductor paid much attention to every detail, but he missed the large line and a good deal of the brio Beethoven expressly demands on the first page of the score. The lordly first movement was a shade slow and Mr. Leinsdorf further romanticized it by making tempo alterations for the subsidiary themes. The slow movement was more decent than sorrowful, and the impetuous scherzo lacked impetuosity. I am sorry I could not stay for the Strauss piece, which may have tilted the scales in the conductor's favor.

Samuel Barber's new piano concerto displays beneath the elegance of its technique a warm sincerity and exquisite command of form. Everywhere one feels sensibility to the higher forms of esthetic experience. The concerto is bright, virtuoso in the best sense of the word, entertaining, sympathetic, and especially in the last movement, with a thread of genial mockery. It will stand a lot of wear.

Mr. Barber though a modern composer, is not a member of the avant garde and in some quarters will be denounced as a "traditionalist." But what is tradition? The slavish imitator of the past denies the history of progress, denies his own age, and insults the very thing he pretends to imitate by misusing it. There is considerable difference between this sort of traditionalism and a true understanding of the continuity of creative endeavor. That a work is deliberately within a somewhat older style is not a flaw unless it fails to gather impetus from the artist's temperament in proceeding. This concerto rises every where above the painstaking and the ingenious; its individual elements have importance in themselves and the whole is not greater than the sum of its parts.

John Browning played the solo part with dash and complete understanding of his role in the finely integrated symphonic ensemble. At times the sound was a little blurred but I could not tell whether this was owing to overpedalling or to some acoustic quirk.

Speaking of acoustics, Monday night the sound appeared more acceptable than on opening night. At normal volume everything seemed agreeable if on the bright side, but the hall seems to be allergic to large volume of sound. A few characteristics are already in evidence. The classic orchestra sounded quite well, but to my surprise this modern hall is somewhat unkind to more modern sound patterns. Especially the loud percussion instruments sound shrill, the cymbals positively ear-splitting. Conductors will have to handle them with kid gloves. The piano sound was also a little brittle, and in the ensembles some of the woodwinds tend to get lost. But the bass was very good last night, and it is hoped that by manipulating the overhead baffles all of these curiosities can be eliminated

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S 3,147,218

SEP 26 1962

SHOW BUSINESS

Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony Make Music in Philharmonic Hall

By JOHN CHAPMAN

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)

After its exciting, ultra-glamorous opening, Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center got down last evening to the business it was built for—making music. It was a heartening event.

The occasion was Erich Leinsdorf's New York debut as musical director of the Boston Symphony. He made his Boston bow last Friday. Bostonians should be happy over their choice.

Leinsdorf, familiar to New Yorkers as a conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, now is in charge of a superb musical instrument, and last evening he showed he could play it. The orchestra's performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony was a masterpiece of clarity, majesty and delicacy—some of the very best Beethoven I ever heard in my whole ear.

Don't Fence Him In

On the podium Leinsdorf offers an interesting contrast to our ebullient Bernstein. In the first place, his podium is barely big enough for his medium-size feet, and it has no fence around it to keep him from jumping out or off, as Bernstein's has.

Leinsdorf conducts from memory, uses no baton and few gestures. He appears to use his hands as though he were trying to mold the music into a three-dimensional shape. And mold it he did, thrillingly, last evening.

His program began with an interesting, well-behaved overture, Prokofiev's opening of his "War and Peace" opera. Then came the Beethoven, and after that the first performance of Samuel Barber's new piano concerto.

Some of Barber's Best

The soloist was young John Browning, and Barber set him a tricky task—also a satisfyingly showy one. On first hearing, this concerto strikes me as possibly Barber's most mature work.

It is boldly but not aggressively inventive, and both its instrumentation and its rhythms are full of pleasant surprises. There were cheers for Browning and Barber—as there had been for Leinsdorf and his wonderful men after the Beethoven.

The sound of the hall was less brilliant than it was the night before—perhaps because the high notes were not bouncing off several acres of boiled shirts. It still is a "live" hall, but it is a great hall. The soft murmurings of the strings during the scherzo and allegro of the "Eroica" were a lovely demonstration of how music can be heard in the new Philharmonic home. The Bostonians are the first to show what the place can do.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
SEP 25 1962

Boston's Orchestra Plays In New Philharmonic Hall

NEW YORK (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been playing concerts in this city for 77 years, gave its first performance at the new Philharmonic Hall Monday night featuring a splendid world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto.

John Browning

The young pianist John Browning was the soloist in this work.

Barber has created a vigorous, bright composition in three movements which preserve the traditional approach and strong melodic line which have characterized his earlier works.

But he also has introduced sharper harmonies and some of the more dissonant sounds of the modern idiom.

Lyrical Quality

The score gave Browning a good opportunity to display his qualities as a virtuoso, and he came up to the mark. He played the first movement with spirit, gave the song-like second movement the lyrical quality which it deserved, and handled the complex rhythms and resounding tonalities of the final movement with dash.

The other principal work was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica."

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new capacity as the orchestra's music director, presented a rendition marked by calm, measured dignity.

He drew on the orchestra's sonority with precision and polish, stressing the lyrical quality of the symphony.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 108,635

OCT 6 1962

New Start For Boston

OF ALL THE conductors and orchestras who participated in the first week's concerts in Lincoln Center, only one was, to some extent, as much on trial as the previously untried surroundings as well. This was Erich Leinsdorf, lately installed as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and appearing for the first time in New York as its responsible authority.

To the casual observer, this might have seemed much the same Boston Symphony as ever, but to the tutored eye there were signs, if not of a new broom that sweeps clean, at least of a healthy veteran with a new spring in his step. Leading the strings now as Leinsdorf's lieutenant was the brilliant young violinist Joseph Silverstein who has succeeded the long admired Richard Burgin, the orchestra's new associate conductor.

And responding to his baton with a snap and celerity that has sometimes been missing of late under Charles Munch, was an alert ensemble determined to play its way back into the top bracket which, for some tastes, it had once occupied alone.

For, in an interesting alteration of pattern, the Boston management has exchanged an improviser for what, in the theater, might be called a disciple of the method school. "Methodical" is the word for Leinsdorf, who belies his Viennese background in an abhorrence for "Schlamperei" (the Austrian equivalent of "easy does it"), devotion to the letter of the music he conducts as a necessary precedent to honoring its spirit.

A methodical man, too, in his approach to the problems of his craft, Leinsdorf learned Italian at an early age because he deemed it a prerequisite for a man who aspired to conduct opera, his first love. And, as those who believe with Branch Rickey (of the baseball world) that "luck is the residue of design", that knowledge provided him with an access to the favor of Arturo Toscanini when a knotty rehearsal problem arose at a Salzburg Festival some 25 years ago, and the eager Leinsdorf, not thunderstruck at his teens, had the linguistic as well as the musical talents to "jump".

Since that time, Leinsdorf has proved himself adept at the aquatic aspect of music in "jumping in" to many troubled waters and more often swimming than sinking. A prime instance was his succession, at the sudden death of Arthur Bodanzky, to primary responsibility for the Metropolitan's Germany repertory in the days of Flagstad and Melchior, Schorr, and Lehmann. Not all of them welcomed the authority asserted by one barely half their age, but Leinsdorf made it clear that he WAS the authority, and enhanced his stature thereby.

Since then he has weathered storms as director of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and served a term as head of New York's City Center Opera before returning to the Metropolitan as Rudolf Bing's musical administrator.

"From these varied qualifications, Leinsdorf has assembled a strong hand to play when a trump card is required to serve his need in Boston." —L. K.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 64,012
SEP 25 1962

Boston Symphony, Soloist Present Barber Concerto

NEW YORK, Sept. 24 (AP)—Soloist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long-awaited first piano concerto by Samuel Barber. It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

Browning gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago." Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the compositions and the acoustical qualities of the new Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the singing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work. Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

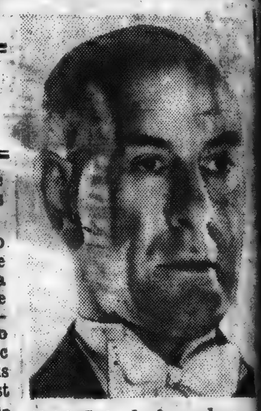
Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic Week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

Eric Leinsdorf

New York Herald Tribune
Wednesday, September 26, 1962
18

MUSIC

Boston Symphony



Erich Leinsdorf, conductor

PHILHARMONIC HALL
Lincoln Center

Conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; soloist: John Browning, pianist. The program:

Overture to "War and Peace" ..... Prokofiev
Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) ..... Beethoven
Piano Concerto, Op. 38 ..... Barber
Till Eulenspiegel ..... Strauss

By Paul Henry Lang

The second concert in the new Philharmonic Hall got under way Monday night as the Boston Symphony appeared on the stage. Taking office as its head after a long tenure of French or French-oriented conductors, Erich Leinsdorf, the Viennese-born but altogether Americanized conductor, will undoubtedly follow a more catholic musical policy, not necessarily unduly weighted with the Germanic. His predecessor, Charles Munch, was a great and good friend of the American composer, Mr. Leinsdorf is on record as favoring continuation of this fine Boston Symphony tradition, and demonstrated it in his first New York concert.

The very favorable recollection of Mr. Leinsdorf's recent excellent performances of the "Ring" at the Metropolitan Opera, with the inadequate forces of the Met, gave promise of notable results with the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command. We were not disappointed in the brilliant performance of Samuel Barber's new piano concerto; precision has returned to the Bostonians and they played with remarkable virtuosity. The new Boston maestro is a perfectionist and has tightened for himself some bonds which other conductors wear more loosely.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," was another matter. Again, the playing was precise, tidy, and the conductor paid much attention to every detail, but he missed the large line and a good deal of the brio Beethoven expressly demands on the first page of the score. The lordly first movement was made slow and Mr. Leinsdorf further romanticized it by making tempo alterations for the subsidiary themes. The slow movement was more decent than sorrowful, and the impetuous scherzo lacked impetuosity. I am sorry I could not stay for the Strauss piece, which may have tilted the scales in the conductor's favor.

Samuel Barber's new piano concerto displays beneath the elegance of its technique a warm sincerity and exquisite command of form. Everywhere one feels sensibility to the higher forms of esthetic experience. The concerto is bright, virtuoso in the best sense of the word, entertaining, sympathetic, and especially in the last movement, with a thread of genial mockery. It will stand a lot of wear.

Mr. Barber though a modern composer, is not a member of the avant garde and in some quarters will be denounced as a "traditionalist." But what is tradition? The slavish imitator of the past denies the history of progress, denies his own age, and insults the very thing he pretends to imitate by misusing it. There is considerable difference between this sort of traditionalism and a true understanding of the continuity of creative endeavor. That a work is deliberately within a somewhat older style is not a flaw unless it fails to gather impetus from the artist's temperament in proceeding. This concerto rises everywhere above the painstaking and the ingenious; its individual elements have importance in themselves and the whole is not greater than the sum of its parts.

John Browning played the solo part with dash and complete understanding of his role in the finely integrated symphonic ensemble. At times the sound was a little blurred but I could not tell whether this was owing to overpedalling or to some acoustic quirk.

Speaking of acoustics, Monday night the sound appeared more acceptable than on opening night. At normal volume everything seemed agreeable if on the bright side, but the hall seems to be allergic to large volume of sound. A few characteristics are already in evidence. The classic orchestra sounded quite well, but to my surprise this modern hall is somewhat unkind to more modern sound patterns. Especially the loud percussion instruments sound shrill, the cymbals positively ear-splitting. Conductors will have to handle them with kid gloves. The piano sound was also a little brittle, and in the ensembles some of the woodwinds tend to get lost. But the bass was very good last night, and it is hoped that by manipulating the overhead baffles all of these curiosities can be eliminated.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
UTICA PRESS
Tuesday, September 25, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
SEP 25 1962

Boston's Orchestra Plays In New Philharmonic Hall

NEW YORK (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been playing concerts in this city for 77 years, gave its first performance at the new Philharmonic Hall Monday night, featuring a splendid world premiere of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto.

John Browning

The young pianist John Browning was the soloist in this work.

Barber has created a vigorous, bright composition in three movements which preserve the traditional approach and strong melodic line which have characterized his earlier works.

But he also has introduced sharper harmonies and some of the more dissonant sounds of the modern idiom.

Lyrical Quality

The score gave Browning a good opportunity to display his qualities as a virtuoso, and he came up to the mark. He played the first movement with spirit, gave the song-like second movement the lyrical quality which it deserved, and handled the complex rhythms and resounding tonalities of the final movement with dash.

The other principal work was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Erich Leinsdorf, returning New York for the first time his new capacity as the orche tra's music director, presen a rendition marked by ca measured dignity.

He drew on the orchestra sonority with precision and ish, stressing the lyrical qu of the symphony.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S 3,147,219

SEP 26 1962

SHOW BUSINESS

Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony Make Music in Philharmonic Hall

By JOHN CHAPMAN

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)

After its exciting, ultra-glamorous opening, Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center got down last evening to the business it was built for—making music. It was a heartening event.

The occasion was Erich Leinsdorf's New York debut as musical director of the Boston Symphony. He made his Boston bow last Friday. Bostonians should be happy over their choice.

Leinsdorf, familiar to New Yorkers as a conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, now is in charge of a superb musical instrument, and last evening he showed he could play it. The orchestra's performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony was a masterpiece of clarity, majesty and delicacy—some of the very best Beethoven I ever heard in my whole ear.

Don't Fence Him In

On the podium Leinsdorf offers an interesting contrast to our ebullient Bernstein. In the first place, his podium is barely big enough for his medium-size feet, and it has no fence around it to keep him from jumping out or off, as Bernstein's has.

Leinsdorf conducts from memory, uses no baton and few gestures. He appears to use his hands as though he were trying to mold the music into a three-dimensional shape. And mold it he did, thrillingly, last evening.

His program began with an interesting, well-behaved overture, Prokofiev's opening of his "War and Peace" opera. Then came the Beethoven, and after that the first performance of Samuel Barber's new piano concerto.

Some of Barber's Best

The soloist was young John Browning, and Barber set him a tricky task—also a satisfyingly showy one. On first hearing, this concerto strikes me as possibly Barber's most mature work.

It is boldly but not aggressively inventive, and both its instrumentation and its rhythms are full of pleasant surprises. There were cheers for Browning and Barber—as there had been for Leinsdorf and his wonderful men after the Beethoven.

The sound of the hall was less brilliant than it was the night before—perhaps because the high notes were not bouncing off several acres of boiled shirts. It still is a "live" hall, but it is a great hall. The soft murmurings of the strings during the scherzo and allegro of the "Eroica" were a lovely demonstration of how music can be heard in the new Philharmonic home. The Bostonians are the first to show what the place can do.

TIGHT BINDING

213

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
M. 11. a YR.-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
NOV DEC 1962

Ne orks

On the ga night of Philharmonic Hall. Center, Leonard Bernstein an ew York Philharmonic present World Premiere of Aaron Coplan nnotations for Or- chestra, whicl rst hearing, is one of the least ext ork imaginable. At the opening osin the tensions of our time were ly evident, each instrument strea for peace. The two loud sections oken up by a seemingly uninspi l downright uniteresting variatio as an acoustical tour de force whicl composer found necessary to reti t prior to the world premiere. Thi f variations on a 12-tone row, arra to a 3-chord theme.

is definitely of the composer's best efforts— d have been expected for such spicious occasion.—
Trebor

On Monday ng, September 24, the Boston Sympl Orchestra, led by its new Musical ctor, Erich Leinsdorf, presented the World Premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto. It is a great joy to report that concerto is one of the most ingratiating pieces of music to be heard in any hall. Eminently listenable, it has the qualities of drama, suspense, an ironic-Romantic slow movement and a rip-roaring finale, accelerated by a breakneck, breathless tempo. John Browning did himself proud on this occasion, as did the Bostonians and their new chief. The audience responded with a standing ovation.—Plussain

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
178, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 25

Barber's Piano Concerto Presented In New York

W YORK (AP) — Soloist n Browning and the Boston hony Orchestra have pre-the long awaited first pi-concerto by Samuel Barber. an interesting development
e composer's career, but s no sharp departure from rlier works.

ning gave the concerto a o performance, and Barber eaming about it later.

Completed Sept. 9

e score was completed on
. 9 and the pianist said he
"10 or 11 hours a day" ng it, with mastery coming two days ago." Browning was rehearsing shortly be-last night's program.

ich Leinsdorf, returning to York for the first time in his post of music director of the stra, used the word "splento describe both the compon and the acoustical qualities
the new Philharmonic Hall, ch was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more itional approach than some his contemporaries, and is no d for drawing out the singing alities of all the instruments t he also has been experimeng with more dissonant tonali-s closer to the modern idiom
d this was apparent last night.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3
the "Eroica," was the other prin-pal work. Leinsdorf emphasized s lyrical passages with a mooth, unhurried interpretation hat grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited fina movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

CHICAGO SUN-TIMES
32 SECTION TWO Thurs., Sept. 27, 1962

Barber Work Wins Ovation At Premiere

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

NEW YORK — With the glitter of opening night past, Philharmonic Hall slipped quietly into its role as New York's principal concert room. Thus, except for a noticeable number of dinner jackets, the second of the opening week audiences hardly seemed much different from the fashionably dressed assemblies one normally sees at the city's important artistic events.

Actually the ceremonials attending upon the inauguration of this initial unit of the Lincoln Center project could hardly be said to have begun. Monday night's concert presented the Boston Symphony, first of three notable out-of-town orchestras to appear in the series. (Conspicuously missing from the list is the Chicago Symphony which, as Orchestra Hall explained things, does not normally play a New York series and thus did not seem to belong in a sequence with the ensembles of Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland which make regular appearances in Manhattan.)

SURPRISINGLY, the Boston Symphony did not achieve its greatest success with the Beethoven, Strauss or Prokofiev it played, but with the world premiere of a new American work, the piano concerto of Samuel Barber. The event served as John Browning's first solo appearance with the orchestra.

Barber has succeeded in the all but impossible task of writing a concerto that has much of the appeal of the familiar romantic scores for piano and orchestra and yet expresses itself in an idiom that is plainly of this day. Anyone familiar with the polite apathy which normally greets contemporary music could not help but be impressed by the ovation given the composer, Browning and conductor Erich Leinsdorf, an ovation in which many of the audience were standing and all seemed to share the sort of enthusiasm and delight which cannot be expressed in less than a half-dozen curtain calls.

Cast in the usual three movements, the concerto opens with a fairly long passage for the solo piano, after which the orchestra enters with the principal theme.

ONE OF THE MARKS of a real composer is the ability to write a good slow movement, and Barber's is a beauty with the solo flute and piano used most strikingly. The finale is lively and unusual with its five-to-a-bar rhythm.

From the acoustic standpoint, the orchestra sounded wonderful even on the improvised risers Lincoln Center provided, but several wind solos with string accompaniment lacked the clarity and balance found in the Boston auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
178, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
OCT 6 1962

Tonal Sp

Four Radiant Orchestras

By Miles Kastendieck
New York

Faced with a history-making occasion in its opening week, Lincoln Center proved itself equal not only to the challenge of the moment but also to the direction of its future. The brilliant idea of lining up four great orchestras was surpassed only by their performances. It made possible an appraisal of the sterling quality, the individuality, and the particular contribution of each. In retrospect, the entire week reflected the truth of the old saying, "handsome is as handsome does."

Important in the proceedings was the series of premieres. Following the Philharmonic's presentation of Copland's "Connotations for Orchestra" came the Boston Symphony's performance of Barber's Piano Concerto, the Philadelphia Orchestra's première of Piston's "Lincoln Center Festival Overture," the first performance here of Etler's Concerto in One Movement by the Cleveland Orchestra, and the first American performance of Falla's dramatic cantata "Atlantidá" by the Metropolitan Opera. Of all these, the Barber Concerto outranked the others in quality and won instantaneous success. The Falla effort proved disappointing.

The Bostonians' concert introduced Erich Leinsdorf as musical director. His program included Beethoven's "Eroica" as a fitting piece for the occasion. His interpretation left reservations which may be discussed later during the orchestra's regular visits. As soloist in the Barber, John Browning distinguished himself, identifying himself closely with its success.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
SEP 25 1962

John Browning Is Soloist with Boston Symphony in N.Y.

By MILES A. SMITH

New York—(AP)—Soloist John Browning and Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited First Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber.

It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

* * *

BROWNING gave the concerto a virtuoso performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago."

Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

* * *

ERICH LEINSDORF, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the signing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

* * *

BEETHOVEN'S Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work.

Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

Tonight marks the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

Herald Tribune NEW YORK
D. 355,898 S. 451,270
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
SEP 25 1962

Critics' View: Philharmonic And the Tones

By Charles Portis
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

The critics and other first-nighters were pretty much in agreement over the acoustical quality of Philharmonic Hall.

Too brilliant, they said, too "live."

Dr. Leo L. Beranek, acoustical consultant in the construction of the new hall, said he thought they were right and took steps yesterday toward correcting it.

The trouble was that the basses and cellos could not be heard, he said. This, and an irregular distribution of sound.

For the Boston Symphony's concert last night, Dr. Beranek raised the bass section a foot or so with stage risers. Over the stage, he lowered the 45 hanging acoustic panels, or "clouds," one foot. The remaining 91 panels over the auditorium he left alone.

But Dr. Beranek was quick to say that all this was just fine tuning.

Dr. Beranek said the opening concert was not really a fair test of the hall. The stage was extended eight feet forward for the choral singing, the 120-man orchestra was larger than normal by 15 persons, and it stretched out too far across the stage. These things upset the tuning, he said.

But he welcomed the stiff shakedown the new hall is getting this week.

"It's a fine test week. We'll get an enormous range of music—four major orchestras with four fine conductors, and each orchestra has its own presonality." (The orchestras are the New York Philharmonic, the Boston, the Phelidelphia and the Cleveland.)

He said he had reasonable hopes that Philharmonic Hall would come to be regarded in the very top rank of concert halls — along with Boston Symphony Hall, the Musikvereinsaal in Vienna, the Concertgebow in Amsterdam and the Stadt-Casino in Basel.

"When they opened, they got complaints, too. About having too modern a sound," he said.

Herald Tribune critics Ronald Eyer and Judith Crist did not find the first - night sounds at Philharmonic Hall "too modern," but they and many others did complain of harshness.

Mr. Eyer said:

"Based on first-night observations only, Philharmonic Hall seems to be in a bit of trouble acoustically. Granted that conditions were far from normal, what with three huge choruses and numerous highpowered soloists to the Philharmonic's normal decibel strength and the orchestra seated farther out in the auditorium than it ordinarily would be.

"Nevertheless, the hall is too 'live,' the sound is too bright for auditory comfort. Furthermore, it is not uniform throughout the house. The nearer to the stage, the less balance there is between high frequency sounds and low ones.

"Carnegie Hall, comparatively, is mellower although it has never been considered a low-frequency or boomy auditorium. It has none of the physically uncomfortable harshness that developed for example, in the final crashing chord of Aaron Copland's 'Connotations for Orchestra' at Philharmonic Hall Sunday night."

Miss Crist said:

"The adjective for Philharmonic Hall is, I think, "stunning," both visually and, I'm afraid, aurally.

"Perhaps custom will stale the impact of the "clouds" but I do not think it will end their quality of distraction; certainly the grandiose clutter of orchestra, three choruses and clutch of opera stars on stage will not be repeated.

"But I found the eye bemused and the ear assaulted not by volume but by harshness, a stridency of decor and sound that particularly during the Copland and Mahler works destroyed my aesthetic appreciation of the music.

"Acoustical adjustment might solve the problem partially but I suspect it will be a long, long time before I shall be able to rise above those 'clouds' on the wings of song."

TIGHT BINDING

213

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
M. 11. & YR.-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
NOV DEC 1962

New Works

On the gala night of Philharmonic Hall, Leonard Bernstein and New York Philharmonic presented World Premiere of Aaron Copland's Connotations for Orchestra, which first hearing, is one of the least exp work imaginable. At the opening losing the tensions of our time were ly evident, each instrument screa for peace. The two loud sections w broken up by a seemingly uninspir d downright uninteresting variation was an acoustical tour de force which composer found necessary to retit t prior to the world premiere. This of variations on a 12-tone row, arra into a 3-chord theme. is definitely n of the composer's best efforts—a ld have been expected for such an uspicious occasion.—Trebor

On Monday ing, September 24, the Boston Symph Orchestra, led by its new Musical D ctor, Erich Leinsdorf, presented the World Premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto. It is a great joy to report that the concerto is one of the most ingratiating pieces of music to be heard in any hall. Eminently listenable, it has the qualities of drama, an ironic-Romantic slow movement and a rip-roaring finale, accelerated by a breakneck, breathless tempo. John Browning did himself proud on this occasion, as did the Bostonians and their new chief. The audience responded with a standing ovation.—Plussain

CHICAGO SUN-TIMES
32 SECTION TWO Thurs., Sept. 27, 1962

Barber Work Wins Ovation At Premiere

By Robert C. Marsh
Sun-Times Music Critic

NEW YORK — With the glitter of opening night past, Philharmonic Hall slipped quietly into its role as New York's principal concert room. Thus, except for a noticeable number of dinner jackets, the second of the opening week audiences hardly seemed much different from the fashionably dressed assemblies one normally sees at the city's important artistic events.

Actually the ceremonials attending upon the inauguration of this initial unit of the Lincoln Center project could hardly be said to have begun. Monday night's concert presented the Boston Symphony, first of three notable out-of-town orchestras to appear in the series. (Conspicuously missing from the list is the Chicago Symphony which, as Orchestra Hall explained things, does not normally play a New York series and thus did not seem to belong in a sequence with the ensembles of Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland which make regular appearances in Manhattan.)

SURPRISINGLY, the Boston Symphony did not achieve its greatest success with the Beethoven, Strauss or Prokofiev it played, but with the world premiere of a new American work, the piano concerto of Samuel Barber. The event served as John Browning's first solo appearance with the orchestra.

Barber has succeeded in the all but impossible task of writing a concerto that has much of the appeal of the familiar romantic scores for piano and orchestra and yet expresses itself in an idiom that is plainly of this day. Anyone familiar with the polite apathy which normally greets contemporary music could not help but be impressed by the ovation given the composer, Browning and conductor Erich Leinsdorf, an ovation in which many of the audience were standing and all seemed to share the sort of enthusiasm and delight which cannot be expressed in less than a half-dozen curtain calls.

Cast in the usual three movements, the concerto opens with a fairly long passage for the solo piano, after which the orchestra enters with the principal theme.

ONE OF THE MARKS of a real composer is the ability to write a good slow movement, and Barber's is a beauty with the solo flute and piano used most strikingly. The finale is lively and unusual with its five-to-a-bar rhythm.

From the acoustic standpoint, the orchestra sounded wonderful even on the improvised risers Lincoln Center provided, but several wind solos with string accompaniment lacked the clarity and balance found in the Boston auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
OCT 6 1962

Tonal Sp

Four Radiant Orchestras

By Miss Kastendieck
New York

Faced with a history-making occasion in its opening week, Lincoln Center proved itself equal not only to the challenge of the moment but also to the direction of its future. The brilliant idea of lining up four great orchestras was surpassed only by their performances. It made possible an appraisal of the sterling quality, the individuality, and the particular contribution of each. In retrospect, the entire week reflected the truth of the old saying, "handsome is as handsome does."

Important in the proceedings was the series of premières. Following the Philharmonic's presentation of Copland's "Connotations for Orchestra" came the Boston Symphony's performance of Barber's Piano Concerto, the Philadelphia Orchestra's première of Piston's "Lincoln Center Festival Overture," the first performance here of Etler's Concerto in One Movement by the Cleveland Orchestra, and the first American performance of Falla's dramatic cantata "Atlantida" by the Metropolitan Opera. Of all these, the Barber Concerto outranked the others in quality and won instantaneous success. The Falla effort proved disappointing.

The Bostonians' concert introduced Erich Leinsdorf as musical director. His program included Beethoven's "Eroica" as a fitting piece for the occasion. His interpretation left reservations which may be discussed later during the orchestra's regular visits. As soloist in the Barber, John Browning distinguished himself, identifying himself closely with it

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 385,898 S. 451,270
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
SEP 25 1962

Critics' View: Philharmonic And the Tones

By Charles Portis
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

The critics and other first-nighters were pretty much in agreement over the acoustical quality of Philharmonic Hall.

Too brilliant, they said, too "live."

Dr. Leo L. Beranek, acoustical consultant in the construction of the new hall, said he thought they were right and took steps yesterday toward correcting it.

The trouble was that the basses and cellos could not be heard, he said. This, and an irregular distribution of sound.

For the Boston Symphony's concert last night, Dr. Beranek raised the bass section a foot or so with stage risers. Over the stage, he lowered the 45 hanging acoustic panels, or "clouds," one foot. The remaining 91 panels over the auditorium he left alone.

But Dr. Beranek was quick to say that all this was just fine tuning.

Dr. Beranek said the opening concert was not really a fair test of the hall. The stage was extended eight feet forward for the choral singing, the 120-man orchestra was larger than normal by 15 persons, and it stretched out too far across the stage. These things upset the tuning, he said.

But he welcomed the stiff shakedown the new hall is getting this week.

"It's a fine test week. We'll get an enormous range of music—four major ochestras with four fine conductors, and each orchestra has its own presonality." (The orchestras are the New York Philharmonic, the Boston, the Phelidelphia and the Cleveland.)

He said he had reasonable hopes that Philharmonic Hall would come to be regarded in the very top rank of concert halls — along with Boston Symphony Hall, the Musikvereinsaal in Vienna, the Concertgebow in Amsterdam and the Stadt-Casino in Basel.

"When they opened, they got complaints, too. About having too modern a sound," he said.

Herald Tribune critics Ronald Eyer and Judith Crist did not find the first - night sounds at Philharmonic Hall "too modern," but they and many others did complain of harshness.

Mr. Eyer said:

"Based on first-night observations only, Philharmonic Hall seems to be in a bit of trouble acoustically. Granted that conditions were far from normal, what with three huge choruses and numerous highpowered soloists to the Philharmonic's normal decibel strength and the orchestra seated farther out in the auditorium than it ordinarily would be.

"Nevertheless, the hall is too 'live,' the sound is too bright for auditory comfort. Furthermore, it is not uniform throughout the house. The nearer to the stage, the less balance there is between high frequency sounds and low ones.

"Carnegie Hall, comparatively, is mellower although it has never been considered a low-frequency or boomy auditorium. It has none of the physically uncomfortable harshness that developed for example, in the final crashing chord of Aaron Copland's 'Connotations for Orchestra' at Philharmonic Hall Sunday night."

Miss Crist said:

"The adjective for Philharmonic Hall is, I think, "stunning," both visually and, I'm afraid, aurally.

"Perhaps custom will stale the impact of the "clouds" but I do not think it will end their quality of distraction; certainly the grandiose clutter of orchestra, three choruses and clutch of opera stars on stage will not be repeated.

"But I found the eye bemused and the ear assaulted not by volume but by harshness, a stridency of decor and sound that particularly during the Copland and Mahler works destroyed my aesthetic appreciation of the music.

"Acoustical adjustment might solve the problem partially but I suspect it will be a long, long time before I shall be able to rise above those 'clouds' on the wings of song."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
SEP 25 1962

Barber's Piano Concerto Presented In New York

W YORK (AP) — Soloist Browning and the Boston ony Orchestra have pre- the long awaited first pi- concerto by Samuel Barber. an interesting development composer's career, but no sharp departure from rlier works.

ning gave the concerto a performance, and Barber ming about it later.

Completed Sept. 9

score was completed on 9 and the pianist said he "10 or 11 hours a day" it, with mastery coming two days ago." Browning was rehearsing shortly be- last night's program.

Leinsdorf, returning to York for the first time in his post of music director of the ra, used the word "splen- to describe both the compe- and the acoustical qualities new Philharmonic Hall, was opened Sunday night. er always has used a more nal approach than some contemporaries, and is no- for drawing out the singing ties of all the instruments. he also has been experimen- with more dissonant tonali- closer to the modern idiom, this was apparent last night. Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 "Eroica," was the other prin- work. Leinsdorf emphasized lyrical passages with a oth, unhurried interpretation grew almost dreamy in the second movement, but he built up subtly the more spirited fina movement.

The overture to "War and Peace," by Prokofiev, opened the program and it was concluded with "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss.

Tonight will be the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D Minor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
SEP 25 1962

John Browning Is Soloist with Boston Symphony in N. Y.

By MILES A. SMITH

New York—(AP)—Soloist John Browning and Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the long awaited First Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber.

It is an interesting development in the composer's career, but marks no sharp departure from his earlier works.

• • •

BROWNING gave the concerto a virtuose performance, and Barber was beaming about it later.

The score was completed on Sept. 9 and the pianist said he spent "10 or 11 hours a day" learning it, with mastery coming "only two days ago."

Browning still was rehearsing shortly before last night's program.

• • •

ERICH LEINSDORF, returning to New York for the first time in his new post of music director of the orchestra, used the word "splendid" to describe both the composition and the acoustical qualities of the Philharmonic Hall, which was opened Sunday night.

Barber always has used a more traditional approach than some of his contemporaries, and is noted for drawing out the signing qualities of all the instruments. But he also has been experimenting with more dissonant tonalities closer to the modern idiom, and this was apparent last night.

• • •

BEETHOVEN'S Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," was the other principal work.

Leinsdorf emphasized its lyrical passages with a smooth, unhurried interpretation that grew almost dreamy in the second movement but he built up subtly the more spirited final movement.

Tonight marks the third night of Philharmonic week. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Overture composed especially for the occasion, and Van Cliburn will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3 in D

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MANHATTAN EAST
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

OCT 4 1962 Buffalo

MUSIC

At Lincoln Center

The Boston Symphony. Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

As a locus of serious and authentic music-making, Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center, in our opinion, was actually inaugurated by the presence of the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf on the second evening (Monday) of last week's opening concerts.

The hall itself is the quintessence of modern elegance and festive spaciousness. Max Abramowitz' design reveals a revolutionary concern for the listener's personal comfort, so that concertgoing in New York has finally become a civilized and exhilarating experience.

Mr. Leinsdorf's tensile, professional approach to the music complemented the architect's combination of delicacy and strength, of verve and reticence, in planning the building: music and milieu were sympathetically matched.

Acoustically the hall has a clear, bright, sharp sound similar to the tone of an excellent high fidelity system. This is not to suggest that there is anything artificial about its quality. The highs or trebels are salient and separated so that details of instrumentation are easy to follow. For those who prefer a mellower, more sensuous, more bass-y sound—although it is unreasonable, we think, to expect such results from a new structure using modern building materials—the hall might have its limitations.

The concert opened with the Overture to Prokofiev's opera War and Peace, a work about which, we hope, the last word is far from having been said in this country. The music, written in the composer's later nationalistic style, is a broad, flowing lyrical river of sound with heroic overtones. Mr. Leinsdorf showed a keen appreciation of the rolling, songful cadences in this music.

Beethoven's Eroica Symphony was delivered in a careful, clean, considered reading by Mr. Leinsdorf and his men. Short of a truly inspired interpretation, his performance was that next best thing—an even, sensible examination of the work's structural logic and instrumental grace. The dynamic balances were impeccable, and each thread and seam in the musical fabric was properly isolated, illuminated, and integrated into a persuasive design.

The program featured the world premiere of Samuel Barber's long-awaited Piano Concerto. Although it is an ambitious piece full of big, splashy, exciting sounds, and the performance with pianist John Browning was nothing less than electrifying, this listener must reluctantly register a considerable disappointment with the level of musical thinking and feeling displayed in this work.

The first movement is potentially the best—a sputtering, tumultuous outburst containing some really formidable cadenza passages for the solo instrument. The second movement is a short, haunting model song interrupted by a mysterious descending-scale whisper in the strings. This movement is proof that Mr. Barber is one of the few serious composers around who can still turn out an honest-to-goodness beautiful melody.

The last movement is in our opinion a total failure and represents a self-indulgent capitulation on Mr. Barber's part to the most obvious and meretricious crowd-pleasing tactics, a temptation which has always been latent in his courageous preference for a neo-romantic and eclectic idiom. In this movement the piano and orchestra alternately pound out a flurry of savage, simple-minded tom-tom motifs embarrassingly reminiscent of earlier passages by two well-known modern Russian masters. The movement as a whole is a static and disorganized pastiche.

Mr. Barber's Piano Concerto is merely more ammunition for the avant-garde to thrive on.

* * *

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,792 SAT. 526,176

SEP 25 1962 Buffalo

Acoustics Causing Headaches At New York Lincoln Center

Unless Improved, the Lady May Acquire a Bad Name

BY DONAL J. HENAHAN
Daily News Music Critic

NEW YORK—If the men in charge of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts went to bed Monday night and dreamed of a $15,000,000 lemon, it would not be surprising.

The second concert at Philharmonic Hall, first of the six structures in the arts center to be occupied, gave no more grounds for acoustical good cheer than Sunday evening's opening event. At this stage in its career, the hall produces a dead and unpredictable sound.

Supposedly, the hall is adjustable to provide any acoustical effect—but Chicagoans were told that about the theater in McCormick Place, too.

Trying to learn what troubles exist and how to iron them out of Philharmonic Hall are unquestionably giving Lincoln Center's general staff long thoughts, and one can only hope that a satisfactory aural formula will be discovered soon, before the elegant lady gets a bad name.

* * *

MONDAY night's concert, which brought the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, into the spotlight, provided a great deal more to listen to than the New York Philharmonic's tasteless hootenanny on Sunday.

Acoustics or no, this was a genuine concert by a virtuoso orchestra, led with aplomb by a master technician.

One might quarrel with Leinsdorf's impossible slow funeral march in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and even wonder why he chose to open with so undistinguished a piece as the overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace." But it was identifiable as a concert, and there was excitement to match the duller patches.

* * *

AS ON opening night, when Aaron Copland's "Connotations" was a bright spot, the creative arts were well represented. John Browning and the Bostonians gave Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto a world premiere that blazed with conviction and bravura playing.

The concerto, a frankly exhibitionistic showpiece in three movements, sounded now like Khatchaturian, now like Ravel, and again like Gershwin, with a modicum of wrong-note Brahms thrown in, but its musicality could not be denied.

Everything was composed with such technical proficiency and executed with such commitment that the work managed to sound major even while reeking of banalities, as in the dreamy slow movement.

Mr. Barber is likely to make himself some money with this one. Virtuosos and audiences both will take to it, if its first thunderous reception is any criterion.

* * *

NEW YORK has suddenly become a beehive of acoustical experts, all except a handful fiercely partisan amateurs of the game. Every barber and cabbie has his own ideas about how the hall sounds and they seem no more befuddled than the famous conductors, musicians, and other qualified experts who actually have taken the hall's measure in person.

It is almost impossible to find two agreeing on what is wrong, let alone how to fix it—but it is also impossible to find anyone outside official Lincoln Center circles who is satisfied with the acoustical results so far.

With so much invested in Philharmonic Hall, there is no doubt but that the acoustical medicine men will go into their rain dance and eventually produce something that New York's musical public can live with. Meanwhile, perhaps someone should start listening seriously to those barbers and cabbies.

Music

Boston Symphony Heard At Philharmonic Hall

World-Telegram - 25 Oct 62

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

It hasn't taken Erich Leinsdorf long to re-make the Boston Symphony in his image—an image of absolute precision and singleness of purpose.

Confirmation of this came again with the orchestra's visit to Philharmonic Hall last night. Together, conductor and musicians filled the new hall with sounds befitting its beauty.

Of the three numbers listed, I could hear only Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony and Schumann's Fourth. Because of a Carnegie assignment, I had to forego Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra which came last.

Plenty of Power

The Piston symphony may very well be this revered American composer's best. Certainly Leinsdorf and the Bostonians gave it every semblance of intrinsic and extrinsic power.

The curious thing—if, indeed, curious—is that Piston wrote it for the Philadelphia Orchestra, with its specific "sound" in mind. When premiered it seemed custom-built for that ensemble.

Last night it seemed no less designed for the Boston Symphony.

The symphony is fresh and jaunty, well-built—as everything of this Harvard professor's is—and even if it doesn't always pursue the tensions promised, it rolls up fine sonority. Leinsdorf enhances it in every way.

Thoroughly Grasped

He also enhanced Schumann's Fourth. Like the other three symphonies of Schumann, this one needs all the love and scrutiny a conductor can give it. Otherwise its defects stand out grievously.

Leinsdorf grasped thoroughly its community of mood, the pause-less flow from movement to movement, in which themes recur as in a reverie of radiant imagery. Every phase was infused with affectionate warmth.

So performed, one forgot all about Schumann's "thick" orchestration and classical lapses, and thought only of that glowing dream that was so soon to be shattered by insanity and death.

Never, in my time, has the Boston Symphony given us such Schumann, and rarely has any conductor of any other orchestra equalled or surpassed it. A new and greater tradition has already taken root in Boston.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
W. 204,000

OCT 1 1962 Buffalo

Glamor at Lincoln Cen.

A Splurge of M

NEW YORK CITY.

World premieres of orchestral works are a rarity in most United States cities. Even a brief composition for orchestra is difficult to create, and someone has to pay for the composer's time. Yet almost every American symphony orchestra operates at a perpetual financial deficit, with nothing left over to buy new works, and almost no living American survives by composing serious music.

In seven days last week, however, the City of New York heard four orchestral world premieres. More than anything else, perhaps, that statistic illustrated the enthusiasm with which the musical fraternity greeted the opening of Philharmonic Hall—the first of five buildings in the $142,000,000 Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. (The works were paid for by four different people or organizations.) There was another encouraging statistic, too: Of the four premieres, spread over 12 opening-week programs, all—more or less—were hits.

...er

...usical Premieres

The week's audiences were likewise ebullient. At the Sept. 23 opening night they admired Mrs. John F. Kennedy and remained to sip free champagne provided by Lincoln Center officials; all through the week they continued to pack the 2,646-seat auditorium. They were divided over how the hall reflected orchestral sound, but they weren't at odds about the glamor of the opening week.

Heavy on the Brass

The first night program—featuring Leonard Bernstein, the New York Philharmonic, a dozen vocal soloists, and three choruses—admittedly was more a dedication than a balanced concert. Excerpts from works by Beethoven and Mahler were heavily orchestrated (the Mahler employed an oversized orchestra, with extra brass players in the upper balcony, and three choirs). Mr. Bernstein performed them as if the additional performers still fell short of commemorating the rousing nature of the occasion.

Many people objected to such a program, but few could agree on what would have been more fitting. In any event, the opening was highlighted by the world premiere of Aaron Copland's Connotations for Orchestra, a set of variations on a 12-tone row arranged into a three-chord theme. Unlike many 12-tone compositions, this one is easy to follow. It has strength, variety, and color, and showed off both the entire orchestra and its component sections.

On Monday, the week's second concert was offered by the Boston Symphony and its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf. Though only on the job a week, Mr. Leinsdorf has modified the bright, brittle sheen that the orchestra has displayed for over four decades. After one listening, it seemed the Boston aggregation is acquiring a new personality, with less prominence in the brasses and a more sober tone.

The Bostonians presented the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto with John Browning as soloist. The concerto was the evening's highlight: Its first two movements are beautifully lyrical, even unashamedly romantic, and its exciting finale includes some unusual rhythms. All in all, it's a work by a man who remains unafraid to write a good singable tune, yet it remains in every sense a composition of our time.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MANHATTAN EAST
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

OCT 4 1962

MUSIC

At Lincoln Center

The Boston Symphony. Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

As a locus of serious and authentic music-making, Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center, in our opinion, was actually inaugurated by the presence of the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf on the second evening (Monday) of last week's opening concerts.

The hall itself is the quintessence of modern elegance and festive spaciousness. Max Abramowitz' design reveals a revolutionary concern for the listener's personal comfort, so that concertgoing in New York has finally become a civilized and exhilarating experience.

Mr. Leinsdorf's tensile, professional approach to the music complemented the architect's combination of delicacy and strength, of verve and reticence, in planning the building: music and milieu were sympathetically matched.

Acoustically the hall has a clear, bright, sharp sound similar to the tone of an excellent high fidelity system. This is not to suggest that there is anything artificial about its quality. The highs or trebels are salient and separated so that details of instrumentation are easy to follow. For those who prefer a mellower, more sensuous, more bass-y sound—although it is unreasonable, we think, to expect such results from a new structure using modern building materials—the hall might have its limitations.

The concert opened with the Overture to Prokofiev's opera War and Peace, a work about which, we hope, the last word is far from having been said in this country. The music, written in the composer's later nationalistic style, is a broad, flowing lyrical river of sound with heroic overtones. Mr. Leinsdorf showed a keen appreciation of the rolling, songful cadences in this music.

Beethoven's Eroica Symphony was delivered in a careful, clean, considered reading by Mr. Leinsdorf and his men. Short of a truly inspired interpretation, his performance was that next best thing —an even, sensible examination of the work's structural logic and instrumental grace. The dynamic balances were impeccable, and each thread and seam in the musical fabric was properly isolated, illuminated, and integrated into a persuasive design.

The program featured the world premiere of Samuel Barber's long-awaited Piano Concerto. Although it is an ambitious piece full of big, splashy, exciting sounds, and the performance with pianist John Browning was nothing less than electrifying, this listener must reluctantly register a considerable disappointment with the level of musical thinking and feeling displayed in this work.

The first movement is potentially the best—a sputtering, tumultuous outburst containing some really formidable cadenza passages for the solo instrument. The second movement is a short, haunting model song interrupted by a mysterious descending-scale whisper in the strings. This movement is proof that Mr. Barber is one of the few serious composers around who can still turn out an honest-to-goodness beautiful melody.

The last movement is in our opinion a total failure and represents a self-indulgent capitulation on Mr. Barber's part to the most obvious and meretricious crowd-pleasing tactics, a temptation which has always been latent in his courageous preference for a neo-romantic and eclectic idiom. In this movement the piano and orchesra alternately pound out a flurry of savage, simple-minded tom-tom motifs embarrassingly reminiscent of earlier passages by two well-known modern Russian masters. The movement as a whole is a static and disorganized pastiche.

Mr. Barber's Piano Concerto is merely more ammunition for the avant-garde to thrive on.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,782 SAT. 526,178

SEP 25 1962

Acoustics Causing Headaches At New York Lincoln Center

Unless Improved, the Lady May Acquire a Bad Name

BY DONAL J. HENAHAN
Daily News Music Critic

NEW YORK—If the men in charge of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts went to bed Monday night and dreamed of a $15,000,000 lemon, it would not be surprising.

The second concert at Philharmonic Hall, first of the six structures in the arts center to be occupied, gave no more grounds for acoustical good cheer than Sunday evening's opening event. At this stage in its career, the hall produces a dead and unpredictable sound.

Supposedly, the hall is adjustable to provide any acoustical effect—but Chicagoans were told that about the theater in McCormick Place, too.

Trying to learn what troubles exist and how to iron them out of Philharmonic Hall are unquestionably giving Lincoln Center's general staff long thoughts, and one can only hope that a satisfactory aural formula will be discovered soon, before the elegant lady gets a bad name.

* * *

MONDAY night's concert, which brought the Boston Symphony and its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, into the spotlight, provided a great deal more to listen to than the New York Philharmonic's tasteless hootenanny on Sunday.

Acoustics or no, this was a genuine concert by a virtuoso orchestra, led with aplomb by a master technician.

One might quarrel with Leinsdorf's impossible slow funeral march in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and even wonder why he chose to open with so undistinguished a piece as the overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace." But it was identifiable as a concert, and there was excitement to match the duller patches.

* * *

AS ON opening night, when Aaron Copland's "Connotations" was a bright spot, the creative arts were well represented. John Browning and the Bostonians gave Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto a world premiere that blazed with conviction and bravura playing.

The concerto, a frankly exhibitionistic showpiece in three movements, sounded now like Khatchaturian, now like Ravel, and again like Gershwin, with a modicum of wrong-note Brahms thrown in, but its musicality could not be denied.

Everything was composed with such technical proficiency and executed with such commitment that the work managed to sound major even while reeking of banalities, as in the dreamy slow movement.

Mr. Barber is likely to make himself some money with this one. Virtuosos and audiences both will take to it, if its first thunderous reception is any criterion.

* * *

NEW YORK has suddenly become a beehive of acoustical experts, all except a handful fiercely partisan amateurs of the game. Every barber and cabbie has his own ideas about how the hall sounds and they seem no more befuddled than the famous conductors, musicians, and other qualified experts who actually have taken the hall's measure in person.

It is almost impossible to find two agreeing on what is wrong, let alone how to fix it —but it is also impossible to find anyone outside official Lincoln Center circles who is satisfied with the acoustical results so far.

With so much invested in Philharmonic Hall, there is no doubt but that the acoustical medicine men will go into their rain dance and eventually produce something that New York's musical public can live with. Meanwhile, perhaps someone should start listening seriously to those barbers and cabbies.

Music

World-Telegram 25 Oct 62

Boston Symphony Heard At Philharmonic Hall

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

It hasn't taken Erich Leinsdorf long to re-make the Boston Symphony in his image—an image of absolute precision and singleness of purpose.

Confirmation of this came again with the orchestra's visit to Philharmonic Hall last night. Together, conductor and musicians filled the new hall with sounds befitting its beauty.

Of the three numbers listed, I could hear only Walter Piston's Seventh Symphony and Schumann's Fourth. Because of a Carnegie assignment, I had to forego Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra which came last.

Plenty of Power

The Piston symphony may very well be this revered American composer's best. Certainly Leinsdorf and the Bostonians gave it every semblance of intrinsic and extrinsic power.

The curious thing—if, indeed, curious—is that Piston wrote it for the Philadelphia Orchestra, with its specific "sound" in mind. When premiered it seemed custom-built for that ensemble.

Last night it seemed no less designed for the Boston Symphony.

The symphony is fresh and jaunty, well-built—as everything of this Harvard professor's is—and even if it doesn't always pursue the tensions promised, it rolls up fine sonority. Leinsdorf enhances it in every way.

Thoroughly Grasped

He also enhanced Schumann's Fourth. Like the other three symphonies of Schumann, this one needs all the love and scrutiny a conductor can give it. Otherwise its defects stand out grievously.

Leinsdorf grasped thoroughly its community of mood, the pause-less flow from movement to movement, in which themes recur as in a reverie of radiant imagery. Every phase was infused with affectionate warmth.

So performed, one forgot all about Schumann's "thick" orchestration and classical lapses, and thought only of that glowing dream that was so soon to be shattered by insanity and death.

Never, in my time, has the Boston Symphony given us such Schumann, and rarely has any conductor of any other orchestra equalled or surpassed it. A new and greater tradition has already taken root in Boston.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
W. 204,000

OCT 1 1962

Glamor at Lincoln Cen

A Splurge of M

NEW YORK CITY.

World premieres of orchestral works are a rarity in most United States cities. Even a brief composition for orchestra is difficult to create, and someone has to pay for the composer's time. Yet almost every American symphony orchestra operates at a perpetual financial deficit, with nothing left over to buy new works, and almost no living American survives by composing serious music.

In seven days last week, however, the City of New York heard four orchestral world premieres. More than anything else, perhaps, that statistic illustrated the enthusiasm with which the musical fraternity greeted the opening of Philharmonic Hall—the first of five buildings in the $142,000,000 Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. (The works were paid for by four different people or organizations.) There was another encouraging statistic, too: Of the four premieres, spread over 12 opening-week programs, all—more or less—were hits.

er

usical Premieres

The week's audiences were likewise ebullient. At the Sept. 23 opening night they admired Mrs. John F. Kennedy and remained to sip free champagne provided by Lincoln Center officials; all through the week they continued to pack the 2,646-seat auditorium. They were divided over how the hall reflected orchestral sound, but they weren't at odds about the glamor of the opening week.

Heavy on the Brass

The first night program—featuring Leonard Bernstein, the New York Philharmonic, a dozen vocal soloists, and three choruses—admittedly was more a dedication than a balanced concert. Excerpts from works by Beethoven and Mahler were heavily orchestrated (the Mahler employed an oversized orchestra, with extra brass players in the upper balcony, and three choirs). Mr. Bernstein performed them as if the additional performers still fell short of commemorating the rousing nature of the occasion.

Many people objected to such a program, but few could agree on what would have been more fitting. In any event, the opening was highlighted by the world premiere of Aaron Copland's Connotations for Orchestra, a set of variations on a 12-tone row arranged into a three-chord theme. Unlike many 12-tone compositions, this one is easy to follow. It has strength, variety, and color, and showed off both the entire orchestra and its component sections.

On Monday, the week's second concert was offered by the Boston Symphony and its new music director, Erich Leinsdorf. Though only on the job a week, Mr. Leinsdorf has modified the bright, brittle sheen that the orchestra has displayed for over four decades. After one listening, it seemed the Boston aggregation is acquiring a new personality, with less prominence in the brasses and a more sober tone.

The Bostonians presented the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto with John Browning as soloist. The concerto was the evening's highlight: Its first two movements are beautifully lyrical, even unashamedly romantic, and its exciting finale includes some unusual rhythms. All in all, it's a work by a man who remains unafraid to write a good singable tune, yet it remains in every sense a composition of our time.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

215

Boston Symphony at Lincoln Center

Berkshire Eagle 9/26/62

AP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of new conductor Erich Leinsdorf, appeared at Philharmonic Hall in New York Monday night. Hall, a unit of Lincoln Center for Performing Arts, opened Sunday night with the N.Y. Philharmonic.

BY JOHN STUART COX

NEW YORK — Philharmonic Hall, the first of seven monuments to good intentions scheduled for completion at Lincoln Center in the next four years, opened Sunday. Eric Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its music director for the first time in Boston on Friday. The celebrities have all gone home now. The New York and Boston press corps are sleeping it off, and the television industry is reconsidering some of the claims it funneled to a nationwide audience. America has not come of age. The millennium has not arrived.

Last night Mr. Leinsdorf appeared for the second time as the permanent conductor of the BSO at the second concert presented in Philharmonic Hall. That is today's news. We are back to normal now.

• • •

THE MOST significant event last night was the first performance of Samuel Barber's first piano concerto. It is the first piano concerto with a future written by an American during my lifetime, the first since George Gershwin's respected fiasco. As forcefully and articulately introduced by John Browning, it was momentous. Recall the rhythmic fire of Medea's death dance in the Cave of the Heart, consider the percussive possibilities of the virtuoso piano, imagine them combined in a sonata form with considerable melodic outline hovering on the atonality threshold of the sophisticated musical ear. The piece is extraordinarily economical, clear in design, integrated. The third movement, a savage dance built almost entirely on a rhythmically distinctive note figure in 5/8 time, brought the audience howling to its feet. No worthwhile judge of music with a sense of history could fail to see how the appearance of this work eclipses the opening of a new music hall.

• • •

INCIDENTALLY, for an account of what several authorities consider the meaning of all the ballyhoo, I refer the reader to a special supplement in last Sunday's New York Times. The new hall, in my opinion, is gay and inviting, but its system of hanging baffles, known as clouds, took what was rightfully my sound in the center of the 6th row and tossed it along to the top of the roller coaster gallery. The sound stretching has definitely compromised the privileges of those in the dress circle. The percussion floats away on gossamer wings. Quite honestly, I believe the baffle fad is an economy we can afford to do without.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened the program with the overture to Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace," like the 5th symphony a work of the war years and sober therefore. He closed the program with an equally sober Till Eulen Spiegel's Merry Pranks. In between, before the Barber concerto, he conducted Beethoven's Eroica, also a work of the war years, also very sober. The performance was by no means matchless, though it suggested a bright promise of things to come. Having taken it all apart, Mr. Leinsdorf almost succeeded in putting it back together. The ideal was just beyond his grasp, the perfect ambience lacking. I would guess the orchestra is headed for an old-fashioned German ordeal.

• • •

IN MY PART of the auditorium everyone was dressed in dinner clothes, as opposed to Sunday's full dress. Some of them clapped between movements and some of them left before or during the last number. Eventually Lincoln Center will have to appropriate money to hire good audiences if this experiment is going to work. The surest way, of course, would have been to reduce prices rather than raising them and making attendance ever more dependent on an ability to pay. Prosperity makes people fat and fat kills the heart. Lincoln Center is an affirmation of a belief in this nation's creative mission. Would that we didn't have to protest so much.

SEP 2

AT LINCOLN CENTER

N.Y. Hails Boston Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

NEW YORK—Sunday night the opening of the lavish new Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center of the Performing Arts made civic history here, but Monday night Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and composer Samuel Barber touched off the artistic fireworks.

Barber Concerto Inspires Rare Response

Mr. Barber has made a lasting contribution to the contemporary literature for piano. His first Concerto in this form presented by the Bostonians with John Browning as soloist inspired a rare response from a second night audience in the opulent blue and gold auditorium of the hall—a standing homage to the composer.

(Continued on Page Twelve)

It is a limpid, graceful and lyric score that exploits the resources of the solo instrument and establishes a mood of fragile, haunting melodic introspection.

The three movements—allegro, appassionato, canzona and allegro molto—disclose felicity of tone, rhythm and instrumentation at every turn. The work, making no effort to comply with a dissonant modernity, has logic, wit and flowing force in the construction of its musical ideas. In short, Samuel Barber has written a distinguished score which should take its place alongside his Violin and Cello Concertos as a landmark of contemporary composition.

Mr. Browning met the exceedingly fierce demands of the soloist role with digital dexterity, yet the performance received a gentle and song-like dimension, too. The first two movements, one declamatory and centered around a simple ascending figure reminiscent of Prokofiev, the other an infinitely lovely dialogue between piano and flute, seemed to me the finest parts of the composition, though the last movement featuring a strident ostinato figure reaches a surging dramatic close.

Mr. Barber came on stage while the audience rose. This was a different kind of audience from that of the glamorous premiere, apparently more musical, and at least less distracted by ceremonial. They heard the Boston Symphony for the first time in the lustre of Philharmonic Hall's resplendent setting. It is the second of four major orchestras to play here this week; and after last night's lack-lustre program provided a heartening musical experience. While the hall undoubtedly is sharp and needs tuning, the Boston orchestral palette glowed with amazing splendor.

The program, save for the Barber Concerto, was a duplicate of that presented at last weeks concerts in Boston. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted with efficiency, polish and ease. The orchestra sounded no less vibrant under his direction here despite the naked acoustics. The Eroica achieved the same singing expressive line; the "Til Eulen Spiegel," a miracle of color, again displayed the orchestra's new Germanic character.

But it was the Samuel Barber Concerto that lent the evening a memorable quality. Sunday night showed the world a gorgeous corner stone of a world cultural center; last night showed the reason why.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

SEP 25 1962

AT PHILHA

Barber Concer

By MILES KASTENDIECK

PERSONIFYING MUSICAL SPLENDOR through the parade of four great orchestras to highlight its opening week, Lincoln Center presented the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall last night.

The concert marked the official debut here of Erich Leinsdorf as its music director. It will be remembered for the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto.

With the tumult and the hi-fi brilliance of opening night behind, the hall began to come into its own. Acoustically its assets predominated because of the Bostonians beautifully clear-cut playing.

Whether Mr. Leinsdorf's arrangement of the musicians in tiers or his way of conducting was responsible for the difference, change there was, and for the better.

The woodwinds sounded just right, the basses stronger, the brasses still a bit too bright, the violins warmer.

Rising Ovation

The Barber Concerto scored a hit. The audience rose to applaud the composer in a reception he should long cherish.

Aside from being an exciting piece rhythmically, it is unashamedly melodic. Undoubtedly the latter aspect found instant favor with the audience, for people even in the sixth decade of the century still find a well-turned melodic line most gratifying.

This is a very pianistic work. The pianist must have fingers of steel for percussive treatment and caressing ones for the lyricism.

John Browning had both, playing the work in a thoroughly winning manner. He imparted a great deal of exhilaration as well as persuasiveness, obviously aware of how good the concerto is.

All three movements exert a well-defined appeal: The rhythmic, scherzo-like aspect of the first with the lovely theme assigned to the oboe; the contemplative song-like second which reaches right out to the listener; The busy, barbaric, sometimes almost perpetual-motion throbbing third, calling on the pianist for virtuoso splendor.

Barber has not been afraid to be himself in the midst of the whirlpool of musical currents surrounding him. The concerto is of this century but also of the main stream of traditional music. One wants to hear it again soon.

Fine Gesture

Mr. Leinsdorf's gesture of musical blessing on the house was to play Beethoven's "Eroica."

This he conducted with enviable clarity but also a strange lack of communication. Only in the final movement did the performance get more flexible, but even here it remained inhibited.

Such heroic grandeur calls for more intensity of expression. The refinement of playing generated much respect for the orchestra and for the acoustical appraisal of the hall, but the interpretation of this great ...erpiece emerged as a bit ... for at least the first three ...ments.

21b

RACE TRACK DISPUTE.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 11,509
JAN 6 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 450,303
JAN 6 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
JAN 6 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
JAN 8 1963

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JAN 6 1963

HUB ORCHESTRA AGAINST LONGER HANCOCK RACING

Clash With Tanglewood Season Seen in Extension of Dates

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced Saturday it would oppose an extension of the Berkshire Downs racing season this summer at Hancock.

Would Overlap

The proposed extension would overlap the orchestra's summer concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, a few miles from Hancock.

Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry said a representative of the orchestra would attend a hearing on the extension request of Hancock Raceways, Inc., which operates the track. The hearing was set tentatively for Jan. 31 at Hancock.

"It is my feeling that the character of Berkshire County, the crowding of the county and the nature of the development of the tourist business in the county are not well served by having so many of the attractions of the county take place all at once," Perry said.

"Better Spread Out"

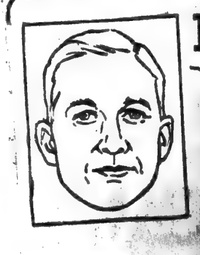
"They're better spread out," he said.

Hancock Raceways asked the state Racing Commission for an early 12-day season from June 17 to 29 and 12 more days from July 8 to 20.

The Berkshire County Fair also seeks racing permission for its six-day fair week in between the proposed raceways seasons.

The Boston Symphony opens its eight-week Tanglewood season early in July.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
JAN 8 1963



HOOFBEAT ECHOES

Race Track Symphony Not Part of Repertoire

By JOHN R. ABORN

To some people the whirr of pari-mutuel ticket issuing machines, the clang of the doors on a starting gate and the pounding of thoroughbred horses' hooves is symphony supreme. It's a type of music that delights their souls, particularly if the tune waltzes them to the cashiers' windows.

But such sounds are in complete contradiction of the theory of music as held by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And that dignified conservative cultural organization has become the latest opponent to attempts to increase the number of racing days in New England.

The orchestra's particular objection is to the proposed increase in racing days to be allowed in Massachusetts so that Berkshire Downs can move into a 30-day operation in June and July. The Boston Symphony opens its traditional summer concert series at Tanglewood early in July. The scene of this pleasant music festival in Lenox, Mass., is only a few miles from the Berkshire track.

Thomas Perry, the orchestra manager, disclosed over the weekend that a Boston Symphony representative would voice that organization's objection to the proposed July racing at Berkshire when the public hearing is held Jan. 31 on the license applications.

Perry explained that he feels that "the character of Berkshire County, the crowding of the area and the nature of the development of the tourist business there are not well served by having so many of the attractions there take place all at once."

He thinks it would be better if the attractions were spread out, particularly if the race track did not run at the same time as the orchestra series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JAN 1 2 1963

Berkshire Week in Review

Racing Plot Thickens

A BIZARRE new element was added to the Berkshire County racing picture yesterday when it was revealed in Boston that an alleged agricultural fair in the town of Franklin, some 23 miles from Boston, has applied to the state Racing Commission for permission to run six days of horse racing at the Berkshire Downs track in Hancock next July.

Although the Franklin Fair hasn't operated since 1946, it held a six-day race meet that year and thus retains its eligibility to apply for track dates again. Massachusetts law permits agricultural fairs to hold six days of racing a year, subject to Racing Commission approval, and it doesn't require the track to be in the same community as the sponsoring fair.

Berkshire Downs and the Hancock Fair have already applied for a total of 30 days of racing at Hancock this year, from June 17 through July 20. The proposed Franklin Fair meet would start July 22 and would boost the number of racing days to 30. Although Berkshire Downs officials have not been available for comment on the Franklin Fair petition, it presumably was filed with their consent and encouragement.

This new development seems certain to intensify county opposition to the proposed 1963 Hancock racing schedule, which will be the subject of a public hearing by the Racing Commission at the town's Central School on Jan. 21. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is already on record against the mid-summer dates on the grounds that they would conflict with the Tanglewood season, and the citizens' committee which fought for a "No" vote on the racing referendum last summer under the chairmanship of former Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre is reportedly being reactivated in anticipation of the Hancock hearing.

Meanwhile Berkshire opposition is also organizing to the legislative proposal (filed by Senate President John E. Powers) which would provide 42 additional days of racing in Massachusetts each year, with all of them allocated to Hancock. At the annual meeting of the Pittsfield Council of Churches this week, ministers of all congregations in the area were urged to file protests against this proposal with legislators and Governor Peabody.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JAN 7 1963

Summer Racing Dates To Be Opposed by BSO

Hancock Raceway's application for summer dates at the Berkshire Downs track in Hancock this year will be opposed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra because of the conflict with the Tanglewood season.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., BSO manager, said a representative of the orchestra will attend the Racing Commission hearing to present the BSO opposition.

The hearing on the Hancock application has been tentatively set for Jan. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hancock Central School.

Hancock Raceway has operated a 24-day fall meet—September-October—since it was first licensed in 1960. Berkshire Downs applied for July dates last year but had to settle for the usual fall meet.

This year Hancock Raceway and the Berkshire County Fair Association is asking for dates starting June 17 and running through July 20.

Fair Seeks July 1-7

The Hancock Raceway request is for dates from June 17 through 29 and July 8 through 20. The fair, which is eligible this year for its first six-day season, has asked for dates from July 1 through 7.

"It is my feeling," Mr. Perry said, "that the character of Berkshire County and the crowding of the county and nature of the development of the tourist business in the county are not well served by having so many of the attractions of the county take place all at once. They're better spread out."

The BSO will operate an eight-week season this summer from July 3 through Aug. 25.

It is expected that other organizations which have opposed racing as such or the allocation of summer dates also will appear at the Racing Commission hearing to register objections.

ABC To Voice Opposition

William A. Whittlesey III, president of the Association of Business and Commerce of Central Berkshire County, said that the ABC again will have a spokesman present to voice its objections to the Berkshire Downs request.

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, said that his organization does not plan at this time to make an appearance at the hearing. The conference is the agency for tourist promotion in the Berkshires.

"Historically," Mr. Geary said, "the conference has not appeared at these hearings. We have no plans to do so as of this moment, but the subject could come up at our annual meeting of the board of directors Jan. 16."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JAN 21 1963

Summer Racing Dates

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The eternal question has again arisen. Should the people of Berkshire County be allowed to enjoy the racing season in the warm summer months, or should they be exposed to the harsher elements of the Berkshire fall?

The arguments against summer racing dates for Berkshire Downs will remain the same this year as they have been in the past:

1. It is immoral to gamble.

This argument is not valid, for it is no more immoral to gamble in the summer than it is in the fall. Religious groups or do-gooders who campaign against the summer racing dates on these grounds are hypocritical for they can not hope to achieve any legitimate gains along these lines. All they can hope to achieve is damage to Hancock Raceways financially with the hope that their operation will fold.

2. The summer dates will conflict with Tanglewood and other cultural establishments in the Berkshires.

This argument is a fantasy based on the assumption that people who attend race tracks are intellectually void. This is not true, but even if it were, would it be right to discriminate against one business establishment so that another may prosper?

Whether the business in question is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Hancock Shaker Village or a popcorn wagon, the American system of free enterprise allows all businessmen to decide for themselves when they will conduct their business. All, that is, except those that are regulated by government controls. When Tanglewood decided to extend their period of doing business last year they had to ask no one if it were permissible. Why then should they now come forth to oppose the use of these prime summer months by another commercial establishment?

3. The heavy influx of tourists will cause traffic congestion.

We were living with the problem before the inception of Hancock Raceways, and if the race track were abolished entirely we would still have this problem. The traffic problem is one that the community must face if it is to grow. We can not grow by opposing change.

I ask only this of the Racing Commission when making their decision: That the interest of the residents of Berkshire County be foremost in determining what that decision will be. The people have indicated at the polls that they want commercial race tracks. Were they given the opportunity I'm sure they would also have voted in favor of summer racing dates.

Strictly by numbers the race track is visited by more local people than any of our cultural establishments. Whether the reason is poor judgment matters not, for it indicates the preference of the majority, and it is the majority that should be served.

DANIEL DeSANTIS.

Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,510

JAN 22 1963

Raceway License Probe Asked by Church Group

COMPILED FROM AP AND UPI

HANCOCK, — An official of the Massachusetts Council of Churches has asked Atty. Gen. Edward W. Brooke to investigate the granting of a license two years ago to Hancock Raceway.

Rev. Rayne Horvath, director of the council's department of social relations, made the request at a public hearing held by the Racing Commission.

Rev. Mr. Horvath said that in granting the license to Hancock Raceway in 1960 the commission deviated for the first time in 25 years from a law declaring commercial racing dates must be allocated by Jan. 30.

"This was privileged action and government by favor," Horvath charged.

He also urged the commission to dismiss the applications of the Berkshire County Fair Association and the Franklin Fair Association for alleged irregularities in their applications and failure to meet legal requirements.

"Economic Wasteland"

He said if additional racing dates were granted the commission "will have to take the responsibility for turning a great vacation paradise into an economic wasteland.

"Over 240 days of racing will smother the commerce of your communities and bulge the coffers of the professional racing interests."

Rev. Mr. Horvath said the Franklin Fair Association's application contained errors and it also was possible the association was not legally constituted. He said it had failed to file an annual report with the secretary of state in 1953 and did not have the number of members required by law.

On the Berkshire County Fair application, he said he had a certified letter from the secretary of state's office which showed the fair had failed to file for two years.

Long Session Held

The commission sat until 1 a.m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and several area clergymen were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

The ownership dispute came up yesterday in Suffolk Superior Court where Judge Frank J. Murray continued in force a temporary restraining order tying up 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the former name of the track.

The order was obtained by Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of former Gov. Foster Furcolo. Dr. Furcolo contends he obtained the shares valued at $150,000 through a "straw" who subsequently sold them.

Murray's order bars Samuel A. Rizzo, of Scarsdale, N.Y., presidentof the track and allegedly the buyer of the disputed shares, from transferring the stock.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

Concert Conflict

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The commission has taken the matter under advisement.

Henry Beall, public relations director for the orchestra, objected to any dates that would conflict with the orchestra's program at Tanglewood from July 1 to Aug. 26.

The track had asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, 12 days from July 9 to 20, six days for the Berkshire County Fair, July 1 to 6, and six days for the Franklin County Fair, July 22 to 27.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JAN 19 1963

Hancock Race Track

Hearing Monday Night; Six Groups to Oppose

At least six groups will oppose the issuance of 36 days of summer pari-mutual racing at Hancock's Berkshire Downs at a hearing Monday night before the state Racing Commission, including a spokesman for retired Sheriff Bruce J. McIntyre whose anti-track forces narrowly missed ousting the track in the recent quadrennial referendum.

Atty Lincoln Cain, who will represent the former sheriff at the 7 p. m. hearing at the Hancock Central School, said he has had summonses issued to two officials of the Franklin Fair Assn. and the Berkshire County Fair Assn.

Idle 20 Years

Franklin is a small Boston suburb, whose fair has not operated in almost 20 years, but which has suddenly applied for six days of racing, to be held at Hancock, over 140 miles away. D. Paul Sweeney, its vice president, treasurer, director and general manager, is a Pittsfield man.

Dr. Robert Kirvin of Pittsfield, the other summoned official, who is a Berkshire Fair director, is also clerk of Hancock Raceway. Berkshire Fair has also asked for six days of racing, also to be held at Hancock.

Both Fairs plan to use regular track personnel, continue under the same insurance policy covering Hancock Raceways and in general operate the track exactly as Hancock Raceways does. The net result will be 86 uninterrupted days of racing, with the patrons unable to detect any difference as to who is operating the track.

Bears Out Prediction

The jump from 24 days which the track had last year to 36 days bore out a prediction of the Rev. Wayne W. Horvat of the Massachusetts Council of Churches who said Hancock would try for more dates this year. He was in the fight against the track last fall, and also predicted that racing interests would try to end the quadrennial ballot, giving power to permit racing to the legislature. He will also appear Monday at the hearing.

Sen. Pres. John E. Powers has introduced a bill that would extend Hancock's season even further, making them elligible for 42 days.

Other groups that will appear in opposition will be the Association of Business and Commerce, the Pittsfield Area Council of Churches, the Boston Symphony Orchestra which appears at Tanglewood in the summer, and the social action committee of the Pilgrim Memorial Church.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

JAN 23 1963

Argue Hancock Racing Dates Until 1 A. M.

HANCOCK (AP) — The State Racing Commission sat until 1 a. m. Tuesday hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc., for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village, Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among the objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

The ownership dispute came up earlier in the day in Suffolk Superior Court where Judge Frank J. Murray continued in force a temporary restraining order tying up 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the former name of the track.

The order was obtained by Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of former Gov. Foster Furcolo. Dr. Furcolo contends he obtained the shares valued at $150,000 through a "straw" who subsequently sold them.

Murray's order bars Samuel A. Rizzo, of Scarsdale, N. Y., president of the track and allegedly the buyer of the disputed shares, from transferring the stock.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The Symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The Racing Commission has taken the matter under advisement.

Henry Beall, public relations director for the orchestra, objected to any dates that would conflict with the orchestra's program at Tanglewood from July 1 to Aug. 26.

The track had asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, 12 days from July 9 to 20, six days for the Berkshire County Fair, July 1 to 6, and six days for the Franklin County Fair, July 22 to 27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

JAN 22 1963

Racing Dates Hearing Becomes a Marathon

HANCOCK—Protests turned a state Racing Commission hearing into a five-hour steeplechase Monday night.

The hearing on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc., for 36 racing dates in 1963, 12 more than last year, stretched out until after 1 a.m. as many of the more than 200 persons attending voiced opposition.

A controversy over ownership of stock was introduced as another hurdle for the three-man Racing Commission.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, Inc., charged that the track's application failed to point out that control of half the raceway's 100 shares is in dispute.

Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the matter.

Madden said he doubted whether he and the other members of the commission, Maurice H. Leff and Dr. Paul F. Walsh, could hear evidence because it is pending in Suffolk Superior Court.

Earlier Monday, Judge Frank J. Murray in Suffolk Superior Court continued a restraining order barring transfer of 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the old name of the track, which Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of the former governor, contends he owns.

Cain argued that the raceway corporation should have furnished the state information concerning the problems facing its stockholders when it submitted the application for the extended racing season.

Adding her voice to Cain's in behalf of Shaker Village was Mrs. Amy Bess Miller, wife of the publisher of The Berkshire Eagle of Springfield.

Henry Beall, public relations and press director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said that with the Tanglewood concerts filling every motel, hotel and restaurant in the vicinity, there would be no facilities to accommodate crowds for the extended racing season.

Beall said that with the Tanglewood concerts filling every motel, hotel and restaurant in the vicinity, there would be no facilities to accommodate crowds for the extended racing season.

Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church of Pittsfield and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Mr. McWilliams read a letter form Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese protesting the increase in racing dates as "not in the best interest of the community at large."

The Rev. Wayne Horvath, director of the department of social delations of the Massachusetts Council of Churches,

218

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 22 1963

Hancock Protests

Racing Dates Get Opposition

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

The increase in track racing days in Massachusetts and Rhode Island has met heavy opposition.

A large number of protests were heard in Hancock, Mass., on Monday evening when the State Racing Commission held a hearing on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc., for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Meanwhile in Providence, R.I., Lt. Gov. Edward P. Gallogly called the granting by the State Racing and Athletics Commission of a total 175 days of racing to the two state tracks a "damaging blow" to the economy.

He declared the increase of racing days would make the economy dependent on gambling for revenue and urged Gov. John H. Chafee to fire the commission and appoint one "that will grant racing dates consistent with the public interest."

Application Attacked

The Hancock application was attacked on a number of points. Two speakers, representing Shaker Village, Inc., and the Massachusetts Council of Churches, indicated the application contained errors and might not be legalfi

Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for the village, charged the track failed to state the fact that control of half of its shares are in dispute.

The commission declined to go into this matter since it is pending in Suffolk Court, which earlier in the day had continued a restraining order barring the transfer of about $150,000 worth of stock which Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of the former Governor, claims.

The Rev. Wayne W. Horvath, director of the Department of Social Relations of the Council of Churches, said that Attorney General Edward Brooke has been asked to investigate the raceway. He said that in 1960 the racing commission granted a license to the track and devited for the first time in 25 years from a law which declares that all commercial racing dates must be allocated by Jan. 30.

Fairs Charged

The Rev. Mr. Horvath also charged that the Franklin Fair and the Berkshire County Fair Association's applications also contained error and that these two groups had not filed annual reports for 10 and 2 years respectively.

A delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra contended that the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and that there would not be enough hotel and restaurants accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

Several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, were among the other objectors.

Another development was the announcement by Suffolk Downs and Rockingham Park tracks that, because of the increase in Rhode Island racing dates, they will probably ask for schedule changes. As matters presently stand, many of Suffolk's 66 racing days are scheduled for the same time as Rhode Island days, which would result in competition between the tracks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JAN 7 1963

Boston Symphony To Oppose Hancock Track Extension

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced Saturday it would oppose an extension of the Berkshire Downs racing season this summer at Hancock.

Overlaps Concerts

The proposed extension would overlap the orchestra's summer concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, a few miles from Hancock.

Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry said a representative of the orchestra would attend a hearing on the extension request of Hancock Raceways, Inc., which operates the track. The hearing was set tentatively for Jan. 31 at Hancock.

"It is my feeling that the character of Berkshire County, the crowding of the county and the nature of the development of the tourist business in the county are not well served by having so many of the attractions of the county take place all at once," Perry said.

"They're better spread out," he said.

Seek 12-Day Seasons

Hancock Raceways asked the state Racing Commission for an early 12-day season from June 17 to 29 and 12 more days from July 8 to 20.

The Berkshire County Fair also seeks racing permission for its six-day fair week in between the proposed raceways seasons.

The Boston Symphony opens its eight-week Tanglewood season early in July.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
FEB 1 1963

Peace Reigns on New England Race Front as Dates Get OK

By JOHN R. ABORN

Peace reigned today on the major New England racing front with agreeable dates now granted to Narragansett Park, Lincoln Downs, Suffolk Downs and Rockingham Park but trouble brewed in another area, not actually between tracks.

A member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, Sidney Q. Curtiss of Sheffield, has requested Gov. Endicott Peabody to review the granting of 12 additional days of racing this season to Berkshire Downs in Hancock. Sheffield is in Berkshire County, as is Hancock.

Berkshire has been granted 24 days of so-called commercial racing, the same as it had last year, these going to Hancock, Raceway, Inc., operators of the track. Six days each have been granted to two fair associations, the Berkshire County Fair and the Franklin County Fair, two organizations which had no racing dates last year and have no tracks of their own.

Detriment Seen

Curtiss is complaining that the 12 extra days at Berkshire will be a detriment to the area, chiefly because they will conflict with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which conducts the festival, made the same complaint a few days ago at the hearing of the license applications and last week the Massachusetts Council of Churches registered a similar complaint.

The peace pact among New England's four major thoroughbred tracks became official yesterday when the R.I. Racing and Athletics Commission granted dates to Lincoln and Narragansett and the New Hampshire commission announced that on Tuesday it had granted the dates sought by Rockingham.

Suffolk had been granted its dates Wednesday.

All four tracks were given the dates requested in revised applications after Tuesday's agreement among their officers upon a schedule eliminating most of the serious conflict threatened by Lincoln's original dates.

Lincoln was granted 85 racing dates, 24 less than it had received from the commission in its approval of the track's earlier application. Narragansett was granted 66 racing dates, the same number it had been granted earlier.

The Schedule

In the Lincoln allotment are 38 afternoon programs and 47 night programs in its two meetings. Narragansett has five afternoon programs and 19 night programs in its summer meeting, which marks that track's initial entrance into after-dark racing. Narragansett will run only afternoons in its fall meeting, which totals 42 racing dates.

The complete schedule for the four tracks follows:

Lincoln Downs — Feb. 22 through April 20. 49 racing dates (36 afternoon programs. Feb. 22 through March 30 and on April 6, 13, 19 and 20. Thirteen night programs, April 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17 and 18. No racing Good Friday, April 12).

Suffolk Downs — April 22 through June 8 (42 racing dates, all afternoon programs).

Narragansett Park—June 10 through July 6 (24 racing dates, 19 night programs, five afternoon programs, June 15, 22, 29, July 4 and 6).

Total Lowered

Rockingham Park — July 8 through Sept. 7 (54 racing dates, all afternoon programs).

Lincoln Downs — Aug. 12 through Sept. 21 (36 racing dates, 34 night programs, two afternoon programs, Sept. 14 and 21).

Suffolk Downs — Sept. 23 dates, all afternoon programs). through Oct. 19 (24 racing

Narragansett Park — Oct. 21 hrough Dec. 7 (42 racing dates, ll afternoon programs).

The reduction of Lincoln's otal from 109 to 85 lowered he total at the four tracks rom 295 to 271.

Only one conflicting period emains in the running-race dates allotted. Lincoln's fall racing will conflict for 24 nights, Aug. 12 through Sept. 7, with the last four weeks of Rockingham's afternoon programs.

The dates granted Lincoln previously included an 18-day conflict with Suffolk in the spring and a 30-day conflict with Rockingham in the fall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JAN 9

State to Decide On Hancock Racing At Jan. 21 Hearing

Jan. 21 definitely is the date for the hearings after which the state Racing Commission will decide whether there shall be continous racing at Berkshire Downs, Hancock, from June 17 to July 20.

The commission last night announced the hearing date which earlier had been set tentatively. The hearings will start at 7 p.m. the 21st at the Hancock Central School.

Hancock Raceways has asked for 24 days of racing, from June 17 to June 29, and from July 8 to July 20, and the Berkshire County Fair Assn., eligible for racing dates this year for the first time, has asked for six days of racing in the interval between the two periods sought by Hancock Raceways. Heretofore, the track at Hancock has operated in the fall. It tried but failed to get summer dates last year.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra which operates at Tanglewood in July and early August, and the Assn. of Business and Commerce of Pittsfield have indicated they would oppose the applications for summer dates. The Berkshire Hills Conference is weighing the stand it will take.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
FEB 1 1963

Off to the Races? Out With Them

The State Racing Commission has just given Massachusetts a lesson in what can happen when the voters of a county favor horse racing at the polls without considering what goes on at the planning tables. A so-called agricultural fair can be imported from another county and planked down on a racetrack that an unsuspecting public thought was a limited operation. And horse racing can be put in direct competition with cultural activity in such a summer mecca of culture as the heart of the Berkshires.

What is happening in Berkshire County is pushing the county voters' permission pretty far. Hancock Raceways, part of whose stock ownership is still in dispute between in-staters and out-of-staters, has been operating from the start with borderline sanction from the Berkshire public. Commercial use of parimutuel betting survived with less than a 2000-vote margin out of some 50,000 ballots cast in the 1962 election. Four years earlier, this quadrennial ballot item got in with a similarly slender edge. Now Hancock gets racing dates that conflict with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood and the whole complex of popular summer activity in the area.

Racing connected with agricultural fairs has enjoyed greater Berkshire support, largely because of the venerable institution that is the Barrington Fair. But this year the voters' sanction of fair-connected racing has been extended significantly by the state commission. Not only has the Berkshire County Fair Association been granted six racing dates — at Hancock Raceways' Berkshire Downs. The Franklin Fair Association also gets six days of racing—at Hancock Raceways' Berkshire Downs, three-quarters of the way across the commonwealth from the Worcester County community where the Franklin Fair ostensibly is sponsored.

This is ridiculous. For one thing, the commission has ignored some abundantly valid objections raised at the required public hearing on the Hancock racing dates. For another, it has scuttled the basic premise that underlies the agricultural fairs; namely, that they serve and encourage the interests of agriculture and the domestic arts, not the interests of horse-race promoters.

But perhaps it is just as well that this came out into the open. It might have a constructive effect on the State Senate, which apparently is going to be asked this year to give racing operators a greater sense of security. A senator from Revere, where racing is big business, proposes that the quadrennial referendums on racing be eliminated in any county that has voted the same way twice, "yes" or "no." If this were made retroactive, it would freeze the counties as they are with respect to parimutuel. Which apparently means those where racing is "in" would be getting more racing from the others. That is unthinkable. But it might be a good idea, now that the system is exposed, to let the counties reject racing for good the next two times it comes up on the ballot.

Meantime, the agricultural fair associations had better look their gift horses in the mouth if they want to retain public respect. And the state Department of Agriculture might take a fresh look at the requirements for certification as an agricultural fair. Gov. Peabody has just looked at the Racing Commission and recommended a change, which should be for the better.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

Orchestra Opposes Longer Race Time At Berkshire Downs

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced it would oppose an extension of the Berkshire Downs racing season this summer at Hancock.

The proposed extension would overlap the orchestra's summer concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, a few miles from Hancock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

ABC of Pittsfield Joins Fight Against Track in Hancock

The Association of Business and Commerce of Central Berkshire will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra in opposition to summer racing at Berkshire Downs in Hancock.

The ABC will have a representative at a hearing in Hancock Jan. 31 to voice its opposition to the petition of Hancock Raceways Inc. for dates starting June 17 and running through July 20.

218

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JAN 22 1963

Hancock Protests

Racing Dates Get Opposition

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

The increase in track racing days in Massachusetts and Rhode Island has met heavy opposition.

A large number of protests were heard in Hancock, Mass., on Monday evening when the State Racing Commission held a hearing on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc., for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Meanwhile in Providence, R.I., Lt. Gov. Edward P. Gallogly called the granting by the State Racing and Athletics Commission of a total 175 days of racing to the two state tracks a "damaging blow" to the economy.

He declared the increase of racing days would make the economy dependent on gambling for revenue and urged Gov. John H. Chafee to fire the commission and appoint one "that will grant racing dates consistent with the public interest."

Application Attacked

The Hancock application was attacked on a number of points. Two speakers, representing Shaker Village, Inc., and the Massachusetts Council of Churches, indicated the application contained errors and might not be legalfi

Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for the village, charged the track failed to state the fact that control of half of its shares are in dispute.

The commission declined to go into this matter since it is pending in Suffolk Court, which earlier in the day had continued a restraining order barring the transfer of about $150,000 worth of stock which Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of the former Governor, claims.

The Rev. Wayne W. Horvath, director of the Department of Social Relations of the Council of Churches, said that Attorney General Edward Brooke has been asked to investigate the raceway. He said that in 1960 the racing commission granted a license to the track and devited for the first time in 25 years from a law which declares that all commercial racing dates must be allocated by Jan. 30.

Fairs Charged

The Rev. Mr. Horvath also charged that the Franklin Fair and the Berkshire County Fair Association's applications also contained error and that these two groups had not filed annual reports for 10 and 2 years respectively.

A delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra contended that the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and that there would not be enough hotel and restaurants accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

Several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, were among the other objectors.

Another development was the announcement by Suffolk Downs and Rockingham Park tracks that, because of the increase in Rhode Island racing dates, they will probably ask for schedule changes. As matters presently stand, many of Suffolk's 66 racing days are scheduled for the same time as Rhode Island days, which would result in competition between the tracks.

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,970
FEB 1 1963

Peace Reigns on New England Race Front as Dates Get OK

By JOHN R. ABORN

Peace reigned today on the major New England racing front with agreeable dates now granted to Narragansett Park, Lincoln Downs, Suffolk Downs and Rockingham Park but trouble brewed in another area, not actually between tracks.

A member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, Sidney Q. Curtiss of Sheffield, has requested Gov. Endicott Peabody to review the granting of 12 additional days of racing this season to Berkshire Downs in Hancock. Sheffield is in Berkshire County, as is Hancock.

Berkshire has been granted 24 days of so-called commercial racing, the same as it had last year, these going to Hancock, Raceway, Inc., operators of the track. Six days each have been granted to two fair associations, the Berkshire County Fair and the Franklin County Fair, two organizations which had no racing dates last year and have no tracks of their own.

Detriment Seen

Curtiss is complaining that the 12 extra days at Berkshire will be a detriment to the area, chiefly because they will conflict with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which conducts the festival, made the same complaint a few days ago at the hearing of the license applications and last week the Massachusetts Council of Churches registered a similar complaint.

The peace pact among New England's four major thoroughbred tracks became official yesterday when the R.I. Racing and Athletics Commission granted dates to Lincoln and Narragansett and the New Hampshire commission announced that on Tuesday it had granted the dates sought by Rockingham.

Suffolk had been granted its dates Wednesday.

All four tracks were given the dates requested in revised applications after Tuesday's agreement among their officers upon a schedule eliminating most of the serious conflict threatened by Lincoln's original dates.

Lincoln was granted 85 racing dates, 24 less than it had received from the commission in its approval of the track's earlier application. Narragansett was granted 66 racing dates, the same number it had been granted earlier.

The Schedule

In the Lincoln allotment are 38 afternoon programs and 47 night programs in its two meetings. Narragansett has five afternoon programs and 19 night programs in its summer meeting, which marks that track's initial entrance into after-dark racing. Narragansett will run only afternoons in its fall meeting, which totals 42 racing dates.

The complete schedule for the four tracks follows:

Lincoln Downs — Feb. 22 through April 20. 49 racing dates (36 afternoon programs Feb. 22 through March 30 and on April 6, 13, 19 and 20. Thirteen night programs, April 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17 and 18. No racing Good Friday, April 12).

Suffolk Downs — April 22 through June 8 (42 racing dates, all afternoon programs).

Narragansett Park—June 10 through July 6 (24 racing dates, 19 night programs, five afternoon programs, June 15, 22, 29, July 4 and 6).

Total Lowered

Rockingham Park — July 8 through Sept. 7 (54 racing dates, all afternoon programs).

Lincoln Downs — Aug. 12 through Sept. 21 (36 racing dates, 34 night programs, two afternoon programs, Sept. 14 and 21).

Suffolk Downs — Sept. 23 dates, all afternoon programs). through Oct. 19 (24 racing

Narragansett Park — Oct. 21 through Dec. 7 (42 racing dates, all afternoon programs).

The reduction of Lincoln's total from 109 to 85 lowered the total at the four tracks from 295 to 271.

Only one conflicting period remains in the running-race dates allotted. Lincoln's fall racing will conflict for 24 nights, Aug. 12 through Sept. 7, with the last four weeks of Rockingham's afternoon programs.

The dates granted Lincoln previously included an 18-day conflict with Suffolk in the spring and a 30-day conflict with Rockingham in the fall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

State to Decide On Hancock Racing At Jan. 21 Hearing

Jan. 21 definitely is the date for the hearings after which the state Racing Commission will decide whether there shall be continous racing at Berkshire Downs, Hancock, from June 17 to July 20.

The commission last night announced the hearing date which earlier had been set tentatively. The hearings will start at 7 p.m. the 21st at the Hancock Central School.

Hancock Raceways has asked for 24 days of racing, from June 17 to June 29, and from July 8 to July 20, and the Berkshire County Fair Assn., eligible for racing dates this year for the first time, has asked for six days of racing in the interval between the two periods sought by Hancock Raceways. Heretofore, the track at Hancock has operated in the fall. It tried but failed to get summer dates last year.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra which operates at Tanglewood in July and early August, and the Assn. of Business and Commerce of Pittsfield have indicated they would oppose the applications for summer dates. The Berkshire Hills Conference is weighing the stand it will take.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
FEB 1 1963

Off to the Races? Out With Them

The State Racing Commission has just given Massachusetts a lesson in what can happen when the voters of a county favor horse racing at the polls without considering what goes on at the planning tables. A so-called agricultural fair can be imported from another county and planked down on a racetrack that an unsuspecting public thought was a limited operation. And horse racing can be put in direct competition with cultural activity in such a summer mecca of culture as the heart of the Berkshires.

What is happening in Berkshire County is pushing the county voters' permission pretty far. Hancock Raceways, part of whose stock ownership is still in dispute between in-staters and out-of-staters, has been operating from the start with borderline sanction from the Berkshire public. Commercial use of parimutuel betting survived with less than a 2000-vote margin out of some 50,000 ballots cast in the 1962 election. Four years earlier, this quadrennial ballot item got in with a similarly slender edge. Now Hancock gets racing dates that conflict with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood and the whole complex of popular summer activity in the area.

Racing connected with agricultural fairs has enjoyed greater Berkshire support, largely because of the venerable institution that is the Barrington Fair. But this year the voters' sanction of fair-connected racing has been extended significantly by the state commission. Not only has the Berkshire County Fair Association been granted six racing dates — at Hancock Raceways' Berkshire Downs. The Franklin Fair Association also gets six days of racing—at Hancock Raceways' Berkshire Downs, three-quarters of the way across the commonwealth from the Worcester County community where the Franklin Fair ostensibly is sponsored.

This is ridiculous. For one thing, the commission has ignored some abundantly valid objections raised at the required public hearing on the Hancock racing dates. For another, it has scuttled the basic premise that underlies the agricultural fairs; namely, that they serve and encourage the interests of agriculture and the domestic arts, not the interests of horse-race promoters.

But perhaps it is just as well that this came out into the open. It might have a constructive effect on the State Senate, which apparently is going to be asked this year to give racing operators a greater sense of security. A senator from Revere, where racing is big business, proposes that the quadrennial referendums on racing be eliminated in any county that has voted the same way twice, "yes" or "no." If this were made retroactive, it would freeze the counties as they are with respect to parimutuel. Which apparently means those where racing is "in" would be getting more racing from the others. That is unthinkable. But it might be a good idea, now that the system is exposed, to let the counties reject racing for good the next two times it comes up on the ballot.

Meantime, the agricultural fair associations had better look their gift horses in the mouth if they want to retain public respect. And the state Department of Agriculture might take a fresh look at the requirements for certification as an agricultural fair. Gov. Peabody has just looked at the Racing Commission and recommended a change, which should be for the better.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

Orchestra Opposes Longer Race Time At Berkshire Downs

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced it would oppose an extension of the Berkshire Downs racing season this summer at Hancock.

The proposed extension would overlap the orchestra's summer concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, a few miles from Hancock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

ABC of Pittsfield Joins Fight Against Track in Hancock

The Association of Business and Commerce of Central Berkshire will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra in opposition to summer racing at Berkshire Downs in Hancock.

The ABC will have a representative at a hearing in Hancock Jan. 31 to voice its opposition to the petition of Hancock Raceways Inc. for dates starting June 17 and running through July 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JAN 7 1963

Boston Symphony To Oppose Hancock Track Extension

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced Saturday it would oppose an extension of the Berkshire Downs racing season this summer at Hancock.

Overlaps Concerts

The proposed extension would overlap the orchestra's summer concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox, a few miles from Hancock.

Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry said a representative of the orchestra would attend a hearing on the extension request of Hancock Raceways, Inc., which operates the track. The hearing was set tentatively for Jan. 31 at Hancock.

"It is my feeling that the character of Berkshire County, the crowding of the county and the nature of the development of the tourist business in the county are not well served by having so many of the attractions of the county take place all at once," Perry said.

"They're better spread out," he said.

Seek 12-Day Seasons

Hancock Raceways asked the state Racing Commission for an early 12-day season from June 17 to 29 and 12 more days from July 8 to 20.

The Berkshire County Fair also seeks racing permission for its six-day fair week in between the proposed raceways seasons.

The Boston Symphony opens its eight-week Tanglewood season early in July.

Racing Dates Hearing Becomes a Marathon

HANCOCK—Protests turned a state Racing Commission hearing into a five-hour steeplechase Monday night.

The hearing on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc., for 36 racing dates in 1963, 12 more than last year, stretched out until after 1 a.m. as many of the more than 200 persons attending voiced opposition.

A controversy over ownership of stock was introduced as another hurdle for the three-man Racing Commission.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, Inc., charged that the track's application failed to point out that control of half the raceway's 100 shares is in dispute.

Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the matter.

Madden said he doubted whether he and the other members of the commission, Maurice H. Leff and Dr. Paul F. Walsh, could hear evidence, because it is pending in Suffolk Superior Court.

Earlier Monday, Judge Frank J. Murray in Suffolk Superior Court continued a restraining order barring transfer of 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the old name of the track, which Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of the former governor, contends he owns.

Cain argued that the raceway corporation should have furnished the state information concerning the problems facing its stockholders when it submitted the application for the extended racing season.

Adding her voice to Cain's in behalf of Shaker Village was Mrs. Amy Bess Miller, wife of the publisher of The Berkshire Eagle of Springfield.

Henry Beall, public relations and press director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said that with the Tanglewood concerts filling every motel, hotel and restaurant in the vicinity, there would be no facilities to accommodate crowds for the extended racing season.

Beall said that with the Tanglewood concerts filling every motel, hotel and restaurant in the vicinity, there would be no facilities to accommodate crowds for the extended racing season.

Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church of Pittsfield and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Mr. McWilliams read a letter form Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese protesting the increase in racing dates as "not in the best interest of the community at large."

The Rev. Wayne Horvath, director of the department of social delations of the Massachusetts Council of Churches, read a statement in which he urged the commission to dismiss the applications of the Berkshire County Fair Assn. and the Franklin Fair Assn. for racing dates because of alleged irregularities in their applications and failure to meet legal requirements.

Albert R. Neil, executive secretary of the Assn. of Business and Commerce of Pittsfield, objected to the granting of any racing dates "on the basis of the harm that racing does to the economy of the area."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 195,[illegible]
FEB 1 1963

Peabody Asked To Review Dates Given Hancock

Gov. Peabody was asked Thursday to initiate a review of the State Racing Commission's award of 12 extra horse racing days to the Berkshire Downs track in Hancock, in the wake of incensed reaction.

Rep. Sidney Q. Curtiss (Sheffield), House Republican leader, forwarded the request to Peabody, stating the additional dates will "result in a great detriment to the welfare of Berkshire County."

Curtiss pointed out that they will conflict with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The G.O.P. leader urged "immediate steps" by the governor to have the racing commission reconsider.

The Hancock track was awarded 36 racing days. This included its own 24 days of racing, plus separate six-day licenses for Berkshire County Fair Assn. and the Franklin Fair Assn.

Berkshire Downs got the Franklin Fair racing, despite the fact that the association is in the Town of Franklin—100 miles from the track.

Racing dates for the Hancock track and for all other horse and dog racing ovals were awarded Wednesday—the last day in office for Racing Commission Chairman Morris H. Leff.

Peabody replaced Leff Thursday, the day his term expired, with Grover T. O'Brien, Chicopee labor official.

The extra days for the Hancock track were assailed by the Massachusetts Council of Churches.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
FEB 1 1963

A Longer Meet Is Said Costly

Protest Meets Given Fairs For Hancock Track

The additional 12 days of racing granted to Berkshire County this week by the State Racing Commission will cut the state's share of taxes and detract from the Berkshire Music Festival, according to two state representatives, one of them a Holyoke Democrat.

Six-day meets were approved for the Berkshire County Fair Association and the Franklin Fair Association, both to be run at Berkshire Downs in Hancock. Franklin is in Worcester County, more than 100 miles away from Hancock.

Rep. Stephen T. Chmura, D-Holyoke, has said he will file an order for an investigation of what he termed "phantom fairs." Rep. Sidney Q. Curtiss of Sheffield, GOP minority leader, called on Gov. Endicott Peabody to take steps to have the racing commission reconsider its action.

Rep. Curtiss said he had asked the governor to "review the manner" in which the added dates were assigned. Assigned to Hancock Raceways at Berkshire Downs were 24 days of racing, June 17 through 29 and July 8 through 20.

Rep. Chmura said that on regular racing days at a track the state receives seven per cent of the tax placed on bets. Of the 15 per cent tax on fairs, the state receives only three per cent, said the Holyoke representative.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
JAN 22 1963

Clerics, Other Oppose Extra Racing Days

HANCOCK, Mass. (AP) — The state Racing Commission sat until 1 a.m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963 —12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The Racing Commission has taken the matter under advisement.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
JAN 22 1963

RACING PETITION HEARD

HANCOCK, Mass. (AP) — The state Racing Commission sat until 1 a.m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963 —12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JAN 22 1963

Groups Object To Adding Racing Dates At Hancock

HANCOCK, Mass. (AP — The state Racing Commission sat until 1 a.m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963 —12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

The ownership dispute came up earlier in the day in Suffolk Superior Court where Judge Frank J. Murray continued in force a temporary restraining order tying up 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the former name of the track.

The order was obtained by Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of former Gov. Foster Furcolo. Dr. Furcolo contends he obtained the shared valued at $150,000 through a "straw" who subsequently sold them.

Murray's order bars Samuel A. Rizzo, of Scarsdale, N. Y., president of the track and allegedly the buyer of the disputed shares, from transferring the stock.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The Racing Commission has taken the matter under advisement.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R.I.
Circ. 8,371
JAN 22 1963

Fight Mass. Race Dates

HANCOCK, Mass. (AP) — The state Racing Commission sat until 1 a.m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963 —12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

The ownership dispute came up earlier in the day in Suffolk Superior Court where Judge Frank J. Murray continued in force a temporary restraining order tying up 50 shares of Berkshire Downs, the former name of the track.

The order was obtained by Dr. Charles F. Furcolo, father of former Gov. Foster Furcolo. Dr. Furcolo contends he obtained the shares valued at $150,000 through a "straw" who subsequently sold them.

Murray's order bars Samuel A. Rizzo, of Scarsdale, N. Y., president of the track and allegedly the buyer of the disputed shares, from transferring the stock.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

(Continued from Page One)

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The Racing Commission has taken the matter under advisement.

CLIPPINGS BUREAU
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
NEWS SERVICE

HUDSON REGISTER STAR
Tuesday, January 22, 1963

Commission Hears Testimony On Application

HANCOCK, Mass. (AP) — The State Racing Commission hears until 1 a.m. today testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963 — 12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged he track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker village abuts the race track property.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

220

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JAN 2 2 1963

Mrs. Miller Testifies

Before Chairman Madden limited Atty. Cain's part in the hearing, he allowed the Pittsfield lawyer to call one witness, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield. Mrs. Miller, wife of the editor of The Eagle, is president of Shaker Community.

She maintained that during the racing season traffic is so bad that it is "almost impossible" for people to get to the Shaker museum.

In answer to questions from Barry, Mrs. Miller said she did not have records to substantiate these complaints.

Harry Beall, director of public relations for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared in opposition to the July dates requested at Berkshire Downs. As in past years, he based the BSO opposition on the thesis that the county's tourist facilities already are taxed close to capacity during the July-August Tanglewood season.

In an attempt to refute Beall's contentions, Barry read letters from two tourist operators—George Tourraine of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox and David Green, general manager of Avaloch in the same town.

Plenty of Vacancies

Both men maintained that their establishments, hard by Tanglewood, have plenty of vacancies from Sunday evenings through Thursday nights during the peak of the Tanglewood season.

Beall suggested that these two establishments do not necessarily give a picture of the total county tourist situation during the summer season.

Frank Patterson of Hancock, who identified himself as a former BSO employe, stated that

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
FEB 1 1963

'Phantom Fair'

Continued From Page 1

Association and the Franklin Fair Association. The former was allotted July 1-6, across the holiday. Franklin Fair was granted the week of July 22-27.

Six Days at Barrington

Curtiss said he had asked Gov. Peabody to "review the manner" in which the added dates were assigned. Curtiss said, "The additional racing dates which have been set by the Racing Commission for the Hancock track will result in a great detriment to the welfare of Berkshire County, not only as regards the economy of the county, but also due to the fact that the additional dates will conflict with the Berkshire Music Festival which has become, during the past few years, a tremendous asset not only to the Berkshires but to the nation itself. It is my hope that the governor will take immediate steps to have the Racing Commission reconsider its action in this matter."

Says Petition Fraudulent

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
JAN 2 2 1963

ATTORNEY ACCUSED

Judge John A. Barry, legal representative of the track, retorted with a charge that Cain's statements were "scurrilous and unfit remarks for a member of the bar association to make." He accused

The track has been worth $3,500,000 to Massachusetts taxpayers in its three years of operation, Barry estimated. Tracks pay about 9 per cent of the betting handle in state taxes.

All three members of the Racing Commission, Madden, Maurice H. Leff and Dr. Paul F. Walsh, were present at the hearing.

Objectors in addition to Cain and Mrs. Amy Bess Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle, Pittsfield newspaper, for the Shaker Village, included a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

They were James J. Brosnahan, business manager; Henry Beall, public relations and press director, and James Kiley, superintendent of Tanglewood at Lenox.

Beall, as spokesman, objected to any dates which would conflict with the orchestra's program of Tanglewood concerts from July 1 to Aug. 26. He said that with the concerts attracting crowds which could fill every motel, hotel and restaurant to capacity, there simply was not enough room to accommodate people for the concerts and the crowds for the horse races at the same time.

The track has asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, inclusive, 12 days from July 9 to 20, 6 days for the Berkshire County Fair July 1 to 6, and 6 days for the Franklin County Fair July 22 to 27.

Industry and the churches of Berkshire County also were represented in the opposition.

CLERIC PROTESTS

The Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Pittsfield, and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested for the Council against the entire operation of pari-mutual betting at the track.

He also read a letter of protest from Msgr. Eugene F. Marshall of St. Mary's Church, Pittsfield, which he said Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese had forwarded to him to be presented at the hearing.

Albert R. Neill, executive director, spoke in opposition in behalf of Business and Commerce of Central Berkshire County, Inc., whose membership includes all the principal employers of the area, including General Electric Company.

About 200 persons attended the hearing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
Jan 31 1963

NEW RACING DATES FOR BERKSHIRE HIT

County Group, Franklin Both Get Six Days

Town Is 100 Miles From Hancock Track; Business, Church Leaders Assail Decision; Peabody Asked to Review Action

(Special to The Union)

BOSTON—An additional 12 days of horse racing for Berkshire County was announced Wednesday by the Racing Commission. It touched off protests at both ends of the state.

100 Miles Away

In announcing racing dates for horse, harness and dog racing, the commission said it had approved six-day meets for Berkshire County Fair Association and Franklin Fair Association of Franklin, both to be run at Berkshire Downs in Hancock.

Franklin is in the southeastern corner of Worcester County, more than 100 miles from Hancock.

The commission also approved a split schedule for Hancock Raceways at Berkshire Downs, June 17-29 and July 8-20. The 24-day total is the same as last year.

The permits for the two fair associations to conduct racing at Berkshire Downs were the only licenses granted this year by the commission.

42-Day Total

The 36 days of horse racing at Berkshire Downs, plus the usual six days of racing at the Barrington Fair in Great Barrington, will give Berkshire County 42 days of horse racing this year.

Reaction to the announcement of the racing dates was almost immediate. Much was a reflection of opposition voiced at a hearing Jan. 21 in Hancock conducted by the Racing Commission on the applications for racing dates at Berkshire Downs.

One of the opponents at the hearing, William Whittlesey, 3d, of Pittsfield, president of the Association of Business and Commerce of Central Berkshire County, said Wednesday granting of the racing dates came as no surprise.

"It seemed obvious to us from the attitude of the hearing officers and by the fact that an abuttor was not allowed to become a party to the proceedings that a decision had been reached before the hearing was held," said Whittlesey.

See RACING DATES Page Six

A telegram of protest was sent to Gov. Endicott Peabody by Rev. Wayne W. Horvath, director of the Massachusetts Council of Churches department of social relations.

Mr. Horvath asked the governor to review the racing commission's action and to "study the problem of synthetic fairs wherever they may be found. Genuine fairs and agricultural interests suffer from greedy opportunists and irresponsible racing."

Sees Economic Havoc

"The total disregard of the commission for the public welfare is appalling," Mr. Horvath said. "This is one in a series of questionable and arbitrary actions which result in great economic havoc. Berkshire County will be inundated with racing."

Mr. Horvath added it was his belief the part played by Morris H. Leff of Longmeadow, one of the three commissioners and a former commission chairman, was "irresponsible and one made in the last moments, knowing that he was soon to leave the post."

Gov. Peabody said Wednesday during a press conference he was not going to reappoint Leff, whose term expires this year.

Thomas A. Perry, Jr., manger of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said the orchestra would stand on the statement it made Jan. 21 in Hancock. At that time Harry Beal, president of the orchestra, told the commission it was concerned mainly with the racing dates in July, which would conflict with the Tanglewood season in Lenox and that the county's hotels and other tourists' services would be overtaxed if both events were allowed at the same time.

Raps "Mockery"

When the racing dates were announced, A. J. Rizzo, owner of Berkshire Downs, said he was pleased with the dates, although they were not enough to compete with the new racetrack in Pownal, Vt. He said opposition in Berkshire County was motivated by selfish interest.

Whittlesey said the granting of racing dates to the Franklin Fair at Berkshire Downs, more than 100 miles from Franklin, makes "the whole affair a mockery of our democratic form of government."

Stating it was the belief of the ABC that parimutuel betting at Berkshire Downs is not in the best interests of the economic welfare of central Berkshire County, particularly in the summer, Whittlesey said the attorney general's office should be made.

Asks Investigation

"Improper activity on the part of those persons interested in the granting of dates is indicated, and only a thorough investigation by the chief law enforcement agency of the commonwealth can quell the fears and doubts which have been raised in the minds of the average citizen," he said.

Rev. J. Allen McLean of Pilgrim Memorial Church in Pittsfield, representing the Pittsfield Area Council of Churches at the Hancock hearing Jan. 21 in the fight against racing of any kind in the county, said Wednesday the action by the commission "was unbelievable if one is committed to the democratic processes and expects elected or appointed officials to carry out the duties of their offices."

Calling the action a "disheartening farce," Mr. McLean charged the Franklin Fair "has agriculture as the last thing on its mind" and that the Berkshire County Fair last year was not a successful venture.

Says Petition Fraudulent

"The Berkshire Downs petition was fraudulent and the racing commission refused to look into this feature, either at the hearing or any other time," he said.

Also entering protests at the Jan. 21 hearings were Most Rev. Christopher J. Weldon, bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield and Shaker Community, Inc., in Hancock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

JAN 22 1963

Extra Racing at Hancock Is Battled at Hearing

Shaker Village and Tanglewood Both Object to Extension for Berkshire Track

HANCOCK (AP)—The State Racing Commission sat until 1 a. m. today hearing testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway, Inc. for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village, Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen, and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker Village abuts the race track property.

The ownership dispute came up earlier in the day in Suffolk Superior Court where Judge Frank J. Murray continued in force a temporary restraining order tying up 50 shares of

(Continued on Page 6)

...was arrested yesterday

...with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The racing commission has taken the matter under advisement.

Henry Beall, public relations director for the orchestra, objected to any dates that would conflict with the orchestra's program at Tanglewood from July 1 to Aug. 26.

The track had asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, 12 days from July 9 to 20, six days for the Berkshire Country Fair, July 1 to 6, and six days for the Franklin County Fair, July 22 to 27.

Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Pittsfield, and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested for the council against the entire operation of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

He also read a letter of protest from Msgr. Eugene F. Marshall of St. Mary's Church, Pittsfield, which he said Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese had forwarded to him to be presented at the hearing.

About 200 persons attended the hearing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6.• RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,191

JAN 26 1963

Tanglewood Protests Against Race Track

The Massachusetts Racing Commission held a hearing in the town of Hancock on the application of Berkshire Downs for 36 racing dates in 1963, 12 more than in 1962. The chief objector were Tanglewood, operators of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Henry Beall, public relations and press director of Tanglewood, as spokesman, objected to any dates which would conflict with the orchestra's program of concerts from July 1 to Aug. 26.

He said that with the concerts attracting crowds which could fill every motel, hotel and restaurant to capacity, there simply was not enough room to accommodate people for the concerts and the crowds for the horse races at the same time.

The track has asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, inclusive, 12 days from July 9 to 20, 6 days for the Berkshire County Fair July 1 to 6, and 6 days for the Franklin County Fair July 22 to 27.

Industry and the churches of Berkshire County also were represented in the opposition.

The Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Pittsfield, and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested for the Council against the entire operation of pari-mutual betting at the track.

He also read a letter of protest from Msgr. Eugene F. Marshall of St. Mary's Church, Pittsfield, which he said Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese had forwarded to him to be presented at the hearing.

The controversy over ownership of the stock of the race track took up time at the hearing.

All three members of the Racing Commission, Madden, Maurice H. Leff and Dr. Paul F. Walsh, were present at the hearing.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, Inc., charged that some statements in the track's application were "false" in that they omitted any mention that control of half of the track's 100 shares is in dispute.

He contended the track corporation should have supplied the commonwealth with information concerning the problem confronting the stockholders.

Chairman Leo J. Madden of the commission declined to go into the stock ownership question. He said that since this matter was

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, January 22, 1963

Berkshire Downs Bid For Extra Dates Opposed

Hancock, Mass. (AP) — The State Racing Commission hears until 1 a.m. today testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. (Berkshire Downs) for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker village abuts the race track property.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, January 22, 1963

Berkshire Downs Bid For Extra Dates Opposed

Hancock, Mass. (AP) — The State Racing Commission hears until 1 a.m. today testimony on the application of Hancock Raceway Inc. (Berkshire Downs) for 36 racing dates in 1963—12 more than last year.

Several groups including Shaker Village Inc., a delegation from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several area clergymen and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, wife of the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield were among objectors.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, of which Mrs. Miller is president, charged the track's application omitted mention of a dispute over ownership of 100 shares of stock. Shaker village abuts the race track property.

Racing Commission Chairman Leo J. Madden declined to go into the stock question on the grounds the case was before the courts.

The symphony delegation contended the additional dates would conflict with the orchestra's concerts at nearby Tanglewood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant accommodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track, noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6.• RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,191
JAN 26 1963

Tanglewood Protests Against Race Track

The Massachusetts Racing Commission held a hearing in the town of Hancock on the application of Berkshire Downs for 36 racing dates in 1963, 12 more than in 1962. The chief objector were Tanglewood, operators of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Henry Beall, public relations and press director of Tanglewood, as spokesman, objected to any dates which would conflict with the orchestra's program of concerts from July 1 to Aug. 26.

He said that with the concerts attracting crowds which could fill every motel, hotel and restaurant to capacity, there simply was not enough room to accommodate people for the concerts and the crowds for the horse races at the same time.

The track has asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, inclusive, 12 days from July 9 to 20, 6 days for the Berkshire County Fair July 1 to 6, and 6 days for the Franklin County Fair July 22 to 27.

Industry and the churches of Berkshire County also were represented in the opposition.

The Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Pittsfield, and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested for the Council against the entire operation of pari-mutual betting at the track.

He also read a letter of protest from Msgr. Eugene F. Marshall of St. Mary's Church, Pittsfield, which he said Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese had forwarded to him to be presented at the hearing.

The controversy over ownership of the stock of the race track took up time at the hearing.

All three members of the Racing Commission, Madden, Maurice H. Leff and Dr. Paul F. Walsh, were present at the hearing.

Atty. Lincoln S. Cain, counsel for Shaker Village, Inc., charged that some statements in the track's application were "false" in that they omitted any mention that control of half of the track's 100 shares is in dispute.

He contended the track corporation should have supplied the commonwealth with information concerning the problem confronting the stockholders.

Chairman Leo J. Madden of the commission declined to go into the stock ownership question. He said that since this matter was

(Continued From Page 1)

Berkshire Downs, the forme name of the track.

The order was obtained by D Charles F. Furcolo, father former Gov. Foster Furcolo. D Furcolo contends he obtaine the shares valued at $150,0 through a "straw" who subs quently sold them.

Murray's order bars Samu A. Rizzo, of Scarsdale, N. Y president of the track and a legedly the buyer of the dispute shares, from transferring th stock.

Racing Commission Chairma Leo J. Madden declined to g into the stock question on th grounds the case was before th courts.

The symphony delegation con tended the additional date would conflict with the orches tra's concerts at nearby Tangle wood and there would not be enough hotel and restaurant ac commodations for the crowds at the concerts and the track.

The clergymen protested the idea of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

Judge John A. Barry, counsel for the track noted that it paid $3.5 million in taxes in its three years of operation.

The racing commission has taken the matter under advisement.

Henry Beall, public relations director for the orchestra, objected to any dates that would conflict with the orchestra's program at Tanglewood from July 1 to Aug. 26.

The track had asked for 12 days from June 17 to 29, 12 days from July 9 to 20, six days for the Berkshire Country Fair, July 1 to 6, and six days for the Franklin County Fair, July 22 to 27.

Rev. Douglas McWilliams, curate of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Pittsfield, and chairman of the social action committee of the Pittsfield Council of Churches, protested for the council against the entire operation of pari-mutuel betting at the track.

He also read a letter of protest from Msgr. Eugene F. Marshall of St. Mary's Church, Pittsfield, which he said Bishop Christopher J. Weldon of the Springfield Catholic Diocese had forwarded to him to be presented at the hearing.

About 200 persons attended the hearing.

MEETINGS LISTED FOR 4-H CLUBS

LUDLOW CENTER—The 4-H Sewing Clubs will meet tonight with Mrs. Robert Tower at her home with the senior group at 7 while Mrs. Leonard Paul, will meet with their group at 6:30 at the home of Mrs. Millard White.

The funeral of Edward F. ... Prayers. ... Reilly read the committal ... Meeting House Hill Cemetery. ... and Robert Abel. Burial was in ... Sheaffer, Jr., Harry Sheaffer, ... were Ralph Thompson, Elmer ... Hackett, subdeacon. The bearers ... deacon; and Rev. Harry J. ... grant; Rev. Thomas S. Devine, ... Rev. Joseph M. Reilly was cele- ... High mass in St. Thomas Church. ... come with a solemn requiem ... today at the Toomey funeral ... hesenult of 215 Monastery ... The funeral of Miss Clara Mar- ... p. m. ... eral home tonight are 7 to ... Visiting hours at the fu- ... will be in St. Michael's Ceme- ... West Springfield, at 9. Burial ... igh mass in St. Ann's Church, ... day at 9 a. m. ... will be in charge of Mrs. Iona ... Quinby, while Mrs. Walter ... Moore will give a talk on "An- ... tique dolls." ... The Ladies Aid Society of the ... First Congregational Church will ... hold installation of officers by ... Rev. Emery Wallace tonight in ... the Panel Room of the parish ... hall. The dedication of the Sec- ... ond Mile gifts will be in charge ... of Mrs. Millard White.

B.S.O MEMBERS' ACTIVITIES

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 51,228
AUG 6 1963

Schenkman and Jacobs To Appear At Hopkins

HANOVER — Peter Schenkman, 'cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Paul Jacobs, pianist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will be the featured soloists in tomorrow evening's Chamber Concert in Spaulding Auditorium at the Hopkins Center.

Both young musicians, who have been invited to perform by Mario di Bonaventura, director of music for the Hopkins Center, will come to Hanover from Tanglewood. Jacobs is on the faculty and a Fromm Player. Schenkman plays with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Peter Schenkman, who will be the soloist in Elliott Carter's 'Cello Sonata," said di Bonaventura, "has performed this tremendously difficult work five times, for which he received outstanding acclaim from the critics on each occasion."

This will be the first of several of Carter's works to be performed while he is at Dartmouth Summer Music School as composer-in-residence.

Carter is one of three distinguished American composers invited to spend two weeks in residence at the Dartmouth Summer Music School to work with young composers taking the course this summer.

They have already had opportunity to work with Vincent Persichetti and Walter Piston, and will now have the benefit of suggestions and criticism from Elliott Carter.

The Estival Quartet, who have been appearing regularly in the Wednesday Chamber Concert Series, will play Ravel's Quartet tomorrow.

The Quartet this season is made up of Herbert Sorkin, violin; Edwin Sherrard, violin; Heinrich Joachim, 'cello; and Ralph Hersh, viola.

Tickets for the Wednesday evening concert are now on sale.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
SEP 11 1962

BSO Members Will Premiere Serebrier Work

UTICA, N.Y.—The "Fantasia," String Quartet No. 4 by Jose Febrier, who spent four seasons as a student at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., will receive its world premiere in Boston on Oct. 19 in a concert performed by members of the Boston Symphony.

The concert will be sponsored by the Harvard Musical Association, which originally commissioned Serebrier to compose the string quartet after a nationwide competition.

The 23-year-old musician from Uruguay conducted the Utica Symphony Orchestra while directing the music department at Utica College of Syracuse University. He is now director of the Swarthmore (Pa.) College Symphony.

Mr. Serebrier was the only foreign conductor at the Mexican Music Festival this past summer and has been invited back for next year. He is the recipient of two Guggenheim Fellowships (as the youngest person ever to have received them), a U.S. State Department Fellowship, a Koussevitsky Award, a Dorati Scholarship and a BMI Prize.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
SEP 18 1962

Nova Arte Trio To Make Debut

Three prominent members of the Boston Symphony are forming the Nova Arte Trio, which will make its first recital appearance in November. They are Joseph Silverstein, violinist and new concertmaster of the orchestra; Joseph de Pasquale, who has been its principal viola since 1947; and Samuel Mayes, who joined the Boston Symphony as principal cello one year later.

The new trio will be inaugurated with a two-concert series in November consisting of the five string trios and the Duet for Cello and Viola of Beethoven.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
